Elon, was merged into the project of the church-appointed board, and a new site was selected here where we are assembled today. The station was known as Mill Point as the time and the citizens of Mill Point gave twenty-three acres of land and $4,000 in cash toward the project. W. H. Trolinger of Haw River gave in his own name a tract of twenty-five acres of land. In consideration of these donations and this keen interest the college was located here and the name Elon—a Greek word meaning oak—was selected because of the magnificent oak forest that stood here at the time and until this day characterizes this campus.

The college's original charter said that it was to "afford instruction in the liberal arts and sciences." How very well it has functioned in keeping with that dictate can be seen with a quick glance back over the more than a half a century of operations here and at the parade of useful citizens this institution has produced.

Elon College has produced a brand of education that has been and is good education. Elon has served well in producing men and women who were and are well educated.

After spending the past few moments harking back to Elon's beginnings, to her founding fathers, to those who gave character to the institution and inspiration to her faculty and student body, I wish to make a point of what I refer to as good education.

I think we have only come to a full realization in recent years of the fact that good education is good business.

Just as Elon College is what it is because of those who created it, most of us honestly proclaim that we are what we are or what we hope to be because of our parents and our teachers. From Biblical times there have been admonishments as to the debt we owe our parents. We have been taught from Holy writings to honor our Father and Mother, to love them, to respect them, to protect them in time of age and infirmity. We have long understood that. And now in more recent years we are beginning to fully recognize a debt we owe to our teachers. We didn't even acknowledge that debt for many years—much less make an effort to pay it.

But times have changed. I truly believe that more interest is being shown in education by laymen today than ever before. Hard-boiled business has been sensing something there. Business is learning, and learning fast now that it has gotten on to the idea, that education is a good investment.

TOTALITARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

A Sermon

By REV. JESSE H. DOLLAR, D. D.,
Pastor, Elon Community Church.

*The Lord our God is one Lord:
And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength:
this is the first commandment.—
Mark 12:29-30.*

One characteristic of Christianity, indeed its inescapable demand upon every individual, is absolute and unconditional surrender of one's self to the will and ways of God.

I think we can point with absolute confidence to this demand of complete surrender, and the failure of the average individual to yield to it, as the primal weakness of professed Christianity. It is not unusual that the average Christian, upon coming into the church, gives up those practices which he never really reveled in, but it is too unusual that we find a person who has hewn to the prescribed line in cutting away all love for the lusts of worldly life. Here we have come face to face with our lack of spiritual power.

Here is one who gives up liquor, but it turns out that the temptation to drink never really bothered him anyway, and he can leave off drinking from a sense of moral decency rather than from a sense of sin. Many can be found who have left off profanity in the same way; or gambling, or other forms of social evil. We may be proud of the fact that upon coming into the fellowship of the church there is still a sense of need for leaving off obvious sins, but there are too few church members, professed Christians, to whom their allegiance to Christ and their affiliation with the church has meant their giving up the habit which is deepest seated in their lives. Though they are willing to give up every other sin, especially the sins on the fringe of their lives, they hold fast to that sin which the Scripture likens, in its hold upon them, to a member of the body—the eye or the hand. Here is the test! Here is where you and I have failed. We have let Christ into the outer circle—the circumference of our lives—but we have never let Him take over the center.

He is a Totalitarian Christ. We subscribe to a totalitarian Christianity when we accept the vows of the church, but we are only practitioners of ritual and performers of ceremonies; having a form of religion but having nothing to do with it as a power (as Moffatt puts it), until we yield to its demands. "Conversion," says Stanley Jones, "is that process, be it sudden or gradual, by which we pass from the Kingdom of Self to the Kingdom of God." Until we let Christ take control of our hearts (the seat of our affection), and direct our wills (the source of resolute action), and guide our affections (the sweetening ingredients of our wills and expressed interests), from our native concerns with life and ourselves to the practice of His Will in us and for us, we have only a marginal religion. Christ will not be ruler of the outer realm of our lives while we keep command of those areas of life which are the well-springs of our spiritual potency and power. He will be Lord of all of life, or he will be Lord of no part of life. He will possess all, or he will have none. Not half-saved and half-sinful, but totally saved or totally lost.

Christ demands control of all our personal powers, interests and attitudes. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength." That means total surrender of the personal realm. "Christianity is class-blind and race-blind."

Our class prejudice is as evident and as shameful as our race prejudices. We want to associate with people who are as good, socially and economically, as we are. We are flattered if we think they have more money than we. We feel the same way about color. Not one of us but would feel flattered to be in the company of Kagawa of Japan, yet we pronounce a curse upon the Japanese people as a whole. We call them rats and have no conception of the squalor into which Kagawa went to lift the lowest of his race to the level of his beloved in Christ. We admire Kagawa because he, by the grace of God in a Christian missionary, was born again, and that rebirth from self to God in Christ tore him away from his family, his wealth and comfort, and gave him in return the company of the outcast, the untouchables in the slums of Japan—with its subjection to unspeakable disease and blindness and tuberculosis. In his wealth and social rank, he was his father's son. In the misery of the untouchables, he was the son of God. You can make your own decision of which station is the more important to the cause of World Christianity. We seek to associate with the best, but sadly, the best in the eyes of the world is the person with the highest social standing or the biggest bank roll. We think it an honor to be with the up and outs, but we do not bother to go to the down and outs and bring them up from shame into the Kingdom of God. That is where we are the opposite of Kagawa, and what is more, we are at the same point the opposite of Christ.

Christ demands that he have complete command of all roads leading from the circumference into the center of our lives. When we are as thoroughly Christian as we know how to be, we are as good as anybody. Until we are Christ-intended and Christ-guided, we are a nobody in the language of Grace. When we are Christian to the core and not ashamed of confessing it, we have no equal on any other level in any class, in any race, or in any station in life. If we are weak and ineffective, it is not because we are not socially prominent or wealthy. It is only because we are poor inside. Education does not make us great, it only brings out what is inside. Look at the power of Peter and John and listen to the scriptural citation of them: "And now when they (their rulers and elders and scribes) saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled: and they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." (Acts 4:13.)

Christ reserves judgment of others for Himself. It is so easy to spoil an otherwise beautiful life by finding excuses for our sins in the mistakes of others. Somebody sins and we try to forget our own sins by pointing out their faults to those around us. God is not like that.

"Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart." There is not a woman here who would have dared to be associated with the Apostle Peter before Christ got hold upon him. You would have looked at his ruggedness, heard his profanity and turned away in disgust. But Jesus saw what was in him: took hold of him and brought it out! Much more acceptable in outward appearance was Judas. He was handsome and shy. To see him would make a woman's heart beat faster. But appearance was all there was to

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Rev. R. E. Brittle and the people of Union (Southampton) envision a full-time program for that church and community. There is a most attractive opportunity for that church to develop. It is already a thriving church now being surrounded by scores of new homes. It stands strategically in the heart of the community where highways merge, and a rapidly growing center interest is growing. Mr. Brittle and his people have seen the situation developing for some time, and to bring it to full fruition, he has resigned with the thought that with a bit of help from the Eastern Virginia Conference's home mission funds, and from the Christian Missionary Association and the Mission Board, full-time work could be developed there.

Union, familiarly known as "Joyner's," is a few miles out of Franklin in one of the prettiest sections of the country, with considerable development growing up all about it. The leaders of that church can be congratulated on moving forward with the times. Even though they may like the quiet days of yesteryear, and see them passing with a bit of longing in their hearts, they know that a full-time service is going to be more and more needed for that community. Let us thank God for the faithful folk who will see to it that as the community grows the church will grow along with it. Fortunate will be the pastor who will be called to serve the fine men, women, and young people of that church and community. Mr. Brittle has two other large churches in thriving communities and few would have had the strength and grace to have served the three churches as he has served them.

The Rev. O. D. Poythress, president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, spoke before a recent meeting of our ministers and told of a growing development out on one of the main highways not far from South Norfolk where he has instituted plans for a church lot in the very heart of a growing and unchurched community. New fields are opening up and the call for new ministers grows greater. The church must keep up with the times or it will lose its hold on the people. What can be finer for the building of a Christian America than enthusiastic churches right in the midst of the people where the little children can attend easily and their parents may mix and mingle with their neighbors as they worship God together? The privilege of being a minister in such a place is one of the highest privileges in life, and it has its good and sufficient reward.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

this session. Use suggestions given on pages 69 and 70, followed by those on page 77. The closing worship will be a good way to end this session.

The last day, "Our Church — A Place to Worship," may substitute in the schedule the making of invitations for visits by parents at the closing program, instead of making envelopes. Otherwise, this schedule may be followed almost exactly. During the planning time, the boys and girls should have a part in making preparations for the closing program.

JUNIORS: "We Would See Jesus"—

Kate Payne Owens.

Each Junior teacher should go over carefully the purpose of this course and realize what the Junior boys and girls need to have take place within them during the School. Also, read the suggestions on the the time schedule, room arrangement, activities, supplies, etc.

The first day combines "God So Loved the World" with "The Child Grew;" thus, plan carefully so that both themes receive the proper emphasis. The most stress, perhaps, should be on "The Child Grew," with "God So Loved the World" as the introduction to it. Use the story on page 17 as a basis for the whole course, with the conversation following it as the introduction to the story on page 22 and 23. Follow the schedule as given in Session 2, and after Notebook Work (page 27) let the group help choose the project it would like to work on.

On the second day, "Follow Me," the schedule may be followed almost exactly, working on the project as chosen and partially worked on during the preceding day.

The third day, "Jesus . . . Went About Doing Good," may follow the suggested schedule, with the change of after Music and Hymn, the boys and girls should have a discussion on why they believe that Jesus is the greatest Hero who ever lived (see Session 1); if they have already done this, they may revise and add, as suggested at the bottom of page 47.

The fourth day, "When Ye Pray," scheduled plan may well be followed in its entirety, with the changes made which do not concern your group since you have not done some of the activities as outlined in previous sessions. At this session, however, it would be good to let the group help plan for its part on the closing program.

On the last day, "Lo, I Am With You Always," the planned procedure is a good one to follow, omitting those activities which you have not done in your group. In this session, too, plans must be definitely laid for the Junior group's part in the closing program.

INTERMEDIATES: "Exploring the Bible With Intermediates"—Lucille Desjardins.

Each teacher should know the contents of the Introduction, Preparing for Study, Using the Pupil's Guidebook, and Source Books and Materials. The teacher should also be familiar with the Pupil's Guidebook. (It is not absolutely necessary to buy a Guidebook for every pupil, although it may be found helpful. A teacher may teach very effectively with both books, and the boys and girls having none. However, if the School wishes to buy one Guidebook for each child, the price is 25c per copy, ordered from The Methodist Publishing House, Fifth and Grace Streets, Richmond, Virginia.)

On the first day, "We Start Our Explorations," the outlined plan may be followed step by step. Much depends on this first day, for on it rests the success of all the following sessions.

On the second day, "Treasures from the Book of Books," the suggested schedule may be followed almost without change.

The third day, "Comfort for Dark and Difficult Days," is one of the most needed courses possible for this age group. It may be that you will not be able to get some of the outside musical helps mentioned. However, there are many other activities suggested which will more than fill the time!

On the fourth day, "Good News for the Whole World" and "Jesus, the Light of the World," are combined. It will probably be better if your emphasis were placed the most on "Good News for the Whole World," using the schedule as planned (pages 66-71), but for the closing worship service, use that on pages 77, 78 and 79. A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
May 2, 1947.

Dear Friends:

On the first three days of this week (April 28, 29, 30), I attended the Annual Meeting of the North Kukien Synod of the Church of Christ in China. We met in Shaowu, and it was one of the most encouraging meetings I have ever attended. Let me tell you about it. Those present were Pastor Huang and Pastor Liao of Shaowu, Pastor Fan of Tsiang Loh, and Pastor Liao of Kienning. In addition there were two lay preachers, Mr. Chang and Mr. Kiu, and two laymen both named Lee.

We convened each morning at 8:30 and continued until about 5:30 P. M. There was so much to discuss we almost resented taking time out for lunch. It had been over a year since they had met to discuss the Synod affairs. Each minister reported the status of the church in his field. There were some very discouraging elements as well as encouraging ones. In the Yankou area, there are ten churches, only two of them have pastors. Some churches have disbanded entirely for lack of leadership. Fourteen churches in this large area are still considered somewhat active. Four ordained ministers can't begin to take care of them. So it was quite natural that the first question to come up for discussion was leadership.

How surprised and pleased I was to discover the possibilities available. First, we discussed people who had formerly served as pastors but who had gone into other lines of work. It was decided to ask two of them to return to the active parish ministry. The greatest surprise of all was to discover the number of superior young men and one young woman who are anxious to study for the ministry. It was decided to employ four young men and one young woman as summer workers in towns where formerly there were churches, to see if they can be revived. In the fall, if money is available, they will be assisted to attend college or seminary. Here is a really worthy project for some church group—for $120, a student can attend theological seminary for one year. Mr. and Mrs. Storrs have established a fund which is being used for this purpose, but with this new increase in students, it will soon be used up. In America, it is possible to earn part of his expenses, but here a seminary student does not have this opportunity.

It was reported that the two primary schools, Han Mei and Hwa Mei, are in serious financial condition and may have to close. They are operated entirely under the leadership of Chinese. However, these inflationary times make it most difficult for schools, churches and other institutions. It was decided to sell the fine crop of peaches behind our home and to use that money to keep Han Mei School open awhile longer. (A gift of $250 would be enough to supply additional needs of the school for a year.) Each of these schools has a student body of about one hundred.

Finally, the budget was discussed. The ministers' salaries were raised from about $2.00 (U.S.) per month to about $12 (U.S.). This is still a small figure compared to other vocations. For instance a skilled carpenter makes about $240,000 (U.S. $20) per month.

We were especially glad to have Mr. Chandler with us for the meeting particularly because of his long experience in mission work in North China, and because of his ready command of the language.

There seemed to be a fine spirit at the beginning. A fresh burst of enthusiasm was evident partly because of the arrival of new missionaries. I never saw such an enthusiasm to start new enterprises—schools, laymen conferences, hospitals, etc. A group of Christian women sent a petition with forty signatures asking for the Lau De girls' school to be revived. Ever since the Communists wreaked so much havoc in the early 1930's, the leaders have dreamed of the day when the church and its institutions could be rebuilt. Now the war with Japan is over, new missionaries have come, new life is stirring, young people are volunteering for Christian service. The harvest is plenteous and the Lord of the harvest has called forth labourers into His harvest. It is a thrilling thing to have a small part in God's great enterprise.

Let me tell you of one more incident before closing. On Tuesday evening we had our first showing of colored slides to show the pastors and people the types of pictures which were available. There were some of the people back home, some of the Storrs, the Shepherds and other missionaries they knew. Some pictures were shown concerning the life of Jesus with Pastor Fan explaining the meaning. We met in an open air building in our front yard. It could conveniently hold about one hundred people. There were no seats so everyone had to stand. Imagine our surprise when there were two or three times the number of people we expected. The problem of the future seems to be clear—how to limit the crowd so that all may see and hear. The past two nights we have been kept busy running to the gate to tell people who had come, "No, there wasn't going to be another showing tonight." Last night over thirty such persons came and I don't know how long it will continue. There are surely great possibilities ahead for visual education. (Most of those present had never before seen a picture shown on a screen.)

This letter is just a glimpse into a few short days here. You can see that, although there are many difficult problems ahead, we are at present very much encouraged. Our Father has not been idle during these years, but is continuing to raise up witnesses in this remote section of the world.

A LETTER FROM SHAOWU, CHINA.

Dear Miss Bascom:

Your splendid letter received. Thanks for sending me so many beautiful pictures. I can see you for your picture every day. I pray for all my foreign friends most of my time.

My children are all studying in school. I May is the oldest daughter. She is in the senior second year. She was a very little baby when you left Shaowu. Now is grown up and strong. She likes drawing very much and drew this picture when I send. I Ling is the second daughter. She is taller than her sister. I Lung is the youngest, my son. They are all in the senior middle school first year. My husband lives with them. He is a Chinese doctor. He planted so many vegetables here in the country. They are living in the Adelaide Walker School while they attend school.

I am living in the valley all the year. I cannot walk along to Shaowu because my right body is not well. (She had a shock which affected her right side.) But I can work a great deal except washing or early morning work. I have a little girl by my side. She can help me much. Now she has gone to help them. I have an old woman in the valley. She is a good woman. I love her very much. I have a beautiful garden in my front yard. There are a dozen orange trees in it and about forty kinds of flowers. I like flowers very much. I hope you will send me seeds after while. I planted 300 pine trees this spring. I hope I can plant more next year. There are about 100 chestnut trees on the hill, and I have much potatoes and a lot of vegetables in the garden. I am just like a farmer woman. We have a farm yard Shaowu Private People's Livelihood Farm. We shall plant 220 fields of rice next year but we only plant 70 this spring.

I like write to you very often but it is hard for me because I had not write English for a long time. We read English with them this summer. I told them the Pied Piper, King Midas, The King of the Golden River.

We are very glad that there are so many Doctors and foreigners shall come to our Shaowu. The street of our city from east to the south is very wide. All the things here are very high priced except the salt. (Postage on this letter was $300.) I love our mother school (Lombard), but there is only empty school house. I am very sorry when I pass over it. I am dreaming all the night. I am still studying there, and forget I am the mother and I have children. I am never forget you all.

I hope you pray for our Shaowu and all China. Give my love to your dear mother. Your pupil, FUNG TI NG.

(Mrs. Titus Chang.)

Editorial Note: Miss Bascom and Mrs. Chang taught at Lombard School in Shaowu in 1926. This letter was written before the Jacksons arrived. Miss Bascom urges that all our churches send religious pictures for distribution.

INDIA'S PROGRESS.

The Christian missionary enterprise has been responsible for most of India's progress during the past 200 years, according to four prominent Christian leaders from that country.

Guests at a "fellowship dinner" in New York by the India Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, the speakers were Bishop John A. Subhan of the Methodist Church of India, the first convert from Mohammedanism ever to be elected to the Methodist episcopacy; Mrs. Chandrama Prem Nath Dass, retired president of Isabella Thoburn College, Lucknow; Beharilal L. Rallia Ram, chairman of the National Christian Council of India; and Dr. Rajah B. Manikam, secretary of the Council. The four Indian leaders comprise an official deputation from the National Christian Council of India to the Protestant Churches of America.

According to Bishop Subhan "the days of untouchability are numbered," women now share equal rights and privileges with men, and numerous social reforms are being enacted today which will have far-reaching effects upon India's millions.

"It must, however, be acknowledged that all this has come about because of the impact of the Gospel of Christ upon India," he added.

Bishop Subhan warned his countrymen against the danger of forgetting that "there are things of greater importance and of higher value than political independence."

"There is a greater need than political liberty," he said, "and if that need is not met, freedom will be turned into license, government into anarchy, and individuals will become mere accidental bundles of atoms drifting into oblivion."

Since the coming of Christian missions to India in the beginning of the 18th Century, Mrs. Dass told the gathering, their contribution to the education of women has been one of the chief factors in emancipating womanhood from the "thralldom of custom and tradition, of ignorance and superstition."

Until very recently, she said, 90 per cent of all nurses were Christian women and 80 per cent of these were trained in Christian hospitals.

Mr. Rallia Ram pictured India as completely recovered from "her period of frustration" and optimistically preparing for the future.

"India," he declared, "is particularly desirous to share her life with other Oriental nations and she is also aware that she will need the help and cooperation of such countries as Great Britain and America provided she can obtain this help on honorable terms of equality and reciprocity."

The Indian leaders were officially welcomed to this country by Dr. Roswell P. Barnes, associate general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches. In his address of greeting Dr. Barnes declared:

"Our fellowship here tonight is more important for the world than many people would understand. It is a symbol of a fellowship within the Christian Church which binds people together regardless of race, nationality or language. Christians are not strangers to one another even though they have never met before. They have a common supreme loyalty and a common understanding of what is required of men by a God who rules over history and the affairs of nations.

"You who come to us from India are symbols of a great fellowship in that land, and in other countries; and we who are here are symbols of many millions of Christians in this country. Thus, when representative Christians meet, they symbolize a wide fellowship. The existence of this fellowship is the result of the spread of the Christian Gospel, from a land at the eastern end of the Mediterranean, around the whole world and into every nation. From the very beginning it was recognized that Christianity belonged to no nation or race. Its universalism enables it to stand in the midst of a world of many conflicts as 'one world' in purpose and mutual understanding."

At the conclusion of the dinner, Dr. Raymond Dudley, India representa-

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Children:

This week my children and I are visiting with my parents in Tennessee. Oliver wanted to be on the farm when the strawberries were ripe, and he is getting all that he wants. I may tell you more about our visit to the farm next week, but now I want to share with you a letter from Mary Alice True of Portsmouth, N. H., about an experience she had in China. Miss True was reminded of this incident when she was talking with Mrs. Grant the other day. Mrs. Grant lives in Kittery, Maine, and her only child, Robert, has just left under the American Board to teach in Doshisha University in Kyoto.

DOROTHY TODD.

Mrs. True's Story:

Once, when I was substituting for the Frys in Sendai, the Baptist missionary, Mr. Jones, called to tell us of a boy in our section of the city who had been begging for money. It was customary for the missionaries to look out for cases of poverty in their own sections. I got Ren San, the Bible woman, to go with me to find the boy. We found the address that Mr. Jones had given us, but we could find no one there by the name that the boy had used. We left, thinking that the boy had done something wrong and had given a false address so no one could check on him. But, if there really were such a boy and his family was hungry then we knew that we had to try again. The second time we went to the address we decided to search an old shed in back of the house, and there we found the family.

The mother, O Zen San, was trying to make a fire with straw sweepings from the street. She told us that she was a widow and that she had three children, one boy and two girls. She made her living by working on straw sandals, getting about six sen a day. One sen had to go to the landlord for rent of the shack.

We got wood and rice for her, and a pan to cook the rice in, as all of her cooking utensils had given out. Then we told her about our Sunday School and invited the family to visit us. The next Sunday was Easter, and the two girls, Ina Chan and tiny Aka Chan, came to Sunday School. Because it was Easter we gave each child a colored Easter egg. They were delighted. Sunday School was a wonderful place!

The disappointment came the following Sunday. There were no eggs! Ina Chan laughed long afterwards when she told me how heart-broken she was because there were no eggs on the Sunday after Easter. What was Sunday School, she thought, without eggs!

When Mr. and Mrs. Fry returned, Ren San, the Bible woman, and I moved from Sendai to Ishinomaki, thirty miles away. O Zen San and her children went with us and lived with us for several years.

THE FRIENDLY PUSH.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Recently I heard a mother say, "Children need a friendly push—a little honest criticism—now and then."

I recalled some of the friendly pushes my mother had given me during our happy but all-too-brief twenty-two years together and what they had meant in character and personality development.

The most memorable friendly push was one that had acted as a challenge. Mother and I had been discussing my hobbies and accomplishments.

"Dear," she said, "you dabble in a lot of things, but you don't do any one thing well."

I was completely dumfounded by her remark. However, it started me to thinking. I must have said to myself, "I'll show you, Mother!"

From that day, "Do at least one thing well," was my motto. I became so engrossed in becoming outstanding in at least one thing that it acted as an incentive in everything I did.

My friends frequently commented, "Anything Helen undertakes she does well." But had my mother not given me that friendly push, would they have had reason to say this? I doubt it.

When I began writing professionally—more years ago than I like to say—I sold the first article I wrote to a nationally-famous magazine. I was a very young school teacher with ideas, and I called my venture, "What Is Lacking in the Public Schools." Naturally, I was thrilled at my success, but my first all-absorbing thought was, "If only Mother could know of this!"

So, while we, as parents, do not want to give our children inferiority complexes—heaven forbid!—neither should we wish to shower them with extravagant praise when little effort has been made to deserve it.

Very young children take it for granted that other persons will contribute in large measure to their happiness and well-being. The frequent tendency is to sulk when moods and desires are not catered to. Such an unhealthy habit should be discouraged by treating boys and girls on these occasions as objectively as possible, lest pleasure be derived from their self-pitying thoughts. This means a judicious discrimination with regard to solicitude, since it is natural for a child, if he is given an overabundance of attention, to acquire an exaggerated idea of his own importance.

Most youngsters realize that they play a large part in their parents' scheme of things, and they often discover it takes little to please them. They notice that their very presence is often such a source of joy they scarcely need to exert themselves at all to gain admiration and attention. Should we not think of ways to offset this unwholesome inclination on the part of the parent and its unfortunate reaction on the child? Is not a friendly push, now and then, one of wisest methods of encouraging a child to live up to the best of which he is capable?

Dear Friends:

For four weeks we have had no rain, and our wheat, oats, and corn have been badly damaged. We sowed a large quantity of lespedeza seed for a hay crop, but it dried up and Mr. Wagoner thinks we will hardly get a fourth of a crop. But we are very grateful that on the night of May 21, we got a splendid rain.

Our public school will close on Tuesday, May 27. Then the children will begin taking their vacations. We try to give them all from ten to fifteen days during the vacation season. The larger children have to go two or three at the time, so it will not break into the work here too much.

We have waited for a long time to get our six-inch water line in, but today I saw them lay the last section of pipe and set a hydrant on the end of the pipe. The line ends right on top of the knoll at the Old Building. This water line puts all our buildings within the fire limits. The town of Elon College has purchased a fire truck and has a voluntary fire company and are prepared to fight fire. We have a town fire company, we can call the Gibsonville fire company, which can come the two miles in five minutes, and we can call the Burlington fire company and they can get here in ten minutes' time. We have three hydrants in easy reach of the buildings and now have standard water pressure. This water line will also lower our insurance rate considerably.

The painting still goes on, and the more we have done, the more we see to do. However we will put the buildings in first-class shape before we stop unless our money runs short. Contributions to help pay these bills would come in nice. Five hundred dollars would look as large as a full moon at this time. But if someone will send us a check for this amount we will take lots of pleasure in looking at it.

TOTALITARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

him, and he is not the last man to look like a prince on the outside and to be rotten within. Judas looked like a promising disciple, but there was nothing inside, and after associating for three years with the world's only blameless character he used the sacred sign of a kiss to betray the Son of Man into the hands of his enemies. Neither was he the last man to use the sanctuary of a kiss to blast a life!

With Jesus in control we are willing to give everybody a chance, and another, and yet another chance. Jesus took Peter in spite of his outward appearance, his ignorance and crude manners, and made a great preacher out of him. He has done it all along. His spirit chokes out the bad and dispels the ugly by turning in the light of His Grace.

Here is where false standards do their dirty work. Everyone knows sin when he sees it, but there is no more common sin than to sanction the evil in those we admire, those in our own social group, and for the same thing condemn the total person of the man we don't like. Sin is sin, whether in my life or yours, and the person who hopes ever to be any sort of an acceptable Christian must cultivate a hatred for the sin in his own life and endeavor to lift the lives of others from sin; be they friend or foe. We must learn to hate the sin that spoils our own lives and the lives of those we don't love. But to yield to the Will of Christ, we must never hate the life of any person, be he white, or black, brown or yellow.

The greatest bridge builder between man and man and between men and nations, is the Spirit of Christ operating between heart and heart. To hate a person is unchristian. Not to hate the sin that makes us hate him is to put our professed Christianity to shame. Any person without the influence of sin in his life is both a lovely and a lovable person.

Christianity is not merely a standard of respectability. The church is not a social club, nor is it a fraternal order. It is a fellowship of believers in Christ, the bride and body of Christ in the world. When you become a member of the church, you actually become a part of the body of Christ. "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

ing this session, also, plans should be made for the part the Intermediates will have on the final program.

The last day, "Faith of Our Fathers," will be somewhat of a review, as planned in the leader's guidebook. At this session, too, the group may decide that for its part on the closing program it will give a radio "March of Time" program (suggested on pages 83-86). It may have decided it on the fourth day. This last session would be a good time to review and practice this, and also to review the whole week's work and study. The closing worship service on pages 86 and 87 will be a lovely way to end the course.

In a six-day School, all the above suggestions may be used with the extra session, added and the teacher using that mainly as outlined in the books, with minor changes to suit the group.

A ten-day School may follow each day as planned in the books.

It is difficult to plan a Vacation Bible School course for each individual church, for each church has different needs, different people, and different equipment. However, for the most part, I think that with the above suggestions, plus the outlines given in each book, plus the ideas and imaginations of a sympathetic teacher, a well-planned Vacation School in any church will be a success. I would strongly urge that each teacher read through and know her book, even though she or he may not use all the material in it. In this way, the teacher has an all-over view of the course. It will not be hit-or-miss. It will have a definite purpose, for the teacher will have planned it that way, knowing what is contained in the full course. Another "must" is that each teacher prepare the course well in advance, not simply the evening before. The materials must be ready, pictures must be found, hymns must be familiar to you, the room must be planned for re-arrangement, perhaps. There are many of these details which go to make up the successful Vacation School.

RELIGIOUS REFORMS IN JUDAH.

LESSON X—JUNE 8, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law.
—Psalm 119:34.

LESSON: II Kings 22:1-23:30.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 119:33-40.

A Boy King.

Josiah was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem." Although there is no reference to the matter, it is hardly likely that a boy so young should have ruled in his own right, and either his mother, Jedidah, or an "advisory council" must have assisted him in carrying out his kingly duties. But he was a remarkable boy and he had a long and successful reign. His kingship was another oasis in the long history of Judah's life when so many of the kings were sorry, sordid, sensual personalities.

In the Days of Youth.

"For in the eighth year of his reign while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father." He was then sixteen years of age. It is good to remember God in the days of youth. They are the days of foundation laying, the time when character is being formed, the time when life is plastic, the time when altruism is at its highest, the time when it is easier to say "Yes" to God. The church ought to give special attention to the evangelism of youth. If the young people of today are won to Christ, the leaders of tomorrow will be stronger and surer leaders and the world will be better.

A Crusader for His God.

II Chronicles states that when Josiah was in his twelfth year as king, i. e., when he was twenty years of age, he began his reforms which were widespread and rather thorough-going. II Kings states that his crusading zeal for reforms dated from the eighteenth year of his reign, i. e., when he was twenty-six. In either case he was a comparatively young man when he became a crusader for his God. Here are the years when young people ought to be enlisted not only in the Christian life, but in Christian crusades. Here is the time when they ought to be brought face to face with God's claim upon their lives for full-time service. This is the time when their enthusiasm and their energies ought to be enlisted in kingdom enterprises.

Honest Workmen.

"Howbeit there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, because they dealt faithfully." The reference is to the men who were doing the repairing on the Temple—carpenters, builders, and masons, and the overseers. The men were faithful, they could be trusted to handle the money honestly. Boy oh boy, what a picnic such a system would be for so many people today! To handle a lot of money and not to give an account of it—how many people could overcome that temptation? As a matter of fact everybody who handles money ought to have to give an account of it, both for their sakes and for the sake of the cause. Big corporations like the great 5 and 10 cent stores have found by actual test that at least ten per cent of their clerks are dishonest.

The Lost Bible.

When Shaphan, at the order of Josiah, went to Hilkiah the high priest, to make arrangements for the repairs at the Temple, the priest said unto him, "I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord." And he gave it to Shaphan to read. As he read it he was troubled and he told the king about it, and read the book to the king himself. It affected the king even more than it did Shaphan, and he rent his garments in token of penitence and confession. He realized that he and his people had grievously sinned against God, and that they had incurred his holy wrath. A conscientious reading of the Bible will bring a sense of unworthiness and sin. It is a book of comfort, to be sure, but it is not a comfortable book. The Word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than two-edged sword, piercing even to the joints and marrow and is a discernor, not only of the thoughts, but of the intent of the heart. A Christian needs regular reading of the Bible to keep alive a sensitiveness to sin, to deliver him from self-complacency, to keep alive a sense of urgency and alertness. As Dwight L. Moody is reported to have said, or rather to have written on the fly-leaf of his Bible, "Sin will keep you from this Book, and this Book will keep you from sin." Men would be better if they read the Bible more, that is if they read it with an open mind and an obedient spirit.

It is generally agreed among scholars that this "lost book" was what we now call Deuteronomy, at least the greater part of it. Its words concern the young king.

The Quality of Mercy.

In agony of spirit Josiah sent to Huldah the prophetess to see if he could get any assurance that the wrath of the Lord would not come upon the nation because of the sins of the people. Alas, she had no word of hope for the nation itself—"Tell the man that sent you, Thus saith the Lord, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the word of the book which the king of Judah hath read." It was a message of doom for the nation that all too soon found literal fulfilment. But there was an element of divine mercy in the sentence—because Josiah himself had walked humbly before God, and had felt his own sense of guilt, he was to be spared the sorrow of seeing the tragedy take place in his own day. He would be gathered to his fathers and his eyes would not see the evil that would come upon his beloved nation.

Reforms and Restoration.

Josiah instituted sweeping reforms and restored ancient customs. The vessels of Baal were brought out of the temple, groves and high places—the scenes of idolatrous worship—were destroyed, the houses of the sodomites and the pagan priests were destroyed, the horses used in worshipping the sun and the chariots were burned, images were ruthlessly ground to dust, and even the bones of the wicked priests were taken up and burned. Priests were even killed. And the Passover, the ancient and significant feast of first importance which had been abandoned, was restored in a more magnificent way than ever before. Then as now, obedience to the word of God, meant a change of individual life and social reform. As a nation or an individual hides the word in the heart, life becomes sweeter, stronger, surer.

ADDRESS OF GOV. CHERRY AT ELON COLLEGE.

ment. Business, with all other elements of our life in North Carolina, is recognizing that good education is good business.

As an ideal we should be interested in the cause of education for education's sake alone, and with no regard for its actual value as an investment or its potential returns. As a practical matter, business and education can't get very far apart under our North Carolina system of doing things. Both are integral parts of our economic structure. They need each other. Business needs the trained men and women that only education can supply. Education must have operating funds which business can provide.

We have begun in recent years to pay pretty close attention to such relationships as exist between the economic status of people and the educational level. A study of any people within any fixed or imaginary boundary shows that high income and high standards of living inevitably accompany high levels of education and technical skill. Studies on a wider, world scale have revealed that countries short of natural resources, but with good education, have living standards that are high. Across these United States of ours wherever higher incomes prevail, they are always hand in hand with high levels of education.

The secret of our success here in America is our innate urge to approach everything from a practical standpoint. So as practical Americans we very quickly see that education can contribute greatly to our expanding economy by increasing the productive capacity of people so that they can earn higher wages. And the best thinking on the part of those in about North Carolina's problems this state who do the best thinking brings us around to the proposition that we can solve most of our state's woes—from health to heaven and from our fertile farm soils to paved city streets—only by pulling up the per capita income of our people. This average income is too low for the sort of state structure we are seeking to maintain, is too low in contrast with other states, and is too low for the building here of the magnificent future that North Carolina should and could have and to which her people are entitled.

An ever-expanding economy is what we've got to have if we expect high levels of employment, reasonable prices and general prosperity. This means more consumers, and more consumers consuming more things. The only way to get more consumers is to train them into those wants and to educate them to earn enough money to fulfill those wants.

The greatest natural resource of any state or nation is the capacity of its people to be educated. Let's look at some educational levels around the world. Denmark is practically devoid of natural resources, but Denmark—from a per capita standpoint—is actually better off than the United States, as rich as we are in natural resources. Switzerland has no oil, no minerals, no productive forests and very little tillable land, but the Swiss have an economic status that matches our own. Both countries have high levels of education. Now look at some countries that are overflowing with natural resources. Columbia, in South America, teems with productive mines, valuable forests, rich soil. But wealthy Columbia is poor—pathetically poor—in per capita wealth and individual income. Columbia's educational level is very, very low. I think you'll find the same story the world over, by nations and by communities. I think you can see some instances close at hand right here in our own North Carolina. High living standards seem everywhere to go hand in hand with high educational levels. The reverse is true, too. Low standards of living, low education level.

What can we do here in North Carolina to lift the standard of living in those sections where it is now much lower than it ought to be? We talk a lot about the things we have. We like to recite the fascinating figures of how many automobiles we have, how many telephones, how many electric refrigerators, how many radios, how many spindles in our mills, how many homes have bath tubs, and so on. We show less enthusiasm for those thousands of homes that as yet have no telephones, refrigerators or bath tubs—and there are many of them. So, the capacity of our people to consume hasn't been half-way fathomed. If we want to increase the power of these people to consume, we must increase their income. How? Experience seems to teach that education and training will turn the trick.

We keep inventing new machinery, and every time a new machine comes out, it demands new skills, a better trained population, a better educated people.

There are still some of our people who need to be aroused to the truth of the statement that education is the best investment for a prosperous tomorrow. We can't choke this education down craws which have no appetite for it. We can compel boys and girls to go to school for a certain number of years, but after that comes the real education and development that is going to determine the level on which they will live. Compulsion will accomplish nothing there. Desire is necessary. Education in that realm, in the realm in which Elon College operates, can be improved only by education. That's a job for the men and women who are graduating seniors here today. It's a job of salesmanship.

Over and over again you must tell the story of how a high level of education in this state of ours, and this nation, means a high standard of living. Over and over we must all teach, in devious ways, that prosperity and an informed, intelligent citizenry go hand in hand. We must teach that education is a good investment.

Everyone has some interest in some school or schools. Men and women without children remember their own school days. Men and women with children live school days over again with their children, and possibly with their grandchildren.

There is a great story in education, a great series of stories and succession of stories. Education is dramatic. It has everything in it to make it so. It embraces struggle, pathos, triumph, competition, good humor and interesting people. Just as business always needs more customers, education needs more enthusiasts. Those of you assembled here today have bought education. Now I think you can turn around and sell it—sell it as a principle, as an avenue to more complete happiness, as an institution, as an investment. Because GOOD EDUCATION IS GOOD BUSINESS.

C. Shannon Morgan Speaking for Seniors of Windsor High School

Arriving at the end of the final year in high school, we Seniors who have accompanied each other for years have a feeling, which is a mixture of melancholy and joy. We sense a sad feeling because we realize that when we depart from high school we may never see all of our faculty again, and we know that while some of our classmates will meet again after graduation, many will see each other's face no more. On the other hand, we are happy because we have reached one goal, our parents and friends sacrificing that we might attain this desired foundational destination from which we may proceed to higher goals.

Parents, you who sent us to school twelve long years—or more!—to you our thoughts turn first. You cared to send us to school before we perceived what school was, and you insisted when we were unconcerned. You now see your labors taking fruit, that they were not exerted in vain. Before everyone present we wish to express to you our appreciation of your efforts.

Members of the faculty, we regret very much to be separated from you who have guided and instructed us into the sea of knowledge, but we must part for the time is at hand. All we request of you is to enlighten students in the years to come as you have us in the past and that you hold the standards of our Alma Mater high.

Juniors, we bequeath to you our empty room and seats. With this bequest we hope that next year you will have a fine school year, a successful graduation, and a great embarkation upon life.

Classmates, we should realize that as we go into the world, that Long-fellow knew what he was talking about when he wrote:

"Oh thou child of many cares, Life has quicksands, life has snares."

We shall meet impediments in our life as everyone does, but we shall be able to overcome many of these rough tangles if we put into practice what we have learned here.

No matter where we go or what we do, we shall always remain a part of our Alma Mater:

"I am part of all that I have met;
Yet all experience is an arch wherethro'
Gleams that untraveled world, whose margin fades
Forever and forever when I move.
How dull it is to pause, to make an end,
To rust unburnished, not to shine in use!
As though to breathe were life."

We should always work to honor Windsor High School.

My parting words to you, My Classmates, are best expressed in the words of Shakespeare's "Hamlet": "This above all: to thine own self be true, and it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man."

Faculty, Juniors, Friends and our beloved Alma Mater, we bid you adieu.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME XCIX.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1947.

NUMBER 23.

Infant Baptisms

One of the beautiful ceremonies of the Church has always been the Baptism of little children as soon as it is possible to bring them to the church.

Its purpose is two-fold; to name the child as belonging to the household of faith in Jesus Christ, and to unite the parents and the church members in a solemn covenant that promises that the child shall receive Christian nurture and concern until it shall attain the age when it may assume for itself the responsibilities which the parents have taken in cooperation with the other church members who stand as sponsors.

It becomes a child of the church through Baptism. It is dedicated to God in the presence of and with the whole congregation.

Because of this cooperative compact, namely, the promise to provide the environment in which a child can grow to youth under Christian influence and love, our Board of Deacons has wisely voted to require that one of the parents at least shall be a member of this church, or to some other church for which this church stands as proxy in the ceremony. It would be ridiculous to suppose that a parent who would not accept the responsibility of being a loyal member of Christ's Church for himself could actually fulfill the baptismal vows. For all of us the society of the friends of Jesus Christ—the Church—is necessary for this purpose, especially when we consider how impossible it is for us to train our children alone. We believe that there is available no better way to surround a child with proper nurture and care than through this medium of the church.

We do not believe that the Rite of Baptism miraculously gains God's favor in behalf of the child. We do believe that it demonstrates our common belief that all little children belong to God and His Kingdom of Heaven. In Baptism, therefore, we celebrate the fact of God's love and care, and promise to assist Him in every way possible to keep unspotted from the world the little life entrusted to our care.

VALLEY OF VIRGINIA S. S. AND PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Pilgrim Fellowship Convention of the Valley Virginia Conference will be held with the Mayland Christian Church, Thursday, June 12, 1947.

The Convention theme is: "Letting Your Light Shine." Matthew 5:16—"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

The morning worship service will be conducted by Rev. G. H. Veazey.

THE CHILD AND THE BELLS.

I was a child, alone, forlorn.
In the golden air of that Sabbath morn;
With only four stern walls around
And scraggy plants from the filled-in ground—
When suddenly into the quiet air
There came a startling sound, yet fair;
Chimes from the spires that rose so high,
And the deep-toned bell with its resonant cry.

As I listened bells from all around Flung on the air their vibrant sound;
And some were distant and some were near,
And some were muffled and some were clear.
My heart expanded and opened wide,
To the magical, musical, solemn tide,
As it surged and soared till it touched the sky,
Then let its beauty in echoes die.
Over my heart a sweet hush fell,
People were worshipping, I knew well,
Cared for children . . . such as I.

—Corinne S. Hall.

Enrollment of officers and delegates, reports of department superintendents, special music. Dr. William T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, will deliver the morning address at 11:00 o'clock. With the appointment of committees and announcements the Convention will adjourn for the noon hour.

The afternoon session will convene at 1:30 o'clock with the Pilgrim Fellowship in charge of the worship service. Miss Chicoine, Field Director of Christian Education and Young People's Organizations, will address the Convention in the afternoon.

With the report of committees and installation of officers the Convention will adjourn.

We, the program committee, are expecting a large number of delegates and visitors to be present at the Convention.

CHURCH BOOSTS ATTENDANCE.

During Lent the First Congregational Church of Los Angeles used radio spot announcements to stimulate attendance. This is believed to be the first time that a recognized and established Christian Church has used this method for increasing attendance. The advertising campaign sought to gain support for the two services a day which were in charge of the Rev. James W. Fifield, minister. The church has expended $3,500 through a local advertising agency to purchase the necessary time and pay the costs of producing the announcements.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

HOW TO INTRODUCE YOUR CHILD TO CHRIST.

By KENNETH J. FOREMAN.

Let the children come to me and do not try to stop them, for the Kingdom of God belongs to such as they.—Luke 18:16 (American translation).

Introducing any one to Christ, in the true sense, is more than a mere social introduction where all one is given is a bare name. What you desire is that Christ shall be far more than a name to your child.

The first and most important requirement is that you shall know Christ yourself. If you know and love him, the rest can safely be left to you. Love will find its way. There are doubtless different ways of accomplishing it, but if your love for Christ is real, then your child can no more help finding it out, and sharing it, than he could help sharing your enthusiasm for truth or beauty in any form.

Another thing to remember is that "the promise is to you and to your children." You have God's assurance that in this what you desire, he desires. Most of the promises of God are contingent on the opening of a door, somewhere, by some human heart and hand; and in wanting to introduce your child to Christ you are opening the way for God to fulfill his promises. There is nothing on earth of which you can be more sure than that when you introduce your child to Christ you are in line with the will of God.

How? Love will find its way, and there are no set rules. Perhaps some suggestions may help a new father or mother.

Whatever you do, don't ever talk about Jesus to the child as if he were in a class with Santa Claus or the fairies, not even as if he were like an angel. About Santa Claus you can always play a sort of make-believe game, and about the fairies, too, if you like. Santa Claus has a real existence of a sort (like Uncle Sam, or the school spirit) even if fairies do not. But the existence of Christ is of a quite different sort. He is not something created by our minds, a name we give to something which could have a different name; he is even more real than ourselves, and more important. Your child should feel this from the way you speak of Christ, and to him.

Don't be formal about it. Nothing the child does or says is formal, and if Jesus is presented in any grown-up way he will seem, to the child, to belong only to the grown-up world over his head. Do not save a hushed or holy tone for speaking of Jesus, or the child may confuse him with funerals. Speak of him in the tone you use for speaking of living persons you love.

Let your church be a help to you. Make use of great church festivals, not only Christmas but others as well. Let every Sunday remind the child that this is His day. Pick a church with a good Sunday school. Know the Sunday school teachers and work together with them. Each of you can help the other know the child better. There are experts, too, who give much time and thought to this very thing. Write to our Committee at Richmond, if you are a Presbyterian, or to your own church headquarters, whoever you are, and ask them about books or other helps for parents with children the ages of yours. You may be surprised at the amount of fine material available.

When you read the Bible together, read much in the Gospels. Not Moses, who spoke only to adults, and not Paul, who did not admire children, can introduce your child to Christ so well as Christ can introduce himself—Christ, in whose eyes only a child is fit for the Kingdom of heaven. Let some of Christ's sayings be among the first verses the child commits to memory. Among the stories he knows best, let stories of Jesus come first.

When you pray with your child, as you promised to do when he was baptized, let your prayer be often to Christ himself. A home in which the only voice heard in prayer is that of a child, especially if the child's prayers are shown off to visitors as "cute," is a home in which, in time, prayer will be laid aside with other baby habits. Let him hear you pray. And teach him a prayer to Jesus, something more than "Now I lay me," and something better than a mere cry for help in a jam. One mother told her three-year-old that whenever he was about to get angry, or about to cry because things didn't suit, if he would just go off by himself and say, "Dear Jesus, help me," he would find that Jesus would really help him. That childhood experience, often repeated, turned out to be one of the foundation-stones of a lifelong faith. The child knew Jesus was real first because of his mother, but finally because she let him find out for himself.

Remember always that Jesus said, "Let the children come to me." Don't make them. If Jesus ever comes within range of their vision, there will be no trouble about getting them together. Just stand aside and watch them make friends.—The Presbyterian Outlook.

"GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD" TO CONTINUE THROUGH SUMMER.

The millions who have become devoted listeners to the Sunday evening ABC broadcasts of The Greatest Story Ever Told will find the program at the same familiar spot on the dial and at the same time throughout the summer months. The program will not take a summer vacation.

"The teachings of the Master through the magic of radio," Paul W. Litchfield, chairman of the Board of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, which presents the broadcasts, said, "know no seasonal or geographic limitations. Particularly in the troubled world of today, the messages of tolerance, love and understanding contained in the program are needed as sorely in the summer months as during the other seasons of the year."

Written under the supervision of Fulton Oursler, a senior editor of The Readers Digest, "The Greatest Story Ever Told" is directed by Marx Loeb and includes music by a choir and orchestra under the direction of William Stoess. The program is heard Sundays at 6:30 P. M., EDT, over the coast-to-coast network of the American Broadcasting Company.

FOREIGN STUDENTS SECRETARY.

J. Benjamin Schmoker of Minneapolis, Minn., has been appointed general secretary of the Committee on Friendly Relations Among Foreign Students. Work of the committee is supported by most major Protestant denominations, the YMCA and the YWCA. Mr. Schmoker served as freshman counsellor of the University of Minnesota YMCA from 1926 to 1932 and was its executive secretary from 1932 to 1945. Since 1945 he has been city-wide program secretary of the Minneapolis YMCA. He is a member of the session of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, chairman of its council of religious education and supervisor of the church school. He is also a member of the governing board of the Westminster Foundation of the University of Minnesota. In 1932 and 1936 Mr. and Ms. Schmoker conducted YMCA tours in Europe.

The measure of a man's real character is what he would do if he knew he would never be found out.

—Lord Macaulay.

CHILDREN'S DAY.

We salute the children. They are the salt of the earth. Little do they realize it, but they keep many parents in Sunday School and Church. They exact a steadying and sobering influence in home and Church. Children are one of our greatest forces for temperance. Parents learn by teaching their children. These little philosophers and theologians prod our adult minds with unavoidable questions. This is an indispensable part of our educational program.

Sunday should be a great day in our Churches. Attendance should be large and offerings generous. Few of our churches have invested enough in children's work. Better equipment and leadership are needed. More ambitious plans and expenditure should be made. Some of our future deacons, teachers, ministers and missionaries may unite with the Church on Children's Day.

Thank God for the children. The Church is not without hope. Talent is being developed. Our spirits are being rejuvenated. The Church of yesterday, today and tomorrow are one. History and prophecy are joined. The best is yet to be. Let us thank God and take courage.

THE CHILD'S BIBLE.

A Bible may be among the child's most prized possessions. Many Bibles, received in childhood, were carried by our boys through the recent war. The gift of a Bible may have far-reaching consequences in the life of any boy or girl. The practice of providing more than one Bible for each child should be commended. Each child finally selects his favorite print, version, or binding. It may be surprising to discover how many factors encourage or discourage children in Bible reading. Every opportunity and encouragement should be given.

Not only should children be allowed to select their favorite Bible, they should select a number of favorite passages. It may be one of the following: "It is a good thing to give thanks" (Psalms 92:1), "He hath made everything beautiful" (Ecclesiastes 3:11), "Be kind to each other" (Ephesians 4:32), "Forget not to show love" (Hebrews 13:2). Biblical bookmarks for each reference should facilitate the pleasurable reading habit.

Jesus memorized the Scriptures during childhood. Choice bits may be memorized at an early age and exemplified from year to year. In this way the Scriptures become an inseparable part of our character and culture. We remember that the truths which Bible stories portray only have meaning for children when they become a part of the character itself.

"Except ye become as a little child" and read the Bible with imagination, "Ye shall not enter the Kingdom of heaven."

PARENTS and CHILDREN.

The care and training of children is our most sacred task. If we fail here, we fail everywhere. The home can make an indispensable contribution, for it is in the home that attitudes of appreciation, thoughtfulness, kindness, hospitality and consideration are established. Lewis Dunnington insists that "We need to look to ourselves for improvement. What we creates an atmosphere from which they soak up attitudes and standards. To a plastic, credulous, impressionable child the parent stands in the place of God."

The Child Study Association issued this forthright statement: "Men and women, in order to be good parents, must first be sound, well-developed personalities. Mothers must do more than rock the cradle and fathers must do more than keep the home fires burning. They are called upon at every turn to interpret to their children the many-sidedness of a complex world and help them toward an insight which they themselves must first possess. Family life is a continuous drama in which every member is a product of his relations to every other member; but since father and mother play the leading roles in the drama, they most of all determine the destinies of their children. Hence the prime importance of parents themselves achieving some maturity and stability of character as they are to be a constructive force in the children's lives. They will need first and foremost to put their own house in order. The must have not only a fair degree of inner harmony, but also possess some zest for living, some values which they have discovered for themselves and which they courageously affirm. Only then can they see their children clearly, or refrain from exploiting them for their own emotional needs."

Spring and summer offer unparalleled opportunities for parents and children. These summertime experiences include the greater freedom of outdoor play, time spent on picnics or excursions, the more intimate contacts with nature, the chances to watch people at work, various outdoor projects, and new opportunities for visiting and entertaining company. Parents may share many new and refreshing experiences during summer vacations, experiences which may have profound religious significance.

Contemplate the potential greatness of our posterity! An unknown author has given the following answers to the question, What Is a Boy?:

He is a person who is going to carry on what you have started.

He is to sit right where you are sitting and attend when you are gone to those thing you think are so important.

You may adopt all the policies you please, but how they will be carried out depends upon him.

Even if you make leagues and treaties, he will have to manage them.

He is going to sit at your desk in the Senate, and occupy your place on the Supreme Bench.

He will assume control of your cities, states and nation.

He is going to move in, take over your prisons, churches, schools, universities and corporations.

All your work is for him, and the fate of the nation and of humanity is in his hands.

All your work is going to be judged and praised or condemned by him.

Your reputation and your future are in his hands.

So it might be well to pay him some attention. R. L. H.

Helping Your Children Form Christian Standards

How can we help our children achieve Christian living? We must believe sincerely that the Christian way of life is good for us and for our children. We must commit ourselves to this way and accept the disciplines that follow. We must have the courage to speak our Christian and ethical convictions in groups where those convictions are challenged or opposed. The family must be strengthened as the proving ground for new ways of living that will be effective in all society. "Learning in the home to live in the world" may well be our theme song for the days ahead.

This learning goes on every day. If each day we try to live according to our best understanding of Jesus' standards for us, we will learn and grow and really live creatively—hence with deep happiness. At times decisions and actions seem easy. Often they are hard as we try to work out practical solutions that follow Jesus' pattern. Easy or difficult, though, we must follow the Way.

New Paths Ahead.

Parents today have the intriguing opportunity of setting out on new paths with their children. One family in the light of the world's suffering and hunger re-evaluated their Christmas plans. By mutual agreement gifts given and received from friends and family were simplified or omitted. Thus money was saved and on Christmas day a goodly sum started across the world to hungry children. It became for this family group and for their friends a truly Christlike Christmas, a Christmas that shone with deepened meaning.

We need to read again the story of Jesus. In a world where modern transport has made us all neighbors we must study the way Jesus treated those in the "other group." He made a Samaritan, a foreigner, the hero of one of the greatest stories ever told. Pharisee or outcast, rich tax collector or beggar, Samaritan or Jew, they were all God's children in the mind and heart of Jesus.

What are some of the parts of a pattern of Christian living today?

We suggest these as qualities to be woven into the fabric of family living:

1. Ability to say, "I'm sorry. It was my fault."
2. Team-work on hard jobs.
3. Courtesy to all—even parents—or children—or strangers.
4. Fairness.
5. Willingness to adjust.
6. Honesty in little things—and big.
7. An understanding—appreciation of others.
8. Careful evaluation of right and wrong, and repeated experience in doing the right.
9. Joy in work.
10. Understanding of and respect for people who are different.
11. Sympathy.
12. Reaching out to all peoples in friendliness.
13. Ability to forgive.
14. Thoughtfulness of others even when tired.

What others would you add? One thoughtful mother said she hoped her children would be tough-minded and tender-hearted.

In the Home.

Appreciation is a wonderful tonic. Jesus found the unknown best in Peter and in Paul. We, too, may help people blossom. "Mary, your bouquet is lovely." "Bill, I'm happy that you finished the lawn. I know it's been hot. Next time I'll take a turn at it." "Mother, this supper is wonderful." "Dad, tell us what happened in town today."

If Dad helps Mother with the dishes in the evening instead of burying himself in the paper, his children are learning something of the Christian way. If Mother sees Dad to the door with a cheery good-bye as he starts for work, it is more than an idle gesture.

Simple things, yes, but the texture of Christian living is woven of appreciation and loving cultivation of little talents. It is of the essence of Christianity to help each person blossom. If we learn to draw each other out and appreciate the simple talents and abilities around us, we will learn to appreciate with joy the talents, abilities and contributions of people of other ways and other races.

Jesus said that the love of God and concern for our fellow-men were the two most important things. If we do not daily help each other cheerfully in the home, how can God's will ever spread around the world?

The Home and the Community.

The members of a family need to think over, discuss and work on their various community relationships. This should begin very early. We, as a Christian family, have a responsibility to discuss better ways rather than just follow the crowd. The use and care of other's playthings, the way other people's property is treated, a little later on the choice of good movies, closing hours for parties—these and similar things can be better handled when two or three families work together in developing habits.

Daily relationships mean so much. In our telephone conversations are we strictly honest in all that we say? The children overhear and learn. If a flurry of petty stealing at the ten cent store develops, do we try to laugh it off, or save face, or do we with wisdom and understanding help the children know that there is a Christian way? Can we help them soften the lines of school cliques and learn how to reach out in friendliness to new youngsters coming into the community? Such experiences offer wonderful opportunities to work on this matter of Christian living.

The Home Lives in the World.

Many things can be done today in the matter of world understanding and better attitudes toward other races. There is a wealth of books, magazines, pictures, school and church programs to help us learn of others. They can be used as adventures in getting acquainted with different peoples who are not close at hand. Often, however, there are more chances than we dream of to make first-hand contacts and to invite into our homes those of different racial or social backgrounds. The experience of growth is mutual. We set out to be friendly and we find our lives enriched and made happy.

A high school freshman, knowing something of the heartaches of the Nisei during the war, wrote these lines about her friend, a Japanese-American girl who had visited in their home:

I pray that she will not grow bitter
As some people are.
And I think she will not—
She has her eyes on a star.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The following tribute was spoken by the writer at the funeral of Amedeo Obici, May 26, 1947:

The flags of Planters Nut and Chocolate Company float at halfmast today across the United States and Canada. The chief has made his mark and written his name high among men of courage, and faith, and vision. With an instinctive gaiety and chivalry mellowed in old-world traditions be blended new-world courage and industry from earliest boyhood and young manhood with capacity to see and seize opportunity until he made a place for himself in the industrial world of America. Following the time-honored principle of doing the best you can, where you are, with what you have he developed both himself and his vision with unrelenting diligence and care. The amassing of a fortune never diminished his faith in God or fellowmen. He softened long hours of application to business and continuous self-discipline with wholesome fun and good fellowship in the company of many friends from all walks of life.

With the thought of serving others a commodity as homespun and down-to-earth as the tasty and easily eaten peanut he brought joy and pleasure as well as real beneficence to millions, and gave to thousands useful and gainful employment. Serving others—a continuously growing number of others—was to him a pyramiding passion. He built his business on the solid foundation of service to folks on their home level as well as at their holiday best. He thought independently in his faith in God, and co-operatively in his faith in fellowmen. With a marvelous capacity for courageous realism in the organizing and broadening of his great industry, and the ability to gain and hold the confidence and cooperation of his fellow-workers he became a real chief, and a true friend. So that it is proper and fitting that the appreciation of hundreds of friends and thousands of employees be thus simply spoken as we gather here in this flower-decked silence in the place he loved and made so beautiful. By these fragrant flowers and this large company of friends and neighbors, his family and folks may be well assured that thousands feel it is meet and right that Planters' flags float at halfmast all across the nation. May the blessings of God be vouchsafed to his loved ones, and may God rest his soul in peace.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

TALK BY J. ARTHUR RANK AT THE WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION LUNCHEON.

There perhaps never was a time when more was being talked of what should be done for youth and about youth—child guidance, psycho-analysis clubs, recreation, serious study of child delinquency—in fact, almost every field is being given thought and consideration. And perhaps I am not the only one that thinks that, whilst welcoming all this, so much of it seems to be rather like the gift of the stone, rather than the bread that was asked for.

We have to face, before we can make real progress in our appeal to youth, a few unpleasant truths:

1. That the materialistic outlook of the age, as far as young people are concerned, is increasing—and not diminishing.

2. That the traditional life which, for ages has gathered around church and chapel, has most certainly in our big cities declined considerably, and we have accepted a little too lamely the tendency, on the part of education, to divorce religion, in any form, from its curriculum.

Time was, in ancient days, when theology was the highest course of study. There was also a time when in all our schools, part of it was seriously devoted to religious teaching and instruction. Now, I understand, in any argument about time-table, it is that period which is thrown to the winds. In England, most of it is taken up with registering for milk, giving out notices and any one of a dozen things that has to be done before school settles down. The result is that, for thousands of our young people without home example of church going, there is a complete cloud of ignorance of the very elements of Christian Faith.

It is little wonder that, as they grow up, the rules by which they should live and conduct their lives, are completely absent—that the relationship in the home and in business so often show sides which are not due to definite evil but just sheer ignorance of a right conception and moral standards.

So, despite all that I have said on the difficulties and the problems, we have to meet the challenge and we have one great asset—namely, that so much upon which people have set their hearts has proved failure and that they are looking for a message and guidance.

The World's Sunday School Association can give this guidance but must find a new appeal to youth.

I know there are a great many people who feel against using any aid which modern invention has given to us, but in my belief that is short-sighted and narrow in the extreme. After all, the early evangelists, facing the break-down of the then-known world, used every means that came to their hands. St. Paul could use the heathen temple in Athens; he could turn the prevalent beliefs of the time into texts for his own preachings. Why, therefore, cannot we use the most modern method of teaching by film?

In the main, the film, with all its great technical progress, has been used for entertainment. The war has proved its value as an instrument of teaching. By this means, men have learnt to use complicated machinery in a quarter of the time taken by normal teaching methods, and the training of sailors, soldiers and airmen has benefited by the use of the film.

Leaders of organized religion have been slow to use this great invention but at least I am glad to say, in many countries, there is a growing realization of the part the film can play in Evangelism and Christian education. Recently, in Britain, there have been Christian Commando Campaigns which, in my country, is another name for team Evangelism. In these campaigns, the religious film has been used extensively.

The World's Sunday School Association, with its world-wide organization, is ideally placed for making available information about religious films to Christian educationalists. We are working closely with Religious Film Societies in many countries. These are already in operation in the United States of America, the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and several European countries. Others are in the process of being formed.

No man can tell whether he is rich or poor by turning to his ledger. It is the heart that makes a man rich. He is rich according to what he is, not according to what he has.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

On Saturday, May 24, at 11:00, officers of the Alumni Association, and members of the Association from many sections of the country, gathered on the vacant lot north of the highway opposite the library building for the purpose of dedicating that particular parcel of ground as a site for Elon College's new gymnasium. The Alumni Association was in charge. The program consisted of song, prayer and brief addresses. The addresses that were delivered are given to the public through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and are as follows:

EXPANSION PROGRAM.

This is an historic occasion in the life of Elon College. It is the first definite step toward the realization of our Expansion Program for the College. A program that calls for the erection of seven new buildings: a power house, a gymnasium, a dining room, and four new dormitories (two for men and two for women). These buildings are to be erected at a cost of more than $1,000,000. This building program is necessary that the College may be better prepared to do the work that it is expected to do. There is a hesitancy on the part of some among us to turn even a spade of earth until we have in hand all the money necessary to pay for the erection of the building that will stand on this site. I do not share this hesitancy. This is a case in which we walk by faith and not by sight.

Today as we gather here for the breaking of the ground for our new gymnasium, I am reminded of those who have preceded me in office: Dr. William S. Long, founder and first president of the College—a man of vision, of courage and of action. Dr. W. W. Staley, the second president of the College, a minister, a philosopher, a financier, and a Christian statesman of the first rank. Dr. E. L. Moffitt, the third president of the College, a business man, an educator, and a Christian layman. Dr. W. A. Harper, the fourth president of the College, a profound student, a builder, and aggressive and energetic leader. All men of great faith. May God give us grace to follow in their train.

Today we must have faith, faith in ourselves, in our fellowman, the alumni, friends of the College, and in God. We must believe that we can and that we will. That God will bless and prosper us, and give to us the spirit of liberality and the fact of generosity. We must realize that the products of such schools as Elon College are essential to our democratic way of life. Here on our campus is sown the seed of democracy that will bear fruit in public life and result in a leadership that will mean peace and prosperity for our country and for the world.

L. E. SMITH,
President.

INFLUENCE OF MEMORY.

At best life is short. Some individuals are permitted to remain on this earth longer than others. There is not a satisfactory answer to the question why.

We are never fully prepared for the passing of a loved one, friend or acquaintance, especially if the one is of tender age or in the prime of life. Those Elon men and women who gave all for their country in World War I and World War II were in the prime of life and passed under many different circumstances. Some were in training for the defense of our land; an error in judgment or an accident probably led to a fatality. Others were lost at the front in the line of duty. We know under what circumstances, where, and when some lost their lives, while other individuals sailed into the blue, never to return, the record simply states: lost in action.

Personally, I feel keenly the loss of these men and women because I knew all of them and worked intimately with many in preparation for the air forces of the various divisions of the government.

It is sad to relate the paradox in many cases the memory of the departed has a greater influence on the living than was exhibited when the individual was in the flesh. This statement is understood when we mention the Great Teacher, the father of our country and look at the monuments throughout the length and breadth of the world.

On this occasion there is no exception. The alarming records compiled by the departments of government on health and physical fitness are a matter of history. Yet we must profit by the past, and the Elon men and women lost in these wars would have us carry on for them. Their memories give us the inspiration to erect a structure on this ground so we may have better facilities to train men and women to defend our country in better health, physical fitness, mental alertness and cooperative citizenship by participation in intra-mural and intercollegiate programs. When we erect this structure we do more than bring brick and mortar together, we build men and women.

A. L. HOOK,
Registrar.

GYMNASIUM.

I wish that what we are doing here today was more than a symbol or gesture. I wish we were putting some permanent materials here, that we were laying a corner stone for the gymnasium. Last year at this time I thought by now we would be able to start the permanent construction; but two things have prevented this: The first is that the money has not been raised and second is that building materials are still scarce and high.

We people who are in the Physical Education Department realize more than you the great need for this gymnasium. We need it for our intercollegiate athletic program. Other schools are hesitant about scheduling games here because of the inadequacy of our playing facilities. Our great need, however, is for our own students here on the campus. We have put in a major in physical education. In this course our men and women are taught to go into the public schools and teach health and physical development to the children of our state and country. This is a very important work. With the facilities we have at present we are definitely handicapped in this work.

My one great hope is that by next year at this time we can lay something permanent on this spot which is today dedicated for use as a memorial to those who lost their lives in the wars and to the better health and physical development of the youth of the present and future.

L. J. PERRY,
Coach.

FOOCHOW REPORTING.

How can we tell you what you all mean to us in this war-torn, shell-shocked, chaotic China? Your prayers, your letters, and your gifts all do something that helps to correct the very dark field of vision on which our entire lives are focused; and we are grateful to our Father for each and every one of you.

The Boards at home can doubtless report voluminously about how expensive the miracle is which, under God, must be accomplished for China. The Methodist Mission in Foochow is having to rebuild from the ground up a large portion of its mission houses, and millions flow like water for that. Our own Board has sent to Fukien since our return last July seventeen missionaries and four children; and the trip of each group on the various government troop ships could be made into an odyssey or saga. Two of those who were here last summer have since gone home, and that makes us now a total of twenty-five in Foochow and three in Shaowu Mission. Our travel expenses, our allowances, and our work all cost the Board more than normal amounts. We do hope the churches at home will understand, and rally to the support of the American Board.

Of our work it is hard to give any connected account, for we more or less have to be all things to all men. Church evangelism is the name of the assignment given to Mr. Christian, and Mission Treasurer to his wife. Here is what we do: Put in six to eight hours a day in the Mission office; look over buildings for the minimum essential repairs, and wrestle with masons and carpenters over the job; distribute old-clothing relief (many thousands of garments) to institutions, out-stations and individuals; supervise three mission kindergartens, in each of which daily milk feedings are given; share in the work of hospital evangelism; run kodachrome pictures of the Life of Christ; hold small group meetings with former students, also with children of former graduates; dig our gardens, give away flowers from our sweet-pea vines; help conduct prayer meetings; do country touring; and, most time-consuming of all, attend endless committee meetings on every phase of church, school and hospital work. Religious meetings in many churches, of course, are the hub around which all centers.

It is not all work, however, as you would agree if you could drop in some Saturday afternoon at Anti-Cobweb Club meeting, for tea and the hour of program that follows. Len has been president this term, and has put in plenty of time into shifting programs and speakers to suit the changing opportunities; but each month the speakers have brought us a worthwhile message of world interest.

Our Easter Concert was given this year by students from the Methodist, Anglican and Congregational schools in conjunction with Fukien Christian University, and was a notable performance, with Mrs. Scott conducting. We had rather dreaded a let-down, for of course most of the students have had little chance for musical training for several years past. But the program was so good as to astonish our new recruits, one of whom remarked, "We thought we had left that sort of program behind in the States."

Some of the projects just ahead are—the completion and registering of all deeds for Mission property—a tedious job that has been pending for years; the opening of a Relief Station in our nearest church by the Chinese Women's organization; with food and cloth received from CNRRA and service furnished by the church women; the taking of a series of colored sound-and-movie pictures of our work to be made shortly by a team of experts from Shanghai. Be sure to look for these Foochow scenes when released in U. S. this fall or winter; also try to see the excellent pictures taken here last summer by Karl Robinson of the CWVS Office.

Parcels from home are such a large part of our "extras" both in food, and in the joys of friendly contacts from home that they deserve a paragraph in any story of our lives. All sorts of canned goods, corn starch, cocoa, baking powder, soda, and even white sugar; plus fancy extras like dried fruits and marshmallows have been coming in from different ones of you; also the pencils, ten-cent store items and pieces of cotton cloth we had suggested. We have tried to send individual acknowledgements of these but want to thank you again, each and all, for your care and help to us and our friends.

Now a few highlights from here and there will perhaps help you to imagine our experiences better than we can tell them:

1. Our introduction on a recent Monday morning to the thousand young lads in the Foochow College Junior and Senior High departments. As we looked out over the sea of faces, we knew that doubtless the church's greatest opportunity was right there before us. Pray for our Mission Schools which are at present the most flourishing part of our work in Fukien.

2. A couple of items from Len's diary on country tour. "In Sang-young area—straggling villages with large farm-houses, in each of which houses a whole clan resides—it was the harvest season, and in our visits to the Christian homes we walked through fields of golden grain, with happy groups of harvesters gathering in the rich crops. We had numerous opportunities to meet and eat with groups of Christians and their neighbors, and to share with them the Gospel message.

"We stayed in one home where the head of the clan, the leader of the Christian group, lay seriously ill with malaria—not expected to live. As we were gathered in the big reception room the invalid was carried out to us in a long chair, and a special service of prayer was held for his recovery."

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

HAVE YOU HEARD—

That you will need to bring bedding and towels to the School of Missions? This information was left off of the announcement about the forthcoming school, but is very important to remember.

—o—

That Mrs. William T. Harrell, Route 1, Suffolk, Va., has agreed to arrange an exhibit of Year Books, Bulletins, Posters, and other material you have used in your local society for display at the School of Missions? Please send her any material you think others would enjoy seeing.

—o—

That the Pilgrim Press (Dayton Branch) is sending an exhibit of books to the School of Missions? Miss Elizabeth Mack, the new manager of the Dayton Bookstore, will be present to talk with you about all kinds of literature, and to sell you books on many subjects. Bring along a little extra money so you can take home some good books!

—o—

That the sessions of the Woman's Convention will be held Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons (3:00-5:00) and Tuesday night (8:00)? It is hoped that many from nearby churches will attend these sessions, if they cannot come to stay for the entire School of Missions. The evening session will consist of an "address" by our president, Mrs. Wisseman, and a Memorial Service in memory of Mrs. C. H. Rowland, conducted by Mrs. John Truitt.

That it is planned to have a picnic supper on Thursday night at the School of Missions? It will be held at "Moonelon" and those who are brave enough to attempt the swimming pool are urged to bring their bathing suits. The Vesper Service will also be held at "Moonelon" that night.

GIFTS FOR ANGIE.

Many societies are sending boxes of food and soap and used clothing to Miss Angie Crew, Kobe College, Kobe, Nishinomiya, Japan. Perhaps some of them will reach her in time for her birthday on June 29. At the present time only food, medicine, soap and clothing can be sent to Japan in boxes which weigh not more than eleven pounds.

Prices are so high that her salary would not pay for her food if she had to buy all of it herself. Boxes from home help not only her but her Japanese Christian friends, who are not allowed as many ration points as Americans. Used clothing is also desperately needed by many of her Japanese friends, she writes. Food should consist of dehydrated foods, such as dried apples, dried beans; "mixes," to which only water need be added; sweetened chocolate, etc. Be careful about placing packaged foods and soap in the same box. She writes that their pudding is often flavored with mothballs or soap because they were not careful when they packed their things.

BERTA MCCLINTOCK TO TEACH AT SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

Mrs. E. E. (Berta) McClintock, Secretary of Women's Work for the Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches, will teach a course at the School of Missions (June 16-20) entitled, "Methods in Women's Work." No one in our denomination is more capable of teaching this course than is Berta McClintock, who directs all the women's activities of our denomination. She is the editor of Guide Posts. She plans the yearly series of programs which come to us from the denomination, such as are found in the Gray Book this year. We are indeed fortunate to be able to study with her an hour each day and learn the practical things we need to know as we work in our local societies.

"Women hold in their hands over half of the votes which might be cast in any national election and over half of the private wealth of the country. They do the family buying of food, clothing and household equipment. Participation in the activities of a church group should reveal to every woman her potential power in today's world, and the opportunities which are constantly opening before her to use her power through the channels of the church for the betterment of human living everywhere," says Mrs. McClintock.

"The influence of women in establishing social customs in the community is often unconscious but very real. Most important of all, their role as mothers and teachers of young children puts upon their shoulders much of the responsibility for the way the next generation thinks and acts. The church, more than any other institution, provides motive and channels for the best use of this power," adds Mrs. McClintock.

The Missions Council is the official promotional and educational body representing the national Boards of both overseas and home boards of the Congregational Christian Churches in America. Mrs. McClintock's responsibilities are primarily for field contacts with groups of church women in the Congregational Christian Fellowship, working through the women State Presidents. Much of her time is given to speaking and the preparation and editing of educational and promotional material for women's work.

Born in Ohio, Mrs. McClintock moved to Colorado when quite young and was educated at Denver University, Boston University and Iliff Graduate School of Theology. She is an ordained minister.

Mrs. McClintock has held several important positions in the church world of the Middle West prior to her present post and these have included the Executive Secretaryship of the Denver Council of Religious Education, the General Secretaryship of the Colorado Council of Religious Education, the Directorship of Religious Education in the First Plymouth Church of Denver and for ten years the Directorship of the Older Girls Camp at Geneva, Colorado, under the auspices of the International Council of Religious Education.

In 1937 she came to Chicago from Denver, to serve as Associate Secretary of the Missions Council in the Mid-West Region, which extends through the Mississippi Valley from Ohio to Montana and South to Texas. After four years' service in that capacity, she assumed the responsibility for the national work which she now carries. While Mrs. McClintock makes her headquarters now in New York City she continues her close relationship with the Mid-West Regional Committee and devotes a large part of her time to field work in that area.

Mrs. McClintock was invited by the women of the Hawaiian Board to visit the Islands in the spring of 1947 and is now in Honolulu, spending about a month in that territory. She will come directly from Hawaii to Elon College, bringing with her Mrs. Dorothy Chong, president of our Hawaiian women.

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

You are just getting out of school for your summer vacation. Many of you who live in towns and cities will be going to the farm of some relative to spend some of the summer.

Rebecca, Oliver and I have just returned from an eight-day visit to the farm home of my parents in Tennessee.

This was Rebecca's first trip on the train. Oliver was very anxious to see how his little sister was going to like the trip on the train. We left here at three o'clock in the afternoon. Our train followed very closely the banks of the French Broad River for sixty-two miles of the hundred and twenty to Knoxville. Rebecca loved the train after it started going. She kept talking about the "water" as she called the river. Oliver led her up and down the aisle of the train to rest and amuse her. She would shake hands with all of the men on the aisle but none of the women.

This is one of the loveliest train routes I know about. If you happen to be going anywhere in that direction this summer I know that you would find it as lovely as we did. Oliver remarked about the many shades of green in the trees that climb up the mountains above the "train tracks." I asked him if he thought that he could make that many colors with his crayons. He said that he had so many shades of green that he might be able to do so.

When we got to father's farm everyone was very busy in the strawberry field picking berries. Oliver helped some with the picking. I got into the field one afternoon while Rebecca was napping and picked eight quarts. My mother wasn't very well so I spent most of the time in the kitchen cooking for the "Berry Hands."

Rebecca was so thrilled over the babies on the farm—the baby kittens, calves, chickens, ducks and pigs. She made friends with one of the dogs and was forever letting him into the house when he wasn't wanted!

My brothers say that they do not need to go to shows because there are forever enough "shows" taking place on a farm! Oliver was very much excited on the day that the bees made a new "swarm." Uncle Eugene and Uncle Alan got them to leave the low bough of a tree and enter a new hive.

Oliver took Rebecca on walks over the farm yard while I did the house work and cooking. They would slip into the hen houses and look into the nests which had just been deserted by the hens to see the number of eggs there. They trid out Grandpa's corn sheller and almost lost a screw out of it! They went to the pond to watch the ducks swim and dive. Each milking time found Oliver inside the milk house watching the new electric milker take the white milk from the cows.

The alfalfa hay got ready to cut while we were there. The cutting and raking of the hay and the big red tractor pulling the loads of hay into the barn filled the children with glee. There was a round buzz saw which was run by the tractor that would cut more wood in an hour than Grandpa use to be able to saw in three days!

Oliver got a long ride on one of the black horses one day at lunchtime. He liked the horses and each time one of them had to do a job of work on the farm he had to go along to watch the horse.

We came back to Asheville in the morning hours and enjoyed the return trip just as greatly as we did the trip down. The children were overjoyed to see their father again. Now they are looking forward to being in their own church this coming Sunday. Oliver is busy trying to learn his verses of Scripture for Children's Day. We hope that you will have a lovely Children's Day in your church.

CRYBABIES.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I happened to be calling at my neighbor's home when her eight-year-old son came to the front door. He was crying. The parents went to meet the youngster, his father inquiring, "Why the fuss, Don?"

Between sobs the boy told of a quarrel with his playmates, Michael and Jimmy. Evidently he hoped for sympathy and perhaps intervention.

"Stop crying, Don," said his mother quietly. "Go back to Michael and Jimmy. Be fair in every way with them, and let them know you expect them to be fair with you."

The father agreed, "That's right, Sonny; learn to settle your own quarrels."

During the afternoon of the same day, a young mother called on me. She has two boys, so naturally our conversation turned to the subject of children.

"There are some dreadfully unmannered boys in our neighborhood," she related. "The other day my Harry and Throck became involved in a heated argument, and very soon fists were flying. My husband went to the rescue of our lads and was obliged to ask the other boys to go home. However, the next day there was more trouble, and I myself had to go through the same routine. But our boys didn't like it. They said it made them feel like crybabies."

"Do you think there is a possibility that your sons were as much to blame as the other children?" I asked, interested to hear the mother's reply.

"Oh, yes," she admitted. "I overheard the second quarrel, and I'm quite sure it was a case of fifty-fifty."

"Don't you think it wise to encourage children to solve some of their problems by themselves?" I asked, thinking of the way Don's parents had met their child's complaining and tears.

"My brother, Jack, who has reared four fine sons has the same idea," she answered, smiling. "'Let the boys make mistakes,' he admonishes Tom and me every time he visits us. He thinks mistakes are a necessary part of experience, and I've heard him say, 'Boys and girls eventually must learn to be men and women; it is their hardest and most important lesson.' Tom, my husband—and I, too—thoroughly agree, but—"

"Yes?"

"You see, we don't want our boys to fight. If, however, they are left

SOUTHERN REGIONAL PLANNING CONFERENCE.

The time is again drawing near for the meeting of young people from many denominations at the North Carolina Youth Meeting sponsored Southern Regional Planning Conference. This conference is designed to build upon the denominational program by discovering means of meeting community needs and opportunities through the action of Christian youth.

A look into the conference this year would reveal a well-rounded program of Bible study, worship, recreation, music and seminars on important issues facing Christians today. Outstanding leaders will lead these various groups. It is an excellent opportunity to meet with the young people of other denominations and these leaders and share your common tasks in united action by youth.

Also this summer is a leading step forward for world Christian youth. The Southern Regional Planning Conference is a lesser step but one of utmost importance in the totality of Christian action on the part of young people. In addition, five similar conferences will be held in other parts of the country during the summer. Each will be carrying out the Oslo theme: "Jesus Christ Is Lord."

We would like to be represented there in order that we may join fully in this program. Conference time will be from June 29-July 5, and it will be held at Pleasant Hill Academy in Pleasant Hill, Tenn. You'll like the location. Cost will include $3.50 registration fee and $13.50 for room and board.

Would you be interested in attending? If so, write for registration blanks and additional information to C. Baxter Twiddy, Box 42, Elon College, N. C.

THE TIME IS NOW.

Do your Pilgrim Fellowship members like camping? But—you might say, "I feel that our group is lagging spiritually. We are having too many socials now." How about this—accomplish both objectives at the same time! You can do it, with good leaders, planning groups and hard work.

This is how we did it: Two and a half years ago, our counsellors and leaders decided that we needed to "get away from it all" or "retreat" (as we call it) for the purpose of guidance, inspiration and planning of our work. The results of our Retreat were so gratifying that it was decided to make it an annual event. The next year we were unable to have our week-end camp because of the polio epidemic. Last fall we resumed our Retreat.

This year, it was suggested that we try a "Spring Retreat," in addition to our fall one, with the idea of helping ourselves through the "spring fever" stage. Way back last February, we secured Camp Nawakwa for the weekend of May 17 and 18. Shortly after this, our planning committee met, talked about types of worship and recreational programs to be included, discussed various speakers, selected committees, and chose our theme: "The Time Is Now." Next—the work really began: a program schedule was made out, the food committees started their plans, the proposed speakers were contacted and various members of our group were asked to take certain parts. Of course things don't always run smoothly. At the last minute, we wondered if we had enough cars and as we gathered to leave Greensboro, it looked as if it would rain most any time. We finally arrived at the Camp and got started fairly near on schedule. The program moved along smoothly, with a couple of minor exceptions: one of our speakers had car trouble and arrived slightly late and our weiner roast supper was forced indoors by rain.

Throughout our program, we had several worship services led by our members and there was plenty of free time to explore the beauties of nature around the Camp. We had three guest speakers who brought us many good ideas and were wonderfully inspiring through their messages and fellowship. Miss Maxine Garner, Director of Religious Activities at Greensboro College, spoke to us on Saturday afternoon with regard to our attitude toward peoples of other races and people of our own race of whom we know very little. She pointed out that we should try to put ourselves in the other person's place and then decide on our course of action. Mr. Harold Hipps, Divinity Student at Duke University, led a Recreation Workshop and a "fun hour" of folk songs and games on Saturday night. The speaker for our Sunday morning service was Miss Eliabeth Chicoine. We are sure that those of you who have heard Betty speak have been encouraged and inspired. The general theme was that even though there are no new lands to be explored, there are many, many fields of occupation that offer opportunities for wonderful and soul-satisfying adventures in life. Our week-end also included planning meetings for our work over the next several months. Our meals were wonderful affairs, too.

Our most enjoyable and well-spent week-end was closed, very appropriately, with a consecration service, led by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman. We consider that our Retreats are "high spots" on our calendar year and all of us feel greatly helped by these opportunities for worship, guidance, inspiration, work, fun and fellowship together.

WORLD CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN YOUTH.

From July 30 to August 9 there will be assembled at Oslo, Norway, one of the great Christian Youth Conferences of our time. The Pilgrim Fellowship will be represented with its full quota. The theme of the Conference will be: "Jesus Christ Is Lord."

The five great purposes of the Conference will be: (1) We must rediscover together that Jesus Christ is Lord; (2) we must rebuild our fellowship in Christ; (3) we must face the situation in the world; (4) we must find the job we have to do; (5) we must plan the strategy of our campaign.

The program will follow somewhat the following outline: Morning Worship, Main addresses of the day, Bible study, Seminars—on World Order, Education, Freedom and Order, etc., and most of the evenings will be free for fellowship.

The Conference will be composed of 1,170 active members of the four

JUDAH'S LAST DAYS.

LESSON XI—JUNE 15, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: This fear of the Lord longeth days; but the years of the wicked shall be shortened.—Proverbs 10:27.

LESSON: II Kings 23:31-24:7; Jeremiah 36.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Jeremiah 10:1-10.

Gathering Gloom and Doom.

The fortunes of Judah were falling on hard times. The nation was fast going to pot. Josiah the king who had done so well and had reigned so long was killed in an ill-advised battle against the Egyptian king, Neco or Nechon, at Megiddo, and Jehoahaz his son came to the throne. He was a weak and evil man and the benefits of Josiah's reforms were soon frittered away. Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bonds and had him taken to Riblah and exacted a heavy tribute of silver and gold from the stricken country. A little later Pharaoh deposed Jehoahaz and placed Eliakim, whom he named Jehoiakim, on the throne. It was a puppet king of a puny kingdom, already doomed by sins of long-standing. The people were taxed heavily to pay the tribute money. The hand-writing was on the wall.

Out of the Frying Pan Into the Fire.

As if that were not enough, trouble arose from another quarter. Babylon was becoming the dominant power, and Judah soon fell under its sway. For three years Jehoiakim paid tribute to Babylon, and then he rebelled against this world power, with results that can easily be imagined. The little kingdom was overrun by the combined forces of the Chaldeans, the Syrians, the Moabites and the Ammonites. A little later, as we will learn from next Sunday's lesson, Jerusalem itself was conquered and the class, and the majority of the people were carried into captivity, thus ending the history of the Jews as a nation.

The Strange Servants of God.

"And sent them against Judah to destroy it, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by his servants the prophets." Who were these people whom the Lord God of Israel sent against his Chosen People to destroy them? They were bands of Chaldeans, and Syrians, and Moabites, and Ammonites—the record says "surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah." God works in mysterious ways. He uses strange instruments to fulfil His purpose. Even though Judah was composed of His chosen people, and contained Jerusalem the center of the nation and the place of God's Temple itself, it was overrun by heathen hordes because it had become rotten at the heart, because morals and religion had been allowed to come to a low ebb. When folks say, "It can't happen here," they do not know their history. The history of Israel and Judah and the Jewish nation as a whole is the story of the peril of privilege, and the price of privilege abused.

Enter Jeremiah.

It is against this background that Jeremiah enters upon the scene. His career covered a long period, and his prophetic ministry entered intimately in the national life. He is often referred to as the "prophet of gloom" or the "weeping prophet." His name has been memorialized in the word, "jeremiel," which means a doleful story. But Jeremiah was not a "wet blanket." And he got no joy from announcing the doom about to come upon the nation. He loved the nation with a deep and sacrificial love. With prophetic insight he saw the doom that was in the offing. And at great personal sacrifice and at personal risk he tried to warn his nation and to turn it from its headlong flight into destruction. He used graphic ways of getting his message across. He felt keenly the sins and sufferings of his people and identified himself with them. Because he was so grossly misunderstood and lived so much alone, he discovered new riches of personal religion. He discovered new resources in prayer. And his messages, preserved in writing, are immortal.

He Writes a Book.

At the bidding of the Lord, Jeremiah wrote down the substance of what he had been preaching against Israel and Judah. It was a last effort to save the nation from its doom. Baruch was his private secretary and wrote down as Jeremiah dictated. When the book, or roll, was finished, Baruch was directed to take it into the Lord's house and to read it in the presence of the people. It was hoped that the solemn words of warning, read in the sanctuary, would induce a spirit of the penitence and a change of heart. How patient God is with individuals and nations. He is long-suffering and forbearing.

Dealing With Unpleasant Truth.

When Baruch read the words of Jeremiah in the presence of the princes, they were very much alarmed. But they were politicians and they did not like to face up to unpleasant truth. They suggested that Jeremiah and Baruch go in hiding. They thought that they could bury or cover up the truth.

The king was a little more drastic. When he heard the words as they were read by his servant he took a pen-knife and cut the roll into pieces and threw it into the fire piece by piece. He also directed that Jeremiah should be seized. Like so many people before and since that time, he thought that truth could be gagged and silenced. But truth crushed to earth will rise again, the eternal years are hers. Hitler thought that when he burned the books he was eliminating truth. But the word of God cannot be bound.

Jeremiah Writes Another Book.

Again the Lord spoke to Jeremiah and commanded him to write again the words He had given unto him. One is reminded of the attempt of the enemies of the Bible to stamp out the written word and how Bibles were destroyed and burned. But they continued to come from the press in ever-mounting numbers. And on one occasion the opponents were buying Bibles and with the money received from the sale of the books which were burned, the printer was printing in ever-increasing numbers the Word of God.

Book Reviews

THE PASTOR AND THE CHILDREN. Mildred Moody Eakin and Frank Eakin. Macmillan. New York. $2.

It is refreshing to find a book which recognizes the pastor as an educational leader, and offers practical suggestions for improving that leadership. The thesis of the book is this: "Facility in talking with children—a talking with them which is a real entering into their world—is an ABC of child guidance. For the minister it is essential equipment if the very important lower age ranges are not to be left outside the scope of his ministry." Ways of becoming adept at talking with children are given. The prevailing point of view is indicated further in the question: "Is it perhaps true that the minister who listens best, who thinks in terms of knowing and helping individuals more than in terms of moving pulpit eloquence and mass influence, is fulfilling his ministry most in the spirit of Christ and is most likely to meet today's needs?"

Readers will find valuable guidance in recognizing and diagnosing spiritual needs, in Church School supervision, on the weekday Church School question, the problem of parents, and the spiritual values of secular agencies.

YOU AND THE UNITED NATIONS. Lois Fisher. Children's Press. Chicago. 60c.

After being subjected to a nostalgic bombardment of comic books, gangbuster, supersonic thrillers and the like, it is deeply satisfying to find a children's book that is interesting, factual and up-to-the-minute on current affairs. The book is clearly and profusely illustrated by the author. The brevity of the book would suggest a gross oversimplification of such a complicated subject, but the comments and illustrations give a vivid picture of the history and realization of the United Nations, plus a portrayal of our individual and collective responsibility for its continued success. Here is the educational process in a practical and dynamic form. An excellent book for your child!

MY HAPPY BIRTHDAY BOOK. William M. Lesel. The Moody Press. Chicago Press. Chicago. 36 pp. $1.50.

This book was planned to be not only a pleasure to the child but also a means of development. The Birthday Calendar, profusely illustrated by Frank Warren, provides space and calls attention to relatives and friends. Its chief purpose is to encourage the child to think more of others than of himself. Scripture references appear with the birthday greetings.

A TREASURY OF MEXICAN FOLKWAYS. Frances Toor. 566 pp. Crown Publishers. New York. 1947. $5.

Visiting Mexico, the reviewer attended the author's lectures in her life-work, the folk-lore of Mexico. That life-work has culminated in this cyclopedic volume. While there, the reviewer saw a large sign, near Mexico City, which said: "Civilization is the harmony of man with his fellow-men and with nature."

Of such a civilization Frances Toor has written at full length and with sympathetic understanding. There is no other work like this, her masterpiece.

A just review is out of question: One does not review a cyclopedia. Mexico-phils will just have to buy this book. It is all they could expect as a portrait of our near and much disparaged neighbor, concerning whom our consciences are not free, and of whom a noted writer, north of the Rio Grande, has said that the Mexican is more civilized than the Anglo. . . . "Too much cannot be said of the courtesy of the Mexicans."

The book has five parts: The introduction, of historical background; the economic life; social and religious organizations; music and dances; and literature. Ten color-plates and one hundred drawings, by Carlos Merida; as well as one hundred seventy photographs amplify the volume.

The author has not entered into the issues of politics or economics, nor has she given the stresses of organized religion. She has portrayed the soul of her admired people, presenting to us our neighbor as she is. In her she has among us, where greatly needed because of deep-seated prejudice, a sympathetic and capable advocate.

Mexican courtesy does not easily display the sense of cultural superiority, yet there are elements superior to those of the North. As said Dr. Vasconcelos, in a book written for his countrymen: "Imagine, if you can, what our continent would have become if some power other than the Spanish had discovered it." The fusion of the colorful, imaginative Spanish Catholic culture with native Mexican culture, having many kindred elements, has created something new which yet has deep roots in both the old origins. The result gives some things of superiority to Anglo-Saxony attainments.

It is well that North Americans are giving much more time and thought to the understanding of their nearest Southern neighbor. True understanding will give greater appreciation for the very differences. Toward that highly to-be-desired objectives our author has done a valuable work.

HELPING YOUR CHILDREN.

This home had given the two girls a rich adventure in friendship and brotherliness.

It has been said that the home is the cradle of civilization. It has always been the training ground for new attitudes and ways which change society for the better. In this new day it will be true again. We have moved too fast. We have tried to leap from individual freedom to world order. We must go back to the home to learn how to cooperate and to appreciate our interdependence. Let us follow the Christian way.—Courtesy of the Division of Christian Education of Congregational Christian Churches.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LEADER HONORED.

In recognition of his outstanding and unparalleled achievements in the field of religious films, J. Arthur Rank, eminent English moving picture producer and Christian layman, was honored by the World's Sunday School Association which presented him with an award. This award, in the form of a scroll, is the first such recognition and, in a sense, may be termed the "Oscar" of the religious film world. Dr. Forrest L. Knapp presented the scroll.

Mr. Rank has endeavored to develop and promote the important medium of religious films in the worldwide work of Christian education. With the full resources of his tremendous wealth and business interests, he has been able to make remarkable progress in this direction during the last twelve years. His efforts are not confined to England, either. For years, in that country, he has maintained movie groups for boys and girls who meet each Saturday morning to see films produced especially for children. Now, he is planning to establish similar groups in the moving picture houses of Canada, and this activity is attracting wide interest in the United States because of its great moral value.

"The purpose of this program," says Mr. Rank, "is to instill good citizenship through the greatest medium in the world—the visual impact of the motion picture."

The World's Sunday School Association, which is honoring Mr. Rank, is a world federation of International Councils of Christian Education in fifty-five countries. Its purpose is to promote Christian education throughout the world and it was organized to furnish lesson materials and opportunities for training to teachers of Christian education everywhere. It is an organization of national and international bodies rather than individuals. Other functions of the World's Sunday School Association include restoration of Christian education activities in the wartorn countries of Europe and Asia. The name of Dr. Walter Judd appears among the sponsors of the postwar program of the World's Sunday School Association.

For years, Mr. Rank has been superintendent of a Sunday school. Each Sunday he gets on his bicycle, places his lunch basket on one arm and cycles to the Sunday school, where he teaches his "boys" as he calls them. This religious work is one of the things of which he is most proud.

In 1935, Mr. Rank, whose holdings are in the many millions, decided to do something which would bring religion closer to the man in the street. He believed that motion pictures were the greatest medium with which to accomplish this and so he began production of films suitable for Sunday schools and churches. He produced such noteworthy pictures as "Faith Triumphant," dealing with the life of St. Paul, and "Two Thousand Years Ago," dealing with life in Palestine. He has plans for production of several new religious films this summer.

ments are less than one-fourth the total amount apportioned. College expenses, with the possible exception of the dining room, will equal or surpass during the summer quarter that of other quarters. Income from the College itself is far less. We have a very good report for the week. A total of $230.67 is received from four Sunday schools out of near 200. In cooperation our Sunday schools and churches are amply able to give the College its necessary support. The apportionment for each church is not a large amount but when all is paid the total is sufficient to be of service to the College. It would be most helpful as well as encouraging if our churches and Sunday schools would be generous in their support during the summer months.

alone when differences arise between themselves and those who fight at the slightest provocation, what else can they do? If you were the parent, what course would you take?"

"Have you the book, Guidance of Childhood and Youth, compiled by the Child Study Association of America?" I asked.

"No, but I probably could obtain a copy from the library. Are its suggestions along this line really helpful?"

"Yes, very. I feel strongly that practice in wrestling with the difficulties that confront one should be a regular part of every individual's education and that it should begin with the troubles of early childhood. But, I believe there are definite principles which will guide the child so that he can meet adverse situations wisely and with confidence. Then, if that is so, it is the parents' part to teach these principles. Fighting is merely a reaction which boys and girls need to understand, and with regard to which they should receive wise and helpful advice in advance of any conflict. There is no one rule that will cover all cases, but there are principles which can always be relied on."

"I am sure you're right," she answered. "Perhaps if Tom and I study the subject, we can help our boys without making them feel like crybabies."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our public school closed on May 27. Twelve children made the honor roll the last month. The little children will have lots of time to play during the vacation season. It will be ball and bat for a while, at least. The writer seems to be the bat doctor. We keep a roll of adhesive tape on our desk to wrap split handles. Then the swings will be kept busy going, too, and jump rope is another popular game with the small girls and boys. They seem to enjoy it very much. But the most popular game with the boys is a ball and bat. A catcher's mit has been called for already for the small boys.

That is not so for the larger boys. They will have to make their play out of setting sweet potato plants, tomato plants, planting and working corn. That will do them for a while until we get the crop planted. Then combining wheat and oats will claim their attention for several weeks. We try to get the crop fully in hand before the larger boys go on vacation. We are always glad to give them a vacation.

The dry weather continues in this immediate section. It has rained all around us, but the clouds seem to miss a small area right in our location. Being so extremely dry certainly has retarded the growth of garden stuff.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Carlton and Mr. Satterfield were very pleasant visitors on Monday, the 26th. Mr. Carlton was over attending the College Board meeting. Mrs. Carlton visited the Orphanage while here, and looked over the "Baby Home" and the Orphanage building, both of which have been recently reconditioned. The matrons said she spoke very complimentary of how pretty the buildings looked, and especially the attractiveness. We hope in one more week the painters will be through, and we can get the furniture all back in place, and get back to normalcy again.

sponsoring organizations: The World Council of Churches, The World Student Christian Federation, The World's Alliance of Young Men's Christian Association, The World's Young Women's Christian Association. The Pilgrim Fellowship representation is organized through the United Christian Youth Movement. Our quota is only a total of five. One of these, in the opinion of some of the members of the executive committee, should be an adult.

All delegates must be 30 or under at the time of registration, and two-thirds must be 25 or under. In a future issue, this page will carry the names of our National P. F. delegates who will be attending the Conference at Oslo.

DOINGS ELSEWHERE.

Let's Take to Our Bible is a product of the Massachusetts State Personal Action Commission of Pilgrim Fellowship. It's a neat job; simple and lively in style. Its aim is to get young people to read and understand the Bible. Ask them to send you a copy (5c). Order from Massachusetts Pilgrim Fellowship, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts.

The Pilgrim Fellowship in Michigan have a new Handbook. I understand that it is "as smooth as they come" (15c). Order from Michigan Pilgrim Fellowship, 415 West Grand River Avenue, East Lansing, Michigan.

The Pilgrim Fellowship in Pennsylvania have a plan under way to get 500 tithers, i. e., young people who will give ten per cent of their income to the work of the church. Write to their President, Frances Hann, Clearville, Pa., for the details.

WHAT ABOUT A PEN PAL?

One of the Scotland Pilgrim Fellowshipshippers who attended Doane—"Rusty"—writes that several Scottish young people would like to pick up a Pen Pal in this country. If any Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowshipshipper is interested, write to our National Vice-President, Jane Johnson, 1344 East 48th Street, Los Angeles, Calif.

CHANCE TO EARN MONEY.

I have just received a letter from Dr. Albert Stauffacher, the Minister and Executive Secretary of our Missions Council, who wants to know of a young person interested in a real money-making project, either for himself or for his society.

This is it—In January the Missions Council published a map on the history of our Congregational Christian Churches. It is a large map in seven colors—a really beautiful wall decoration for any church, home, office, or library. This map sells for three dollars and hundreds have already been sold.

For each map sold by a young person, he will receive a commission of fifty cents. Here is a chance for some one to earn some money for the summer conference, for a project for your local society.

If you will be interested in such an opportunity—and will work at it!—write to the following address for the complete plan: Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher, Minister, Missions Council, Room 909, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Be sure you state clearly what it is you wish to do. Success to you!

ELIZABETH CHICOINE.

DR. FREDERICK K. STAMM TO BE PRESIDING MINISTER OF "HIGHLIGHTS OF BIBLE" SUMMER SERIES.

The Rev. Dr. Frederick K. Stamm, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Chicago, will be presiding minister of NBC's "Highlights of the Bible" series which began Sunday, June 1 (10:00 A. M., EDT), replacing "The National Radio Pulpit" for the summer. Subject of Dr. Stamm's first program will be "What One Person Can Do," with music by the Radio Choristers and George Shackley, organist. On June 8 Dr. Stamm's topic will be: "Shall We Fail Tomorrow?" Sermons for the remaining Sundays in June will be "Keeping Men on Their Feet," June 15; "The Strangest Thing in the World," June 22; and "As a Little Child," June 29.

A good thing to remember is that there is always going to be a tomorrow as well as a today and yesterday.

Charge to Primary Boys and Girls Who Receive Bibles

By CARL R. KEY

There are two things that impressed me very much as a boy when I was about your age. I want to tell you about them.

One was a great oak tree that stood by the road-side on the way to the school and church I attended. It was a great white oak tree with a huge trunk and many great branches growing upward and outward. It was the most perfect oak tree I have ever seen. It stood alone away from most other trees and things that would hinder it from growing into such a beautiful shape. It was not only pretty to look at, but it made a grand shade for the family who lived near-by, and for travellers on the road to rest under. The birds made their nests in its branches. In the late summer and fall there were bushels and bushels of acorns which had grown in its branches. These acorns were good food for the squirrels and other animals that eat them. That tree has always been a sign or a symbol of great beauty, abundant strength, and refreshment to the people who passed that way. In fact, the terrific wind storms, the hail of summer, and the sleet and ice storms of winter never harmed it very much. It stood up and out against everything harmful. It is such a perfect and good tree that the highway department built the road around it to save it rather than cut it down to make the road straight at that spot.

The other thing I want to tell you about was the stories I read about the gold rush days in the West and how the prospectors gave up everything to get a few nuggets of gold. The wild places they explored and in which they searched for gold were most interesting to me. The kind of shacks or no houses at all that they lived in and the way they lived never failed to interest me at that age. They did all that just to get a little of the precious metal we call gold. Those days are gone forever, but not the lesson we can learn from it.

There are some things that mean more to me and thousands and thousands and thousands of other people than the beauty, strength, and help of that great oak tree. There are other things that are worth far more than a few or even many nuggets of gold. They come in small packages and in strange books.

Today you have received a gift from your Church. That gift is the Bible which you hold in your hand. It has been given for your attendance and good work in your present department. You will have it to use in the Junior Department next year. We hope that you will get from your Bible much of its strength, its beauty, and its inspiration so that you will grow in future days to be more helpful and useful than the oak tree I have told you about. We wish, too, that you may find in the pages of this Bible many many nuggets of truth that will be of more value than much gold. We oldsters know that if you get these things out of this Book you will be the best kind of young men and young women that your community will afford, that you will be glad to live with yourself and your own thoughts, that you will mean more to the people who know you than all the beauty and shade of a tree or the value of much gold nuggets. Your happiness will be greater, your burdens lighter, your love for people and good things of great value, and your way much brighter.

Let this Book be "a lamp unto your feet, and a light unto your path."

Father's Day

By ANDREW SLABEY

When Mother's Day comes around everybody observes it. Greeting cards swamp the mail. Presents are bought and given. The florists can scarcely supply the demand for white and red carnations. The preachers preach wonderful sermons about mothers. And the grateful daughters in the church put on special programs honoring mothers. That is all right. We would rather honor our good mothers than some ancient saints who never did anything for us.

But when Father's Day comes around hardly anybody notices it. Why not? Aren't the fathers entitled to any recognition or appreciation? Of course, they are. Especially if the fathers are good providers of daily bread for their families and live a good life. Years ago we used to sing a song:

What's the matter with father? He's all right!
 What's the matter with father? His hair is white
 Though I am strong for the other sex,
 Father's the one who signs the checks.
 What's the matter with father? He's all right!

In the Bible, stories of fathers are more numerous than of mothers. Good fathers and bad fathers are held up as examples or warnings. There is the old priest, Eli, who neglected to bring up his sons in the right way, and so did Samuel.

See what King David had to suffer from his bad son, Absalom, who raised a revolution against him. But when the son was killed, the father cried over him in sorrow.

Jacob was good to his son, Joseph, and the boy repaid him a hundredfold; in fact, he saved his life from starvation, and brought him to security in a foreign land.

Christ loved to tell about fathers, and about our Heavenly Father.

"Honor thy father and thy mother" is the commandment. Yes, but we must aim to deserve that honor by the grace of God.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Attend the Elon School of Missions and Pastors' School next week!

Pattie Lee Coghill will participate in the Oklahoma - Texas - Louisiana Summer Conference at Ardmore, Oklahoma, August 18-25.

Dr. Walter Judd was the speaker at the annual dinner of the Associate Boards for Christian Colleges in China which was held in New York on May 12. The Boards have now been unified and Dr. Henry P. Van Deusen is the president.

Brief messages were given by Mr. S. M. Smith, Rev. A. P. Slabey and Dr. N. G. Newman at the picnic meeting of the Eastern Virginia Ministers held Monday at Holy Neck. Officers were elected as follows: Robert Kimball, president; Shannon Morgan, vice-president; Herbert Councill, secretary; H. E. Crutchfield, treasurer. Pastor Crutchfield and members of the church upheld the highest traditions of Virginia hospitality in providing the picnic dinner.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE SCHEDULED.

Twenty-five outstanding Protestant church leaders from Europe, Asia, Canada, and the United States will participate this year in the annual Northfield Missionary Conference, scheduled to be held at East Northfield, Mass., June 27-July 5, it was announced recently.

Four leading interdenominational agencies representing all of the major Protestant communions in this country and Canada will sponsor the mission gathering. They are the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, the Home Misions Council of North America, the Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada, and the United Council of Church Women.

For the first time since its establishment in 1933 the conference will be open to clergymen and laymen as well as to accredited women delegates.

Church leaders scheduled to take part in the nine-day session include Dr. Mark A. Dawber, executive secretary of the Home Missions Council; Dr. T. C. Chao, dean of religion, Yenching University, Peiping, China; Dr. Rajah B. Manikam, secretary of the National Christian Council of India; Mrs. Induk Pakh, prominent Christian leader from Korea; Dr. Knut Westman, Uppsala University, Sweden; Mrs. Ruth Mougey Worrell, secretary of the United Council of Church Women; and Dr. Jesse Bader, secretary of the department of evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches.

The Northfield Missionary Conference was founded fourteen years ago when delegates to the Women's Interdenominational Home Missionary Conference and the Conference for

And their living faith in God.

They changed the landscape into green,
And grew both food and keep;
They put their best into their tasks,
And into my memory deep;
Day in day out with loving care
No labor did they shirk;
And to their bairns they gave their best
And taught them how to work.

And as I walked those fields again
And thought of what they'd done;
They slept hardby in their churchyard
Beneath their shining sun;
And yet they live in a thousand ways
In those old paths they trod;
And still they live in their children's hearts
And in what they asked of God!

Women's Foreign Missionary Societies voted to unite.

A total of 500 delegates from New England, New York, and New Jersey are expected to register for the conference.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

HOPEWELL CHURCH TO HOLD ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.

In March, 1928, Those appearing in the accompanying picture, together with Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary of the Southern Convention and Mr. Jack M. Darden of Suffolk and of the Mission Board, gathered to break ground for a Christian Church in the then almost new city of Hopewell. Of this group only two are now known to be living, Mr. Nash and Mr. Poythress, the others having passed to their reward.

Nineteen years ago this month, the cornerstone was laid by the DuPont Lodge No. 289, A. F. & A. M., and the SUMMER RADIO WORKSHOP.

For the second successive year, the Joint Religious Radio Committee of the Congregational Christian, the Presbyterian USA Churches, and the United Church of Canada, will sponsor a month-long radio workshop for ministers and other religious broadcasters, as announced by Everette C. Parker, Director. The workshop will meet from August 4 through 28 on the University of Chicago Campus under the combined auspices of the Committee and the Federated Theological Faculty of the University of Chicago. Ministers, religious educators, radio chairmen for state and people through radio. There will be work groups in script-writing, radio speech, production, and programming. Group listening sessions will allow the workshopers the opportunity to evaluate network and local religious programs played back to them on transcriptions.

Resource persons who are distinguished leaders in the field of radio have been invited to lead special discussions during the month. Among these are Commissioner Clifford C. Durr, of the Federal Communications Commission and Hal McCarty, director of radio, the University of Wisconsin.

church will commemorate the anniversary of this event. The first services were held in the building on June 16, 1928, the pastor, Rev. D. D. Nash, preaching the opening sermon, immediately after the cornerstone laying services. Mr. Nash was the first pastor and continued to serve the church for two years after it was opened. He resigned in 1930, but returned in 1943, upon the death of Rev. T. N. Lowe, and is the present pastor.

All-day services are to be held on Sunday, June 22. Rev. O. D. Poythress is to be the principal speaker of the day. Also speaking will be Captain A. S. J. Wheeler of Hopewell, who was in charge of the cornerstone laying nineteen years ago.

Friends of the church as well as former members and members of the Masonic Lodge which laid the cornerstone are cordially invited to be present at the services.

city federations of churches, and denominational leaders will share in training for better religious programming and broadcasting. The workshop will be entirely non-sectarian and non-denominational in character.

Workshop participants will study six major areas of religious broadcasting: (1) Constructing goals and policies of religious broadcasting. (2) Writing and producing of religious radio programs and program series of a high professional standard. (3) Methods of utilizing radio programs in the educational work of the church. (4) Buildings relations with the radio industry and with the listening public. (5) Training religious broadcasters in the local community and in Semnaries. (6) FM stations and programming.

Members will meet in seminars and interviews to discuss radio as a means of communication and the distinctive contribution religion can make to

DR. LAUBACH IN CAIRO.

Early this spring, Dr. Frank Laubach finished a month in Cairo, Egypt, helping devise charts and lessons to teach Arabic by the simplest method to illiterates. Arab lands are ninety per cent or more illiterate. This literacy work is continuing, with Christian missions, secular educational institutions and governments working in cooperation.

"Because of the wonderful assistance we have had from everyone on all sides," says Dr. Laubach, we are going to have both beautiful and economical lessons, and everyone will be helped. There is no opposition when we give people what they both need and want, in the spirit of Christ.

"Representatives of the Catholic, Coptic and Protestant communities agreed to publish the second reader 'Story of Jesus' together, as well as other Christian literature. Two other

THE FAITH OF A FARMER.

These are busy days on the farm. Planting, plowing, setting and hoeing, the days are filled with creative activity. Basic knowledge and industry join hands on the farm. Multiplied farms and farmers spell hope for the nation and the world during the coming days. The seed of our sowing are the seed of destiny.

An era of peace will enable these custodians of the soil to achieve new records in production and distribution. New and improved implementation will make even the desert to blossom as a rose. On an unprecedented scale the nations should "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks." It is far easier to feed the world than to fight the world.

The rewards of faith are nowhere more convincing than on the farm. Here people may learn to cooperate with God, find current and convincing evidence of His activity. Having become co-laborers with God in production, they may now cooperate with Him in other equally important spheres. "Man shall not live by bread alone." The cultivation of better schools, churches, community enterprises and the cultivation of better human relations are practical spheres of the human-divine cooperation. God forbid that our participation in the divine process should be limited to the low and selfish plane of food production. "But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

Every farmer is a philosopher and a theologian. The Master spoke of one who tore down his old barns and built new ones. For what purpose? In order that he might be at ease and absolved from responsibility. The selfish motives of men incur the judgment of God. A selfish civilization can never fulfil God's conditions for the enjoyment of the abundant life. Death and not life is God's eternal judgment upon selfishness.

The faith of one farmer is given by Peter Howard in these lines:

Now, under God, we guardians of the soil
Dedicate all we have in toil and prayer,
Not for the swift return in cash and kind,
But re-creating craft in husbandry,
And stewardship and quiet sufficiency
So both our cottages and farms shall know
The multitudinous fruitage of the soil.
The barns shall sag and tremble with the corn
Beam-high, rich pyramids of warmth and gold.
Broad stallions, thunderous hoofed, shall pace the earth
And fertilize the pastures. While the cows
Wax fat and richly yield in calf and cream.
Huge hogs shall grunt and snore away their time,
While bees garner the honey murmously.
We, stewards of the Hill, plan under God
To shape this farm to perfect purposes,
Perfect in every detail, so to mold
This message to the nation and the world.

A life is more important than a living. The cultivation of a crop must not take precedence over the cultivation of character.

PROTESTANT MISSIONS TO AFRICA.

The principles of "trusteeship," as developed by the United Nations and its Trusteeship Council as standards for colonial government and for the development of dependent peoples, offer to the vast populations of Africa the greatest hope now on the horizon for economic and social development and for future self-government, in the opinion of the Africa Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. The Committee held its annual meeting from May 30 to June 1 at Hartford Seminary.

The meeting was presided over by Dr. L. K. Anderson of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and the discussions were led by Dr. Emory Ross, executive secretary of the Africa Committee. Counselling with the Committee were representatives of the British missionary societies, of the United Nations, and of some of the colonial governments and of the U. S. State Department.

In outlining plans for future strategy of both European and American Protestant missions to Africa, the Committee listed among the priorities the development of higher educational institutions, including arts and science colleges and universities; the organizing of or strengthening of united Protestant councils of churches in the various colonies or groups of colonies; the stressing among the peoples of the idea and ideals of the Christian home; the development of a comprehensive program of medicine and public health, especially in relation to the tropic diseases that attack millions of the continent's people; the securing of hundreds of new missionaries—some to fill already existing posts, some to pioneer in industrial, agricultural, medical, literary and other fields of service; and closer cooperation among mission boards and with colonial governments in developing institutions and services leading toward their common goals.

Dr. Ross and others pointed out the basic need for more and better-trained native African pastors. Some mission groups in some colonies have majored in this field, and have helped develop an indigenous Christian church. The Africa Committee and the regional Christian councils will stress this need in the future—urging both the university-trained minister and the pastor close to the primitive village and tribe.

Miss Glora Wysner and Dr. Herrick B. Young reported that American mission boards now have about 200 new missionaries—some of them still in final training—ready to enter service in Africa within the next year. At the same time, these same agencies are now seeking about 180 more young people for service in Africa. The latter list includes four persons or couples for business administration, 59 in education (teachers of English, commerce, high school subjects, elementary supervisors), 30 in the field of evangelism, 10 in agriculture and trades teaching, 25 doctors, 8 nurses, and 16 rural evangelists. In many of these fields Negroes, Japanese-Americans and others from minority groups in America, or displaced persons from Europe will be acceptable to African colonial governments if they have the requisite training.

Dr. Ross noted that it has been found advisable for missionaries-to-be to have some language and cultural training in Europe—usually in the homeland of the colonial administrator—before going to Africa, and language training is almost necessary for study in Europe. In Brussels, in Paris, and in Lisbon are international centers for such missionary pre-service training, and in London is a center for the training of physicians in tropical diseases, medicines, etc.

Among those who counselled with the members of the Africa Committee at the meeting were: Canon G. W. Broomfield, of London, of the University Mission to Central Africa; Col Robert E. Van Goethem, Chief of Protestant Chaplains in Belgium and the Belgian Congo; Captain Marcel Brun, Philadelphia, Pa., of the French Foreign and Overseas Ministry; Mrs. Ruth Sloan of the U. S. State Department; Wilfred Benson of the United Nations staff; Miss Margaret Wrong, of London, secretary of the International Committee for Christian Literature in Africa; Canon H. Myers Grace, of London, secretary of the Conference of British Missionary Societies; Andrew Lynch, of the U. S. State Department; Daniel Chapman of the United Nations staff; Mrs. Paul Robeson, sociologist and author, and E. E. Sadden-Clare, of the British Embassy, Washington, D. C.

The Rural Church and the Family-type Man

By THOMAS ALFRED TRIPP

There were approximately 232,000 churches and synagogues in the United States in 1926, according to the Census of Religious Bodies, U. S. Bureau of the Census. About three-fourths of these were rural; approximately 65,000 country and 110,000 village churches. Only one in four of all churches were in urban communities of more than 2,500 population. In other words, about three-fourths of all churches in America are rural institutions.

Classification of Groups.

Churches in the United States fall into several classes in terms of their rural organization:

Council Group (Protestant)—Represented by the Committee on Town and Country of the Home Missions Council of North America, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the International Council of Religious Education. Dr. Benson Y. Landis, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y., is Secretary of the Committee on Town and Country.

Roman Catholic—Represented by the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, Msgr. Luigi G. Liguitti, Secretary, Des Moines, Iowa.

Miscellaneous—Southern Baptists, Latter Day Saints (Mormons), various small sects, untraditional Christian groups (e. g., Buddhist).

There are also two interdenominational Protestant rural movements, The Christian Rural Fellowship, with headquarters at 156 Fifth Avenue, N. Y., a free association of individuals interested in rural church work. The Interseminary Commission for the Training of the Rural Ministry is an association of eastern theological schools for purposes indicated by the name.

Attitudes Toward Land

With regard to their attitudes toward land tenure, rural churches fall into five classes, namely,

(1) Those who are entirely unaware of the problem because they are dominated by a non-worldly philosophy and feel little or no social responsibility.

(2) Those so dominated by urban-industrial interests that they are unaware of the problems of agriculture, even though they may have a social interest.

(3) Those whose interests are genuine, though probably unconscious, and inherent in their religious view; e. g., the Menonites, Church of the Brethren, Amish, Mormons, some Roman Catholics and a relatively few Protestants.

(4) Those having a sentimental rural view, including some Catholics and more Protestants; a few especially excited rural priests and ministers and other "mystic knights of the soil." (Give these a wheel-barrow full of green cow manure and a basket of earth worms and they will save the world!)

(5) Those who face the realistic facts of rural life and are sufficiently qualified students of culture to take seriously such concepts as the family farm, soil conservation and other land policies.

Land Tenure Programs.

The largest expressions of interest in the problems of land tenure in the Protestant rural church movement are to be found in the work of the Land Tenure Committee of the Committee on Town and Country of the Home Missions Council and Federal Council of Churches. The Committee on Land Tenure was appointed in 1938 with the provision that it could coopt others not of the Committee on Town and Country. The Land Tenure Committee obtained the hearty cooperation of the Farm Foundation and some of the staff of the Division of Farm Population and Rural Welfare of the Department of Agriculture.

This Committee held a number of land tenure conferences for various regions of the country—for the corn belt, for the far West, etc. Through the cooperation of the Farmer Foundation, a mimeographed report of the results of each of these conferences was issued. The Land Tenure Committee is now interested in holding conferences in typical sub-regions. What was to be the first of this series was held in the Cumberland Plateau at Crossville, Tennessee, 1946. A book covering the results of the work of the Land Tenure Committee, to date, is in the process of preparation.

The publication of Liberty Hyde Bailey's classic, Holy Earth, by the Christian Rural Fellowship in 1946 received strong support of the Committee on Town and Country and many denominational boards and publishing houses purchased considerable quantities for distribution, mostly to rural clergy.

The activities and philosophies of the Catholic Rural Life Conference is a movement of considerable significance. It is sponsored by bishops, it publishes a paper, Land and Home, and creates a valuable body of literature on rural life. It holds numerous schools and conferences and participates, in cooperation with Protestants, in the American Country Life Association, farmer activities of agricultural colleges, and the like.

The rural interests of Jews are expressed through the Jewish Agricultural Society. This organization is not specifically religious but includes financial assistance, settlement and agricultural training for Jewish farmers. The agency reports about one hundred thousand Jewish farmers in the United States with which it has contact. (Cf., Gabriel Davidson, Jewish Farmers in America.)

Other Activities.

The Committee on Town and Country includes in its activities the following:

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Other Side is the easy side. It would save time and bother. Why get mixed up with something that would take time, and thought, and energy. All the priest and Levite had to do was to walk swiftly by on the other side. But the poor stranger, beaten, dying and alone is suggestive of the world's needs today—at home and abroad. At home there is much that could be done by giving a bit of time and interest to it; abroad, there is a broken and beaten humanity needing encouragement, needing food, needing friendship and help. God's hand is big enough to give it. But we are to be His hands, His heart of love, and His help. At home there are places to be filled on the work side of our own community's needs—responsibilities in the home, in the church, in the school needing to be accepted. But why bother, when one can walk by on the other side?

The other side was the most pleasant side. If they did not pass by on the other side they would see the unpleasant sight of the poor beaten, dying man's wounds, bleeding, suffering, pain. They would get upset, perhaps get some of the blood on their robes, or some of the pain in their souls, or some of the money out of their pockets—at any rate best not to bother. Just go around and pass by on the other side—be interested in the beautiful view across the expanding valleys in the other direction, and the lovely unclouded skies above. Besides they had appointments that must be filled, and disappointments that must be avoided. They would keep away from trouble. The other side was the least expensive side. It took Good Samaritan's own medicine, bandages, perhaps he tore his shirt into bandages—it has been done, it took his time, and his money at the inn; it was expensive, and could grow increasingly expensive, but the priest and Levite were too well experienced with the ways of the world to get caught in that sort of situation. They took the other side.

The other side was the way the others were going. Only one person came on to the needed side. The other side was therefore the most conspicuous side. It was the big side. Whatever the one did for the poor beaten, robed and left-for-dead man he would have to do by himself, and out of sight, while the world passed on. None would see his service, and none would sing his praise—he would be only getting in to waste of time, trouble, dirt—an unpleasant, unthankful business.

Yes, except for the salient fact that God was there waiting for him, to use him as the servant of the Most High. God was keeping watch over his own, and when one came along with a bit of the divine love and interest in his own heart he could see the chance to act like a brother, to be a friend in the time of need, to do his best to help—just because something good and kind was in his soul—not for money, nor friendship, nor praise, nor thought of praise; but because he was a man, and needing to act like one, “when he saw him he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him; and on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay thee.”

Some call will come to each of us to show on which side we are willing to walk. The other, easiest, most pleasant, less bother side; or the side the truly good and great have trod.

FAREWELL TO ALBEMARLE.

Six and one-half years ago, Rev. and Mrs. B. J. Earp accepted the ministry of the Congregational Christian Church in Albemarle, N. C. The first Sunday in June brought this ministry to a close.

Several contributions, made during these years with the good people of Albemarle, are imprinted on the pages of time. Most important is the Christian lives lived by these two while laboring in this town. In their everyday living, Christ and His Kingdom came first. They established themselves as neighborly people, content with plain living and high thinking. It was a familiar sight on week days to see the preacher, clad in overalls, tilling the soil of the parsonage backyard garden, and many a passer-by has admired the multitude of flowers which the minister's wife tended about the parsonage door.

The Earps contributed to the church building program in a very definite way. Upon going to Albemarle in the late fall of 1940, Mr. Earp found the church in debt for its building and weak financially. Systematically, the church building debt was paid, the entire church renovated, steam heat installed, a new parsonage purchased, and upon leaving Albemarle in the spring of 1947, Mr. Earp announced “all bills paid in full—no debt.” As president of the Ladies' Aid, Mrs. Earp found excellent opportunity to launch various drives which the women enthusiastically carried through to back the church finances.

Both the minister and his wife contributed to the life and activity of the church. Many of the children who took the pastor's study course came to understand more about the meaning of the church. Some of the youth, finding themselves thrown hastily into a world war, often wrote heart-stirring letters seeking comfort and prayers. Mrs. Earp kept the engraved name plate of service boys and girls as a memorial just inside the church. Not only did the children and young people turn to Pastor Earp in time of stress, but also those older ones came with problems in domestic relations, or need for other advice. Always, in time of trouble, the minister was routed from his home—in time of accident, sickness, or death, Mr. Earp was found close at hand. Many heavy hearts have felt solace after this pastor prayed with them. Then, too, joys were shared by the minister with the people of Albemarle. There were marriages, socials, family reunions, and special days. We thank God for their ministry.

General Theme: “Knowing and Doing the Work of the Sunday School.”

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

In our Southern Convention we have five separate conferences. These conferences all have Sunday School Conventions. These conventions meet in annual session. They are fairly well attended and have interesting programs.

These annual meetings afford opportunities for reports concerning the year's work done and plans for the ensuing year. The reports are important for certainly we want very much to know what has been done, what each school has accomplished, but we want also to know of the problems and difficulties—the things that handicap the local school in building an inclusive and forward-looking program and obstacles that may be encountered in carrying out that program.

For instance, there may be a scarcity of trained teachers and workers for the Sunday school. There may be some difficulty in selecting and securing the right kind of materials for the different departments. There may not be sufficient room for the best work of the school. There may be a question about organized classes and how to organize departments and what to do about special days in the Sunday school. How to use these days to the best advantage? What relation does the Sunday school really sustain to the church? Is it a help or a hindrance?

These and other questions might probably come in for extended consideration in our Sunday School Convention sessions. These annual occasions afford excellent opportunities for some expert advice on Sunday school work. They also afford opportunities for discussion of materials and methods. How, where and when to organize a Sunday school?

If we could have two or three persons present at our Sunday School Conventions who have made a real study of Sunday school work and know how to guide us, it would certainly be most helpful and a great blessing.

There is one question that should be faced in all of our convention sessions whether we have an expert present or not and that is, the present enrollment in our Sunday schools. The enrollment in our Sunday schools in the Southern Convention has been steadily declining for the past years. I don't know about the present year. It is to be hoped that the tide has turned and that we are interesting more people in our Sunday school. Something has caused this lessening of interest in Sunday school work and decline in Sunday school attendance. The population in our section has increased, new people have moved in, our opportunities are greater. Could we make special efforts, double our energies, and see if we cannot make our Sunday schools more effective, and thereby increasing support along all lines?

As we build our programs for our Sunday School Conventions, let us make sure to make them practical and helpful.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

I presume that every institution and organization within the church feels the need of additional support. The local church is constantly receiving appeals for financial assistance. This is to be expected and is necessary. As the church grows, plans for expansion are conceived. If the church did not expand, it would be not only disappointing but evidence of defeat. Neither churches nor individuals should be annoyed by constant appeals but should count it a privilege to be able to help with an expanding program for the church and to increase its influence in the world.

For the past twelve to fifteen years Elon College has had a steady and commendable growth. It stands now on the verge of an expansion program that challenges the strength and generosity of its entire constituency. No one individual could meet the demands nor is he expected to but the total constituency of the College is able and if everyone will do his share, there will be no question as to results. As we have opportunity, let us make sure that we do not fail. The College is most appreciative of every effort of cooperation, contribution, and support.

THE RURAL CHURCH AND THE FAMILY MAN.

rolling as many as a thousand rural clergy and laymen.

A monthly publication, Town and Country Church, 166 pp., published in New York by the Committee on Town and Country.

Several meetings of the Committee, annually, including a meeting each year which is a conference in connection with some field study. These field studies have included in the past, Tennessee Valley Authority, Knoxville; Rural Regionalism, Merom, Indiana; Department of Agriculture, Washington; Farm Organizations, Philadelphia, etc.

In 1945 two informal conferences of Catholic, Protestant and Jewish rural leaders resulted in a statement on the land—conservation and tenure—with especial reference favorable to family-type farm. This statement was signed by representatives of all the religious faiths.

The national rural movement in the churches is relatively effective as indicated by the foregoing. In all the national church agencies there is a strong interest in soil conservation and in land tenure. The family-type farm has universal appeal and support of all groups.

Local Church Support.

The support of the family-type farm is weakest on the local parish level among Protestant bodies of the Council group. Mormons, Jews and Roman Catholics carry the support of the family farm to the local community with strong and thorough settlement techniques. In addition, certain agrarian churches in the Protestants—Menonites, Amis, Church of the Brethren, particularly—are also noted for their local tenure arrangements on the basis of family life. The larger and older Protestant churches, which are nominally dominant in great sections of the farm population, have been effective in only isolated family farm experiments. (Notable among these being the work of Eugene Smathers, Big Lick, Tennessee,

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

DELEGATES TO THE WOMAN'S CONVENTION.

JUNE 17-18, 1947,
ELON COLLEGE, N. C.

The business sessions of the Woman's Convention will be held in conjunction with the School of Missions. These sessions will be from 3:00 to 5:00 on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons and on Thursday night, beginning at 8:00. Reports for the biennium, election of officers, etc., will take place at the afternoon sessions. The evening session will consist of an address by our president, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, and a Memorial Service for Mrs. C. H. Rowland, first president of the Convention, conducted by Mrs. John G. Truitt.

All women who are present at the School of Missions are expected to attend the Southern Convention sessions. However, there must be a list of delegates, who have the right to vote. These are listed below. If they cannot attend, it is hoped that they will find an alternate to represent them. All Convention and Conference officers are members ex officio.

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

A DAY TOGETHER.

Billy heard the sweet songs of the many birds before he opened his eyes to the sunlight coming in at his window. The feeling came to him that this day was "special"! He lay with his eyes closed, half-waking, half-sleeping, trying to recall what there was about this day. Oh!! sure this was the day that he and his two best playmates were going to have together! If it didn't turn out to be a rainy day! He opened his eyes quickly and jumping from his bed he hurried to the window to see if the sky held any clouds along with the sun. Sometimes the weather in the mountains fooled you. The sun would come forth all brightness in the early morning and before you knew it big dark clouds would come scurrying out from behind some mountain peak to hide the sun's face. But this day had every sign of being mostly sunny and without rain!

Billy started getting out of his pajamas and into the clothes his grandmother had laid out for him the evening before. Billy's mother worked so his grandmother did most of the caring for his clothes. Grandmother King had promised that Ronnie, Jeff and he might have a day together just as soon as school was out. Ronnie was his best boy friend at school and Jeff was his best boy friend at Sunday School. Grandma had called the day before to see if it would be all right for them to come and spend the day with him today. A neighbor had brought Billy a big cardboard box full of small wooden blocks. Billy had planned to get Ronnie and Jeff to help him build apartment houses in his sand pile today. Since there was such a housing shortage he thought they could have fun building!

Billy had hardly finished his breakfast when Ronnie, who lived just next door arrived. They went out to the sand pile and started leveling the sand and packing it hard to make good and firm foundations for their houses. Jeff had to come from out near Beaver Lake so it took him longer and it was after nine o'clock when he arrived.

Better do a little well, than a great deal badly.—Socrates.

CRADLE OF DEMOCRACY.

By FLORENCE JANE OVENS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Children are chief in importance of our American products, and much the most difficult to raise; yet how many parents undertake this project without giving the necessary time and trouble to prepare themselves. Hazardous parenthood fills our reformatories and gives us a large surplus who make similar mistakes in bringing up the next generation.

A step forward is now being taken in the study of nutrition and physical development. More children are being properly fed and otherwise correctly cared for bodily than ever before. If care for their mental and spiritual growth keeps pace with this advance, there is a good chance that the babies of today may really become fitted for the big tasks of world cooperation which will be theirs tomorrow.

A multitude of parents think that education begins with the first lesson in reading. Instead, it begins when the child is born. Whatever he touches, sees, or hears educates him. Gradually impressions are made that are lasting.

Parents need to prepare themselves—to read, to observe, to study, and most important of all, to discipline their tongues and censor their behavior. As the child approaches the nursery-school age it is generally advisable to investigate the opportunities which the community affords. A good nursery school is of incalculable value to the child, both directly and through his parents. Many of these classes will accept young children only upon the signed statement of the parents that they themselves wish to learn how best to assist their child's development.

At four-and-a-half or five the child should enter the kindergarten. Now the nursery school experience is a privilege and a very great benefit, but the kindergarten is a necessity. Yet only a small percentage of even the urban children of America have been provided with kindergartens. This means that by far the greater number of our boys and girls suffer from a lack of one of the necessities of a well-organized school life.

Let me try to make my meaning clear. The kindergarten period is a time for making adjustments, for getting acquainted with the world outside the home, for learning to live happily with those who have been brought up differently, for experiencing the need and developing the urge for learning to read and to write and to compute.

In the American kindergarten the fundamentals of our democracy are learned, and this is done through daily practice and experience. There is always a period each day when the children may choose their own materials and use them in any reasonable occupation that appeals to them, the only limitations being availability and the rules that prevent infringement upon the rights of others.

Before long the children find satisfaction in orderliness and cooperation in taking turns and sharing. The spirit of fair play is daily built up and assimilated.

Some people seem to think that a child can learn the kindergarten lessons without going to kindergarten. A mother says, "I shall teach my boy at home. Already he can recite three poems and can count to one hundred; he knows his letters and is learning to read." Those are not the lessons he needs; they are not the lessons of the kindergarten.

First of all, the child needs the give and take that comes from mingling with his peers—under wise supervision. If he is timid, the kindergarten teacher will help him to assert himself. If he is too forward or inclined to be a bully, the teacher will encourage him to listen to others, to become interested in group achievements, and to find pleasure in an appreciation of what other members have accomplished.

The kindergarten child learns numbers only as he has need for them. Perhaps there are four apples in a box and he must get enough more from the basket so that every child

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE.

CAMP HANES,
AUGUST 12-22, 1947.

REGISTRATION:

First come, first served. We are not planning to limit delegations from the churches at all—so, register early.

With each registration blank, we are asking that you send an advance partial payment of your total fee (for the Senior Conference, $5.00; for the Junior High Conference, $4.00). The rest of it you will pay on arrival at Camp Hanes, (Senior Conference, $11.00; Junior High Conference, $7.00). If you find that you can't come to the Conference, after you have registered and paid your advance fee, let me know before August 5. Then we can refund your money to you. But we're hoping that nothing comes up to spoil the enjoyment of your stay at Camp Hanes!

WHO MAY COME—

For the Junior High Camp: Boys and girls entering grades 7, 8, and 9. For the Senior Camp: Young people entering grades 10, 11, and 12, or those out of school.

There will be activities and interests for all groups.

WHEN TO COME—

Senior Conference—August 12 to August 18. You will arrive on the morning of the 12th, register, get your cabin assignment, unpack, etc. Your first meal will be lunch on August 12th. Your last meal will be breakfast on August 18th.

Junior High Conference—August 18 to August 22. You will arrive on the morning of August 18th, register, get your cabin assignment, unpack, etc. Your first meal will be lunch on August 18th. Your last meal will be breakfast on August 22nd.

WHAT TO BRING—

Be sure to bring the kind of clothes in which you can have a good time out of doors. You'll want to dress a little more formally than slacks and shorts for the evening meal and the program following (dresses for the girls, etc.)—

but as for the rest of the time, we are in camp. Be sure to bring comfortable shoes, too. You are to bring your own bedding. A flashlight will be useful. Bring your Bible, some writing paper and stamps—you will want to write home! Please bring the musical instrument you play. You'll also want to bring a little money, probably, to buy some books, or some special postcards, or to give to an "offering for others."

For further information, watch THE CHRISTIAN SUN, read carefully the letters I'll be sending out from the office, and consult your minister. Ask your minister, too, about registration blanks. He has them for you. I'll see you at the Summer Conference!

SUFFOLK FELLOWSHIP HAS ACTIVE YEAR.

The members of Youth Fellowship of the Suffolk Christian Church, under the efficient direction of Miss Virginia Brinkley, have enjoyed many instructive, informative, and entertaining programs during the past year. At the concluding meeting, held on June 1, the following report was made by the chairman of the Program Committee:

Our committee has planned and presented 36 programs during the year, led by 21 different persons with many young people taking part in the discussions. We have tried to offer a varied program which has included the following topics: A series of three meetings on our church; three on stewardship, including discussions on our time, talents, money, and life; two social meetings; two programs on personality development; three on Christ and the Fine Arts (Literature, Music, and Art); two on the Bible; two Bible quizzes; one each on Prayer, Church Etiquette, Blessings at the Table, Brotherhood, the Home, Choosing our Friends, and Choosing our Vocations.

We also had a special program for Thanksgiving, and three candlelight services, including installation of officers, a New Year's Eve Service, and My Church at Work. Also at Easter we gave a dramatic program with slides, music and narration.

Our Youth Fellowship was host to the Nansemond County-Suffolk Youth Council at a cereal supper in March. At Christmas time and in celebration of Youth Week, we conducted the regular evening worship services in our church.

In addition to programs led by our own young people we have presented three guest speakers during the year.

The Program Committee wishes to thank all those who had any part in making our programs a success.

JEAN SHALLCROSS,
Chairman.

YOUTH MEETING.

The second meeting of the Winston-Salem and Carroll County Churches for the Young People will be held in Carroll County on June 22, 1947. It will start at 4:30 and will end at 7:30.

I am sure that all of you will enjoy it. The theme for the evening will be "Christian Vacations." A good program has been planned, so come on and bring your lunch and friends.

Let's have a good crowd.

THE RURAL CHURCH AND THE FAMILY MAN.

and Professor Calvin Schnucker, formerly a rural pastor in Iowa and now teaching at the University of Dubuque.)

It is generally admitted that the family-type farm is favorable to the rural church as a social institution. The sub-family-type farm usually results in numerous local churches but the quality of programs and support are often inadequate. The enlarged farm often thins out the population below that necessary for adequate community organization or creates detached populations not interested in the local organization of religion.

In conclusion, four evaluational statements appear to be true:

1. The family-type is favorable to the rural church.
2. Some forms of rural religious organization are favorable to the family-type farm.
3. Protestantism, in general, is not working specifically in local situations to the advancement of the family farm pattern.
4. Nationally, the rural church is supporting policy favorable to the family-type farm.

THE FALL OF THE SOUTHERN KINGDOM.

LESSON XII—JUNE 22, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people.—Proverbs 14:35.

LESSON: II Kings 24-25; Jeremiah 37:39-40.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 137: 1-6.

Weighed and Found Wanting.

The doom that had been long impending at long last fell upon Judah as it had fallen upon Israel. God had been patient with his people. Again and again sentence had been suspended. But the divine nature ultimately demands that sin must bring its inherent punishment. God does not punish people for their sins; people are punished by their own sins. The wages of sin is death, whether it be for a nation or for an individual. Judah had ruthlessly and repeatedly walked in the way of wickedness and idolatry and as is always the case, he that sows to the wind will reap of the whirlwind.

The Penalty of Forfeited Privilege.

What tremendous issues were at stake when Israel and then Judah fell! And at the hands of heathen and hated powers! Here was nation, and later a divided nation, the Chosen People of God. They were the objects of his special favor, not because God is a respecter of persons, but because of all the peoples of the world at that time, they were the best fitted to reveal and to fulfil the divine purpose and plan. To them much had been given. And by an inexorable law of life, from them was much required. But Judah—in spite of the fact that it had the object lesson of Israel before it—played fast and loose with ethical ideals and spiritual privilege. Leaders and people thought that their forms and ceremonies would save them, that the presence of the Temple in Jerusalem was a good-luck charm or rabbit's foot that would ward off evil and bad luck. But the righteousness that saves and secures is inner and vital. Even the Temple and its sacred furnishings did not make Judah immune to the laws of the spirit. Here is one of the most awesome facts in history.

Let no man or nation think that formal religion is insurance against the operation of natural laws in the spiritual world. Let no man or nation think that privilege means immunity. Privilege spells responsibility.

The Clock Strikes Twelve.

The ultimate factor in Judah's downfall was sin. The immediate factor was Babylon. During Jehoia-chin's reign Nebuchadnezzar came up with an army and laid siege to Jerusalem. The city capitulated and the king and his household and princes and officers were taken prisoners and carried away to Babylon. The conquering army then proceeded to sack the city, and especially the temple area which was a choice place for spoils. The king also took "the men of might" seven thousand in number, and the craftsmen and smiths, and all the able-bodied men suitable for military service along with him back to Babylon. He thought he had made sure that Judah could not wage war or stage a revolution again.

Puppet Government.

Nebuchadnezzar dethroned Jehoia-chin and put Zedekiah on the throne. It was simply another case of setting up a puppet government, a policy that was followed then, and is followed today. We are all familiar with Hitler's policy in this matter. Moscow's policy is exactly the same. Even today many rulers are simply stooges, and somebody else pulls the strings.

Ever Learning But Never Coming To the Knowledge of the Truth.

In spite of the ghastly object lesson before him, Zedekiah had not learned his lesson. Ruler of one city, and without any material resources, he rebelled against Babylon. The result is easily imagined. Nebuchadnezzar really went to town this time. He brought another army up against Jerusalem, laid siege to it, and after a long siege of eighteen months, the last of which were marked by extreme suffering and starvation in the city, he took the city. Then he and his army mopped up. They caught the king and his retinue as an attempt was made to escape; they put out the king's eyes and led him bound to Babylon; they laid waste the city after despoiling what was left from the former invasion. And thus came the end of the Jewish nation as a nation. The writer of the story puts it thus: "So Judah was carried away out of their land." The Northern Kingdom fell in 722 B. C. The Southern Kingdom fell in 586 B. C. These are dates to remember.

Moving majestically among his fellow-countrymen, and standing head and shoulders above them in these troublous times, was Jeremiah, one God's greatest servants and one of the mightiest of the prophets. He was quiet by nature, retiring, sensitive. He loved his country with a deep and constant love. He saw the doom that awaited her. Thus he suffered intensely and walked with a heavy heart. The times were out of joint, and cursed spite, although he was not appointed to set them right—no man could do that—he was appointed to announce that doom. If ever a man was in the wine-press, it was Jeremiah during these fateful years. But he was a man of heroic stature, and when God called he answered, when God spoke, he obeyed. With breaking heart, but with clarification voice he declared his messages. The people falsely accused him, they persecuted him, the leaders even locked him up and put him in a dark and dank dungeon. They accused him of treason and desertion. But nothing deterred him from his divinely appointed course.

When Jerusalem fell, Jeremiah was given the choice of going with the captives, or remaining in the land. He chose to remain in the land. No reason is given in the account of these times. But we may be sure that his motive was pure and unselfish, and that no matter how he might be judged by men, he obeyed his Lord in this matter. It was probably a case of a man wishing he could be in two places at the same time. Surely the captives needed him in their captivity. But the rabble left in Judah also needed him.

Whatsoever Things Were Written . . .

Whatsoever things are written are written for our institution. Here drawn out in plain words is the stern and sobering truth that the nation that forgets God shall come to an untimely end. Look at the record. Call the roll. Egypt, Greece, Rome, Babylon, Assyria, Media, Persia—gone into the limbo of the lost. They thought it couldn't happen to them, but it did. We may think it can't happen to us, but it can. Modern nations will do well to "Stop, Look, Listen."

The International Convention of Christian Endeavor will meet in San Francisco July 8-13.

UPON THIS ROCK—MY CHURCH.*

TEXT: MATTHEW 16:11-18

By JOHN F. C. GREEN.

Above all other parts of Scripture, this word of Jesus to St. Peter has influenced the course of the organized church. Our Roman brethren have mechanized it into an authoritarianism which gives to their hierarchy the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, so that there is a gulf between them and all others across which there can never be a bridge, a division which has in past times caused tyrannies beyond computation and made to flow streams of blood.

However, we, of the free Church have simply ignored the teaching of the Church and its commission to the place that, if there were any thought about it, the kingdom of God was to arise in a re-formed social order. There has been with us a want of theological thought about Jesus and his work with men; his Divine Father who cannot be comprehended by or in the transient cultural ideals and forms however sincerely and earnestly they may be held.

A long generation ago some American church-folk envisioned the conversation of the world in their times. They gave zealous allegiance to the Great Commission, to go into all the world; they were the time-products of a pre-World War culture, in which the characterization of man in sin was unpopular; in which Western man actually supposed in his naïvete that his civilization and Christianity were synonymous. But, these earnest disciples gave themselves to the cause of the Gospel, in the building of the Church here among men. They fell short of their own high vision and the spiritual call; but they gave themselves, as simply, as sincerely as did St. Peter. And upon that rock is built the Church.

Peter is "rock," in the Greek language. And, surely, no one was less like a rock that volatile Peter who might more accurately have been denominated quick-silver, for he responded, with warm heart, to every noble challenge. It was he who declared the Messiahship of Jesus, in the fulfilment of the Messianic hope of his people. And thereupon is built the Church, in the Head of the Church. And upon other rock can no man build the Church.

It was Peter who came near enough the trial of the Master to escape danger by denial three times repeated; but Peter was there. Others had fled. As wrote a German churchman who in the first year of Hitler had proclaimed the Headship of Christ to men and nations before a church crowded with a Nazi organization: "Where were those who in America now criticize us? Have they dared to stand up and say, 'There is no other foundation than that which has been laid, namely Jesus Christ?'" And is he not right? How faithfully have they, who decried anti-Christ in another nation, given allegiance to unfaith in their own? It was Peter who saw the Christ wherever he went and warm-heartedly responded.

It is this readiness of response, in the service of the Master, the response to the Gospel, that is the Church on its human side. Jesus could always count on Peter. What wonder that the Church has taken him, traditionally, for the keeper of the gates of heaven. In his warm-hearted sympathetic, impassioned eagerness to serve the Master, he yet erred constantly, but ever returned, with his failures and his frailty, an offering of self even unto the last. Surely, this man could understand the weakness of men. He would judge, fairly, the just and the unjust.

Second, from Peter also, in his insight and failure, we may think of the Holy Catholic Church, the Church Universal. While he was with St. Paul, he readily understood that the human, culture-forms cannot contain the Church. But at Jerusalem, where Jesus' brothers and disciples had failed to transcend the Jewish church, he yielded to them. And that church—the Church of the Apostles, ceased to live after a few short decades. It lacked the vision of the Holy Catholic Church.

How, even after two thousand years of Christian history, we fail at this point ever and again! First, by trying to include those who do not believe in Christ, who hath made all things new; trying to merge the Church with un-Christian bodies; second, on the part of some who in an absolutism identify their own Church in its human forms, with the Holy Catholic Church.

At this latter place, we Congrega-toinalists have not sinned. We have tended to fall short, however, in not having a sense of the Church worthy of our calling to the Christian Gospel. So spoke, recently, one of America's most powerful and spiritual teachers. "I participated, not long ago, in an ordination service in a prominent Congregational Church, where no one seemed to believe in anything." An honest confession! Have not, too much, our people boasted that they did not believe in the Church?

The First Church in Jerusalem was a Congregational Church, and her leaders were the brothers and disciples of Jesus. But the Congregation was concerned chiefly with its traditions, fitting the Messiah-Savior faith into the Jewish religion and customs. And the First Church of Jerusalem died.

If there is one of the Congregational Churches in our Conference that was founded by planned forethought, with given leadership, in the sense of the urgent mission to extend the Church of Christ, I am unaware of the fact. So far as is known to me, each congregation was loyal, first, to its own traditions or its own immediate conceptions. There are some that became Congregational because they found what is falsely considered freedom; the ability to function in their own uninhibited manner and spirit—a freedom that is license. For freedom bears the constraint of responsibility. And the responsibility of the Church of Christ is evangelism—"first in Jerusalem, and—unto the ends of the earth."

And so, the emphasis which has become predominant, that of the raising of money for causes, however worthy, for evangelism, perhaps, for away, has been un-rooted in the elemental urgency of the Gospel. It has been as inadequate as was the program of the First Church at Jerusalem; it will be, if continued, as fatal. The extension of the Church must radiate from a soundly based home church.

More than two decades ago, Dr. Arthur Holt, on assuming the headship of the department of social ethics at our Chicago Seminary, wrote concerning this centrality of the Congregational Church in her mission:

"I believe we are face to face with the question whether our denomination is to be both a benevolent organization and a prophetic organization. It will be easy at this time for it to become merely a benevolent society interested in the raising of large gifts for worthy benevolences.

UPON THIS ROCK.

If it does that its prophetic function will atrophy. Our ministers will be measured by their ability to cultivate the sources of benevolences. The minister who alienates such sources will be put down as a denominational failure. Many of our ministers are now suffering under this charge. We must not allow this to be. He is the greatest friend of Congregationalism who will keep alive its prophetic soul and kindle in it the love for righteousness."

That was the voice of a churchman, all but crying in the wilderness about us.

For, look at the record! Have we truly cultivated the Church, in its base, the parishes; have we multiplied them; have we reached the second frontier, the social frontier, which is, religiously turning into a howling wilderness of unfaith, un-religion, un-church?

Or have we heard, more and more, the demand, merely, to provide from the existing parishes, the finances to further programs, worthy in themselves, and some of transient social norms? Or are we now repeating the mistake of the New England of the era of the expanding American frontiers, when our Church thought so little of herself that she practically turned over the Great West to the newer sects, who, by this our neglect grew large and strong?

Our denominational antecedents failed at this place. They wanted churches—so far as they cared—for themselves and their own. They did not care very much who served the frontier. Indeed thousands of churches were founded by Congregational missions, in money and in men, for other bodies. We may fail, but let it so be, that our eyes are open. Should we have lost the sense of the Church of Christ, then let us honorably surrender the Christian flag to sister churches that possess a higher conception of the Christian mission, of beginning in Jerusalem.

Under this head, we should recall the ecclesiastical heresy of the mirage of the "united church," which has beckoned church leaders and certain churches from the time of Constantine, when military power and political force, using ruthless persecution, attempted the first united church.

Whoever believes in Jesus Christ as his Savior is a member of the Christian Church, the Holy Catholic Church. It is modern heresy to substitute "ecumenicity"—whose nature is an organization—for the Holy Catholic Church. The experience and wisdom of two thousand years of dearly bought history are with us. We should not so lightly assume that our generation, in the small group organized for controlling leadership, is superior in Christian understanding to the historic Christian Church.

Whatever our own Church, we are part of the Holy Catholic Church. But we need to give greater loyalty to that which we are and have. Or, it is to be feared, there will be no greater loyalty in a future denomination. For organization unity will never come. The nature of the universe is unity in diversity.

Our challenge, then, from this theological concept, is to go forward, to build our Church. There are in our land 10,000 villages without churches of any kind, as we are told by the Home Missions Council; there are 30,000 villages without a resident pastor. In New York City three-fourths of youth are receiving no Christian training whatsoever. We need a return, my friends, to the missionary zeal of our forebears in the Church. Or our secondary concern for causes far away or in politics and industrial war-fare will bring but little fruit; for we shall be used by them while we neglect the buildings of the walls of our Holy City.

A National leader of Stewardship in our Church reiterates that Congregationalists stand in sixteenth place in benevolent giving, among the churches in America. But could it be, brethren, that the very simple explanation lies in the low regard that Congregationalists have for their Church; that here they stand sixteenth also? Could it be true, as I believe it to be, that according to the regard in which the Church is held by her members, will their loyalty also be, in the giving of money offerings, and the offering of their sons and daughters?

Jesus, it is written, "Loved the Church and gave Himself for it." And they who are His followers must love the Church. For only through her can they serve the cause of the Head of the Church.

Not only is our new frontier, the social frontier, becoming un-Christian, but the very atmosphere of Christianity is disappearing before the encroachment of paganism.

A successful business man said in all candor: "Of course, my business is not in any wise to be considered as ethically defensible or Christian. I could not stay in business, if I operated that way. But in my private life, I trust, I still act like a Christian." Well, the grave question is whether such a divided life can be considered Christian.

A labor leader confessed some years ago: "Of course, you are right in saying that this thing we do is class-war. But I cannot tell my locals that."

In such a world our lot is cast. Our Christian imperative ought, first of all to estimate the strength of the hostile world; second, to undertake the battle, regardless of all the host of Satan. Always, thus, the Church has won the day. As said Jesus: The gates of hell shall not prevail against her. He did not say that his missionaries might not pay with their lives. He bore the cross unto his death; and he commanded his own to follow him with their crosses. The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church. And Americans have been more than liberal in the praise of those of their German Brethren who counted their lives lost but gain in the pursuit of the Gospel. So that, if we have acknowledged their Christian duty of civil disobedience, it is duty for us also.

Unfaith is subtly tempting our generation, as clearly as was Jesus tempted on the mountain, in the desert and on the pinnacle of the temple. Serve power, organization, serve the temporal needs of men, and men will follow you.

The Church must be built, or the end will be triumphant secularism, which will hesitate at no limit of destruction of humanity and human rights.

Our is the unceasing need for understanding, not mere "tongues," or "feelings." Yet there has been, more and more, a dearth of information, the want of an open forum! There has been a growing amount of controlled news among us. And that way is toward the shallows and the miseries. We, the Congregationalists, with four hundred years of ecclesiastical democracy behind us, should lead the way, by extending this democracy in and through our church, by founding new ones, in the un-churched areas of America; and we should reach forth our hands to far places, teaching the congregational way to those who wish it for themselves.

Our generation is a fit mission field. Under Christian exterior paganism is present and flourishing.

Shall we preach Christ by personal sacrifice. No organization of churches at the top, no regional meetings to hear impassioned appeals on stewardship—nothing of a surrogate will

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Firends:

Since the good rain we had a few days ago we have been busy planting our garden. Our first planting has not done much good. The weather was so dry and cold, and the insects have been plentiful to feed on beans and other leafy plants. Of course, we have been feeding them on poison to kill them, but it is hard to get them all.

We have several children to leave after school closed. Some graduated. Others had reached the age limit and went out to fight the battles of life alone. After children have lived here for a number of years it is always hard to see them leave. One learns to love them as if they were his own. Sometimes they break down and cry as if their heart would break, and sometimes the writer has an aching heart and sheds a silent tear, too.

Some years ago we had a very fine bright girl here who graduated from high school, and we sent her to college to take a commercial course. After she had finished we employed her to work in the office here until she could get a better job. She was a splendid secretary and did her work well. She was offered a good job in the office of a large manufacturing plant at a much better salary than we could afford to pay, and she accepted it. I will never forget the day she left. She went up to her room, packed her suitcase and brought it downstairs, and sat down in a chair and burst into tears and said, "Mr. Johnston, I had no idea it would hurt me so much to leave. It has been a real home to me here."

We have had children to go on vacation and would cry to come back before their vacation ended. One cannot help loving them. Many of our children are alone in the world and have no other to look to for love, food, and care. They crave love as any other child would. They have been deprived of father's and mother's love, and if they had a good mother, she is gone. No other person, it matters not how kind you may be to them, can fill that vacant place in their life.

We have lots of sympathy for an orphaned child, and our heart goes out to them. They are wards of the Church, and the Church should see to it that they have care and training. Some of our best citizens have been reared in orphanages.

at his table of six may have one. He learns how to read the big lettered signs that have meaning for him, but he does not have formal lessons in reading. To this no child should be subjected, the experts tell us, until his eyes have attained at least the development of six years of age.

As the child proceeds through the first grade, if he has not had kindergarten preparation he is expected to do two years' work in one. The fact that he is promoted at the end of the year does not prove that he has accomplished this feat. Many a child is kept back in the second, third, fourth—yes, even in the upper grades and high school classes—because he never really succeeded in mastering the mechanics of reading as taught in the first and second grades.

And why didn't he? He probably found is too difficult to adjust to all of the many abrupt changes from home to school, and to learn first grade lessons, too; or he may have lacked interest because he had never experienced the joy of listening to stories or having his questions answered through the medium of books, as he would have done in the kindergarten. A dependable foundation for school efficiency and educational success is a good kindergarten; and no serve. Will we go into these darkening places personally to testify of the Savior, the Head of the Church; will we, like Lyman and Munson, build the Church, our Church, or will we callously be busy with this or that, while Christ is not being preached? Then woe is upon us. Fourteen per cent of the needed ministerial replacements are in prospect from the homes of a million members of 5,000 Congregational Churches. The sons and daughters of our Church would serve the Church and her Christ, if they were shown that the Church is His Body. Let them hear this important news. Let them hear it always!

SECOND-HAND RELIGION

A Radio Message by Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell

In a number of letters that have come to me recently these questions have been repeatedly asked: "Why is my faith not strong enough to enable me to solve my own problems? Why can not I get from religion that quieting, steadying, strengthening influence that some people appear to obtain? Is the trouble with my faith or is it with myself?"

I can answer those questions by describing an interview I had with a university student recently. She was twenty-one years of age, and had come to the city from a quiet country community. In a Protestant home she had been brought up to reverence the Bible, to attend Sunday school and church, and to profess her faith in the basic beliefs of the Christian religion. When she came to me she was in great distress. "I have lost my faith," she said. "It has broken down under the the weight of the new knowledge that I have learned at the university, and now I am just floundering, not knowing what to believe." I asked this young woman to give me, in detail, the story of her early life and her attitude to religion, and she did so. There was no mystery about her case, and I said to her: "You have spoken about losing your faith. The simple fact of the matter is that you never had a faith that you could call your own. Right up to the present you have been living on borrowed capital. You have been going on the faith of your father and mother, which was good enough for them, but you didn't make it your own. The simple truth is that you have been living on second-hand religious experiences. You must make a discovery of religion that is first-hand and personal—that will be yours."

I am happy to say that this young woman has found that faith, and it is sufficiently vital to meet the strain of all the new knowledge that will come to her.

Now the answer which I made to this young woman applies to tens of thousands of people across the nation. There is too much second-hand religion abroad in the Christian world. Why is modern Christianity not more effective? In this nation, for instance, we have approximately fifty million church members. The unpleasant explanation is the true one: too many of them are Christians in name only. They are nominal believers in Christ.

How shall we gain a true knowledge of God and of spiritual things? How shall we make the Bible and prayer realities in our daily experience? Well, there is no magical way in which these things can be accomplished. We must consecrate our time and all our powers to this undertaking. In the case of most people today every detail of life is arranged without reference to God. Every minutest fragment of their lives would be just the same if religion were dead and buried. God has not been argued out of their lives; he has been crowded out. Need we wonder that faith has become unreal and ineffective?

We must be willing to devote a portion of every day to communion with God. We should start that period of communion with a brief passage from the Bible, starting with one of the Gospels or one of the Epistles of St. Paul, and reading part of a chapter each day until we finish the book. It is well to underline the verse that comes to us as a message from God. The man who begins the day with God and who sets forth to meet life's experiences in the assurance that God is with him, will no longer be at the mercy of life's circumstances. No matter how difficult or hostile his environment may be, always within will he possess the reserves of inner serenity and peace. He will be able to say, in the words of the great Apostle: "If God be for us who can be against us?"

Unity With Diversity

By DR. GEORGE W. RICHARDS

Vice-President, Evangelical and Reformed Church

Text: I Cor. 12:4—"There are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit. And there are diversities of administration and the same Lord. And there are diversities of workings, but the same God."

The attempt to become what the words of Paul define has resulted by gradual process in the World Council of Churches, which is the latest but not the last form of the ecumenical movement. . . . It is significant that in the beginning of Christianity one meets the concept of ecumenicity with a geographical and political meaning. . . . It is a far cry indeed from the wandering tribes in Asia, Europe and America, each having its own chief and way of life, to the Imperium Romanum in theory covering the earth. It required ages before men coined the term "humanitas," and spoke of the whole world as a fatherland and of all mankind as a brotherhood.

The religious ecumenicity of the Hebrew prophets surpasses the political ecumenicity of Rome. . . . What the prophets beheld in vision was realized in fact in Jesus from Nazareth. As the Man of Nazareth he was a national—a Jew by birth and training; but as the Christ of God He was supernational, superracial, ecumenical. . . .

The ideal of the Apostolic fellowship was that of one body with many members, a diversity of gifts, ministrations and operations but one spirit, one Lord and one God. . . .

The one body became many bodies . . . instead of unity with diversity, came separation and division. Ecumenicity, therefore, is not something that the Church once had and lost—rather it is something that it had in principle but never realized in practice, a goal men tried to attain but never quite reached.

We need not repent either of Catholic uniformity or Protestant divisions. We accept both as a historical necessity. Yet we are convinced that a necessity for the kingdom of God in the third, the thirteenth or the sixteenth century has become an obstacle to its coming in the twentieth. If that conviction is true and we persist in maintaining our denominations, we must not only repent but bear fruit worthy of repentance in seeking a fellowship of Christians throughout the world that is in harmony with the ideal of the New Testament—unity with diversity.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Pastor J. Frank Apple of Henderson, N. C., announces that the morning services of the church during June are being broadcast over Station WHNC.

Special services were held at the Henderson Church during the week of June 8-15. Rev. Roy D. Coulter, pastor of Timber Ridge Church, Valley of Virginia, was guest preacher.

The fourth Sunday in June marks the conclusion of the Penny-A-Day Plan. You are requested to bring your gifts to church on that Sunday. These gifts should be forwarded to the Convention Office at Elon College, N. C., as promptly as possible.

TESTIMONY FROM MISSOURI.

Recently delegates from all of our State Conferences representing a polled vote of the delegates who attended the General Council of Congregational Churches in Grinnell last June, voted to submit to our churches, associations and State Conferences the proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. These conversations have been in progress for several years and now the entire matter has been referred to the members of our churches. It is required that churches vote on this major decision some time within the coming year. The spirit of church union is in the air. The need for closer cooperation and over-all Protestant planning and strategy are easily apparent. There are a number of things to commend the proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. As far as polity is concerned we are similar in many ways. In the proposed union we do move in the presbyterial direction—which may have many points in its favor. Our ultra-independency, on many occasions, is nearly ruinous. Theologically the other church is generally more conservative than we are but in the field of Christian action they are very progressive. In worship we can learn much from them. We must be prepared thoroughly before we can vote intelligently on this major question. Brochures will soon be available for individual study outlining "The Basis of Union." We shall need to hold a series of meetings in the autumn to discuss all phases of the union.—E. Paul Sylvester, D. D., St. Louis, Missouri.

THE FORCE AND THE FIELD.

By DOUGLAS HORTON.

When a group of human souls are united in tingling contact with God, as by an electric current, they create a field about them. There is a flow of influence out into the area round about, and the secular motives of the men and women of the world are brought into a certain order, oriented toward the fact of the Christian idea. It is as when a magnet is brought up under a sheet of iron filings. The momentum of the world outside feels the tug and the redirection of forces which are now loosed upon it. The habits of Christendom form.

Consider the coming of Christianity, through one of the great denominational boards, to one of the countries of the Orient. The little churches that are set up in the communities seem harmless enough, but there is unleashed from them a complex of forces which in a generation or so mean a new educational system for the country, for people learn within those churches that they cannot live as intimate members of the fellowship of Christ without reading the Bible and Christian literature; nor can they interpret the things of Christ to their fellows without a study of the arts and philosophy; nor can they minister to the physical and other needs of their fellows without a grasp of science. From the churches other waves of social desire ripple out over the country, now for a medical system, now for proper care for the indigent. It is hard to realize today that within three or four generations the Gospel has reached so far into the heart of the ancient civilizations of the Orient that new social conformations, never before known there, are being demanded and brought into being. So it is where the Church is doing its work in any part of the world. It may seem a little thing for a group of men and women to stop for an hour a week at a church of their denomination on the corner or for a corresponding group in the country to come from their farms to the white church on the green, but from those centers there goes out to the neighborhood, carried in the minds of those men and women, a subtle but real demand for Christian contours in the social morphology. You may smile at some of the extremes of your Puritan and other ancestors, but there is not much more thrilling reading in the history of America than the stories of some of the smaller communities where, a hundred and fifty years ago, before technology had made secularization easy, Christianity in those tiny enclaves had an opportunity to show its power. Public man after public man went out of those places—to edit the nation's newspapers with a policy that derived from conviction, to sit on the benches of the federal courts, to develop the nation's industry, and all with a glowing sense of obligation to their generation. Private conviction makes public spirit, if it be of the right sort.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

A CONSECRATION SERVICE FOR VACATION SCHOOL WORKERS.

PRELUDE: "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee"—played softly twice.

LEADER: We have gathered together, a band of Christian teachers and leaders, so that we may commune with God, our Father, so that we may be strengthened for our joyful task in this our Vacation Bible School. We earnestly desire that our worship may be sincere, that our mood may be receptive, for we want to learn God's way for our lives. We want to go forth to teach others in His name.

HYMN: Lord, Speak to Me"—Tune: Canonbury (all uniting).

Lord, speak to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of Thy tone;
As Thou hast sought, so let me seek Thy erring children, lost and lone.

O teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things Thou dost impart;
And wing my words that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

O fill me with Thy fulness, Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word
Thy love to tell, Thy praise to show!

Amen.

LEADER: Whatsoever things are true whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are of good report—if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things.

PRAYER (By Leader and Group):

Leader—For the Spirit of Wisdom, eternal in the Heavens,

Group—Father, we thank Thee.

Leader—For the teachers of the ages who have listened to the voice of Truth and have followed its call,

Group—Father, we thank Thee.

Leader—For those who have taught us—our parents, the teachers in the day school, the teachers in the Sunday school,

Group—Father, we thank Thee.

Leader—For Christianity, which has been "the mother of all education,"

Group—Father, we thank Thee.

Leader—For the opportunities which are ours to grow in the knowledge of all facts and their spiritual meaning,

Group—Father, we thank Thee.

All—May the presence of Jesus, the great Teacher, shine through all our teaching and may His Spirit lead us into all truth.

Amen.

Hymn: "Gracious Spirit, Dwell With Me"—Tune: Dix (all uniting).

Gracious Spirit, dwell with me;
I, myself, would gracious be;
And with words that help and heal,
Would Thy life in mine reveal;
And, with actions bold and meek,
Would for Christ my Saviour speak.

Truthful Spirit, dwell with me;
I, myself, would truthful be;
And with wisdom kind and clear,
Let Thy life in mine appear;
And, with actions brotherly,
Speak my Lord's sincerity.

Holy Spirit, dwell with me;
I, myself, would holy be;
Separate from sin, I would Choose and cherish all things good;
And whatever I can be,
Give to Him who gave me Thee.

Amen.

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR THE CHRISTIAN TEACHER:

Leader—Thou shalt love God.

Group—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

Leader—Thou shalt have a vision.

Group—Where there is no vision, the people perish.

Leader—Thou shalt have faith.

Group—Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen.

Leader—Thou shalt seek the truth.

Group—And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

Leader—Thou shalt have a life-purpose.

Group—Forgetting the things which are behind . . . I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Jesus Christ.

Leader—Thou shalt keep thy motives pure.

Group—Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.

Leader—Thou shalt do team-work.

Group—Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

Leader—Thou shalt love the pupil.

Group—A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another.

Leader—Thou shalt go the second mile.

Group—And whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile, go with him two.

Leader—Thou shalt be skillfull in leadership.

Group—Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth.

PERIOD OF SILENT PRAYER AND MEDI-TATION.

UNISON PRAYER: Our Father, we consecrate ourselves to the high calling of Christian teaching, that we may lead thy children into Thy life abundant. We pray in the Spirit and in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

HYMN: "O Master, Let Me Walk Thee"—Tune: Maryton or Hurs-ley (all uniting):

O Master, let me walk with Thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me Thy secret; help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care.

Help me the slow of heart to move
By some clear, winning word of love;
Teach me the wayward feet to stay,
And guide them in the homeward way.

Teach me Thy patience, still with Thee
In closer, dearer company;
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong;
In trust that triumphs over wrong.

In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way;
In peace that only Thou canst give,
With Thee, O Master, let me live.
Amen.

BENEDICTION.

RESPONSE: "O Master, Let Me Walk
With Thee" played very softly.

(So that the impressions of this service may remain with those worshipping, the group should leave the room quietly, and without speaking.)

For those of you who have requested a commissioning or dedication service for the workers in your Vacation Bible School, this service is suggested. Use it for the workers alone participating, or use it as a part of the Sunday morning services, where the whole congregation may uphold the School and its workers.

APOSTOLIC CHRISTIANITY

What is apostolic Christianity? Many answers have been given. New sects and denominations have been organized for the purpose of demonstrating the true apostolic Christianity. Some claim that it depends upon the proper organization; others claim that it depends upon the absence of organization. "Apostolic succession" is the answer confidentially given by those who are sticklers for ecclesiastical red tape. Doctrinal differences, ordination, the sacraments—these continue to be the major flies in the spiritual ointment of the church union. Unyielding groups are confident that they have a monopoly upon the original, unadulterated apostolic Christianity.

The essence of apostolic Christianity is stated succinctly in the Book of Acts: "And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." They found frequent opportunities to rehearse, formally and informally, the apostles' doctrine. The doctrine as set forth by the different apostles was perennial and exhaustless in its interest. So they "Continued"—day and night, summer and winter, in the temple and by the wadside. The apostolic church is that church which is faithful in its duty of teaching the apostles' doctrine. Through the pulpit, the Sunday school and the printed word, our church has an unparalleled opportunity to continue in this apostolic ministry both at home and abroad.

Fellowship, genuine and abiding, was a part of the strength of the early church. Their religion permeated their whole life, a life of joy, of simplicity, of praise and of respect from outsiders. How can the modern church claim to be apostolic if it fails to recognize and make adequate provision for this essential phase of Christianity? God forbid that we should delegate to secular interests this major item of community life.

A truly Christian life is Christian at home; its very meals are eucharistic. Communion and evangelism have an apostolic union. It was as they broke bread "from house to house" that "the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved." The evangelistic preaching of St. Peter and the lay visitation combined and eventuated in impressive results.

The church at prayer has power. We note that "wonders and signs were done through the apostles." It has been remarked that the greatest wonder was that men's selfishness was cast out and "they sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all, according as any man had need."

Be not deceived, no one branch of the church has a monopoly on apostolic Christianity. The church which continues stedfastly and unswervingly in the apostolic pattern will realize the apostolic blessing.

HELP FOR A WORLD IN CHAOS

A call to Christians throughout the world to employ all the newest techniques of a scientific age in proclaiming the teachings of Christ and to "work harder, faster, and more effectively" than ever before, has been voiced by the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. The Foreign Missions Conference represents 124 Protestant mission boards and agencies in this country and Canada.

Entitled "Help for a World in Chaos," the call will be sent to every major Protestant church gathering scheduled to be held in this country and overseas during the remainder of 1947. Release of the call was authorized at the closing session of the two-day meeting in New York of the Conference's Committee of Reference and Counsel. The committee serves as the mission organization's executive body.

Painting a grim picture of a "chaotic and insecure world" in which the interdependence of mankind is freely recognized yet in which "almost all plans for carrying the ideal of universal brotherhood into practice are stymied by the human factor," the call reaffirmed the claim of the Christian church that "if Christianity is honestly believed and fully practiced, it will solve all problems of human maladjustment."

At the same time, however, warned the call, while the world has become one physically and is tending to become one intellectually and socially, the spiritual unity of mankind "lags far behind."

"All over the world," it pointed out, "uncounted millions of people lack food, shelter, clothing and medical care, yet increasing populations press ever harder on available supplies. Multitudes have lost faith in the potentialities of the common man and are turning the pessimism, cynicism and despair, or to a reliance upon some form of totalitarian control of society for its own good. There is no commonly accepted ethical code for the world. Many people no longer believe that religion is concerned with these conditions or has the power to remedy them."

"Asia," said the call, "is in a ferment of revolt against the Western imperialisms, of internal tensions and of civil war. Africa has not yet reached the stage of explosive action, but beneath the surface there is seething unrest, stimulated by the return of black men who served in other lands and thus discovered how precarious is the civilization of their European masters. Europe is bled white of wealth, inherited ethical convictions and its religious faith. Solving the problem of mere subsistence is the all-absorbing interest of the individual and of the nations. Latin America lacks political stability. Its traditional form of Christianity no longer appeals to intellectuals and condones low ethical standards for the uneducated masses. In North America racial segregation and injustice is the accepted pattern of human relationship, against which church and state alike are just beginning to (Turn on page 13.)

A PROVOKING COMMUNITY.

A Sermon

By BERNARD V. MUNGER.

Have you wished that you could do something to lessen the number of things in your church and community life which cause you to complain and make you dissatisfied? I hope so, for then you are seeking after just that remedy which a New Testament writer has to offer. He wrote, in the 10th chapter of the letter to the Hebrews, "Let us consider one another, with a view to provoking one another to love and good works!" That's his answer to our wishing! That's the way to lessen the number of things which disturb us in our church and community life. "Let us consider one another, with a view to provoking one another to love and good works."

That bit from Hebrews is no accidental passage—no occasional thought sticking out of the New Testament like a sore thumb! The New Testament attaches a great deal of importance to those two things: love and good works! And, no wonder, for the New Testament caught and proclaimed the Spirit of One Who said: "A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another;" and, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven!" Also, the author who wrote to Timothy seemed to think this emphasis was behind all of Scripture, as he said: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works!"

So, the writer of the letter to the Hebrews was talking good, firm, clear New Testament language when he said: "Let us consider one another, with a view to provoking one another to love and good works." Perhaps, then, it would be well for us to see if we could gain a better understanding of what this means. Then it may be that you'll agree with me that here is the answer to our queries concerning a remedy for the things we complain of. I hope we shall all come to agree that here is a picture of the way we are to walk if what we wish and hope for our church and community are to be attained!

What is this "love" about which we are to think? That's a question easier to ask than to answer. Paul, remember, took a whole chapter to define it. It could be described as outgoing, sympathetic, active concern for the welfare of others. It is sympathy. And it always carries with it a desire for the welfare of those toward whom it is directed. The central element in love is always a heartfelt desire for the well-being of the person toward whom it is directed. But, it isn't just a feeling or a sentiment. It is the union of all the faculties of the personality, directed toward the welfare of others. It is as all-inclusive of the self as Jesus indicated it was when he re-asserted the Old Testament description of how to love God: with heart, soul, strength and mind. Love is the united movement of the whole person. When it is directed toward Jesus Christ, it becomes a great soul-force which unites us to God, His will, His purpose, and his love. Love, directed toward Christ has a welding power which brings your soul and mine into constant fellowship with God. Likewise, love is the one power which, when set loose in the individual's life, can bring harmony into one's personality! It creates the atmosphere in us which gives opportunity for all that is best in us to bear fruit. Love has the power to control rage, anger, pride, and possessiveness. It has the faculty for enriching and ennobling all of the high sentiments and attitudes of which we are capable. Also, love is the harmonizing power between men. It is that power which keeps the soul always in a relation of sympathy and harmony with one's fellows. Thus, love is the true principle on which community rests, dependently. So I could go on. But why? The 13th chapter of First Corinthians is so accessible to you, and it has never yet been equalled.

What are the "good works" that we are considering? That's a question that can not be answered in minute detail for each of you. Yet, the answer is pretty clear in the New Testament. In the letter to Timothy those who have goods are to "be quick to distribute to the needy, generous with all that they possess;" and the women who served as deaconesses were to be commended if "they had brought up children, lodged strangers, washed the feet of saints, and if they had relieved the afflicted." That is something of the kind of works that are meant. But Paul gets more to the point when he says: "Let love be without adulteration. Hate what is wrong, hold to what is right. Be affectionate one to the other, eager to show one another honor. Serve the Lord diligently. Be happy in your hope, steadfast in you time of testing, persistent in prayer. Supply the needs of God's people. Bless them that curse you. Rejoice with those who rejoice and weep with those who weep. Be not over ambitious, but accept humble tasks. And, live in harmony with one another." Or, there is Jesus' own catalogue of good works, catalogued as it were, from the very throne of judgment: "Feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick and imprisoned, be hospitable toward the stranger—and, do it all as unto Me." So it is, almost every personal and social situation is covered right in the small book which is our New Testament. We don't need more information concerning what good works are. We need just what the writer of our text knew that we needed: to be aroused to be up and doing. That's why he said: "Let us consider one another—to provoke." We are to give thought to one another just in regard to these two things: love and good works. There is the task of Christians in the Church. There is our work: to consider one another, to regard one another as persons in whom we wish to stir up love, and whom we wish to arouse to good works. Just think of that, and then contrast it with our more ordinary ways of considering one another. We think of others as persons to complain about, to criticize, to ridicule, to compete against, to lord it over, to get something from, or in a host of other ways. But, we are ask, no—called, to consider one another with a view to provoking them to love, and good works.

That being our task, how is it to be done? Well, God answered that question for us. What was it that men desperately needed? Was it not that they should learn to love Him and do good to their brethren? That was, and still it, the need of the human race. What did God do about it? He showed His great love to men. He gave His Son. And the Son He went about doing good, giving of Himself in love, even to the giving of Himself in sacrificial death. When God wanted to stir up love in men's hearts He showed them His great love. So, how

SUFFOLK LETTER.

When nineteen faithful workers set their heads to do a task it is likely done. Under the direction of Mrs. Ervin C. Wilkins the Suffolk Church gathered one hundred thirty-six boys and girls together for the Daily Vacation Bible School, and did a good job. Material was sent us promptly from the Convention Office, which material was most complete, stating just the things needed for every song, story, and piece of hand work. All we had to do was to carry out the instructions. Mrs. Wilkins asked me to teach the one class in the Junior High Department, and I had lots of fun doing it. We made outlines of the Bible as a whole laying particular emphasis on the opening chapters. Modesty forbids my saying the pupils liked it!

The New Testament was studied under the direction of Mrs. Truitt, Mrs. M. F. Hall, Miss Nancy Alberts, Miss Margaret Rawls, and Ann Truitt, in the Junior Department. They worshipped, sang songs, studied the Bible, listened to Bible stories, and did games and handwork together, and again I say, they liked it. The teachers, songleaders, storytellers and play directors were well prepared and faithful in attendance. And once the school was opened at 9:00 in the morning the boys and girls saw to it that there was no loafing till the session was over at 11:00 o'clock.

The Primary Department, under the capable leadership of Mrs. John C. Ramsey, Jr., did many things to impress the meaning of the church upon the boys and girls in that department. They even made a church, filled the paper pews with paper people, and placed the preacher—a paper one—in the pulpit. It is a fine job, and all who look at it marvel at the work which was done. They studied the reason for everything in regular class sessions, and then made them come true. It was thrilling to hear them talking when their day was over about the things they had learned and done. Helping Mrs. Ramsey were: Mrs. J. T. Herring, Mrs. O. J. Palmer, Mrs. E. J. Walls, and Miss Nancy Speight.

Mrs. Norman L. Daughtrey had charge of the Beginners Department, and was assisted by a group of enthusiastic helpers: Mrs. W. T. Bolton, Mrs. Roy Mizzell, Mrs. Edward R. Tyler, Mrs. J. L. Byrd, Miss Jamie Felton and Mrs. Henry Ellis. Nothing went undone. Pianists, songleaders, storytellers, game directors, Bible teachers all grew more and more enthusiastic as they were greeted a few minutes before time every day with bright, happy children. All were thankful for a building, rooms, and ample equipment of every kind to make a really successful school—and I repeat, they liked it.

There was a "party" at the park and swimming pool in the afternoon of the closing day, and one hundred fifty-five pupils and workers came home at night tired but happy—I started to say that perhaps some of the workers were glad it was over, but really it is not yet over. There is to be a closing service Sunday night at 8:00 in the main church auditorium when each department will present some of the worship and instruction side of their school activities. And besides six boys and girls are to unite with the church Sunday morning as a result of the school. Many of us will earnestly pray that in God's love and wisdom it is not nearly over!

DO NOT LOSE THE VISION.

In 1931 the Congregationalists and the Christians united. In 1934 the Evangelical and Reformed Churches united. We sent a delegate to their meeting to congratulate them on the step. Now after the experiences of sixteen and thirteen years, respectively, these two bodies plan a union. What a great object lesson we can give to the world. Having tried we like and wish more of it. It is to be devoutly hoped that no trivial or minor details will be allowed to let us lose the vision of Christian union for which our Lord prayed. It is so easy to let details of organization overshadow the great objectives. In the Christian-Congregational preliminary stages I knew all the arguments brought up by our Christian church people in some quarters since officially I was thrown into the midst of all the discussions, objectives and plans. Chairmen Drs. Frank Coffin, Frank Sanders, Secretary Chas. E. Burton, all now gone from us, were happy in the union and desired others to come.

And most of the objections offered by fearful ones in our former Christian churches did not arrive: "We will be swallowed up," "our ministers will never be called to the former Congregational pulpits," "they have ministerial relief funds and there will be jealousy because our ministers will receive no benefits." So I could go on. These fears have all passed. Objections that seemed to loom so large did not materialize.

Witness the former Christian ministers, now Superintendents: Bennett in Indiana, Lightbourne in Rhode Island, Minton in Pennsylvania, Scott in Southern Convention, Shepherd in Southeastern, Hook in Washington, Fiebiger elect in Iowa.

So in former Congregational pulpits: Kershner in Cleveland, Helfenstein in Mason City, Swarts in Elkhart, Hurst in Washington, Fiebiger in Brooklyn, Claypool in Walla Walla, Peters in Bridgeport, Humphreys in New Haven and many others, and likewise many former Congregational ministers in former Christian church pulpits.

What a further opportunity to demonstrate that two denominations of different backgrounds somewhat can flow into one United Church! The former Congregational leaders have said to me in many sections that we of the Christian group made definite valuable contributions and we know that the Congregational fellowship made very definite contributions to our former churches. So it will be when these proposed groups unite, pray God soon. I mention only one. The Evangelical and Reformed people have done the best work probably of any denomination in the field of teaching Christian Stewardship to youth, a field that we have sadly neglected. Let us not lose the vision for which we have stood all our years over minor things.

DO DOGS GO TO HEAVEN?

Sometime ago, passing a Methodist Book Store, my attention was attracted by a book of the above title in the show window. I didn't have time to go inside and look over a copy, but I've been wondering ever since why dogs shouldn't eventually go to heaven. If they don't, what will some women angels do to pass away the time.

Of all the animals God ever created not one has ever been more faithful to man than the dog. His love, loyalty, and fidelity to his master cannot be doubted. The dog is the only domestic animal around the CLASS OF 1947.

The following message is President Smith's parting words to the Seniors of 1947:

Today as college graduates you are confronted with the greatest opportunity of any graduating class of the past quarter of a century. True, you face a broken world—broken by war, political intrigue, and social injustices. But you have the opportunity of helping to rebuild this broken world. During these years of preparation the forces of reconstruction have been placed in your hands and laid on your hearts. Have you the courage to use them?

The destruction, the cruelty, the horror, the futility of war, and the demands for peace have been written above the world's horizon as if in letters of fire and burned into the minds of the common people with a finality of conviction that cannot be erased in time.

Fascism and Nazism have been crushed and, we hope, permanently. But Communism is on the march and is a dangerous and elusive force that must be reckoned with. It continues to foster unfair discrimination in social living. It is within itself a dictatorship that would exalt the few and debase the many. It would extend autocratic domination over would-be free peoples and reduce to slavery the unfortunate and dependent masses.

Millions of your fellow countrymen went to battle and hundreds and thousands went to their death to halt and eventually destroy these and other uncivilized atrocities. It is your responsibility and plainly your duty to keep up this fight for a free and a warless world that there may be peace, prosperity and contentment for all.

Alma Mater bids you launch forth on such a mission, whether in public life or in private living. This is your opportunity and your responsibility. Nothing can hinder you in such a crusade for righteousness and freedom but fear—fear of opposition, fear of persecution, and fear of defeat. You have come to the world for such a time as this. Your college has prepared you for this opportunity, but cannot give you courage. Courage is necessary and God will give you that if you will let Him. David said, "The Lord is my light and my salvation. Whom should I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life. Of whom shall I be afraid?" God and you will spell victory any time, anywhere and under any and all circumstances. Alma Mater places on you now her hand of final blessing and bids you go forth in hope and triumph.

THE NEW HEATING PLANT.

Some weeks ago the boilers and stokers for the new heating plant were purchased. Recently Wiley & Wilson, consulting engineers and architects for the new heating plant building, submitted plans and specifications for the building to house necessary equipment. Thursday, June 12, at noon, was set as the hour for the opening of bids. Four contractors submitted bids. H. F. Mitchell Construction Company, Burlington, N. C., $61,958.00; Muirhead Construction Company, Durham, N. C., $79,375.00; V. P. Loftis Company, Charlotte, N. C., $72,431.00; V. B. Higgins, Greensboro, N. C., $81,940.00. Crane & Denbo, Durham, N. C., submitted a bid of $69,000 but the bid came past the hour set for the opening and was denied. All bids were considered too high and were accordingly refused. H. F. Mitchell Construction Company, having submitted the low bid, was asked to check his figures carefully and suggest where and how the cost might be reduced without seriously affecting the efficiency and durability of the building.

A joint meeting of the Executive and Building Committees of the Board of Trustees has been called for Tuesday, June 17, at 3:00 P. M. for the purpose of considering the contractor's proposal in conference with Mr. V. L. Wood, representative of Wiley & Wilson, consulting engineers. The committee is seeking an adequate, durable building to house the machinery for providing heat and hot water for the college without any frills or expensive gadgets. It is hoped that at this meeting an agreement can be reached with the contractor so that work may begin on the new building and bids received for additional necessary equipment and installation.

The college is faced with another critical situation. We must secure additional faculty members. At present we do not have housing facilities for their use. It would be inadvisable to place faculty members in the prefabricated houses erected by the Government for married students, even if they were available, which they are not. It would seem imperative that the college provide houses for these additional professors. It has been ascertained that funds can be borrowed under government guarantee for this housing project. Plans for self-liquidation over a term of years may be arranged. In this joint meeting the Executive and Building Committees will be asked to consider this proposed project and give its decision.

The college will appreciate the cooperation and support of the church at large in these undertakings.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

All institutions must have continuous support if they are to maintain required standards. Institutions of the church are not different. Obviously they fall in that category. When the church built Elon College, it was aware of the fact that it would be a continuous charge on the church. Recognizing this fact, the church also recognized that the college would be of continuous service to the church, that the church could not execute its program without efficient leadership. In the founding and building of the college it sought to provide such leadership that in periods of emergency as well as normal conditions the church through its college might have sufficient and adequate personnel to conduct its affairs. Later the church provided that the college might receive its support quarterly instead of annually. Many of our local churches send monthly contributions. The more frequent the contributions the better it is for both the church and the college. Should the college receive contributions from each local church either monthly or quarterly, its ability to meet financial demands would be much improved.

We are grateful for the churches that do contribute.

MEDICAL NEEDS AT SHAOWU
CHRISTIAN HOSPITAL.

To head the list of cheap projects, I might suggest a few packages of the "meals," to be sent here specifically for the purpose of use in the hospital for building up seriously ill patients, many of whom I imagine will be young children.

Another item that children especially could use would be stockings of all sizes, but preferably woollen or knit. The people of Shaowu are fairly adequately dressed, except for their feet. But they wear crude cloth or grass sandals, without stockings, and the children especially get their feet cold and wet in the mud and water during the cold winter, and develop the most awful-looking foot ulcers. I have no luck clearing up the ulcers and getting them to stay healed as long as the feet remain unprotected and exposed to more cold. Actually it will be a matter of gradually educating the people to the desirability of keeping their children's feet warm, and eventually they can be taught to get or make their own stockings. But temporarily, a supply of stockings will help a lot of patients, and will help put over the idea.

Other items represent things that I forgot to stock up on before I left the country, because I just did not imagine all the different kinds of needs. UNRRA has donated a lot of canned and powdered milk to the hospital, which will be awfully handy for baby orphans or other nurslings who cannot get mother's milk. But neither UNRRA nor I remembered that babies have to have bottles and rubber nipples to drink milk out of! Another item along the medical line is Concentrated Liver Extract, for injecting concentrated vitamins and blood building elements into patients who cannot take them by mouth. Along the same line, church groups around Boston may have heard of all the special products of blood plasma that have been developed by Harvard University during the last two or three years: concentrated human albumin, immune globulins, and the new surgical fibrin foam, all now put up in separate vials and packages, in addition to the more familiar packaged blood plasma itself, are all exceedingly useful aids for certain kinds of medical conditions, of which we will be having all kinds here; and, of course, none of that sort of thing is available here.

All of the above items I can use in any amount, the more the better. But individual units are cheap enough to fit the more modest-size projects. Other individual much-needed but less glamorous items, in the lower price range are: one urinometer, one hand-operated centrifuge, one simple analytical balance, one Sahli hemoglobinometer—all for use in my laboratory. A more expensive laboratory need, which was still unavailable when I left the States, is a sub-stage dark-field condenser for my microscope. Any doctor or lab technician in a church group could tell right away what each of the above items is useful for, and would be able to order one without hesitation—they are simple and standardized, so there need be no confusion or uncertainty that they might be getting me the wrong thing.

Another more general, cheap item which I forgot to mention is sputum cups. These are obtainable in America as flat, especially-cut and folded pieces of waxed cardboard useful for TB patients to use instead of spreading their bugs all over the landscape as they do here. I know how to make the cups, and I would be quite happy to improvise; but in China none of the paper or cardboard is waxed or waterproofed, and the sputum leaks through and is a mess. There undoubtedly is some permanent solution, but for the present the American brand of sputum cups would sure be a help.

Going up in expense, but still tailored to fit the individual project, is material for nurses' uniforms, and material for sheets and pillow cases. UNRRA was wonderfully generous with blankets and pajamas and bandages, but they forgot these items. We don't need as fancy or high-quality material as you are used to in America, and any amount will do. But I don't think it would be worthwhile shipping and sending through customs only enough for one or two uniforms or sheets.

Still in a higher price bracket is a folding, simple-design operating table and instrument cupboard for the operating room. We can always improvise on these items, but the improvisations in this case will never be wholly satisfactory. I do not want any of the fancy equipment that an American hospital would think would be a necessity in an O.R. The type of the Army had for its portable hospital units is sufficient.

At the top of the list, finally, is the item I don't expect to be able to get, but will mention anyway, because it is by all odds the most desperately needed of all. The commonest disease in China is tuberculosis, and I absolutely don't know how to diagnose or treat that disease without an X-ray machine. I cannot even protect the Jacksons, Frances or hospital workers from contact with cases of the disease, as servants and co-workers may already have it, in a stage too early to be diagnosed by physical examination and yet be spreading the germs. I marvel at the courage of the older doctors, who were willing to practice a lifetime here in China without one; it is an absolute necessity for me. But the simplest possible unit, unless someone can find a second-hand

With Emphasis on Missions

FINE RECORD AT LITTLE CREEK.

The Ladies Auxiliary of Little Creek has been very missionary-minded this year. We are working hard to reach the Standard of Excellence, and be an Honor Roll society. Our outstanding achievement is sponsoring the young people, juniors and cradle roll. The young people are very much interested in their society. We are especially proud of our junior society, as they have their own officers and carry on their programs. Their adult leaders, Mrs. W. H. Meyers and Mrs. M. E. Taylor, see that their social activities are not neglected, which does much to keep them interested. The cradle roll's sponsor, Mrs. W. B. Bowden, has made the small tots very mission-minded. Each Sunday some child (or children) brings some money for missions.

The Ladies Auxiliary donated over a hundred dollars toward our church's new bell system. We sent our thank offering to Shaowu. We gave $25.00 to India's Milk Fund, and $5.00 to Franklinton Institute. In July we expect to help Carroll County Mission. Our World day of Prayer service was very impressive, as we closed with a beautiful candle service.

Ten of our nineteen members take THE CHRISTIAN SUN and eight take The Missionary Herald. At least one of our members expects to attend the School of Missions at Elon.

Although our society has been organized only eighteen months, and our church is partly a mission project, we feel we are doing our part to further God's Kingdom to the "utmost parts of the earth."

INDIA THEME AT ROSEMONT.

At one of the recent meetings of the Rosemont Woman's Missionary Society, Mrs. J. H. Booth told us of the Women of Mangalam Village in India, first giving us a brief history of the country, explaining the caste system and the various forms of worship.

Because women are held in such low regard in India, these women were very proud of being Christians; then they found that in a neighboring village the women could read, and they immediately wanted a lady to come to their village and teach them. They found such a lady who did all kinds of things for them for about $75.00 a year for all the services.

Miss Betty Williams read an article, "The Light of India" and beautifully sang, "The Holy City," accompanied by her mother, Mrs. B. M. Williams.

We took a special offering for India at this meeting.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCH WORLD SERVICE CENTER.

A total of 164,721 pounds of relief materials, clothing, food, shoes, bedding, candles and soap, the highest record for any single week in 1947, came in to the Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Maryland, during the last week in May. The top two states were Pennsylvania and North Carolina, with 80,369 pounds and 49,930 pounds contributed respectively. Following were: Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia in that order. Adding to the total was 20,000 pounds of dried milk to be sent to children overseas.

Outgoing shipments from the Center have been heavy recently as difficulties of getting shipping space and winter weather obstacles in the northern ports of Europe have cleared up. Within the last few weeks, outgoing shipments have three times topped the 100,000-pound level. The week of May 12, 161,000 pounds of goods went from New Windsor to New York ports and overseas.

To date, more than 1,200,000 pounds of relief materials have been shipped from the New Windsor Center since January 1; more than 1,000,000 pounds of goods of all kinds have been received.

Recently as part of its contribution in the state-wide relief drive there, a North Carolina town sent a box of surgical instruments. What gift could be more valuable in countries abroad where so much vital equipment was lost or destroyed in the war? A similar box came, not long ago, from a hospital in Delaware. There may be other individuals or institutions which could make a similar contribution. Widows of doctors may have in their possession instruments which they could give for this purpose. When so much of the world is in need of help, don't let such useful articles remain idle. Pack them carefully and send them to the Church World Service Center for shipment overseas.

Only a few weeks after the Clothing Collection Bags became available several thousand had been distributed to families throughout the seven state area served by the Center. New requests are pouring in daily, often more than 100 at a time. And daily, filled bags keep coming in to the processing room, packed with clothes, shoes and other needed relief articles for overseas. Packing a clothing collection bag with relief goods is an adventure; it is also an investment—an investment in international friendship. Every time you put away your children's clothes from the week's laundry, remember children abroad who are wearing the only clothes they have. When you straighten up the clothes in your closet, pick out the ones you seldom wear. Don't keep them to fill up space. Slip them into the relief bag. Make sure all washable garments are clean and fresh, woolens at least brushed and aired. Shoes should be in repairable condition. Send now to save lives next winter, and to give comfort for this summer. If you have filled one clothing bag, write for another; if you have not yet had one, send for one today. Write the Promotion Office, Church World Service Center, Windsor, Maryland.

model, will probably run up to $5,000 by the time the accessories have been bought, and the customs duty paid, and the freight across the ocean and up the Min River to Shaowu. I am willing to spend that amount out of my own money if necessary, and go without everything else I need for the next several years. But if any church groups would like to chip in, and make it a project to help with the cost, I would surely appreciate it.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

Are you helping your parents with a garden this summer? Or are you large enough to have one all by yourself? If you are, I am sure that you are more interested in the weather, the insects and the way things grow than you have ever been before.

Our radishes have come and gone. Now we are watching for blooms on tomato plants; waiting for the little beans to become big beans and for the cucumbers to appear. We watch for the weeds, too, do you? Oliver is large enough to help pull up the weeds but Rebecca pulls up the plants along with the weeds. She can help water the flowers and plants when we don't have enough rain but she usually gets herself all soaked in the process.

Our weather has been too dry here until the last two days which have brought enough gentle rain to soak the earth, bring some green into the dry lawns and cause our garden to shoot up much taller.

Did you plant some flowers along with your vegetables? We did and the poppies are blooming. Along a fence we planted some nasturtiums that climb and this afternoon we found buds on them much to the children's delight. We made a border around half of our garden with dahlias. Along the central walk of our garden we have a row of zinnias and one of snapdragons.

The children are surprised by the great green blades which have sprung up where their Daddy planted the dead looking gladioli bulbs!

Miss Coghill who has been living in New York thought it was wonderful to have a big garden in which to work with God in making things to grow. When I was over in Tennessee my brother remarked about his farm: It isn't really mine, I'm just taking care of it for a little while; a steward of the soil. When I am no longer here there will be others to care for it. We can think the same way about our gardens. The "Good Earth" is God's gift to His children; they are His caretakers.

A DAY TOGETHER.

(Concluded from last week.)

As the three boys builded they chatted together about many things. Ronnie and Billy told Jeff about the many interesting things that first-grader's did in school. Jeff's birthday had come too late for him to get into school last fall. Often he sort of felt left out when Billy and the other boys in Sunday school could read the lesson and he could not. If there were pictures he could tell the teacher what it was all about though. Jeff was glad that he would soon be going to school with the other boys and girls. Most of all the things to learn in school Jeff longed to learn to read. All of his life he had loved books. Other people had been very kind to give him books and to read books to him. Now he was anxious to be able to read for himself and his little sister, Jane. Billy said that he liked to write and print. Ronnie said that he believed he'd rather read also.

It was just about time for lunch when Billy remembered to ask Jeff about his Bible verses for Sunday "Do you remember the Bible verses that Miss Melcher asked me to learn for our Children's Day program, Jeff?" "I believe it was about loving God and your neighbor as yourself." "That is right; I remember them now—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself!" "What are yours, Jeff?" "My first one is: Love one another with brotherly affection. And the second one is: Whatever is true, whatever is honorable, whatever is lovely, whatever is gracious, think about these things." "What are you doing at your Sunday School, Ronnie?" "Oh, we are acting out a story and I have the part of a boy who was kind to very poor children. It isn't hard to learn but I forget the places where I'm supposed to talk sometimes."

Just at that moment Mrs. King called the three boys in to lunch. They ate in the dining room all by themselves. Instead of letting one say the blessing they all said together: "Thank you for the world so sweet; Thank you for the food we eat; Thank you for the birds that sing; Thank you, God, for everything."

They had the most wonderful vegetable soup in bright colored bowls. It was Billy's favorite soup because it had letters from the alphabet in it. Then there were "Peter Pan peanut butter" sandwiches cut in strips.

Carrot and cabbage salad with raisins. Ice cream and a cookie for dessert. There was milk to drink along with their meal also. Mrs. King said that all of them were good boys because they ate all of their food!

When they finished eating they carried their dishes into the kitchen and offered to help wash them. Mrs. King thanked them and told them she would rather they went back out to play. This was Billy's special day together with them and he was not to work today.

What a wonderful afternoon they had together! Once they got too loud playing with "Baby," Billy's dog. An invalid lady lived next door and too much noise worried her. They remembered to keep quiet after that. When Jeff's father came for him they had used up all of the blocks in buildings and had fixed all of the streets and driveways of their housing project.

"When our Bible School starts, mother says that you must go home with me one day and spend the day with me, Billy."

"Thanks, Jeff, I'll ask my mother if it will be all right. I'll see you Sunday and don't forget to be there early."

"I'll be there early. Ronnie, you must come over on Lookout Mountain to visit me one day. Perhaps my daddy will take us hiking up the mountain for a picnic! Good-bye, Billy, and thanks for a wonderful day! Good-bye, Mrs. King and thanks again for the good lunch."

All three boys had a good laugh, for "Baby" started to go home with Jeff right then and there. Billy had to catch him and put his leash on!

GRANDMOTHER TO THE RESCUE.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Jimmy, you do that for Billy!" ordered the boys' mother, Mrs. Torrance. "You know he's too little."

With a resigned sigh, Jimmy left the the jigsaw puzzle in which he had been absorbed and carried Billy's box of toys to its place in the hall closet.

Mrs. Brown, their grandmother, said nothing, but she was doing a lot of thinking. She had come the week before to stay until the children's father returned home from the South Pacific, because Marian, her daughter, had planned to go to San Francisco to meet him. "On the whole," though Mrs. Brown, lovingly, "Marian is a good mother, but in some respects she doesn't seem as clear-sighted as I wish she were—in one respect, particularly. ‘Jimmy, you do that for Billy; he’s too little,’ is heard far too often.”

Billy was small for his age, and he looked delicate. But as she watched and tested, his grandmother came to the conclusion that this appearance was deceptive. He was, in fact, just as sturdy as Jimmy. He was a lovable little fellow, and his grandmother often had to hide a smile when she saw how cleverly he took advantage of a situation which his anxious mother had herself created.

This practice of overprotecting Billy was doing both boys an injustice, for it made unnecessary demands upon Jimmy’s free time and prevented Billy from learning to rely on himself. When anything that was in the least difficult to do presented itself, Billy expected someone else to do it for him.

Jimmy had a bicycle which he longed to ride to school. But no, he must go with Billy on the school bus! Billy was “too little” to go by himself, even though others of his age did so.

Then came the telegram that sent Marian to meet her returning husband. She would be gone for ten days, at least. Her absence was Mrs. Brown’s opportunity.

“Billy,” she said next Monday morning, “you are going to school on the bus without Jimmy this morning.”

“But I’m too little,” Billy protested, putting on his helpless expression. “I need Jimmy to go with me.”

“Does Martin’s brother go with Martin?” his grandmother asked. Martin was one of Billy’s playmates and of his own age.

“No-o,” hesitatingly.

“Does anyone go with Nancy or Mary Ellen?—and they’re girls,” went on Mrs. Brown relentlessly.

“N-o.”

“Then, why can’t you go alone? You wouldn’t want Daddy to think you’re a baby, would you?”

“I am not a baby!”

“Well then? There’s Martin now,” responded his grandmother.

“Hey, Martin! Wait for me!” called Billy, running out to him.

Billy found he enjoyed traveling by bus on his own responsibility and needed no more urging. So after that Jimmy was free to ride his cherished “bike” to school each pleasant morning.

At every opportunity his grandmother persuaded Billy to try to do things for himself—things that really were within his capabilities. Then she praised him; not overmuch, however. Sometimes she merely nodded, but in a way that he understood. It seemed to her that her little grandson grew noticeably in stature during the two weeks before his father and mother reached home.

Later, Mrs. Brown had a frank talk with her daughter and made her see how she had been crippling Billy’s development by making things too easy for him, thereby depriving him of learning self-reliance.

“I see your point, Mother,” said Marian with a rueful smile. “And I see the difference in Billy, too. Subconsciously, I must have been trying to keep Billy my baby. Thanks, Mom.”

DO DOGS GO TO HEAVEN?

home that doesn’t have to work for his living. The horse must pull the plow, the cow must give milk, the cat must catch mice, but the dog can smile, wag his tail and get anything he wants.

The dog may not have a soul such as you and I have, but he has a sense of fidelity, which, at times, seems to serve a better purpose than we often manifest. This story is told by Rev. Louie D. Newton.

“In a certain well-known farming neighborhood in Middle Georgia they were having a revival meeting in August, and a visiting minister, a city-dweller was much disturbed when a bird-dog walked down the aisle and over to the Amen corner, looked all around, crawled under the bench, lay down and went to sleep.

“After the service the visiting minister courteously rebuked the minister for not putting the dog out. ‘Why, sir,’ explained the pastor, ‘you don’t understand. That dog’s owner is chairman of our Board of Deacons. The good deacon is quite ill. The dog saw the people coming to church, and having mourned for his master since the day he saw them take him away to the hospital, he seems to think maybe he might find him here where so often they had come together. Put him out? Hardly! Our people would not stand for it. That dog belongs to this church. He attends more regularly than some other members do.’”

It was fine that that dog should identify his master with his master’s church. Do our friends think of us in that connection? I like that story. I believe that dog would feel perfectly at home in Heaven, and thoroughly enjoy the singing of the heavenly choir. Will our children and friends think first of us when we are gone because of our faithfulness to the church. Wouldn’t that be fine? Give us more men like this good deacon and more dogs like the faithful pointer and we’ll have a country so fortified in Christian teaching that we’ll need to have no fear of invasion from any quarter.

It is said that no boy’s life is complete without a dog, and no dog’s life is complete without a boy. I thoroughly agree. “Ole Pup” and I grew up together. We were bosom companions. We drove the cows to pasture together in the morning, and we brought them home in the evening. We hunted rabbits together in the fall. We caught moles in the cornfield in the summer, and rats in the barn on rainy days. He would, I’m sure, have given his life for me, and I suspect I would have done the same thing for him. I’m glad “Ole Pup” died after I went away to college. Had I been home somehow I think there would have been a respectable burial and may be there might have been a teardrop on the grave.

There is no record to show how Noah and his family spent their spare time on the Ark—if there was much spare time. Caring for that many animals was enough to keep eight people busy. Somehow, I think the two dogs were more popular than the other animals and I daresay they had the run of the ship.

Herbert Payson Terhune who lives today in the memory of all dog lovers because of the heart-touching stories he wrote tells of “Sunnybrook Bobby” the auburn-snow collie which he chose from a litter of eight when they were five months old. He claimed that Bobby had a great deal more common sense than some people, and a memory that never failed. He was trained to understand what was said to him, and his obedience was cheerful. That’s more than could be said of some of us fifty or sixty years ago.

Someone said once that the more he saw of some people the more he loved his dog.

To say the least they deserve our best consideration and if some day I meet “Ole Pup” again, I’ll be glad and so will he.

ENDURING CONTRIBUTION OF THE NATION.

LESSON XIII—JUNE 29, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: He (God) will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths.—Isaiah 2:3.

LESSON: II Chronicles 5-6; Psalm 119:916; 105-112; Isaiah 2:1-5; Micah 6.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 13: 1-8.

For Our Instruction.

As we come to the close of these lessons on the history of Israel and Judah, it is well to remember that whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our instruction. The writers of this history did not moralize. They simply wrote down under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit the story in outline of the life of the nation, its ups and downs, its highlights and shadows, its goodness and its wickedness, its strength and its weaknesses, its walk and its wanderings, its successes and its failures. They wrote down the story of the leaders of the nation, their follies, their sins, their failures, as well as their merits and achievements. They did not pull their punches, they called a spade a spade. It was honest reporting and straightforward journalism. These things therefore have meaning for us. Here written out in large and living letters is the story of human sin, of divine long-suffering, of ultimate judgment. Let men and nations that read take heed how they read and what they do.

The Word As Revelation.

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my pathway." "The entrance of thy word giveth light." "The word of God is quick and powerful . . . and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Sincere Bible reading is salutary and revealing. The Book is a great mirror in which all the foibles and follies of human nature stand out in full relief. The writer was sitting with a group of young people on the beach one night when a naval ship some distance off the shore turned its powerful searchlight on the shore line. He still remembers how everything along the beach stood out in sharp relief in the light of that searching, stabbing light. Even the nails in the rough wooden cottages back of the group showed up in sharp detail. All the hidden things of life stand thus revealed in the light of God's Word. In its light the soul stands naked and all the hidden things are made clear.

The Progressive Discovery of God.

God's people did not always know Him as the universal Father. Indeed one of the most rewarding and interesting studies that one can make is to trace out the discovery of God by His people as revealed in the Old Testament, and as consummated in the New Testament. Isaiah's eloquent and lofty conception of God as embodied in today's lesson came as the climax of a long process of discovery and revealing—revealing on the part of God, discovery on the part of man. At first Jehovah was the God of the tribe and the clan and was associated with local shrines and places. Gradually and even painfully slowly His people got an enlarged conception of Him. They discovered that He loved the nation, that He was the God of all nations, that he loved all nations and all peoples, and that He sought to save them at the cost of suffering and sacrifice. It was Isaiah who brought this idea of God to its highest and universal state. His prophecies have as their central thesis the fact that God is the God of all peoples and the only God, and that He suffers and sacrifices in order to fulfill His redeeming work.

Out of Jerusalem.

In symbolic form the prophets say that the word of the Lord shall go forth out of Jerusalem, and that from it shall go forth the law. It found literal fulfilment. Out of Zion did come forth the law. Out of Judaism came the seed-bed and the rootage of the New Testament. Jerusalem, in the sense of the Jewish nation and religion gave us our New Testament. Jerusalem in the sense of the Jews gave us all our New Testament, with the possible exception of two books. Luke and Acts, according to many scholars were written by Luke, a Gentile, instead of a Jew. And out of the Jewish nation came our Saviour himself. It is only as nations "go up to Jerusalem" in the sense that they go to Judaism and Christianity, that they can learn how to live in security and peace.

Swords Into Plowshares.

Visionary say that skeptics and cynics. Impractical say the so-called and self-styled realists. The time will never come when the nations will do this, beat swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. But come it will in God's good time. He shall not fail nor be discouraged until he sees the travail of his soul and is satisfied. The nations had better learn how to do it—to convert the instruments of war into the instruments of peace. For instance scientists had better use atomic power for doing the world's work than to turn it into destructive channels. The knowledge acquired concerning biological warfare had better be devoted to destroying the pests of mankind than in destroying mankind. And the tendency is along this line. The future belongs to the arts of peace. The Lamb is making war with the Lion, and it seems like an unequal fight, but the Lamb will win. Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth. It takes a great faith to believe that, but our faith is rooted in the Son of God himself.

True Religion.

The passage from Micah is superb. The inspired writer dramatizes it as a stupendous court scene. Jehovah the Judge and Father of the nation summons the people to trial. The mountains and the hills are summoned as witnesses. Then in impassioned oratory God presents his case. He tells how He had a great care for His people, how He brought them out of the land of Egypt and redeemed them out of the house of bondage. He reminds them of how He rescued them from the snares of wily adversaries. In all his ways He had dealt faithfully and lovingly with them. And with what results? The people had denied His leadership and spurned His love. But what, ask they, shall they do? Is religion a matter of offering burnt offerings and sacrifices, even in generous numbers and in lavish measure? Is the highest expression of sacrifice and the heart of religion the offering of one's first-born for one's sin? Ah, no, say this man of God in words that mark the high peak of ethical religion in the Old Testament. What doth Jehovah require of thee? "He hath showed thee what is good" . . . it is to do justly, to live by enlightened justice, to love mercy, beyond cold calculating justice, and to walk humbly with thy God—here is the answer to the question as to what Jehovah requires of us. This is more than all burnt offering and sacrifice.

A PROVOKING COMMUNITY.

can we stir up one another to love? In no other way than this, that we ourselves show love to him in whom we wish to excite love. Love, in human beings, is always a response. In the penitent sinner, it is the response he makes to God's grace. In the Christian, love is the response he makes to God's continuing love and guidance. In the human ties of brotherhood, love is the response awakened in a person when he comes in contact with a loving brother. Love is a response—made to love! So, if you would provoke your brother to love, let him find hearty, brotherly love in you. Lead him also to knowledge and experience of God's love, which will call from him that same loving response that it calls from you!

The implications of that are astounding. It means that, in a sense, we are to be to others what Jesus Christ was. Oh, my reverence for Christ makes me pause before I say it, even though others have said it often: "To be a Christian is to be a Christ to others!" Luther knew that, and said it often. And Jesus said it long before Luther. He turned to His disciples and said: "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." And Paul put it in a beautiful figure, "We are the body of Christ." We are the active agents through whom Christ lives and expresses Himself, here, and now!

Sometimes a new convert to Christianity, spirit all aflame with his new-found life, has something very meaningful to share with other Christians that illumines the meaning of their own lives. I think that is the case with these words of a young Chinese convert, later to be Dr. Kwen Tai, a devoted servant of Christ. He said, "Your function as an agent of salvation in relation to your neighbor can be fulfilled only when you first ask the question, 'What does this man need to be saved from?' 'What are his needs, and what have I to offer to meet them?' . . . This is the reason there is no such a thing as a general program. Each individual has his own problems, difficulties, and needs—and you must deal with them accordingly. And, to lack this quality of life, this sense of being called to be an agent of salvation, is to be no longer a Christian, even though you belong to a church! . . . The Church ought to be a company of Christ-like souls, souls who share in the saving task of a living Saviour." . . . I don't know how many years ago Dr. Tai said that. When I ran across his words I was thankful that a modern convert to Christianity had discovered what the Early Church knew, and lived. I'm even more thankful that he's not alone in that discovery. The awakened world Church, in every land today, knows now that the Church must be the community of souls who bring men's lives into touch with God's redeeming love.

What about those things that are caused by the faults of others—by their wrong ways of acting toward us and others? Certain such people need to be provoked to love, aroused to love. Selfish acting, thoughtless acting, would be brought a minimum, were we to provoke such people to love! And, what about ourselves? Were some one of our Christian brethren to help us to increase the love in our hearts, then our complaining and resentment would be at a minimum; for love is patient, long-suffering, kind, and beareth all things! So it works, in church and in community. An increase in love and good works is the only thing that will finally bring the transformation this old world needs. I think all of us must admit that we should not have had so much to complain of as undeniably there has been in the past, if there had been found among us a greater abundance of love and good works. I'm convinced that if these two things, love and good works, dwell in us in abundance, and if we seek earnestly to provoke that same abundance in others, not only shall we be stronger personalities and exert a good influence in all of our relationships, but we would accomplish great things for God in the way of making possible the transformation of others! Therefore, ours is the task of promoting these two things, love and good works. And, as surely as they are provoked in others, by us, just so surely will the things we have to complain about be removed, and just so surely shall we attain that which we wish for our church, and our community! Let us then lay to heart these words of Scripture. Let us be agreed in resolving that, as the Lord has drawn us together, we will all of us consider each other—to provoke unto love and to good works. Then, and only then, shall we be more worthy followers of Him who through His life and in His death supplied the strongest stimulus to love and good works! His is the power to awaken in us and strengthen in us such a love as we read about in our Corinthian reading. His Spirit is our ever-present Guide, so that we need never lack for enlightenment as to what good works we are to do, that men, seeing our good works, might give glory to God, our Father. So will our lives be Christian. So shall ours be a Christian Church!

struggle. Management and labor are forming country-wide battle lines. Crime vies with juvenile delinquency for public attention."

The critical needs of mankind, the fact that Christians believe that in Christ they have the Way to meet those needs and the new techniques making possible speedy change demand that the Christians of the world work harder, faster, and more effectively than ever before. They must embody the love of God in lives of Christian action as well as proclaim Him with all the newest techniques for conveying ideas.

"Speech may sometimes do harm; but so may silence, and a worse harm at that. No offered insult ever caused so deep a wound as a tenderness expected and withheld; and no spoken indiscretion was ever so bitterly regretted as the words that one did speak."—Jan Struther, "A Pocketful of Pebbles."

No international Eighteenth Amendment will get rid of war or the instruments of war until civilization finds a way for accomplishing what war has done in the past. Simply to prohibit war is not going to get rid of it. Wars must be anticipated and the causes got rid of by a readiness to accept peaceful means of settlement.—Rr. James T. Shotwell.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage is always glad to have visitors. We feel that more the people visit the orphanage and see it first hand, the more interested they become. We hope that more will visit us during the summer. Then after looking over the plant, we will appreciate any constructive criticism they have to make.

Sometime ago we had a large group of visitors from Hines Chapel Church to visit the orphanage. We were delighted to take them through the buildings and also the dairy barn. It was milking time and they had an opportunity to see how the milk is handled from the time it leaves the cow until it is stored in the cooling tank. A few days ago we received the following letter which we appreciated very much. We quote:

June 8, 1947.

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"I would just like to drop you a few lines and tell you how much our group from Hine's Chapel Society enjoyed the visit to the orphanage on a Sunday afternoon recently.

"It would be very hard to tell what impressed us most, or what particular part of the visit was most enjoyable. Personally, I was very much impressed with the marked improvement in the appearance of the buildings, inside and out, since last I visited the orphanage a few years back. What a pleasure it would be to prepare a meal in the spic and span kitchens, that have nice new cabinets and the wonderful screen porches nearby that are such an ideal place for the preparation of foods.

"Oh, my! What a picturesque sight the Old Building is with its nice new dress of white, nestling back among the trees. My heart was filled with mingled emotions of happiness, pride, and gratitude as I looked upon this building. Happiness, because those that live within her walls seem happy; pride, because it is ours; and gratitude, because it has stood there through all these years as a reminder of the faithfulness of those gone before, and it still stands as a challenge to us to do our best in helping to make up to those little ones some of the better things they would otherwise miss.

"As I live on the farm myself and am very fond of cows, I especially enjoyed the visit to the dairy barn. The barn was nice and clean, the cows were sleek and and in good shape, and the milk is handled so efficiently from the time it leaves the cow until it is prepared for consumption. We were there at milking time and saw this for ourselves. I certainly would not mind using milk from the orphanage dairy.

"Another thing that impressed me very much was the courteousness of the children. They seemed anxious to make our visit a pleasant one, and they were nice to my two small children. They carried them to the small tent on the campus to see the pups, and on to the cellar to visit the mother cat and her family. I was so glad to find that the children were allowed to have their pets, which I think makes their living quarters so homelike.

"Mr. Johnston, you are heading an institution that I think is indeed worthy of the support of the churches of the Southern Convention.

"May God bless you and encourage your heart as you meet with the many problems I am sure come your way.

Sincerely,

Mrs. R. W. Iseley."

THE FORCE AND THE FIELD.

So it is today: the Church still possesses a hidden social potency. Russia has known that: Germany has known that—else why should they have been so concerned with the Church, the one to outlaw it, the other to enthrall it? When there is a live God and not a dead one, worshiped in the Church, the Church becomes a seed-bed of change and growth in the community. No one can let his mind entertain the thought of the gracious God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ and his own God and Father without experiencing a greatening effect—and this he conveys to the society in which he lives, in the Orient, in the Occident, everywhere.

EVANGELICAL AND REFORMED CHURCH JOINS JOINT RELIGIOUS RADIO COMMITTEE.

The Joint Religious Radio Committee, by unanimous vote, has elected the Evangelical and Reformed Church to membership. This is the fifth denomination now cooperating through the Joint Religious Radio Committee, the others being the Congregational Christian Churches, The Methodist Church, Presbyterian USA Church, and United Church of Canada.

Dr. J. N. LeVan, Director of United Promotion, was elected to membership on the Joint Religious Radio Committee as a representative of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

CWS SPONSORS EUROPEAN RECORDING TEAM'S TOUR.

American Protestants will soon be listening to a religious radio series which will highlight what their dollars and cents are accomplishing in the rehabilitation of Europe. Church World Service is sponsoring a three month tour of Europe's war devastated areas to be made by Frank Papp, NBC production director and producer of "The Eternal Light." NBC has granted a three-month leave of absence to Papp to make the 17-country visit, and is paying his salary as a contribution to the church relief work.

Accompanying Papp is Noel Warwick, engineer for NBC's radio recording division. Warwick, not included in the original plan for the tour, heard of the nature and purpose of the assignment, and has offered his services free of charge as engineer for the project.

Interviews with people in displaced persons camps, hospitals, child feeding centers, theological seminaries, and churches will be conducted and recorded on tape for later inclusion in fifteen-minute recorded programs. Material gathered for the series will be produced by the Joint Religious Radio Committee into documentary, interview, and dramatic programs. It is expected that over 400 United States stations will broadcast the series which will be ready in the late fall.

Countries to be visited by Papp and Warwick are England, Holland, France, Belgium, Germany, Austria, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Switzerland, Italy, Greece, Yugoslavia, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and Finland. Robert Root of the World Council of Churches will guide the recording team on its European tour.

In Memoriam

JOHNSON.

The Congregational Christian Temple of Norfolk suffered the loss of a most loyal member in the death of Alexander Morgan Johnson. Born in Southampton County on September 4, 1862, he was the oldest active member. His relationship with the church began with the memorial Christian Temple and continued with the Third Christian Church of which he was a charter member, and when these churches merged to form the Christian Temple, he joined the unified church and remained a faithful member until the day of his death, April 21, 1947.

For many years, Mr. Johnson served the church as deacon, on the Official Board, and on numerous committees. But his most significant contribution to the total life of the church lay in his regular use of the House of God as a place of worship. He knew what it was to worship the Lord in the beauty of His sanctuary, and from that steady practice came his serenity of spirit and his peace and usefulness.

By vote of the Official Board, it is resolved:

1. That we record our sincere appreciation of his character and services, of his devotion to the church as a place of worship, of his service rendered without counting the cost of time and labor, of his fine generosity to worthy causes, of his persistent good will and friendliness, and of his genuine loyalty to Christ and His Kingdom.

2. That we extend our deepest sympathy to his widow and children, and our assurance that we rejoice with them in the remembrance of a life that was beautiful, useful and happy.

PULLEY.

Mrs. Sallie Ruth Pulley of Smithfield, Va., but a native of Southampton County and a life-long member of "Johnson's Grove" Christian Church (named for her maternal grandfather) passed away in Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va., February 22, 1947.

Born September 10, 1887, her life was one of forbearance and patience. She leaves to mourn her loss the following children: Leslie W. Pulley, Franklin, Va.; Rowland L. Pulley, Stuarts Draft, Va.; Mills Robert Pulley, Jr., Smithfield, Va.; Mrs. Alfred M. Luttrell, Charlottesville, Va.; Mrs. Lee Thomas Norfleet, Smithfield, Va.; Mrs. Dee Witt Taylor, Baltimore, Md.; Mrs. James W. Thacker, Smithfield, Va.; Mrs. Richard C. Nelms, Suffolk, Va.; Mrs. Percy L. Hundley, Smithfield, Va. Her husband preceded her to the grave nearly two years ago, and three children several years back.

Funeral services were conducted at Oakland Christian Church (where several of her children belong) by Dr. I. W. Johnson and Rev. R. E. Brittle, assisted by Rev. J. W. Newman of Bennis M. E. Church.

There was a large gathering of friends and many floral tribute (a few less than fifty), which covered the entire family plot. She was laid to rest in Poplar Spring Cemetery in Franklin, Va.

Mrs. MARGUERITE PULLEY.

BROWN.

herd Brown whom God called to her eternal rest April 7, 1947. She was an active and loyal member of Apples Chapel Congregational Christian Church and Sunday school.

We, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society, desire to express our appreciation of her life. Being a charter member of our society she was eager to do her very best to promote the work of the society and church.

She was a loving wife and mother, a kind neighbor and friend, one who was never too busy to help someone in sickness or need. Her many friends through the years have been impressed with her cheerfulness, her sweet smile so expressive of a radiant spirit within and her great faith in prayer. Her life was an inspiration to all.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That while we shall miss her in the sweet fellowship of our work together, we will always cherish the memory of her friendship and faithful service.

2. That to her loved ones we extend our deepest sympathy in the name of our Lord who is the Resurrection and the Life and will comfort them in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family and a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

DRAKE.

In memory of Beverly Drake, a beloved teacher of the primary class of Union (Southampton) Christian Church, who passed away April 3, 1947.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That even though he was confined to his home on account of ill health for the past year, we will always cherish his memory and especially his great love for children.

2. That we carry on his outstanding interest in the church and community such as was shown when he devoted his time and talent to rebuilding Union Church in 1936.

3. That we extend to his wife and loved ones our heartfelt sympathy and prayers and be consoled by the thought that our loss was his eternal gain.

5. That we send a copy of these to "The Christian Sun" for publication, keep a copy for the records of the church and give a copy to his wife as a sacred keepsake.

RUMELEY.

On November 19, 1946, God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to call from our midst Miss Callie Irene Rumley. She was a member of Apples Chapel Congregational Christian Church. She was a devoted daughter and sister. She will be greatly missed in her home and community.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to our Father's will who doeth all things well.

2. That we extend our sincere sympathy to her family and pray God's blessing on them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family and a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

DANIEL.

William S. Daniel was born in Granville County, N. C., September 8, 1871, and departed this life May 4, 1947. He was the son of the late Morris and Emily Watkins Daniel. In his death the community has lost a useful citizen and Union Church a most faithful member.

On November 20 he married Miss Mollie Levester who survives him together with seven children and two grandchildren. The children are William Morris, Misses Frances and Marguerite Daniel of Virgilina, Va.; Richard Levester of Jacksonville, N. C.; John Vincent of Alexandria, Va.; Mrs. M. K. McKenzie of Durham, N. C., and Edwin Lewis of Washington, D. C. The grandchildren are David John Daniel and Dana Jane McKenzie.

The funeral was at Union Church, Virgilina on May 5, conducted by the pastor, M. W. Andes, assisted by E. R. Harris and the writer. The large number of people in attendance and the numerous beautiful floral offerings evidenced the high esteem in which the deceased, who had lived such a useful life, was held.

C. E. NEWMAN.

PILAND.

On April 16, 1947, God in His infinite wisdom and love called home Mrs. Ida Holland Piland. She was a member of the Bethlehem Christian Church, Missionary and Ladies' Aid Societies. Her loyalty, devotion and generosity will ever be remembered among her many friends. She leaves to mourn her going ten children, twenty-four grandchildren, three great-grandchildren, four sister, one brother and a host of friends.

Be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.

2. That we, as Christians, emulate her Christian spirit, her sweet disposition and her trust in the Heavenly Father's care.

3. That we extend to her family and loved ones our sincere and heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the all-wise God who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

4. That a copy of these resolutions be mailed to the family, "The Christian Sun" and a copy placed on the records of the Ladies Aid Society.

SMITH.

John Thomas Smith passed to his reward April 18, 1947, after a long illness. He was a member of the Bethlehem Christian Church for over a half century. He was faithful to his church until his health failed.

Be it resolved:

1. That our deepest sympathy be extended to the family.

2. That we commend them to the care of the loving Heavenly Father who comforts and gives strength to all who come to him.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be mailed to the family and a copy to his church and "The Christian Sun."

WHAT OF UNITY?

By HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

The world is certainly a mess, and whether or not we like to face the fact, religion helps to make it so. It is not simply aggressive nationalism, imperialism, militarism, racial prejudice and all other ungodly forces that divide us, but religion, too. From India, where Hindus and Moslems fight in the streets, to almost-any community one lights on, religious differences and prejudices set men at odds. . . .

The contrast today between the greatness of Christ Himself and the littleness of the churches supposed to represent Him is shocking. As in His earthly ministry He stood out too big—much too big—for His contemporaries, with their legalisms, ritualisms and religious conventionalities, so now the impression made by Christ Himself of size and range, of universality of outlook and spirit, so that He needs the whole world to operate in and the whole world needs Him, stands in sharp and shameful contrast with the impressions which the churches make. I speak from inside the church, loving it, after a lifetime of ministry believing in it and loyal to it, but deeply troubled by its trivialities, its divisive littleness its emphasis on small peculiarities that split and dis sever the world it was meant to unify. To have a Master and Lord Who impresses even unbelievers with His universal range and sweep, so that H. G. Wells said, "His is easily the dominant figure in history," and then to have churches, supposed to represent Him, which impress even believers as much too petty and small-minded to meet the world's need, is indeed a tragedy. . . .

The profoundest elements in Christianity, as in any religion, strike the universal note. It is utterly unrealistic to minimize the differences between the world's great faiths; they are real and critical; but when Jesus announces His profoundest insights, as for example when He describes prayer as solitary communion with the unseen Spirit, a Hindu answers, "I make prayer mine inmost friend," and a Moslem says, "Allah is nearer to you than the great vein of your neck." C. F. Andrews, a very influential missionary in India, was working on this basis when he said, concerning his approach to the Indian people: "I always assume that they are Christian; and after I have talked with them for a while I sometimes see the light of Christ in their eyes. . . ."

Our shame as Christians is that in the Gospel committed to our care there is this breadth, length, depth, and height, and that we have so shifted our emphasis from that to our local peculiarities that we have become sectarian, partisan, provincial, cooped up in the confines of our isolated cultures. . . .

Our sectarian peculiarities have their uses. The separate churches have performed an important function in history, representing minority convictions which the majority was denying or neglecting, and, often with creative vitality, playing the part of trail blazers and pioneers. Today, however, that emphasis is not enough. We are living in one world—one world, not only for the nations, but for religion, too. To have religion go on as one of the most estranging and alienating forces on earth, as it is now, so that even in common speech religious prejudice is paired with racial prejudice as a major curse of mankind, will never do. "New occasions teach new duties," and our new era with desperate urgency calls for a kind of religion that will make for unity, mutual understanding, inclusiveness and brotherhood.

What that involves a great Protestant, Bossuet, once put into a ringing phrase: "Speak to me only of necessary truths." Let the various churches and religions answer that call, and our children might have some chance of living in a world where spiritual community undergirds the endeavors after international peace. So may God grant!

NEWS AND VIEWS

Rev. Duane Vore, an Elon graduate, has left the Army Chaplaincy for the Wallin Congregational Church of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

The Forsyth-Carroll Pilgrim Fellowship met Sunday, June 22, at Elk Spur Church. "Making Your Job Christian" was the theme of the meeting.

The Rosemont Christian, Portlock Methodist and Raleigh Heights Baptist Churches held a union Vacation Bible School the week of June 15.

After eleven years of ministry in St. Petersburg, Florida, Dr. John P. Jockinsen has resigned and accepted a call to the First Union Church of Quincy, Ill.

The Afro-Christian Convention met recently at St. Mark Church in Berkeley. The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Convention met concurrently at New Hope Church in Berkley, Va. Dr. Andrew Vance McCracken was the guest speaker.

First Church in St. Petersburg, Florida, has extended a call to the Rev. Rankin L. Shrewsbury to be its Minister of Youth, undertaken the full-time support of a native Filipino Moderator, and authorized the installation of a new chancel.

Dr. H. S. Hardecastle who served as a member of the teaching staff at the Valley Young People's Summer Camp at Fort Powell, near Woodstock, the week of June 23-28, took with him to camp five young men from Eastern Virginia: Frank Cannon, Jr., Franklin Foster, Holland Taylor, Thomas Savage and Robert Whitley.

The nineteenth anniversary of the Hopewell Church was observed last Sunday. Rev. D. D. Nash brought the morning sermon, and Rev. O. D. Poythress, president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, preached in the afternoon. Revs. A. P. Slabey and R. L. House brought greetings. There were sixteen charter members present. The congregation looks forward with confidence and enthusiasm to the future.

From Dick Jackson, in Shaowu, comes the following note: "On last Sunday afternoon (May 11) there was held in our home the first meeting of the young people's fellowship. They plan to meet each Sunday from now on with Bible study, worship and fellowship. We taught them the game, "Bird, Beast or Fish," and listened to our radio. Altogether, there were sixteen, but it will probably be doubled this week."

SUMMER SCHEDULE AT RICHMOND.

The Rev. Robert Lee House is attending the Pastors' School in Deering, New Hampshire. During his absence the Richmond pulpit will be filled by the following ministers: June 29—Rev. Ira S. Harrell of Richmond; July 6—Rev. J. Howard Smith of Yale Divinity School; July 13—Rev. R. J. Castleberry, a Baptist minister who grew up in Martha's Chapel Christian Church; July 20—Rev. M. A. Carson of Portsmouth.

SECOND CHURCH, NORFOLK.

The pastor of the Second Congregational Christian Church, J. F. Morgan, was presented with a lovely Hamilton watch from members and friends of his church, as a birthday gift, on Sunday, June 15th. Mr. Morgan was not only surprised, but was gratefully delighted with this lovely gift, and is most grateful for this expression of appreciation from the friends of his church.

This church has also recently built beautiful brick steps at the parsonage of the church, which has added much to the convenience, and also beauty of the pastor's home.

The Sunday evening service at this church, now being composed of mostly singing, and a short sermon, are growing in interest, and attendance.

CONGREGATIONAL MINISTER BROADCASTS.

The Rev. Dr. Frederick K. Stamm, pastor of Chicago's First Congregational Church, will speak on NBC's "Highlights of the Bible" program (Sundays, 10:00 to 10:30 a. m., EDT) from NBC's New York studios during July.

On July 6, Dr. Stamm will speak on the subject, "Pitch Your Tent and Build an Altar." "The Healing Cross" will be his topic July 13, "Salting the Community" July 20, and "The Lighted Lustre" July 27.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AND PASTOR'S SCHOOL.

While there will be other accounts written for THE CHRISTIAN SUN concerning the School of Missions and Pastors' School held at Elon College June 16-20, I wish to add my word of gratitude for the success of the venture. The attendance was good—approximately 175 women and pastors. (We regretted that more of our pastors did not come to share the inspiration, fellowship, and instruction.) The inspiring addresses of Dr. Ferris Reynolds, Miss Ruth Seabury, Dr. Martin L. Goslin, and the leadership of Mrs. E. E. McClintock, Mrs. F. C. Lester, Mrs. R. A. Whitten, Mrs. E. H. Rainey, Miss Grace Storms, and others were really outstanding. There was instruction, information, fellowship, inspiration, and fun for all who attended. It is gratifying that we have resumed the School of Missions, and the addition of the Pastors' School adds significance to this assembly. It is to be an annual assembly. The strength of the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist Churches in our midst is due in no small degree to successful and continuous summer assemblies. They have grown into great convocations, reaching vast numbers. It may seem that our School of Missions and Pastors' School are not of proportions as similar assemblies of other denominations. Ours can be—if we will support the program by our attendance and interest. One will venture to say that the leadership available to us this year and in the years to come with the Congregational Christian fellowship was and can be just as high type as that of any denomination. Let us put the Elon assembly in 1948 on our calendar now.

The Woman's Convention sessions in connection with the School of Missions was of the same high order as the Convention has been in former years. Our women are leading the way.

Special credit for the success of the School of Missions and Pastors' School, and the Woman's Convention, should go to Mrs. Graham Rowland Wisseman, president, and Mrs. L. E. Smith, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, and others who spend endless hours preparing the program and attending to many details.

1947 RURAL MINISTERS SUMMER SCHOOL PROGRAM FEATURES KOLB.

The Virginia Summer School for Rural Ministers will be held at VPI July 14 to 18. The program begins Monday night and ends Friday noon, making it possible for men to come between Sundays without missing a service at home.

"The program will be especially good this year," says B. L. Hummel, rural sociologist for the Agricultural Extension Service, and head of the Rural Church Department of the Virginia Council of Churches. "We have been trying for several years to get Dr. J. H. Kolb of the University of Wisconsin for our school. This year we have succeeded. He is head of the Department of Rural Sociology and one of the best qualified men in the United States to discuss the place of the church in the rural community as it is today."

Those who attended last year were greatly impressed by Dr. William F. Dunkle, minister of Barton Heights Methodist Church in Richmond. This year Dr. Dunkle is coming back with a new series of lectures on the preparation and delivery of sermons in rural churches. "This series promises to be one of the most challenging and helpful that we have had in our nearly twenty years of pastors' schools," says Hummel.

"This summer school has always been noted for its informality and good fellowship. Men of all denominations come from all over Virginia and from neighboring states. There is always great interest in the discussion periods."

Four morning periods have been set aside for panel discussions in which twenty or more men from the rural field will join with specialists and administrators in a thorough-

DEO VOLENTE.

It is said that a group of ministers once approached the President of the United States and urged prompt action on a political measure. He replied in these words: "I am approached with the most opposite opinions and advice and by religious men who are certain they represent the Divine will. . . . I hope it will not be irreverent in me to say that if it be probable that God would reveal His will to others, on a point so closely connected with my duty; it might be supposed that He would reveal it to me."

That statement, attributed to Abraham Lincoln, poses one of the most profound religious problems of all ages—namely, What is God's will? Basic to any adequate answer to this question is the conviction that God is, that God has a will and that His will has been revealed. This is the human prerequisite of divine revelation. Christians in all ages have had the conviction, as William E. Park has stated it, "That God has not left them in the dark concerning the nature and demands of His righteous will, but has in Jesus Christ revealed the standards and the principles which should govern the conduct of those who desire that God's will should be done on earth as it is in heaven."

The Bible, the revelation of God's will, was not written by young up-starts, nor was it written at the conclusion of a committee meeting. Years of profound study and experience preceded the writing in almost every instance. Is it to be expected that God will reveal his will in an easy, flippant manner today? The great tenets of Christian revelation were subjected to constant re-examination. It is so easy to be dogmatic, about God's will! Dr. George A. Buttrick once made this sobering statement: "The world has a just quarrel with a church which has often tried to equate its conscience with heaven's whole light. The world has known well that some brands of church conscience have been far from heaven blest."

Kirby Page insists that a man must earn the right to learn the will of God. He says: "An individual must train himself until his mind and his emotions, his conscience and his will are disciplined and under control. Not by unconcern and slothfulness, not by cynicism and flippancy, not by greed and lust, not by fear and despair, not by disobedience and defiance: not in these can a person discover and do the will of God. The ways in which we find out what God wants us to do include these: dominant desire, eager obedience, expectant faith, fellowship and communion, prolonged reflection upon the process of history, sustained study of the long record of high spiritual experience, and especially through the unique revelation in Jesus Christ."

God's will should still be our chief concern. It is not only true, as Dante suggested, that "In His will is our peace," but it is also true that in His will is our safety. "God willing," our fathers were wont to say. The saying prefaced every major decision and promise.

God's will is neither static nor dormant. The God of all great volition is very much alive. There are so many things which challenge God's will. The great drama of life is the contest between ill-will and God's will. St. John, the author of Revelation, saw this drama vividly. He not only saw the will of God reflected in history, he saw it forecast in future events, climaxed by a triumphant emergence when "the Kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ: and he shall reign for ever and ever."

THE MINISTER OPENS HIS MAIL

Never lose the thrill of opening the morning mail! There was a time when letters were few and far between. Usually they carried bad news. With the advent of the "Penny Post," folks got the writing habit and began to exchange letters, chiefly for the novelty of writing and receiving. Times have changed, and today few families fail to receive bountifully.

So we open the mail! First we sort the advertising and confine most of it to the basket. Books, clothing, greasing service and bargain ties, are the repeaters. The loan companies are insistent that we should mortgage the car so our little bills can be paid off, and we can then worry about a bill with interest rather than a lot of little bills without interest. Here is a letter from someone, in which he wants advice on a problem. Another is a "thank-you" for some service performed and forgotten. Not the least of the thrill are the "crank" letters, with their warnings of impending doom. As they are unsigned they cannot be answered, and we wonder what thrill the writer can have inasmuch as he knows not their effect. The lunatic fringe contains those Bible students possessed with special revelation. They have their special ways and days on which to worship, and around their letters are scribbled scripture texts having little reference to us. We save the best letters until last, as these are the contacts with a world of friends and their writings bring back memories. The morning mail is a great experience.

We might say something of the correspondents writting from distant parts, begging that we send them a dollar to speed them on their way to the old homestead. When last we saw them they called in person, and having begged shoes or shirt and a car ticket to the edge of town (for no man has successfully thumbed a street car), went on their way. Our suggestion that they hadn't left town since we last saw them under similar circumstances, resulted in our receiving picture postcards from all over, and if and when these knights of the road return, it will be hard to convince them they are not on our social list.

This article may not savor much of religion but it may convey some of the thrills of being a minister of a down-town church. Through the mail and over the desk is a panorama of the best and worst. Few problems arise among church people that they cannot handle themselves, and the extent of the ministry to those outside the church is often unrealized by those who make the church's ministry possible. We hope that we will never lose the thrill of the morning mail.—

Walter H. Stark.

America's Heritage of Faith

By LUTHER A. WEIGLE, Ph.D., D.D.*

An Address Delivered Before the Virginia Council of Churches, Thursday, February 6, 1947, at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Lynchburg, Va.

In 1913 Professor J. B. Bury of Cambridge University, in his History of Freedom of Thought, declared: "The struggle of reason against authority has ended in what now appears to be a decisive and permanent victory for liberty." But within a few months the first World War began. Bury's statement merely shows how mistaken a university professor can be. He was so obsessed by the idea that the church has opposed freedom of thought and speech that he failed to realize the possibility that the state might undertake the coercion of the human mind, and that the church and the forces of religious faith might stand on the side of freedom.

Yet this has happened. The tyranny of the totalitarian state has threatened to put an end to human freedom; and in many countries moral conscience and faith in God have inspired resistance to the forces that would enslave the human spirit.

The outstanding political issue of the present crisis in world history is also its outstanding spiritual issue. It may be stated very simply: Shall the Bill of Rights perish from the earth?

In these momentous days, we shall do well to read again the Bill of Rights enacted by the British Parliament in 1689, the Bill of Rights enacted by the Convention of Virginia in 1776, and the Bill of Rights contained in the first ten amendments to the Constitution of United States.

We too often forget, on both sides of the Atlantic, that the action of the thirteen colonies, in declaring their independence, was not a denial, but an affirmation of principles that they had learned as British citizens. It was not in abrogation, but in fulfillment, of the political heritage we hold in common.

And we too often forget that this heritage is not only political but religious. Our ideals of freedom spring from faith in God.

Professor Ralph Gabriel, undertaking an objective study of the course of American democratic thought since 1815, places at the foundation of the American democratic faith "a frank supernaturalism derived from Christianity." "The basic postulate of the democratic faith," he goes on to say, "affirmed that God, the creator of man, has also created a moral law for his government and has endowed him with a conscience with which to apprehend it. Underneath and supporting human society, as the basic rock supports the hills, is a moral order which is the abiding place of the eternal principles of truth and righteousness."

"Of the great principles upon which all society rests," said one of the greatest of American lawyers, Justice Joseph Story, in 1828, "some are of eternal obligation, and arise from our common dependence upon our Creator. Among these are the duty to justice, to love mercy, and to walk humbly before God." "The rights of conscience," he wrote in his Commentaries on the Constitution, "are beyond the just reach of human power. They are given by God, and cannot be encroached upon by human authority, without disobedience of the precepts of natural as well as revealed religion."

Of basic significance for American democracy were the issues and principles which emerged in England in the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries.

The sixteenth century brought the Bible in English to the common people. Beginning with the first of Tyndale's translations in 1524, there appeared in rapid succession Coverdale's Bible, the Great Bible, the Bishops' Bible, the Geneva Bible, the Catholic Bible, and finally the King James Bible in 1611. The effect of these translations was tremendous. Says Green in his Short History of the English People: "England became the people of a book, and that book was the Bible. . . . Everywhere its words kindled a startling enthusiasm. . . . Greater than its effect on literature or social phrase was the effect of the Bible on the character of the people. . . . The whole temper of the nation felt the change. A new conception of life and of man superseded the old."

In the seventeenth century this new conception of life and of man challenged the absolutism of the Stuart kings. That was the century of Charles I, the Long Parliament, Oliver Cromwell, the Revolution of 1688, and the Bill of Rights enacted in 1689. England teemed with political dissent and religious minorities; with Puritans, Presbyterians, Independents, Congregationalists, Baptists, and Quakers. It was the period that called forth the writings of John Milton and John Locke.

In the eighteenth century the principles set forth in the Bill of Rights were thought through and lived out on American soil, and they eventuated in our Declaration of Independence and the establishment of the United States of America.

Among many evidences of the place of religious faith in the American development of democracy I cite only one—that afforded by the sermons of the ministers of the Congregational churches in New England. Professor Alice M. Baldwin of Duke University has made a thorough and illuminating study of the sermons which were preached on the annual election day in each of the New England colonies, and this has been published under the title, The New England Clergy and the American Revolution. It shows that for more than one hundred and forty years the ministers of New England had been preaching doctrines with respect to the Sovereignty of God, the moral constitution which He ordained for the universe, the natural rights of man, and the nature and function of government, which are substantially the same as the principles of the Declaration of Independence. The authority which they most often quoted was of course the Bible; next to it, the works of John Locke.

It is often assumed that when the founding fathers of this nation spoke of the laws of nature or of natural rights they meant something atheistic and in opposition to revealed religion. But that was not the case. Nothing is more constant in these seventeenth and eighteenth century sermons than their assumption that the laws of nature are the laws of God, and that there can be no contradiction between God's will as re-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

June is the month of roses and of weddings. Four lovely couples of church youth have come into the Suffolk Church this month to plight their troth. One couple chose the Youth Chapel, another the main sanctuary, another the pastor's study, and still another the beautiful Staley Memorial Study. Christian youth, God bless them, and may they ever remain in love and happiness together. They have been asked by their pastor to remain faithful to the church, whether in Suffolk or elsewhere, the place matters little, the faithfulness matters much—very much indeed. Couples who attend church together, take part in its activities, help to run its programs, and share in its world vision, have a good chance of remaining happy in their lives together.

June is also the first summer month. Days often become hot. The lure of the lovely out-of-doors lays hold of our hearts; and roads, picnics, and the urge to get out from under the daily grind, beckon. But in it all we must not forget God. We must plan our church programs with that in mind. All of us are not away on vacation at the same time. Many of us can still follow the rule of church first, and unless we are unavoidably hindered from attending our Sunday schools, and our church worship services, let us faithfully do so. Our Sundays will slip into ways of worldliness all too fast at best. More and more places are finding ways of being open on Sunday; more and more beaches, and lakes, and resorts are looking for a Sunday day of gain. The cash register has begun to count on Sunday in many places as one of its best days. Let us pray that those who put the Lord first in their thinking, and planning, whether at home, or church, or elsewhere, will long be in the majority in our fair land. Let us help to answer our prayers along that line by attending church as nearly every Sunday as it is possible throughout the whole summer.

At the beginning of the recent war we were advised to place a bucket of sand in our attics. Better now that the war is over that we place a bucket of sanity in our souls. A bucket of Constancy in worship, faithfulness in daily living, carefulness in the training of tomorrow's citizens, and an humble shouldering of our responsibilities and duties today may prevent another world war. June is a good month for finding renewed freshness of body and spirit; but never, neither in June nor January, let us loosen our hold on God. Too much is at stake in the world for us to trifle with anything as elemental as our worship and our faith in God.

WINCHESTER SUNDAY SCHOOL HAS NEW CLASS.

Prior to October, 1946, our Sunday School, like many others, perhaps, had only five classes in the adult school—two of these being composed of youngsters up to fourteen years of age. The Young People's Bible Class had members from fourteen to thirty-two—the Ladies Bible Class from that age to seventy and the Men's Win One Bible Class the same age limit. The need was felt for a married couples class as well as a solution to the age problem in the Young People's Bible Class. With this in mind a group of twelve people met at the parsonage on October 14, 1946, and formed the Fidelis Class, to be made up of married couples and single young men and women. We elected class officers and were fortunate in securing Rev. Whitten for our teacher. We decided to hold our monthly class meeting on the first Tuesday night of each month and made plans for a Fancy Dress Halloween party to "break the ice" before the next meeting.

In December the young newly weds decided to branch off to themselves, forming the Young Adult Class, making two entirely new, wide-awake classes added to our Sunday school.

We, the Fidelis Class, have had our meetings without fail each month, always opening with a beautifully prepared devotional by our vice-president, following by our business session and the social hour.

We sponsored a "Bring Anything Sale" with at least ten per cent of the proceeds to come to the class. In a great many instances these commissions were one hundred per cent. The proceeds from the sale were very gratifying indeed. With this good start we "adopted" three needy families at Christmas, two aged couples with the makings of Christmas dinner and staples, the other a family including five children. We collected clothing and toys for them, cleaned and reconditioned them and made gayly tied Santa Claus packages for the entire family. We also purchased and wrapped Christmas presents for all the children of the Rocky Ford Mission. From our treasury we have purchased Palm Sunday and Easter Bulletins for the church, agreed to help with the flowers of the church on special occasions and purchased $10 worth of Invisible Guest tickets for War Victims.

In February we started a "Good Neighbor Fund." This collection box is placed in a prominent place in our Sunday school room, but is not passed. This money is being spent on flowers, groceries, household needs for some member of the church each month. At Easter flowers or candy were sent to the older ladies and shut-ins of the congregation, along with a dressed chicken for two families.

During the recent Stockton-Gould Campaign we contributed the money for the special Mother's Day gifts and gave $25.00 to the evangelists out of our treasury. We have also donated $5.00 to be used in a local Daily Vacation Bible School for colored children.

The social hours are filled with worthwhile merriment. At one we had a "Crazy Hat Sale." Each member decorated a hat to be sold for a quarter and the purchaser had to wear it the rest of the evening. Needless to say we had a wonderful time and gained $6.00 from the sale. In March we had an "Old Fashioned Box Social" which turned out to be a wonderful fellowship evening and enlarged our bank balance by $40.90.

Our regular class offerings for February, March and April, amounting to $25.17, were applied to our church Easter Shaowu Mission Fund.

We have also formed a Friendly Hand Committee: two members are appointed, but any number may participate, in welcoming visitors to our Sunday school and church on Sunday morning.

We wanted to share with you our method of eliminating the "bottle neck" in the Winchester Sunday School. We believe God has smiled upon us in our work and we have enjoyed so much the things we have done in His name and can only anticipate the forthcoming joys.

Won't you, too, pray for us?

NO ROOM.

Did you ever drive up to a ferry slip, drop into a long line of cars, watch the line move forward as the vessel was loaded, and then—"NO ROOM," and the ferry pulled out, leaving you and many others standing on the pier? Such an occurrence is not unusual, and I suppose the dock hands and the crew of the vessel feel little remorse or unhappiness because they must leave some passengers behind. It's a business with them, and they are hardened to the misfortunes of latecomers.

We at Elon have not been able to be so impersonal, however. It is true that every dormitory room is reserved for the fall term. The ladies' dormitories equally so; and each has a waiting list of "hopefuls" in case some reservation is withdrawn! And yet, we find it most difficult to tell a student that he cannot come to school, that all spaces are engaged, and that he'd better look elsewhere. We know there is no "elsewhere," for other schools are just as crowded as we, and to turn down a student is to doom him, probably, to remaining out of college for a year. Our hearts are tender and we desire to see every aspiring young man or woman given an opportunity to benefit by college training. With every room filled, we find it hard to say "No."

Within the past few days, literally dozens of applicants have come to us, coming from young people with good high school records, many of them veterans, and a large portion of them from our own churches. Surely, we should arrange somehow to care for the outstanding student whose high school grades are A's and B's. And certainly we should find some way to care for the veteran returning from military service. And to be sure, we cannot escape our responsibility to those young people who come from Christian homes of our own denomination! Is it not so? These are our children and future leaders of our church. The demand is undeniable.

But what can we do? What may we say to those who come to us now, more than two months before the opening of the fall term, asking for admittance? At home, when company comes, we may serve dinner in two shifts and meet such an emergency. I am told that in some industrial communities, in which mills operate on three shifts, some beds are also occupied in three shifts. No one, however, would suggest this as a solution for our problem. The number of dormitory students at Elon is limited to the number that we can house satisfactorily, and we have already exceeded the point at which we could say, "There's always room for one more," there just isn't!

What, then, shall we say to worthy applicants: good students, veterans, church young people? The only answer, and it hurts us to say it, is "NO ROOM!" To the high school principal who writes: "John Jones was recently graduated as salutatorian of his class, is popular with his fellow students, a good athlete, and comes from a good Christian home; I hope you will make every effort to take him at Elon," we must reply, "Sorry." To the company commander who writes: "Sergeant Jim Brown has served most capably in my company; he has great possibilities; I am sure you will make room for him," we must say, "Too late." To the Congregational Christian minister who writes: "Mary Thomas is one of the first young people in my church; she will make a capable leader and we want her to be in Elon," we are forced to respond, "We'd like to have her, but there is no room!" What else can we say?

Perhaps the ferry boat captain can pull away from the dock and leave dozens of cars on the pier, but we have not yet learned to refuse a college education to a fine young man or woman without feelings of regret and remorse. Each new application drives us to further attempts to find ways of accommodating more students. All possibilities have been exhausted and every available space is taken. The words "NO ROOM" haunt us, for we feel keenly the disappointment in the heart of each of those who seek entrance, but it's true—there is "NO ROOM."

RURAL MINISTERS' SCHOOL.

going discussion of timely topics in the rural field. These will include a consideration of the total program of a rural church, a session on preaching led by the winners of last year's Rural Life Sermon Contest, a discussion of the work and function of the Virginia Council of Churches, and a demonstration and discussion of the use of visual aids in the rural church program.

The afternoons as usual will be devoted to rest, recreation, informal conferences, and tours. The Thursday evening trip to Mountain Lake and the impressive vesper service on the mountain top will be arranged as usual.

The night programs will be devoted to special inspirational and educational features. Monday night, Dr. Walter Newman, acting president of VPI, and L. B. Dietrick, director of the Agricultural Extension Service, will address the group and a "get-acquainted" session will follow. Tuesday night, Dr. Paul Sanders, editor of the Southern Planter, will address the school on "The Influence of Mass Migration on Rural Life." Wednesday night, Professor Hummel will speak on his 15,000-mile trip through the interior of China. Scenes from his trip will be shown following his lecture.

This total program is available to rural ministers and their wives at a cost of but $10, which covers board, room, and registration. One hundred scholarships are available from denomination headquarters and elsewhere.

Those interested in attending should get in touch with their own state denominational headquarters, Professor Hummel, or their local County, Farm or Home Agent. The registration is limited. Requests should be made at once.

Work should not be synonymous with irritation, labor, toil, drudgery, slavery, or something generally obnoxious. The wise choice of a vocation, a sincere desire to study thoroughly the job in hand and the one ahead, the ability to properly apply the knowledge gained, the willingness to observe others and to learn from them, the disposition to do more than is required—all these, tempered by the necessary ingredient of wholesome diversion, must bring the realization that work is an opportunity to find happiness and that it paves the way for a successful future.—Curda.

THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AND PASTORS' SCHOOL.

Sponsored by the Woman's Board, the Board of Christian Education, and Elon College, the School of Missions and Pastors' School was brought to a successful close at noon Friday, June 20th. The conference opened Monday evening at Elon College, highly interesting and profitable, the women receiving many helpful ideas about their work in the Woman's Society and the ministers being inspired and lifted to higher levels by Dr. Goslin's superb addresses. Mrs. McClintock being a person who is easy to know and easy to talk to, the women had great opportunity to have where 163 persons were registered. Of this number, there were 23 men, 132 women, and eight guest speakers. According to conferences, there were 8 from the Valley, 57 from Eastern Virginia and 90 from North Carolina.

Morning program opened with Bible study on the Gospel of Matthew, led by Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds of Elon. Following this, the group divided, the ministers being taught by Dr. Martin Goslin of Manchester, N. H., and the women being instructed by Mrs. E. E. McClintock, Secretary of Women's Work in our church. Both of these classes seemed to be many puzzling questions discussed and answered in a down to earth manner.

Miss Ruth Seabury, who brought the morning addresses and one evening address, stirred us to the point of action each time she spoke. The audience was thrilled and moved greatly as she told many interesting stories of her experiences in the mission field. At her suggestion, an offering was taken to help send some of our Congregational Christian young people to the World Youth Conference in Oslo, Norway, this summer.

Following Miss Seabury's address, each morning, a worship service was held, with a different leader each day: Tuesday, Dr. F. C. Lester; Wednesday, Mrs. W. W. Hall; Thursday, Miss Virginia Brinkley; Friday, Dr. Martin Goslin.

The afternoon program began with Workshops and leaders as follows:

"Pilgrim Series"—Miss Grace Storms.

"Recreation"—Mrs. E. H. Rainey.

"Visual Aids"—Miss Betty Chicone.

"The Work of the Local Society"—Mrs. F. C. Lester.

"The Work of the Young People"—Mrs. R. A. Whitten.

"Curing Ministerial Headaches"—Dr. Goslin.

On Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons following the workshops, the regular sessions of the Woman's Missionary Convention were held. On Tuesday evening, Mrs. W. E. Wiseman addressed the group on the subject, "Adversaries and Open Doors." This was followed by a memorial service in memory of Mrs. C. H. Rowland, led by Mrs. John G. Truitt.

In addition to the usual reports made at the Convention, some very important business was transacted, including a revision of the Constitution. The report of the Recommendations Committee created quite a bit of interest and discussion. Some of the outstanding recommendations passed by the group were:

1. That the funds received through the Life Membership and Memorial Department for the next four years be turned over to the American Board to help educate a Chinese student from Shaowu.

2. That the Staley Memorial Scholarship Fund be augmented by $500 per year, until it reaches $7,100. (To match the Atkinson Memorial Fund.)

3. That the Thank Offering this year be used to help the Convention build a parsonage for the Superintendent.

4. That our Friendly Service gifts for 1947-48 be sent to Franklinton Center, and to Japan.

The following new officers were elected for the new biennium: President, Mrs. O. H. Paris; Vice-President, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Recording Secretary, Mrs. H. Shelton Smith; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. J. R. Darden; Treasurer, Mrs. W. V. Leathers; Superintendent of Young People, Mrs. J. D. Strader; Superintendent of Children, Mrs. W. E. Wiseman; Superintendent of Cradle

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

A RAINY DAY.

The children awoke to the sound of old man rain at their window panes! The wind was beating the raindrops against the panes so that they sounded like pebbles striking against the glass.

"Mother, what day is this?" called Joe to his mother.

"This is Saturday, the day in which we get ready for Sunday!" called back mother.

"Oh boy! tomorrow I'll see Joseph and Billy, and all of the other boys and girls!" Out of bed came Joe with a bound.

Little Faye thought it might be fun to hop out of bed like her big brother did so she clung to the top of her crib with both hands and slung her blue pajama-covered leg over the topside of the crib.

"Now wait, Faye, you're not big enough to get out of there by yourself yet." Joe went around to her bed and pushed it up against his bed. By getting up on his big bed he could lift Faye out of her crib. Joe always made-believe that she was just about too much for him and he would fall back upon his bed with her in his arms. This game pleased Faye so much that she squealed with delight.

Joe brought Faye a doll from the shelves at one side of their room and himself a comic book that Carolyn had given him the day before. The children played on the bed until mother called from the bathroom for them to come and get faces and hands ready for breakfast. Just at that moment their Daddy rang the breakfast bell in the kitchen and there was a mad scramble to see who could get into the kitchen first!

"Well, son, it's raining this morning so I guess I'll have to go for the groceries 'solo style' today."

"That's all right, Joe, I have lots of jobs around the house that I'll be glad to have your help with today!"

"Helping in the house is not as much fun as going to the store but since it's blowing and raining so hard outside, I suppose going for the groceries will not be fun today!"

"I should say not. I'd stay inside and help on a day like this!" encouraged Daddy.

Faye tried to help mother make the beds while Joe used the dry mop on the floors that had no rugs.

When mother washed the dishes Joe and Faye helped to dry them. Then came the job that both children liked best. Mother cleaned the living room and dining room rugs and mopped the floor around the edges. This done she brought the split dust-ers and gave Joe the newest one and Faye the old one. About the rooms the children flitted, chasing dust! Joe always remembered the picture of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs and always he'd play like he and his sister were two of the little folk that helped to dust the cabin in the woods. He'd pretend that he was a squirrel and that Faye was one of the little blue birds in her little blue frock. "Dusting could be such fun if you did it this way!" thought Joe.

Mother mopped the kitchen floor while the children were dusting. That done she made good hot vegetable soup for lunch which was just right for a cool rainy day. There were red cherries from their own trees for dessert with cookies.

Faye went to bed for her afternoon nap. Joe helped mother fix the green beans for Sunday's dinner. The beef was put into the oven to roast. Then Joe and his mother went down into the basement to wash. Joe helped to carry the soiled clothes down and then he played in his red wagon while mother did the clothes.

"I think that rainy days are about the best of all if they come the day before Sunday, don't you, mother?"

"They certainly are when they 'go right'," replied his mother with a smile.

A CHILD'S GRIEF.

By MARIE MURRAY HUGHES.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Recently a dear friend told me of an experience she had had with her small son, David. It had been a revelation to her, and it proved to me, too, that young children feel grief and have a depth of love that few of us realize. She told me the story with complete sympathetic understanding, for she had just shared her child's first real sorrow.

David, in spite of his mere five years, absolutely adored Jimmie, the nineteen-year-old boy who lived next door. They were as close as brothers could possibly be, for Jimmie loved David, too.

One day Jimmie pointed to a plane high overhead and said, "Look, David, one of these days I'll come flying over your house in a plane and I'll dip my wings—that means 'Hello' from a pilot."

Jimmie left to join the Army Air Force the next day. While David missed him, the idea that he had a personal friend who was a real pilot and who at some time soon would dip his wings in salute just to him colored his days. He thought and talked almost continuously about planes, and all his play centered around them.

On the first Christmas after Jimmie entered the Service his gift to his little friend was a four-foot plane model, and this was later suspended with wires from the ceiling of the boy's room. David constantly pretended that Jimmie was at its controls as he pushed it gently back and forth through the air.

Then came the fateful telegram to Jimmie's family—and the word to David's mother and father that Jimmie had been killed in the service of his country. David's parents both knew that their little son must soon be told, but how?—certainly not too casually. They also loved Jimmie very much and felt his loss keenly.

My friend in telling me the story, said, "It was the hardest thing I ever had to do. His father and I thought it would be best for David to be alone with me when I told him. He never wants anyone to see him cry—not even his daddy. I was sitting on the davenport, apparently reading a book, but really groping for a way and praying for the courage to tell him; he was playing happily near me. Finally I said, 'David, our hero has given his life for our country.'

"His little face, usually so rosy, blanched, and he looked at me—silent, scared, and unbelieving.

"At last he said, 'Oh, Mother!—Jimmie's dead? That means I'll never see him again, doesn't it?'

"Yes, darling," I said, feeling more inadequate than ever before in my life.

"Quickly David climbed up beside me, threw his arms around me and clung tightly. I could feel the sobs slowly rising inside that small body at the same time a growing determination not to give way to tears before me. Such strong conflicting emotion are more than even an adult can long withstand; they would be devastating to a child. Slowly, I released his arms from around my neck vealed in nature and His will as revealed in the Scriptures.

We have become accustomed, in more recent years, to the idea that the natural is the opposite of the moral and that to act naturally is to give way to impulse and appetite. But our fathers thought of nature in terms of right; for a man to act in accordance with nature was to fulfill his destiny as a rational being and a son of God. We gravely misunderstand the philosophers, the theologians, and the publicists of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and early nineteenth centuries, if we attribute to their use of the term "nature" the new meanings which equate nature with lack of self-control.

From the point of view of the sciences—psychology, anatomy, physiology, or whatever else—the first of the "self-evident truths" stated in our Declaration of Independence is not evident. It is simply not true that all men are created equal. From the point of view of the law and love of God it is true; and that is the point of view that the authors of the Declaration took. They assumed the equality of men in the light of the "laws of nature and of nature's God." Faith in God underlies and is distinctly avowed in the Declaration of Independence.

The outstanding characteristic of religion in the United States, as contrasted with Europe and Latin America, is its freedom. We have no state church. Religious faith expresses itself, and is organized, in terms of what was called, a century ago, "the voluntary system." Our national and state constitutions are conceived in the spirit of a memorable article of the Declaration of Rights adopted by the Legislature of Virginia on June 12, 1776:

"That religion, or the duty which we owe to our Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence, and therefore all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience; and that it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love and charity, towards each other."

America's experiment in freeing the exercise of religion from all constraint and making its support voluntary has been successful, if the growth of church membership be taken as evidence of success. The rate of increase in church membership has considerably out-run the growth of population. The membership of the Roman Catholic church has risen from a fraction over one per cent to a bit over seventeen per cent of the population of the United States. In 1800 seven out of every hundred citizens were members of Protestant churches; in 1850, fifteen; and in 1900, twenty-four; and now thirty-one out of every one hundred citizens belong to Protestant churches. Taking all religious groups, the total reported church membership for 1943-44 is 52.5 per cent of the total population of the country.

The current Yearbook of American Churches reports 256 denominational bodies. Many of these are very small, however, and of little more than local influence. One hundred and fifty-one of them have less than 100 local churches each; 48 of them have less than ten churches each.

The picture will be brought into clearer focus if we remember that the denominations may be grouped in families, each containing a number of bodies which are separately organized but go back, more or less directly, to a common origin. There are eleven such families which have a membership of a million or more members each—to be exact, there are seven such families, plus the Roman Catholic church, the Jewish congregations, the Protestant Episcopal church and the Congregational churches, four bodies which may be counted as families.

The membership of these eleven families of denominations is as follows:

Roman Catholic—1 body, 23,419,791.
Baptist—23 bodies, 14,207, 775.
Methodist—20 bodies, 10,629,280.
Lutheran—20 bodies, 5,129,147.
Jewish—1 body, 4,641,184.
Presbyterian—10 bodies, 2,933,768.
Protestant Episcopal—1 body, 2, 227,524.
Disciples—2 bodies, 1,981,905.
Congregational Christian—1 body, 1, 075,401.
Mormon—7 bodies, 987,315.
Reformed—4 bodies, 979,388.
Eleven denominational families—90 bodies, 68,212,478.
Other denominations—166 bodies, 4, 280,191.
All denominations—256 bodies—72, 492,669.

Stated in percentages, this listing shows that the eleven families of denominations have 94 per cent of the total church membership of the country, leaving to 166 other denominations only 6 per cent. The figures are:

Eight Protestant families—54%.
Roman Catholic—32.3%.
Jewish—6.4%.
Mormon—1.3%.
Eleven denominat'l families—94%.
Other denominations, chiefly Protestant—6%.
All denominations—100%.

The divisiveness of Protestantism remains a weakness of organized religion in America. More and more, however, the Protestant churches are successfully working together. In most states there are Councils of Churches like the Virginia Council of Churches, in which we are today assembled. Outstanding among the national agencies in which the Protestant churches are associated are the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the International Council of Religious Education. The latter brings into cooperation the educational boards of thirty-six denominations with a membership of thirty-five million people.

What shall we say of the smaller sects and newer cults? For one thing that most of them are small. We must remember that the 166 "other denominations" with their total membership of 4,280,191 include many old and well established Protestant bodies such as the Church of the Brethren; the Mennonites; the Friends, or Quakers; the Moravian Church; the Evangelical Church; the United Brethren; the Seventh Day Adventists; the Eastern Orthodox Churches and others. Some of these have around 200,000 members, some around 100,000; the new union of the Evangelical Church and the United Brethren Church has a membership of 700,000 and the Eastern Orthodox Churches nearly that number. When the total strength of all the older bodies has been deducted, there remain little more than one million members for the multitude of newer sects and cults. That there should be such sects is inevitable. It is one of the corollaries of religious freedom and of human psychology. That they meet a need is obvious, for otherwise they would not exist. But that they will displace the churches which are nearer to the center of the great tradition of faith, is not to be feared. If they can, it will be because the churches have lost their faith.

"Jehovah's Witnesses," who have figured in the news from time to time in recent years, do not appear in the Census or in the Yearbook, for refusal to make reports of any kind is part of their general repudiation of the world, the state, and the church.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D.D.

A MAN WHOSE NAME WAS JOB.

LESSON I—JULY 6, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: My righteousness I hold fast; I will not let it go; my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live.—Job 27:6.

LESSON: Job 1:1-5; 27:1-7; 29-31.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Job 42:1-6.

A Great Drama.

About all the average Christian knows about Job is that he is used as a symbol of patience—one often hears the words, "He has the patience of Job." But here is one of the world's greatest dramas. And here is one of the classic literary productions that wrestle with the problem of suffering, especially the suffering of the righteous.

The Times.

We do not know when the Book of Job was written. It is not dated either in the Bible itself, and scholars themselves are far apart in their estimates as to when the book was written. Nor do we know who wrote this superb masterpiece. Job is the central character but he was not the author. Like so many of God's valuable servants, the author was anonymous.

The Man.

Job lived in the land of Uz, wherever that was. He was an unusual man. Both in his attitude toward God and toward his fellowmen he had walked in integrity of character. The writer refers to him as one who was "perfect and upright," one that feared God and avoided evil. He was very wealthy and had great possessions. He also had seven sons and three daughters. He was faithful in the performance of his religious vows, and ruled well his own household. The lines had fallen him in pleasant places and he had a godly heritage.

The Story.

The plot of the story is comparatively simple, although the story itself deals with one of the deepest mysteries of life. The first part of the book is in prose, and gives in brief and simple outline the background of the philosophical section of the book, which is in poetry. Satan again, cynic that he was and is, suggested that Job's goodness was rooted in and sprang from his prosperity. "Doth Job serve God for nought?" he cynically asks. He insinuated that Job was good because he thought it was sound business. But he boldly said that if Job should lose his possessions, it would make a difference, all the difference in the world. Accordingly Job was turned over to Satan, that is everything but his person, which was thus far inviolate. In quick succession came word that his oxen and asses had been confiscated by the Sabeans, his sheep and his servants had been consumed by lightning, his camels had been stolen by the Chaldeans, and last of all and worst of all his sons and daughters had been killed in a hurricane. But all this did not phase Job, that is so far as his faith was concerned. In words that are often quoted he said: "The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord." It was a majestic utterance. It was a magnificent faith.

But Satan had not played his last card. He cynically said that although Job had no complaint when his possessions and his children were taken, he would fold up and even curse God if his own flesh and bone were touched. And again God gave him leave to make test of Job's faith. What a test! He smote Job with sore boils—that means terrible boils—from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet. Three of Job's friends then came to visit him. Each "comforts" or rather condemns him in turn, but Job's faith does not waver. Eventually, although he does not get the answer to his question, he does get a revelation of God which means more to him than the answer to his doubts.

The Moral.

The Book of Job does not answer the problem of suffering. But it is one of the most dramatic and direct pieces of literature dealing with that problem. That men may have to suffer, regardless of how good they are or how much good they do, is clearly stated. The writer was living in the twilight of the race in a sense, and made a great contribution to the solution of the problem. But he had not discovered the redemptive power of suffering as exemplified in our Lord Jesus Christ. Even in the light of what He was and what He did, the problem of suffering is one of life's great mysteries. But in Him it has new meaning. And faith in Him enables one to endure suffering patiently, and to master it victoriously.

GOD IN HIS WORLD.

LESSON II—JULY 13, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: The hearing ear and the seeing eye, the Lord hath made both of them.—Prov. 20:12.

LESSON: Genesis 1; Job 38-41.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Job 36:24-33.

The Mystery of Creation

The story is told of a boy who was spanked by his father, and who asked his father if grandfather had spanked him, and if grandfather's father had spanked him, and so on. Finally in something akin to despair he asked plaintively, "Well, who started this thing anyhow?" Folks have been asking that question about the world and all they that dwell therein. From whence did it come? Who created it? How was it created? When was it created? Why was it created? Was it done all at once, or did it gradually come to be? And so on, ad infinitum.

Now of course there have been many answers given to these questions. The materialist glibly says that it just happened—there was no Mind or Feeling or Will back of it all. Natural forces are sufficient to account for it all, even including man himself with all his marvelous and mysterious powers. Others say it has always been here, it had no beginning. Others say it did have a First Cause but that it was impersonal. Men have given strange answers to this puzzling and probing question. And sometimes they go to strange lengths to explain away the easiest and soundest explanation. The Bible gives it: "In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth." To be sure this does not take away all the mystery of creation. But it is the only answer that makes sense. To say that this world, the starry heavens with their beauty and symmetry, their orderliness and their precision are the result of mere accident is childish. To say that the earth with its vast natural resources, its creative and life-giving processes, its fruitfulness and fertility, its tremendous and terrifying powers, its infinitely large and its infinitely small forms of life is the product of chance is to refuse to face facts. To say that man in all his glory and majesty, his capacity to think and to feel and to suffer, to create art and music and sculpture and poetry, to invent and to construct, to remember and to predict is simply a chance collection of bone and nerve and meat is more than a sensible man can accept seriously. To say that the thing just happened, that material or natural forces account for it, simply does not make sense. Strange indeed if such a world could produce a beautiful picture, a great poem, Handel's Messiah, an Isaiah, or a Christ!

And the mystery is all the greater when we realize that potentially it was all here when God created the universe. Men have been discovering God's secrets through the centuries, but they have been discovering only what was already in the universe. When the atomic bomb was perfected men did not create anything new at all—they simply found what God had put in the universe when he originally created it. And all that man learns and develops and creates was potentially in the world when it was originally created. I tell you, my friends, we have a great God, One Who is infinitely wise and strong and good. The more a man knows about the marvelous world in which he lives the greater becomes his God.

The Marvels of Creation.

Job had been taking God to task about his problem. He dared to withstand God to His face. Then God had His say. He called Job's attention to the work and wonder of God in the earth and in the sky. Take such a simple thing, a seemingly simple thing I should say, as a snowflake. "Hast thou entered the treasures of the snow?" Those who ought to know tell us that there are no two snowflakes exactly alike. And that is only one simple instance of a world full of miracles, that is a world of inanimate things. When one comes to animate things the wonder grows. Take for instance a breath-taking example. Here are two tiny cells, microscopic in size, one from the male and one from the female, uniting to form the beginning of life. In this tiny bit of living matter there is embedded and embodied all that that human being will ever come to be and to know and to do. Not only the color of his eyes and the shape of his head, not only color of his skin and the size of his body, but all that he will ever know and feel and imagine and do is potentially there. And more: all of his soul life is potentially there, what he will be while he lives in this world, and what he will be through all the world that is to come. We are fearful and wonderfully made. The fool hath said in his heart there is no God, but a man with good sense would not say so.

Satisfaction Amid Mystery.

We live in a world of mystery and there are some things we cannot know in our finite minds. Job did not get an answer to his problem as to why he had to suffer. But when he got a revelation of the glory and grandeur of Jehovah his problem lost some of its point and poignancy. "He was convinced of God's wisdom, power and love, and he repented of his pride in intellectual power. He was ready at last simply to trust."

Jesus had no easy answer to all the problems and perplexities of life. But He rested on the central and basic fact of God—His Reality, His Love, His Power—and amid all the experiences of a life of misunderstanding and persecution and ultimately of crucifixion, to this one fixed trust he held—He knew that God was good.

REPORT FROM THE JACKSONS.

tunity to go to Lusintang to do church work. (Salary, $80,000 monthly.)

483—Voted: In accordance with a letter from Lee De Han (Ding taitai) permit the former Lo De Girl's School graduates to open an office in the school for the purpose of doing women's work.

484—Voted: (A letter was received from 48 women of the former Lo De Girl's School asking that Miss Burr return to Shaowu, and requesting her while in America to raise money to repair the school, and suggesting that when she return the school be reopened.) Letter received, suggestion passed on.

485—Voted: Approved opening of the Lo De Girl's School if opportunity presented itself.

486—Voted: An appropriation of special hospital funds to the Shaowu Christian hospital for the year 1947, $2,000 gold, to open the hospital and to assist in monthly maintenance. ($2,600,000 to open and $2,000,000 monthly Chinese currency beginning March 1st.)

487—Voted: Revised budget on basis of new exchange. Expected receipts as follows: American Board, $11,000,000; Procter Fund, $4,000,000; Gift—Mr. Chandler, $100,000; North Fukien Synod, $1,200,000 (tripled over previous figure); total, $16,300,000.

The salaries of workers and ministers was increased to $10,000,000. It was voted to request from the American Board next year an appropriation (regular) of $1,520 (gold), for the following needs: 1947 regular appropriation, $1,220; 1948—laymen training, $150; 1948—new workers, $150; total, $1,520.

It was also voted to request the Board to make an appropriation (special) to assist in the training of new workers (ministers, etc.).

488—Voted that all students receiving scholarship aid to attend theological seminary devote some time in working for the synod (summers, etc.) (Preferably previous to entering seminary.)

489—Voted: To send several young people to various churches or do church work during July and August, 1947 as follows: Lin Chiang Liang—Lan Sya Church (later changed to Yankou); Chiagn Syan Gwang—Yankou Church (later changed to Shao-wu); Chiu Shen Bau—Gwandze Church; Liao Dau Jung—Training; Miss Syung Yi E—Shaowu. These students are to be paid $120,000 per month plus travel.

490—Voted: Since the previous grant to the Hwa Mei School at Kienning was not enough because of the advance in prices, that Mrs. Christian be asked to send Pastor Liao $150 from the Kienning School fund to use for the current year. (Leaving a balance in fund of $216.)

491—Voted: That the property committee be given the responsibility for caring for the church and American Board property as they have in the past and that Mr. Jackson be added to the committee.

492—Voted: That the suggestion of Dr. Chandler be approved to invite Mr. Chang Hwen Chiu and Mr. Wang Chin Wen to help the Synod, and that a cordial welcome be extended them.

493—Voted: That the new foreign secretary, Mr. Jackson, assist the secretary-treasurer, Mr. Huang, until the Synod meets at the Annual Fall meeting.

494—Voted: That this year's annual meeting (1947) be held on November 27-30 in Shaowu.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

We are always delighted to have people come to see us. We are happy to show them what the Congregational Christian Church has here. It belongs to the church. We feel that when the people realize what the church has invested here in the way of buildings, land, dairy cows, and farm machinery, they really would become more interested. The capital investment as shown in our last report was $247,834.33. This amount includes all the land, buildings, equipment, and cash on hand.

We have three splendid brick buildings, two hundred and seventy-five acres of land which is in a fine state of cultivation, all necessary farm machinery, and trucks, and tractors. We have also a fine herd of dairy cattle of mostly Holstein breed. We hope within a few more years to have a herd of registered Holsteins.

We have been making repairs on the buildings for more than two months, and now have them in good condition, except some little minor items that we have not been able to do, but will be done in the near future. For four years we were not able to get material to do the necessary work that we have done in the last three months. The Baby Home and Old Building have been painted on the inside. New furniture, new linoleum rugs, new shades, new curtains, and all other necessary things were put in where needed.

Quite a number of the good women who have been at Elon attending the Women's Meeting of the Southern Convention, visited the orphanage while they were here, and were shown through the buildings. They were highly pleased with the conditions they found and complimented us on what we had accomplished since we have been able to get material to work with. We were delighted to have these visitors to visit the orphanage and see for themselves. Now if they will go back to their churches and make a talk telling their people what they saw here, we will be grateful. We feel it will create more interest in the support of the orphanage. There is nothing more important than seeing for one's self.

Several days ago our good friend, Rev. W. W. Snyder, brought his Sunday school from Concord Church to visit the orphanage. We showed them over the buildings, and they seemed to enjoy their visit very much. We think this a fine idea, as it gives the young people an opportunity to see the buildings and the children they gave their nickels and dimes to support, and gives the little children here an equal opportunity with them. Yours was a fine idea, Brother Snyder, because one day, these young people will have to take the leadership in our churches when the older heads will drop out. We hope many more ministers and Sunday school superintendents will follow your good example.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AND PASTORS' SCHOOL.

Roll, Mrs. Orva Brown; Chairman of Committees as follows: Family Life, Mrs. Robert Kimball; Life Memberships and Memorials, Mrs. William Harrell; Spiritual Life, Mrs. R. T. Bradford; Friendly Service, Mrs. W. B. Williams; Literature, Mrs. W. T. Scott; Interdenominational Cooperation, Mrs. R. A. Whitten; Visual Aids, Miss Betty Chicoine; Editor, Mrs. W. J. Andes, and Historian, Mrs. L. W. Stagg.

Evening vespers were held by Mrs. Robert Kimball, Mrs. Dorothy Chong, President of the Congregational Christian Women of Hawaii, and Dr. Martin Goslin.

On Monday evening, the program consisted of welcome by Dr. L. E. Smith and Mrs. Wisseman, introductions, worship led by Mrs. O. H. Paris, and a social hour with refreshments served by the Elon College women and games led by Mrs. E. H. Rainey.

On Wednesday evening the group heard an address by Miss Ruth Seabury, followed by an ordination service. Two young ministers, Rev. Mack Welch and Rev. Allan Hurdle were ordained to the full gospel ministry by the following ministers: Joe A. French, W. M. Stevens, J. H. Dollar, and W. E. Wisseman. Dr. Vance McCracken, editor of the Missionary Herald, brought the address on Thursday evening.

Probably the most interesting and enjoyable hour of the school was on Friday morning, when Mrs. Dorothy Chong, President of the Congregational Christian Women in Hawaii, spoke to the group. She told of the customs of the people of Hawaii, something about our churches there, sang a native song, showed native dress, and extended in a very lovely manner warmest greetings to us from her and the women of Hawaii. She so endeared herself to the women that many were ready to take a trip to Hawaii right away.

For the first time, we had a display of literature from the Pilgrim Press and a personal representative sent from Dayton, Ohio, to sell books to the delegates. So pleased were they with the books that approximately $475 was spent for books during the week. This included many of the study books for next year, devotional books, books for ministers, and a great number of books for children.

The School of Missions will now be held annually, and the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention will be held bi-annually, as before.

and brought him face to face with me.

"'David,' I said, 'Mother feels just as sad about Jimmie as you do, but I think if we both cry for Jimmie and say a prayer, it will help very much. We shall both feel better.'"

It is a simple little story, but I have not been able to forget the impression it made. The poet tells us: "Grief Knits two hearts in closer bonds than happiness ever can, and sufferings shared are far stronger links than joys."

I think David's mother, by her sympathetic understanding, has caused to be established a love and confidence between her son and herself which can never be shaken or taken away.

AMERICA'S HERITAGE OF FAITH.

Their chief significance is that they have served as a somewhat extreme test of the principle of religious liberty. If our courts protect them, as the courts have done, the rest of American citizens surely need fear no infringement of their freedom of conscience.

The religious freedom of the citizen includes the right to dissent in the name of religious belief, reason and conscience, from an act or requirement of the state, and to express this dissent in action or in refusal to act as well as in speech. This is the right of conscientious objection. Like all the rights of religious freedom, it should be extended to non-believers or atheists as well as to those who are members of recognized churches.

But there is a greater right than that of dissent; it is the right of responsible participation in the making and executing of public policy. The religious freedom of the citizen includes his right to hold the state itself responsible to the moral law and to God, and the right to labor to this end through appropriate judgments, witness, and constructive participation in the activities of citizenship. Religious freedom is not freedom from the responsibilities and duties of citizenship; it is freedom for these duties—freedom for undertaking them in all good conscience, with the courage, the devotion and the willingness to sacrifice that is sustained by faith in God.

The separation of church and state is a sound principle, but one that is much misunderstood. It means that church and state are mutually free, and that neither may rightfully control the other. It does not mean the church and state, being mutually free, may not cooperate with one another. It does not mean that the state acknowledges no God, or that the state is exempt from the moral law where-with God sets the bounds of justice for nations as well as for individuals.

A great saying of Jesus which has been much misunderstood is "Render therefore to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's." This text is most cited by those who would stress the distinction between things that are Caesar's and the things that are God's. It has been used not only to sanction the separation of church and state, but even to justify the sundering of patriotism and religion, and the severing of love of country and love of God.

But we must not forget that both clauses of Jesus' injunction are imperative, and that they are connected by "and" rather than separated by an "or." Jesus did not tell his questioners to obey Caesar or God; his command was to fulfill their obligations to Caesar and to God.

The separation of church and state does not require the separation of civic duty and religious faith. A state degenerates into tyranny if its citizens abandon conscience when they approach the polls, and forget God when they are in public office. And no man has true religion who reserves it for home or Sunday or heaven or the catacombs of a "retreat" and fails to use it as a resource for daily living and for public service.

The truth is that religious freedom is not a special privilege which the state accords to folk of peculiar temper. It is a right which has entered into the very making of the state. It is one of the basic freedoms in any sound Bill of Rights. Historically, logically, and in practice, it undergirds and sustains human democracy. It is of the very substance of democracy. Without religious freedom, all other freedoms are in danger. If men have not freedom for their highest convictions, they will not care greatly for those that are lower.

The churches of America have been accused, by some of our brethren in older lands, of "activism"—that is, of an incurable desire to do something to redeem this present world. We accept the charge. We mean what we say when we use the prayer of our Lord: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven." The churches of America have inherited and cherish the Puritan ideal, though none of us would accept the particular form of theocracy with which the Massachusetts Puritans fumblingly sought at first to realize it. Our churches have always been concerned with life, with the affairs of the community, with education, with state and nation and the international order. They have always had a social gospel as well as an individual gospel, and by the grace of God they always will.

One of the most notable utterances of the cultural anthropologist, Professor Bronislaw Malinowski, whose faith is a great loss to the world of science and scholarship, is a lecture which he delivered a few years ago on The Foundation of Faith and Morals. Approaching the subject from the point of view of anthropology, he expressed disgust for the "new pseudo-religions" of today, banal, shallow, pandering to the lowest instincts; and he declared his hope in the religion which affirms an ethical Providence, Immortality, and the transcendental value and sense of human life. He exhorted his hearers to "work for the maintenance of eternal truths, which have guided mankind out of barbarism to culture, and the loss of which seems to threaten us with barbarism again." Then follows a very striking sentence: "The rationalistic and the agnostic must admit that even if he himself cannot accept these truths, he must at least recognize them as indispensable pragmatic figments without which civilization cannot exist."

It was not, however, as pragmatic figments that the great founders of democracy employed these truths in the determination of public policy. It was as truth, as insight into the structure of Reality, as recognition of that which has an unconditioned claim upon reason and conscience.

We, too, can trust these great truths. There is not need for us to resort to ideologies. In no nation has conscience been more free than in America; and nowhere have the institutions of democracy been more directly based on the Christian truth.

As you have studied about the creative persons and crucial periods of human history, I am sure that you have sometimes thought how wonderful it must have been to live then, when great decisions were being made, and destiny hung in the balance. Well—you have your wish. You are now living in such a time. These days are more freighted with foreboding and more pregnant with promise than any other since the beginning of the Christian era and the fall of Rome. Never before have men and women of faith had so great an opportunity and responsibility for the creative deed which new conditions of world citizenship require. If we have the mind and heart and will for it, true to our heritage of faith, the twentieth century will witness a new birth of freedom for all mankind.

Only a life built into God's place can succeed. Half of our discouragements are due to the fact that we are not in tune with the infinite harmony of the Great Power—a city that will endure when all earthly cities crumble to dust.

—Bishop Herbert E. Welch.

The Declaration of Independence--- Something to Live By

By REV. WILLIAM C. KERNAN

Executive Director, Institute for American Democracy, Inc.

(Written specially for Independence Day, July 4, 1947)

Some Americans have forgotten what the Declaration of Independence says and what it means. Some of them think that the only people in America who have any rights are the people of their own religion—or their own race—their own nationality—or their own class. They stir up prejudice against Americans whose race or religion differs from their own—keep them from getting a good education—keep them from working at jobs they can do. This is not what the Declaration says. This is not what it means.

Just the same, most Americans do remember what the Declaration of Independence says and they are fighting every day to make America live by its truths.

“That all men are created equal.” All men. That’s what the Declaration says—“all men are created equal.” They all have the same kind of life—the same soul—created by the same God and Father of all. They all belong to the same human creation. Not one of them anywhere belongs to the animal creation—or the vegetable—or the mineral. They are all equal in what makes them men. They must be so regarded.

“That they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights”—rights that belong to all men in the same way that their arms and legs do—given to them by God as their arms and legs are—not given to them by the State. Rights which they must have to fulfill their duties and to develop their talents. The right to speak, print, worship, work, assemble, marry, educate their children. Rights which belong to them all equally—the Protestants, Catholics, Jews, Whites, Negroes—to all men. That’s what the Declaration of Independence says. We must respect human rights.

“That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.” The Government has a part to play. It’s to see that men—not some men, but all men—have the opportunity to enjoy their freedom and their rights. Government’s part is to serve the people from whom it gets its authority to rule. The Declaration of Independence says that, too.

We want the world to know it. We want every nation to know that America is a country which lives by these Christian truths. For it’s important that America should be that kind of country. Because today—on this July 4, 1947—much of mankind is not free. They look to America. Dare we fail them?

The Habit of Churchgoing

By CHARLES HAVEN MYERS

Why should we go to church? Well, first, there is, or ought to be, beauty of worship. The service—including the music, the prayers, the meditations—brings to the believer an outreach of faith that is found nowhere else.

We should go to church because it helps us keep the values of life properly related, the quantitative values and the qualitative values. Among the latter are morals and religion.

We should go to church because our thinking is stimulated. The minister of God is trained not, as a sociological expert, much less an economic specialist—but he is trained to deal with human personalities, their hopes and desires, their faults and their failures, their sins and their sorrows. Preaching being an art, never reaches perfection and is rarely sustained on a uniformly high level. But audiences, not empty pews, make sermons, and every believing listener adds something to the total inspiration of the hour.

We should go to church because we recognize that we are something more than bundles of physical desires and nervous tension. We become aware at strange and unexpected moments that we are parts of a living God. These deeper feelings are not susceptible of rationalization. These “thoughts do often lie too deep for tears.” There are times when nature brings this reality near. But worship, too, brings us face to face with Infinite Mystery.

We should go to church because we are there reminded of our everlasting obligation to our fellowmen—the dead and the living. There we understand more clearly the moral obligation of living. This brings uplift and a measure of fortitude to face another week.

So, when you are planning to go to church, invite your unchurched neighbor to worship God with you. You will be better neighbors thereafter.

GROW FOUR DAYS IN IOWA!

By FRANCES DUNLAP HERON.

From the moment that Dr. Roy L. Smith, editor of The Christian Advocate, mounts the platform of Des Moines, Iowa's Coliseum on the evening of July 23 until the last choral note of Harold A. Pflug's worship pageant fades away in Drake Stadium on July 27, there are four days of good fellowship, instruction, and mental and spiritual stimulation in store for 10,000 volunteer Sunday school leaders of the United States and Canada. The occasion will be the twenty-first quadrennial International Sunday School Convention of the International Council of Religious Education. Delegates will represent the forty Protestant denominations and the 195 interdenominational councils of churches and religious education that cooperate in the International Council of Religious Education.

Speaking on "The Sunday School and the American Scene," Dr. Smith, noted Methodist writer, orator, and practical interpreter of religion, will lay the foundation for the four-day consideration of "How can Sunday school workers make the Christian gospel work?"

On the stage with Dr. Smith that Wednesday evening will be two other national figures: convention chairman, J. L. Kraft, Chicago industrialist and for thirty-six years a Sunday school superintendent; and Minnesota's former governor, Harold E. Stassen, who is president of the International Council of Religious Education.

Scheduled for Thursday morning is Grace Sloan Overton, Adams, N. Y., who will discuss "Home and Church Cooperate in Teaching." For years Mrs. Overton has written, traveled, and lectured in the interests of young people. She specializes in (Continued on page 15.)

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.

5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

MORE INFORMATION ABOUT THE SUMMER CONFERENCES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

If you have not received a registration blank—and want one—write to me, immediately. If you know of someone who wants to go to the summer camp, and has not yet received the registration blank, write to me immediately.

We may need to limit the number going to camp this year—for Camp Hanes can only accommodate a certain number of campers. So, let me know just as soon as possible about your camp plans!

BETTY CHICOINE.

P. S.: At each of the Sunday School Conventions we will have registration blanks for those of you who do not receive them by that time.

A WORTHWHILE SERVICE.

"We have just finished a fine Vacation Bible School here. . . . The people are over-joyed with his (the Student Summer Service worker) work and the fine Christian character he displayed in his every word and act. We were fortunate to have him in our home. . . . The fellowship we were privileged to have with him will long remain in our memory as a joyful occasion. Our prayers go with him in all his efforts in whatever field of endeavor he chooses.

"The church and Sunday school have asked that the closing program be repeated. . . . They are looking forward with keen interest to the school for next year. . . . They are sold on the idea! . . ."

The above word I have taken from the enthusiastic letter of one of our pastors in the Southern Convention concerning the Daily Vacation Bible School just held at his church and the Student Summer Service worker who helped with the school.

I believe that this is the reaction of those churches which are conducting Vacation Bible School this summer. If you did not have a school this year, make plans now to conduct one next year. It's not too soon to begin to arrange for your next summer's program.

Those of you who have held Vacation Bible Schools this year will soon be receiving report blanks. Two will be sent to your church. We are asking that one be filled out and returned to the Field Director's Office at Elon College, so that we may have as much information as possible in order to have better and more far-reaching schools next year. The other blank is for your own use and convenience. In filling it out now, you may use it next year to plan your school.

If you have had an outstanding event in your school this year—a special course, an effective closing program, some excellent handcrafts or projects worked out by the boys and girls—let us know about it. Your good work may guide the workers of other schools!

VISUAL AIDS.

We have just heard about the following new Visual Aids and would like to pass the news along to those of you who are interested in the latest and best:

1. Eight Coronet film strips: I Fight Fires, A World in Action, People of the Hills, Winter Has Two Faces, The Breathless Moment, Death Rides the Highway, Drama in the Courtroom, An American Looks at England. Safety Education film strips: Fire Safety, Recreation Centers a Community Problem, Traffic Safety, Safe Practices with Laboratory and Electrical Equipment, Small Machine Tools, Home Safety, Bicycle and Pedestrian Safety, Accident Summary. $12.00 for the 16 film strips. Order from the Society for Visual Education, Inc., 100 E. Ohio St., Chicago 11, Illinois.

2. "Two Dollars" (by the author of "Is Your Home Fun?") with recorded script. Stewardship material. Fine for parents and young adult groups. Fine for anyone who has money to spend! Mr. Brown and Mr. Gay each have a dollar—what they do with it and what it does to them is the story of the film strip. $8.00 from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass.

3. "The Story of Our Bible" shows development of the Bible from Old Testament times to present. The film strip for the first quarter of the Pilgrim Series. $3 from Pilgrim Press.

4. "Let the Children Come" film strip highlighting Christian education and the Church. Good for teachers' meetings, parents' groups, etc. $2.00 from 810 Broadway, Nashville 10, Tenn. (Methodist Publishing House.)

5. "Ceiling Unlimited" film strip on temperance for ages 12-18. $2.00 from Society for Visual Education, 100 E. Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Ill.

6. "Sing a Song of Friendship"—five film strips in set (Kodachrome). Exceptionally fine for boys and girls through Intermediate. $5.00 each from Popular Science Publishing Company, 353 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Any or all of these materials are good. They may be used in connection with discussion groups in the young people's societies, Sunday school classes, teachers, meetings, Daily Vacation Bible Schools—any place where special emphasis on Christian living is needed.

REVIEWS AND RATINGS OF CURRENT FILMS.

By THE PROTESTANT MOTION PICTURE COUNCIL.

PICTURE OF THE MONTH: THE CAPTIVE HEART.

There are few phases of the late war which have not been treated on the screen, some of them exhaustively. But one which has been virtually bypassed until now is that experienced by the prisoners of war. It has remained for a British studio to bring out the film which, in addition to being a distinguished photoplay apart entirely from its subject matter, will undoubtedly stand as the classic documentary of the POW's.

"The Captive Heart," released through Ealing Studios and distributed in America by Universal-International, is a simple and realistic portrayal of the reactions of a group of British soldiers to give years of life behind barbed wire. Because their reactions to the inevitable tension and almost unbearable boredom, the mental suffering and spiritual frustrations, are the same as were experienced by millions of men of all nations, this film becomes the saga of all those "to whom no decorations were given" but who were quite as heroic as any who wear proud rows of campaign ribbons and battle stars or who sleep beneath heroes' crosses.

This is essentially the story of common men, their inner greatness and integrity, each with morale problems of his own, each with dreams of the day when he will be repatriated or liberated. The long months of waiting, the thoughts of home accentuated by eagerly awaited mail, the men's comradeship and "making the best of things" are portrayed with arresting accuracy and pathos.

A DATE AT DEERING.

Approximately fifty ministers, a cross-section of the Congregational Christian variety from sixteen states and Puerto Rico are currently engaged in the Pastor's School at Deering Center, New Hampshire. Our Board of Home Missions conducts each summer two schools for a limited number of pastors. The Sylvan Dale School in Colorado is for ministers in parishes west of the Mississippi. The Deering School in New Hampshire is for ministers of the Eastern states. Dr. Truman Douglass is Dean of the Deering School.

Just what, someone may wonder, do ministers study in this school? How do they utilize an entire month in study? The answer is at least suggested in the following listing of courses: Protestantism, Worship, Speech, Evangelism, Christian Education, Race Relations, Architecture, Sociology, and Homiletics. This listing gives a clue to the many interests and varied fields of study and the various responsibilities from which ministers must be unceasingly preparing themselves. Here they are studying and brooding over the ominous problems which confront our civilization. The instructors and lecturers include Wilhelm Pauck, Elmer Freeman, Everett Parker, Wofford Timmons, Truman Douglass, Harry Stock, Galan Weaver, William Newman, Ross Sanderson, Thomas Tripp, Philip Widenhouse, Mark Dawber, Fred Hoskins, George Gibson, and William Zourdeeg. These men bring specialized knowledge in their several fields of study and administration. The generosity of the Board of Home Missions in providing this array of top-flight leaders is an indication of the basic conviction that the success of our total home missionary enterprise is conditioned largely by the knowledge and efficiency of the pastors.

Dr. Zourdeeg has been telling us of the stern lessons learned by the Remonstrance Church during the Nazi occupation of Holland. Prof. Pauck is undertaking the exceedingly difficult task of making theologians of ministers in one month! Mr. Parker is pruning the excess verbal foilage in his speech class. His speech recordings provide a revelation for each minister. Thus one might continue to elaborate on the specific nature of these ministers' courses. But time would fail to tell of Stock and Freeman, etc.! It is enough to indicate the scope of our curriculum. Instruction, both formal and informal, proceed at a happy pace. This is no ministerial holiday, not even on July fourth!

Deering Center was given to the Board of Home Missions by Mrs. Eleanor Campbell, M.D. One building stands as a memorial to her daughter. The Rev. Charles E. Reidt is the Director of the Center and pastor of the Community Church.

Ministers from the Southern Convention include Ellis Clark, B. J. Earp, Raymond Grissom, Marvin Pollard and the Editor. Elon students serving in the camp family are Helen Cobb, Marjorie Reidt, Warren Johnson, and William T. Scott, Jr. The only serious misfortune reported to date was that of a minister whose only sermon was devoured by an unsuspecting mouse. The mouse died!

SALVATION ARMY FOUNDER HONORED.

A bust of William Booth, founder and first General of The Salvation Army, was presented to the United Nations on July 2, eighty-second anniversary of the beginning of the organization. Trygve Lie, Secretary General of the United Nations, received the bust from National Commander Ernest I. Pugmire.

After working as a Methodist minister for years, William Booth came to the firm conviction that a fighting Christian faith called for followers who would serve God and man by providing not only spiritual, but also material assistance to the needy. He was thirty-six years old when he resigned his ministry to carry his message into the streets and homes of impoverished people who, because of their bitter lives, would not attend any of the established churches of his time.

After a short period of evangelical work, William Booth, assisted by his wife and a handful of followers, began providing food and shelter to the most destitute people of the London slums. As membership in the movement grew, military rules were adopted for the efficient functioning of this peace army "to preach and practice" Christianity.

The religious and social welfare activities of the movement spread swiftly to other industrial towns in England. The dramatic struggle to improve the wretched slum conditions of the period won converts rapidly and spread the work of The Salvation Army to other lands.

The first Salvation Army group landed in New York in 1880, with the founder's active support, to begin its work in the United States. Its activities today embrace the efforts of more than 5,000 officers assisted by over 50,000 lay workers and bandsmen, operating 1,365 outposts across the continent.

The world organization has grown to a spiritual force embracing 17,996-outposts in 97 countries, with a membership well above three million.

Dreamers and doers—the world generally divides men into those two general classifications, but the world is often wrong. There are men who win the admiration and respect of their fellowmen. They are the men worth while. Dreaming is just another name for thinking, planning, devising—another way of saying that a man exercises his soul. A steadfast soul, holding steadily to a dream ideal, plus a sturdy will determined to succeed in any venture, can make any dream come true. Use your mind and your will. They work together for you beautifully if you'll only give them a chance.—B. N. Mills.

A Professor Looks at the Church

By CLARENCE TUCKER CRAIG

During the past eight months I have been thrust out of the academic world on an educational tour in behalf of the translation of the New Testament in which Yale has had such a prominent part. I addressed nearly 200 audiences in 32 states; to reach these it was necessary to travel about 54,000 miles by every possible conveyance except rickshaw and wheelbarrow. It seemed to me that I saw every type of Christian Church, from California to New Hampshire and from Minnesota to Texas. As I retire once more to scholastic routine, I thought it would be fitting to give a report on the state of the Church as it appeared to a peripatetic professor.

I do not come to you with the comforting assurance that all is well in Zion. Nor, will this be an hour spent in lamentation over her fallen state. Every possible conclusion could find support somewhere in the American Church.

I. My first conviction is that the Church is poorly grounded in its own faith. In many circles, the corroding influence of a negative liberalism has weakened the older certainties. In others, traditional slogans are reaffirmed in most belligerent fashion. This division is even more violent than I had realized. For instance, in one state certain fundamentalists protested against the announcement of meetings for the Revised Standard Version under The Council of Churches. They themselves had an entirely separate association; they insisted that our sponsors were at best a Council of Churches. I do not believe, however, that this wing is better grounded in our faith. It takes more than a closed mind and resistance to change to enter experientially into the Christian gospel. Violent partisanship is something quite different from quiet faith. The activity of the heresy-hunter is often a screen to hide the weakening of his own faith.

The churches which I have seen are becoming more and more like political parties. They are afraid of clear-cut principles for these would exclude some; they prefer vague slogans which remain undefined. No wonder their faith is nebulous and uncertain. It is seen in the type of evangelism which is most popular; this consists in recruiting adherents for an organization on the assumption that most people already know enough about the Christian faith to make a decision for it, or can be taught it in one easy lesson. It is seen in the sermon topics which often promise chiefly book reviews and surveys of current events. It is seen in a Youth for Christ Movement with so little challenging ethical content.

As a biblical student I find very puzzling the apparent assumption of some of my contemporaries that divine revelation ended with II Peter. In fact, they would have us believe that this is the most important book in the Bible, because it guarantees the coming of the Lord, even though his Parousia is delayed.

I would not suggest that the Church is yearning for warmed-over versions of Wieman, Barth, or Kierkegaard. I do believe that they want ministers who know what the gospel is, and who believe that there is good news to preach; ministers who know how to relate that gospel to the needs and problems of the twentieth century; ministers who have not put a period at some past epoch in Christian development, but who believe that there must be fresh statement for every age.

II. In the second place, I see a Church which does not understand its function in the coming of a more Christian society. I cannot say that I found anyone who denied that religion should have some social outreach. The most conservative denominations have their social action groups. There may be belated individuals who still think in terms of snatching brands from the burning, but they did not cross my path. But in the months when the international scene deteriorated daily, when I had to reach appointments in three different states with the railroads paralyzed by strike, when economic thought was blazing new trails, the churches often seemed remote and irrelevant. Of course everyone believed in peace and social justice, but churchmen appeared blind as to their nature and impotent to advance them.

A free society has been the slogan of our time. It has been an appropriate antithesis to the totalitarianisms which we were opposing, fully as useful in combating Russia as Germany. But it means very different things to different groups. For some, it stands primarily for freedom from want; to get that, one must exercise freedom to strike. Others are more concerned with civil rights, freedom from economie and legal discrimination. For others the slogan is "free enterprise," in the sense of the abolition of all social controls checking greed; it has meant dependence on the pagan law of supply and demand instead of the Christian concept of a just price.

But have Christian people stopped to analyze what they mean by freedom? What are the controls which are indispensable if all are to share freedom in our complex modern society? Has a Christian society no meaning beyond the social justice which all men of good will desire? These are questions which seldom arose as I heard current issues discussed. Rarely did I see signs of thinking that went beyond an elemental protest against obvious individual wrongs. If we should succeed in setting free those men and women whom Christianity pronounces sinful, would that of itself bring a more Christian society? If certain coercive measures should be adopted, could we by that compulsion achieve Christian ends? Do we suppose that those outside the Church will welcome Protestant political pressures any more favorably than Protestants appreciate Catholic influence? Should we then retire from the world as a pure Corpus Christi, or, is there some other live alternative to a modern version of corpus Christianum?

III. In the third place, I have seen a Church which is strong in preaching unity to others, but does little to achieve it within her own fellowship. I would not for a moment appear sarcastic about the valiant endeavors of the Church to make her contribution toward a Just and Durable Peace. If the international scene is still discouraging, it is not because the churches neglected to marshal Christian opinion behind the steps which would forward peace. Yet, it was in the days leading up to the formation of the United Nations that we heard most about the sin of separate sovereignties. Now that our own nation is setting up exclusive military bases all over the world, that emphasis is heard less frequently. But on the whole the Church has been eloquent in preaching reconciliation and unity both to Capital and Labor, and to the nations of the world.

"Physician, heal thyself!" is the challenging rejoinder which ought to be heard more frequently. Nowhere have I seen that Protestant churches are more successful than other institutions in transcending the economic and racial distinctions among us. In fact, some might say that our record is poorer than some others.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I heard myself talking over the radio the other day. Well, folks, that was to me really an experience. I told my family that I was thoroughly disgusted. High, squeaky, cracky voice, at times plunging forward like the house was on fire, and then slowing down, and making such unseemly pauses, made me wonder who the gentleman was! It was a transcribed address which I had given earlier in the day as my closing meeting as president of the Suffolk Rotary Club. They said it was good. Please let us have it transcribed and given later this evening over WLPN. So I was kindly puffed up over it. I went down and read it off for the recording. And that night at 8:00 o'clock sitting back in a cozy chair all alone, I heard the announcer present me!

Then I began with a slight air of bombast, as it seemed to me, from the very start. There was that high, cracky drawl, "During this past year the Suffolk Rotary Club has done an overall business of more than $7,000 in expenses and benevolences," and I sat there and said: "Do tell!" I could not help but laugh at myself. He went on: "As your president I have called on many of you to do many things, some jobs which I realized would take a good bit of time and attention, and in not one single instance, have I been turned down, nor have I had to draw to the fore, in a single instance, our unwritten Club slogan: 'The Suffolk Rotarian does what his Club asks him to do to the best of his ability.'" Well, well, remarkable and redundant, I said.

Only consolation I have yet is that the fellows said it was fine, and they said it like they meant it. Even next day people on the street stopped me to tell me how much they appreciated my last night's address. I thanked them, but they couldn't know what I was thinking. When, for instance, I said "The Harris Memorial Foundation," I understood myself to say: "The 'Has' Memorial Foundation." And I had tried to be careful all my life to speak my words distinctly and clearly.

Now the point to all this is: Let our colleges and seminaries, and wherever speaking is taught, give the student repeated opportunities to hear himself speak. Listening to a voice made in one's own vocal organ next door neighbor to one's own ears—so that one hears oneself from the inner and outer angles at one and the same time is far different from that of another person listening to one. If years ago I had heard myself speak—because I really cared, and wanted to do whatever I did well—I might have done better. Aren't people kind! Because they knew I wanted to do my best they let me keep trying. It is not that I object to the "Southern accent," nor even the occasional drawl, but the diction could be much better, the change of range much better—and I shall let the reader supply from here on what he thinks could be "much better." At any rate it was fun to hear myself speak. And now I know why you are laughing!

TRUITT PHILATHEA CLASS HONORS TEACHER.

W. B. Truitt, teacher and namesake of the Truitt Philathea Class of the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., was honored with members of his class at a banquet given at the church on Friday evening, June 27, at 7:00 o'clock. The banquet was given by the O'Kelly Bible Class, the adult men's class of the church, in recognition of the outstanding record of the adult women's class and the long tenure of its teacher.

With the exception of two and one-half years during World War I, when Mr. Truitt was out of the city, he has taught the class continuously for forty years. He assumed this class shortly after his graduation from State College in 1907, and he has literally "grown up" with his pupils, since the Philatheas were, at that time, young people in the church. Under his leadership, the class has made a remarkable record in its growth and contribution to the church and its program. This is due not only to his splendid lessons and keen interest in the development of his class, but also his inspiration and vigor exhibited in all his activities connected with the church. Mr. Truitt has been a Deacon for many years; he served as superintendent of the Sunday school for one year; was director of finance for one year; and served as chairman of the pastor's committee during a period of about six months, when the church was without a permanent minister. Mr. Truitt's father, John W., was a charter member of the First Christian Church, as it was known then, and its growth since that time is due, in no small measure, to the constant loyalty and leadership carried on and transmitted by his son and the other members of that family.

The program Friday evening was in charge of Mr. O. H. Paris, superintendent of the adult department, and long a faithful member of the class. Short talks of commendation and appreciation were given by the pastor, Dr. W. E. Wisseman; the Sunday school superintendent, Mr. H. H. Rountree; and Lin Cox, representing the young people of the church. Mrs. Lily Caviness reviewed briefly the history of the class and paid special tribute to its teacher. After a short musical program, Mr. Truitt was presented luggage by members of the class in recognition and appreciation of his long service.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL AT ROSEMONT.

The Vacation Bible School conducted at Rosemont Christian Church closed last Friday after two weeks of daily sessions from 9:00 to 11:00 o'clock each morning. The school was sponsored by the three Protestant Churches in Portlock: Baptist, Methodist and Christian. The writer acted as director. The total enrollment of the school was 146. Of that number 86 were Rosemont children, 45 were Baptist children, 6 were Methodist children, 2 were Roman Catholic children and 7 were listed as belonging to no church.

You can imagine with a school of this size we needed plenty of teachers. We did have an excellent faculty composed of volunteers from all three churches. They numbered 18 in all. Those who helped from Rosemont Church were as follows: Mrs. Ada Gladestone, superintendent of beginners department; Mrs. J. D. Swink, superintendent of primary department, Harriett Lassister, Donna Litchfield, Charlotte Coley, Barbara Gallup, Betty Wright, Shirley Pritchard, Betty Williams, Mrs. B. M. Williams, Kathleen Robinson; Mrs. W. T. Stone, superintendent of junior department, Mrs. Lynn Davis, Marjorie Hassell and Jackie Wentz.

We had an opportunity to use in this school some visual aids equipment recently purchased by the Rosemont Christian Church an Illustravox Senior, a Natco 16mm. sound projector and a 52 in. by 70 in. Da-Lite Screen. So, in addition to the regular courses of study offered in the different departments, we had for the primaries and juniors three Cathedral Films on three different mornings: "The Child of Bethlehem," presenting the birth of Christ and his early life up to the time when he was 12 years of age; "The Prodigal Son," the story of which is familiar to everyone; and "A Certain Nobleman," presenting a careful portrayal of the customs and habits of the time of Jesus, especially those pertaining to the miracle of the healing of the Nobleman's son. The children delighted in seeing these sound films. It made what they were studying in their classes seem so much more real to them. The beginners were not left out when it came to the visual aids program. Two sets of slide films were ordered for them from the Church Screen Production Co., St. Louis, Mo., entitled, "Happy Times at Home" and "Friends Who Help Us." These slide films were shown also to the primaries and both groups were keenly responsive to them. Audio aids were used with the primaries one morning when they heard "Tails of Ancient Heroes" narrated by Lew Ayres on Majeste Records. The juniors spent another morning listening to records from "All Aboard for Adventure," series No. 2, Adventures U.S.A.

The superintendents, their teachers and helpers did a very fine job of keeping the children occupied for the entire two hours each day. They worshipped, studied, and made things together. They also played together, had parties together, and went on weiner roasts together. The attendance was good and the morale was high throughout the entire time. Everybody agreed that it was about the best Vacation Bible School we have ever had at Rosemont.

HERBERT G. COUNCIL, JR.

HENRY LEE ROBISON VISITS EUROPE.

Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Jr., Executive Secretary of the Virginia Council of Churches, flew to Europe on July 1 to visit areas in ten countries where relief to the needy is administered by Church World Service to which Virginians and the people of America have been contributing shoes, clothing, and bedding during the past year to help with the rehabilitation of distressed peoples in war-torn nations. He will also attend a two-day conference of the World Council of Churches and Church World Service to be held in Geneva.

The Richmond clergyman will spend sixty-five days touring England and the Continent as a representative of four large religious organizations. The Virginia Council of Churches is sending Mr. Robison to observe administration of relief materials contributed by the people of the Commonwealth and the Nation. He will also represent Church World Service and the Methodist Committee on Overseas Relief, and the Brethren Service Committee. Dr. Robbins W. Barstow, of New York, director of the Church World Service in the United States, designated the Virginia church official as the Church World Service representative, while the appointment as a delegate for the Methodist Church came from Bishop Herbert Welch, chairman of the Methodist Committee for Overseas Relief.

Traveling in the quadruple capacity, Mr. Robison flew from New York on July 1, arrived in London, England, on July 2. He will spend four days in London conferring with church leaders, then fly to Holland. In Amsterdam, he will join other representatives of religious bodies with whom he will tour ten countries by chartered plane where relief by the CWS is being administered. The itinerary includes Holland, Frankfurt and Berlin in Germany, Poland, Italy, Prague, Austria, Hungary, Greece, Rome, and Geneva. He will leave Europe on August 26, docking in New York, September 5.

Since last fall, the Virginia Council of Churches has been sponsoring collections of clothing, shoes and bedding for overseas relief conducted in the United States by Church World Service. A vast quantity of materials has been contributed by the residents of the Commonwealth in numerous local campaigns, including the recent drive in Richmond when 75 tons of material was collected and sent to the New Windsor, Md., center from which it was shipped for distribution overseas. Mr. Robison will visit the distressed peoples in devastated areas and confer with the administrative officials as well as local church leaders to learn first-hand of the needs of these people. He will also attend the two-day conference of church leaders assembled from all parts of the world at Geneva in August.

In outlining his trip abroad, Mr. Robison said that the tour will be the preliminary step to the fall campaigns to be held in Virginia to collect more clothing for overseas relief. Upon his return, Mr. Robison plans to tour all communities in Virginia to acquaint the people with the conditions abroad in an effort to lay upon the hearts of the people the needs of Europe and explain how the church can help build a foundation for peace.

INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL MEETS.

The most representative gathering of Protestant mission leaders ever held in North America assembled at Whitby, Canada, eighteen miles from Toronto, Ontario, the past week for the first full meeting of the International Missionary Council since 1939.

More than one hundred prominent churchmen from forty-one countries are participating in the meeting, which continues until July 18.

Delegates include Dr. John R. Mott, "elder statesman" of world-wide Protestantism and co-recipient of the 1946 Nobel peace prize; the Most Rev. K. W. K. Mowll, D. D., Protestant Episcopal Archbishop of Sydney, Australia; Bishop John A. Subhan of the Methodist Church of India, the first convert from Mohammedanism ever to be elected to the Methodist Church and honorary general secretary of the National Christian Council of China; the Rt. Rev. Stephen Charles Neill, assistant to the Archbishop of Canterbury, London; Dr. Rajah B. Manikam, secretary of the National Christian Council of India; Prof. Lootfy Levonian, dean of the Near East School of Theology, Beirut, Syria; Dr. Tsu-Chen Cho, dean of the school of religion, Yenching University, China; Count Steven van Randwijk, director of the United Netherlands Missionary Society; Dr. W. J. Gallagher, general secretary of the Canadian Council of Churches; Prof. Knut B. Westman, professor of Far Eastern religions at the University of Uppsala, Sweden, and vice-chairman of the International Missionary Council;

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Shaowu, Fukien, China,
June 5, 1947.

Dear Friends:

The first mid-week service at South Gate Church was held Wednesday night, May 28. Since we were the first to arrive I took my hymn book up to the little reed organ and tried playing a bit. The organ was all but completely broken down. There was not much sound but the wheeze of escaping air. That pathetic-looking little boy who lives in the church with his mother and brothers came to watch, and a few little girls to try and sing. Apparently some are not in school and their singing ability is low. They were so sweet, though, standing around wanting so much to learn. When I asked the little boy if he was in school, he replied that he had gone but wasn't going now. When I asked why, he answered with a child's frankness, "No money."

It made my heart hurt to see and hear those pitiful children. The boy's mother again brought me a little tea in a china glass. She always brings us tea or water in her very polite way. Mrs. Wei, a nurse at the hospital who lives next to the church, brought me a tiny kerosene lamp to use; we had brought our storm lantern whose light is very poor. There were a few other little lamps; but altogether, even, the light was very dim. Pastor Huang had fixed a table in the back with chairs around it. The people gathered there and as we sang, a few extra men (some were wounded soldiers) came in. When the preaching or Bible study began, they left.

The meeting, despite the dim light and the poor quality of singing, was inspirational to me; but made me a bit sad at heart.

Sitting there close to the people we had come to serve, watching their minister explaining the gospel, I felt the spirit of those missionaries who had gone before, the fruits of whose labors we are witnessing. I felt, too, the spirit of all Christians in ages past faced with people who need to know Jesus, people whose lives are poverty-stricken and dingy physically and spiritually. And my prayers went up for them.

As they strained to see the poorly printed words of the hymns and to read the difficult characters in the Bible, several people sharing one book, I thought of the Bible study groups at home, the attractive ladies parlors of many churches, the fine hymnbooks, and the wealth of wonderful Bible teaching materials readily available. Some day we hope to have better tools here, too. Thanks to American friends we do have some slides, a projector, a camera which we can use to make slides meaningful to the local people, and books in English for our own guidance.

We've always taken ads and pictures for granted; whenever I wanted teaching illustrations, a pile of old magazines supplied the need. Now, how we miss such colorful pictures. A former missionary sent us a scrapbook, and you should see how the men on the hospital staff enjoy its pictures! If some of you folks could send us church school lesson pictures you've finished using, Christmas card pictures, and ads showing home life or American life, our people would be overjoyed with them. If you send us Beginners and Primary pictures, Juniors, too, don't cut off the reading—that will make excellent material for English classes, and practically everyone wants to learn English. In fact, when teaching my advanced English class I often wish I had brought one of those beautifully illustrated third-grade readers we used in Waverly. School primers, second and third grade readers would be very useful for teaching our language.

Just another word or two about the little boy who can't afford school. Whenever he sees me he calls out, "Jan Taitai, Jan Taitai!" (Chinese for Mrs. Jackson), I always answer, "Hello!" and he shyly says, "Hello." Now he says goodbye in English, too. So I gave him one of those cute farewell cards you folks sent us. It has little bears saying goodbye and hello.

Two days after that first night meeting Pastor Huang told us the true state of affairs with this little boy. He and his family had had nothing to eat that day till Pastor Huang learned of it that night and sent them some rice. The father, a soldier, is caught in the civil war and cannot send money to his family. The little mother is too polite to ask for charity. We are hard-pressed to find a way to help. When we gave her a tin of Multiple Purpose food, she sent us nine eggs which her chickens had laid! I have arranged with her to do some mending for me. Mrs. Storrs had told me I might find a pile of undone mending very useful here in Shaowu as an opportunity for needy people to earn money.

Last night the little boy sat beside me. We had brought our bright gas lantern; so most of the people could see fairly well. Since the Chinese way of greeting is to say, "Have you eaten?", it was very simple to find out if the little boy had had supper. Yes, he had eaten—one bowl. I didn't dare ask if that was supper or for all day. He and the other children enjoyed my efforts to teach them "Jesus Loves Me" (in Chinese) just before the service.

Think about "my" little boy when next you eat a hearty meal, will you? Pray for him and all the millions thinner than he, who are suffering elsewhere in Asia and Europe. And pray that we might serve such as he wisely and in Jesus' name.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

WHO HAS THE ANSWER?

Questions, serious questions, confront Elon College today. These questions seem to multiply with every passing day. Answers do not appear. Can the answers be found? If so, they will be found among the College's natural constituency. You hold the answers.

Saturday I returned to the College after nine days' absence. I found lying on my desk a stack of checks waiting my signature. These checks represented refunds to applicants for entrance in Elon College in September for whom there are no rooms. These checks represented only those who enclosed cash with their applications. Applicants who sent checks or money orders were returned the same without passing through our books. We are compelled to refuse admission to more than 100 young men and young women who want to enter Elon College and who sent room reservation fees with their applications in the hope of being admitted.

Of course, I understand that we cannot admit any and all who would like to enter now, and perhaps we should not. But herein we do have a responsibility—one that we cannot afford to treat lightly. Many of these who seek an education now left college to enter the war to fight for us and country. They did their share. Now it is our turn. What are we going to do about it?

This naturally presents us with another question—the question of dormitories, rooming facilities for students. All who know Elon College intimately know of our plight in this respect. We have rooms available for about 400 students. These rooms are in dormitories or buildings that are now being used for dormitories. They are liveable but uninviting. They need a lot done to them. It costs money in large figures to redecorate old buildings. The College does not have money for this purpose, but the repairs must be made.

By all means we should have at least two new dormitories, modern and up-to-date. Building materials are still scarce and costly. Wages are higher than ever before. Money is scarce and hard to find. Will you offer a solution? Which is the way out? Where are the answers to be found?

All of this raises another question and a serious one—the question of instructors. We must have teachers, men and women who are adequately prepared by training and experience. These teachers must meet certain standards, but are they to be had? Can they be found? Yes, if we had sufficient money to meet present demands. The bidding for efficient teachers is startling. At this writing we need one instructor each for mathematics, English, home economics, commercial, dean of women, piano, voice, and an assistant librarian. Applicants for most of these positions should have their doctor's degrees and must have their master's degrees.

These questions confront us. They disturb us. Do you have an answer or a suggestion? If so, you would render the College a great service to forward the same.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

Some of our city churches will be having vacations or brief services during a part of the summer, at least. Our rural churches perhaps will be as active as at any other season of the year. At the College our expenses are about the same each month during the year. Members of the faculty earn their salaries in nine months but are paid on a twelve months' basis. You will render the College a much needed service by sending payments on your conference apportionments through the summer months as you do the fall, winter, and spring months. Several Sunday schools have reported the past two weeks. These contributions together with several contributions from different churches in the Convention make a very good report. I am sure that contributions from other Sunday schools will be reaching us this week and next. The continuous and generous support of the churches and Sunday schools is a source of gratification and encouragement to the College. These contributions may seem to you small, but if all Sunday schools and churches would cooperate, the totals would be sufficiently large to be of real help in financing the College.

A PROFESSOR LOOKS AT THE CHURCH.

Ecumenical cooperation has made great strides on some levels, but at the grass roots it is still pretty weak. Touring under the auspices of the International Council of Religious Education. I was scheduled wherever possible on an interdenominational basis. Over and over again it was demonstrated that this meant a more feeble backing than any single individual denomination could have given. Preachers would vote for an interdenominational meeting and then go right ahead with their own competing church program.

This professor has been looking at the Church. That is a desirable vantage point for a short time, but not for long. The Church can never be appreciated in the spirit of aloof appraisal. We must descend again into the struggle for spiritual values and religious faith. The role of the carping critic is unrewarding and unfruitful. I have not come to you at this time with an indictment, but with a summons to united confession and dedication. Let us resolve that we will go out from these halls as men and women who know whom we have believed, who are committed to the coming of a more Christian society, and who recognize now the sovereignty of no church but the universal body of Christ.—Yale Divinity News.

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

FUN AT VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL.

A little bird told your Editor that the Sanford children had a wonderful time at their Vacation Church School this year. Officers and teachers of the Sunday School assisted the minister, Mr. Carl Dollar. Each day of the session a mother of a child or children in the school was responsible for refreshments for the whole school. In the closing day the children were given a picnic at the city park where all had fun swimming.

* * *

I think I had about as much fun as anyone here at our Vacation Church School in Asheville! This is the first summer in three years that I've been able to help with the work. The four Todds went every day. It is a mile from our house to the church. Each day we would walk one way and ride back on the bus. Rebecca will not be two until the 29th of August, yet she walked the whole mile with seeming ease! Mr. Todd took charge of the attendance, memory work, music and hand work. I had charge of the story hour, helped with the hand work and took charge of games.

Our attendance was small but the children seemed to enjoy their work and play together. I think their favorite game was Bible baseball. The children chose sides. Mr. Todd asked the questions of the batters and I kept score for the sides!

The stories I used this year were from a book, Stories to Live By, by Gertrude D. McKelvey and illustrated by Pelagie Doane. These stories are based on The Beatitudes and have both boy and girl characters in them. The illustrations are very lovely. We memorized The Beatitudes as we went along and the children also gave little stories from their own lives on some of The Beatitudes at the story hour. One of our Sunday School classes has been studying about "Jesus the Courageous." Their teacher wants each pupil to write a simple story on "the life of Christ based on what they have learned." She asked me to try to give them some materials in our Vacation Church School which would help them. I told them several stories from the book, Stories of Long Ago by Mildred J. McArdle, illustrated by H. D. Gieson. There are ten stories in the book based on the life of Jesus. There is a poem in the book of Long Ago called "Jehovah Is Great," and several stories about people from the books of the Bible called "Stories of People of Long Ago."

Some of the children liked poetry so well that they wanted me to give them a poem or a poem prayer each day. I used Milne's book of poems, When We Were Very Young, for most of the poems.

The children made nice booklets and illustrated them with pictures from magazines, old church bulletins, etc. Each child printed the things he had learned in the booklet. One day they did finger painting and had a wonderful time creating different designs. We made the paint with clothes starch, boiled it and colored it with pure food vegetable coloring: red, blue and yellow. Their last project was to make a design and color it in a paper plate for a picnic plate. When the designs are finished and colored you shellac the plate with clear shellac. When the shellac dries a child has a nice plate for summer picnics.

On the last day of our school one of the mothers baked delicious cookies, oatmeal and gumdrop ones, and served them with refreshing fruit punch.

Now I have told you some of the thing that we did. We all would appreciate the findings from your Vacation Church School if you will just send them in to us!

CHILDREN'S MISSIONS.

The Junior Missionary Society of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church divided into two groups under the leadership of Mrs. T. Hayes Holland and Mrs. L. B. Norfleet is doing a good piece of work. Each group meets during the Sunday School period the third Sunday in each month.

The attendance has been exceptionally good and a keen interest shown in both study books used by each group.

At Thanksgiving a dramatization, "The Gift Without the Giver," was given by the older group. At Easter a program by the younger group, thus each group has given a public program.

As is the custom at Christmas the White Gifts for Elon Orphanage were sent. This year we had a large collection of useful gifts.

The highlight of the year's work to date was the collecting, packing and sending of a box of toys to Fancy Gap.

The superintendents and helpers were hostesses at a weiner roast given for the children in April.

This is a lively group and there is a great opportunity before them. We hope and pray that good workers for the Master may develop from this society.

TRAINING THE MEMORY.

By LELIA MUNSELL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"I've forgotten." "I can't remember." How many times we hear those statements! Perhaps we are sometimes obliged to use them ourselves. Now, if our memories often fail us it probably is because they were not well trained in childhood. Boys and girls can be taught to remember, and they can have fun while learning. Of course, a good memory will be a priceless asset to them throughout their lives.

Let me tell you about some of the games that my children and I have played to strengthen their memories.

All children ask questions—that is natural; but answering them and allowing the answers to go into their minds and as quickly out again is not wise. Therefore, I say to any one of my children: "You are asking the question now, and I'll give the answer; but later I shall ask you the same question, and then you must give me the answer. So, be sure to remember." That makes them alert, for they have learned that if they cannot remember my answers, very often I do not let them ask any more questions that day.

Sometimes we play directions. I hide a number of things about the house. Then I tell each child, only once, where to find a certain one of them. If any child fails to find his article, he is not given a credit on our "memory chart." However, next time I make the directions simple enough for that particular child to follow.

Another game is oh, look. I let one of the children arrange a number of familiar small objects on a table. Then all the others take one look for about five seconds. Each child is then given a chance to name as many of them as he can remember. I keep score. The one who has the most correct list receives a credit.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

THE VALLEY YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE.

More than eighty young people and their leaders attended the second Summer Conference of the Valley Young People's Conference held at Powell's Fort Camp, near Woodstock, Va., June 23-29. It was a great inspiration to a part of this splendid group and great good will come from the week of study, worship, fellowship and recreation.

Powell's Fort Camp is a natural beauty spot for such experiences, surrounded by majestic mountains, flowers, trees and other natural elements which causes one instinctively to turn his thoughts toward the loving Creator of our world.

The success of the camp was due in large measure to the sacrificial and hard work of Rev. S. E. Madren, Elkton, Va., who served as Dean; Rev. R. E. Newton, Luray, Va., who served as food administrator, and Rev. G. H. Veazey, treasurer. Delicious food was enjoyed at every meal and high praise should go to Mrs. Arthur Shifflett, Mrs. S. E. Madren, Mrs. Mabel Higgs of the Newport Church, and Mrs. Warren Good of the Mt. Olivet (R) Church who were responsible for the kitchen and dining room.

Everyone enjoyed the "Old Dominion Quartet," composed of splendid young men of the Winchester Church, Wayne Spaid, Ralph Pugh, Eugene Russell, Jr., and Charles Skeetz. These young men not only added to the pleasure of the camp in their impromptu singing but assisted greatly in the Vesper Services.

Besides the ones mentioned above the staff and faculty included the following: Rev. Wm. J. Andes, who taught "Old Testament Heroes" and "Men Who Knew God;" Dr. H. S. Hardecastle, who taught "First Followers of Jesus" and "From Foe to Friend" (Life of Paul); Rev. Roy D. Coulter, who taught "The Christian Church;" Mrs. William J. Andes, who taught "Jesus and the Problems of Life."

Mrs. Wm. T. Scott and Miss Elizabeth Chicoine conducted the Interest Groups on Worship and Program Planning.

Miss Jennie Jacobs was the guest missionary and inspired the group with a new understanding of our missionary opportunities. It is a high privilege always to have one of our missionaries in groups like this.

Vesper Services were conducted by Superintendent Wm. T. Scott.

Donald Seabright served as life guard.

We have a splendid group of young people and leaders in the Valley of Virginia and this Summer Conference at camp will increase the consecration and effectiveness of the work of our churches at the present and in the future.

FORSYTH-CARROLL PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

Over a hundred young people gathered at Elk Spur Church June 22 for the second meeting of the Forsyth-Carroll Pilgrim Fellowship. There was a good delegation from each of the seven participating churches: Belew Creek, Elk Spur, Ivy Hill, Pfafftown, Rocky Ford, Salem Chapel, and Winston-Salem.

The theme of the program was "Making Your Job Christian." It was opened by a panel of fellowshippers from Belew Creek who conducted a discussion of Christian service in the home. Then there were three group discussions. Mr. S. L. Mauldin of Winston-Salem, Mr. Worth Utt of Elk Spur, and Mr. Revere Morris of Ivy Hill led one group in a discussion of Christian service in business. Mr. Crouse Jones of near Winston-Salem and Mr. C. W. Fulk of Pfafftown led a group in a discussion of Christian service on the farm. Christian service in the factory was discussed by a third group under the leadership of Mr. Grady Young and Mr. Wade Marshall, both of Salem Chapel. After these group discussions there was a panel on full-time Christian service led by Mr. W. J. Andes, Mrs. H. A. Gleason, Jr., and Mr. C. R. Avery.

The recreational part of the program consisted of a game period led by Mrs. C. R. Avery and singing under the direction of Mr. W. J. Andes. There was a picnic supper on the grounds. The meeting was closed with a hillside vesper service led by a group of fellowship members of the three Carroll County Churches and a friendship circle led by the president, Mr. Grady Young.

Everyone was gratified by the large attendance and the good representation of all the churches. Each group feels a little better acquainted with all the others. The Forsyth-Carroll Pilgrim Fellowship is looking forward to its next meeting late in the summer.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention is meeting at Carolina Christian Church Thursday, July 10, 1947. Rev. Walstein W. Snyder is the president.

The theme of the Convention will be "Knowing and Doing the Work of the Sunday School." The session opens at 10:00 A. M. with worship service conducted by the young people of the Burlington Church. The theme for the morning will be "Know Your Work in Your Sunday School." Following the roll call and appointment of committees, Dr. F. C. Lester will give an address on the subject: "The Value of the Sunday School," followed by an address by Superintendent W. T. Scott on the subject, "The Service, Benevolent, and Mission Outreach of the Sunday School."

The theme for the afternoon session will be "How To Do Your Work in Your Sunday School" and the worship service will be rendered by Rev. Clyde Fields, followed by an address on the subject, "Preparedness," by Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds of Elon College. Group conferences, with the purpose of discussing "How To Do Your Work Well" will be conducted as follows: Superintendents and Officers—T. P. Miles, leader; Children's Workers—Mrs. W. W. Hall, leader; Young People's Work—Miss Betty Chicoine, leader; Adults—Rev. W. J. Andes, leader.

Following the conference discussion groups the Convention will reassemble for the closing address and worship service, "We Go Committed," by Mrs. William J. Andes. The Convention will adjourn at 3:45 P. M.

The Convention dues are 10c per member, and it is hoped that each Sunday School will send at least 10c for each member enrolled in their Sunday School. These funds go for the purpose of extending the work of the Board of Christian Education for the improvement of our Sunday School work.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

JOB FACES THE PROBLEM OF SUFFERING.

LESSON III—JULY 20, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Suffer hardships with me as a good soldier of Christ Jesus.—II Timothy 2:3.

LESSON: Job 1:6-3:26; 13:15; 19:21; 7:26; 23:1-6.

Some Haunting Question Marks.

The book of Job deals with some of life's most persistent and puzzling question marks. "Is all suffering the result of sin, and punishment of sin?" "Why do the righteous often suffer and the wicked seem to escape merited punishment?" "Given an all-powerful God, and a just God, how can we understand the existence of evil in the world?" These are the sixty-four dollar questions. But neither in the book of Job nor in modern life, do they find a final and complete answer. But the great drama of Job does throw a great deal of light upon these problems.

The Plot of the Story.

The questions listed above are dealt with in a dramatic way. In a book superb, both in its conception and in its development, the questions are put and discussed in poetic form and chaste and dignified language. Few pieces of literature surpass the book of Job in literary excellence.

The scene has a heavenly and an earthly setting. By a bold stroke of the imagination, Satan is portrayed as being present in the heavenly councils—not as outright evil in this case but as a cynic and doubter. He intimates that Job is good because it pays, because God has given him special privileges, because God has granted him special care. But says Satan, if God will afflict him, Job will soon renounce his righteousness. Given permission as a test case, Satan thereupon wreaks calamity upon Job. He loses his wealth, his health, his family (except his wife), in rapid succession. But he does not lose his faith. He is as good and as just when poor and alone as when rich and surrounded by family and friends.

But this fellow Satan is a persistent fellow, as all of us know. Baffled in his first try, he intimates that after all the first test was not a true test. Let Job suffer personally, let afflictions vent their fury on him personally, and it would be different. And again God gives Satan leave, provided that Job's life shall be spared. Thereupon Job is stricken with boils, so numerous and so terrible that he has to leave the city and take a place on the garbage piles outside the city where he sits in loneliness and misery.

Even then his faith does not fail him. His wife says it all does not make sense, and she suggests that Job curse God and die. But Job is made of sterner stuff. He has within him the stuff of which heroes are made. And although he rues the day he was born, and longs for relief, he has no complaint against God and holds instinctively to his faith in the justice of things.

The Folks Who Had Easy Answers.

Hearing of his trouble, three of Job's friends come to comfort him. At first they are overwhelmed by the picture of the disconsolate figure sitting in his misery amid such miserable surroundings. And then they talk with him and propose their theories as to why it all happened. The thing they emphasized was that Job had sinned—otherwise this thing would never have happened to him. They represent those today who have a glib answer to the problem of suffering and a ready explanation of the mysteries of religion. There is value in what they said because they present the theories that were then prevalent, and because they do reveal the searching of man after an answer to these pressing and persistent questions. Job maintains his innocence, however, and refuses to admit the correctness of his friends' thesis. A fourth man, Elihu, approaches the problem from another angle and makes a constructive contribution to the situation. But he, like many before and after him, had no final solution.

A Great Faith In a Great God.

After all the argument by the friends of Job, Jehovah manifests himself. He is much greater than Job even dreamed he could be. And like many another man, Job had to have a bigger and better God. And his vision of God gave him a greater God, one who could do all things, one who could not be thwarted by man, one who ultimately would work out his purpose, one who would bring to happy conclusion that "far off divine event to which the whole creation moves."

Trusting Where We Cannot Understand.

Job realized, as does every other sensible man, that when one comes to consider God he is dealing with that which ultimately must be beyond the power of the human mind to understand completely or to exhaust fully. Frankly when we are in the presence of God we are in the presence of mystery. This does not mean that we cannot know God. It does mean that we cannot know all about God. God is too big for our finite thoughts. He is infinitely beyond anything that we can think.

From Hearsay to Experience.

"I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee." Here again is a significant statement. Much of Job's knowledge of God had been inherited, and theoretical. He had accepted current ideas about God. Now he had had an experience of God, whereas before he had heard about God. From hearsay to experience—that is the goal of religion. It is not enough to know about God, we must know God. Religion that is second-handed is not religion. It is well to know something about God; it is best to know God. It is well to believe about God; it is best to trust God. God does not mean much, He cannot mean much, until a man says, "My God, my Saviour and Lord."

Seeing God and Seeing Ourselves.

Job was a good man—he was right in insisting to his friends that he was righteous and innocent. But when he saw God he realized his own imperfections and sins. And he was smitten with a sense of shame and penitence. This is one of the prime results of worship. Men need to see themselves before God. It is as we worship that we are condemned for our complacency and smugness and self-righteousness.

NEW DAY ASCENDING. Fred L. Brownlee. Pilgrim Press. $3.

This publication brings into sharp focus the running account of a prophetic movement in American life. The record of the Amistad Mutiny off the coast of Cuba in 1839, the dramatic trial of the slaves in New Haven and their final liberation give the setting for this book which is designed to acquaint our generation with a neglected phase of our democracy.

The A.M.A.—“sacred letters,” but not to be confused with the distinguished American Medical Association which unhappily bears the same initials—The American Missionary Association this past year celebrated its one hundredth anniversary of service to minority groups in America: Negroes, Southern Highlanders, Jamaicans, Hawaiians, Orientals, Indians, Eskimos, and Puerto Ricans. The A.M.A., formed in 1846, as “an independent, non-sectarian organization committed to the removal of caste wherever its sins were found was adopted in 1865 by the National Council of Congregational Churches as its agent in freedmen’s welfare.”

Secretary Brownlee has explored and digested the archives of the A.M.A. The reader gets a vivid glance of the A.M.A. schools: Avery, Bricks, Fessenden, Fisk, Dillard, Kings Mountain, Howard, Le Moyne, Talladega, etc. A wealth of biographical material, with pictures included, gives color and interest to the narrative. Church people especially should read this book and acquaint themselves with this century of altruistic and fraternal endeavor. No record of American history is complete without this historic struggle for more than unilateral freedom. Young people, especially, should know this story.

The chapter, “Congregationalism in the South” is irrelevant if the A.M.A. is strictly non-sectarian, and disappointing if it, like the American Board, is a missionary agency of the church. The story is both heartening (glorious beginnings, the establishment and maintenance of great schools, etc.) and disheartening (the closing of theological schools, the decline of the church, the drift of leadership to the North). Surely the word “Missionary” must not be understood in its customary and accepted sense. After a century of service by this renowned missionary organization the 1945 Year Book reveals the following startling facts. Talladega is the shining light among our Negro schools of higher learning. Talladega Church has 110 members. Alabama can now boast of only eight Negro churches with a total membership of 622. Tillotson appears in the galaxy, but no church is listed at Austin, Texas! The word “missionary” appears to be a misnomer. We have a College and University in Tennessee—Le Moyne and Fisk—and a total of four churches in the State with an aggregate membership of 536. How can there be a “New Day Ascending” when the church has failed to keep pace with the school, when religion has lagged behind education? The answer of the author is this: “Liberal education on the college level for Negroes is still missionary work.”

Much more could have been made of church union as an important item in the New Day Ascending, since union with the Christian Church has added measurably to the numerical strength of Congregationalism in the South. The writer states that, “The graduates from the Association’s schools and colleges have been inclined to go North. One by one the theological departments of the colleges have disappeared as ministerial training reached the postgraduate level. There has been a sharp decline in strong Congregational ministers and an influx of Methodist and Baptist preachers. Doubtless, paternalism has had much to do with the story . . . Congregationalism has also been noted for simplicity of ritual and a strong leaning toward the intellectual rather than the emotional in preaching, exclusiveness rather than inclusiveness in fellowship.” The author then concludes: “It is encouraging to note that in the past five years the tide has turned. There may be a new day ascending in this phase of work.” But the author does not indicate why, how or where the tide has turned and the new day ascends.

The dilemma or paradox of the A.M.A. is never resolved. Although it bears a name with the strongest religious implications, was adopted as an agency of the Congregational Churches, the problem is summarized thus, “Had the Association been denominational minded, the future would have been different. An articulate system of sectarian institutions might have been established as preparatory schools for colleges and universities, whose graduates in turn might have built strong Negro Congregational churches in the South. There were those who considered it shortsighted that the Association did not do this. The statesmanship of those whose vision took the wider horizons of the more distant future prevailed.” Many who read the book will find this conclusion unsatisfactory and not agree that it was necessary for the Congregational Churches to “sell our souls in order to become a national church.” R. DAILY PRAYER COMPANION. G. A. Cleveland Shrigley. Foster and Stewart Publishing Corp. Buffalo. $2.50.

This anthology of prayers will be welcomed by all ministers who believe that pastors should carefully write their pulpit prayers in advance instead of trusting to the inspiration of the moment for extemporaneous expression. The volume contains 366 prayers from as many American pastors—one for each day of the year. The prayers are suggestive for pastors, and will be directive for laymen.

Many of the leading pastors in practically all denominations believe that the Pastoral Prayer is the most important item in any service of public worship, and that a minister should always give careful thought and sincere prayer in preparing it in advance. This book will be an inspiration to pastors not only in the preparation of their pulpit prayers but also for their daily tasks—the book having a prayer for each day in the year. It is well edited, attractively and substantially bound, and will answer a long-felt need of many pastors and lay workers.

Naturally, no pastor can profitably use another man’s prayer, but most ministers are able to pray better by knowing how other ministers pray.

A PLAIN MAN’S LIFE OF CHRIST. Macmillan. New York. $2.

This worthwhile book is from the pen of the late Dr. A. D. Martin, prominent British pastor, author and leader in the Congregational Church of England and Scotland for many years. The author’s insight into the spiritual depths of the life and teachings of our Lord can but win attention and interest of both conservatives and liberals. The author’s style is pungent and arresting. The book is a distinct contribution to Christian thought and appreciation. It is different from all other attempts to present the scenes and what lay behind the scenes in the life of our Lord.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt

Dear Friends:

One of the most touching and beautiful scenes in the New Testament is that of a death, where lay the body of a woman named Dorcas. Surrounding the body were a number of poor people, not rich people, but the poor and needy whom she, during her life time, in her humble and unpretentious way, had helped; people who needed her help and who loved her for the services she had rendered. They loved her while she was living, and they didn't forsake her in death. They were there. Tears streamed down their cheeks as they talked of the death of this good woman, and displayed to one and another garments which the loving hands of Dorcas had made for them. What finer tribute could have been paid her? Dorcas was a woman, who in her quiet and effective way, did a lot of good. We think this is a beautiful story of the life of one who did much good in the community in which she lived, and one from whom we might get a wonderful lesson. She probably forgot self and gave her time and talents for others. She gave to the poor and needy. There are many ways by which we, as church people, can do good.

We read a story some years ago of a young woman who volunteered to go to the foreign fields. A short time before she was to leave she became afflicted and could not go. She said she would support someone who could go and take her place. She sewed, knitted, and crocheted, and sold her work. From the proceeds she kept a worker in the foreign fields. She gave her life for others.

There are many ways in which we can do good. One way is that of giving. We have men and women who send us offerings from distant states to help us in this work. Why do they send these offerings? It is because they are thinking of others rather than themselves. They get a real joy in doing for others. What we have accumulated is not ours. It belongs to God. "The cattle on a thousand hills are mine saith the Lord." We are his servants. He will call on us one day, and if He should ask you this question, "How much have you given to help the little children in your orphanage?", what would your answer be? Would you be happy to answer His question or would you be embarrassed? Remember, Jesus said, "Give and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give unto your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." (Luke 6:38.) Can we trust the Lord and give freely? Or will we doubt and not give? "Service above self. He profits most who serves best."

FOR THE CHILDREN.

Oh, listen is a similar game. All go outdoors and listen to the sounds around them until I blow a whistle. The boy or girl who can report the longest list of sounds heard is given a credit.

A game we all enjoy at bedtime is I remember. Everyone, in turn, recounts what he or she did from the time of waking to that moment. I take part in this game. One night my youngest boy protested to me, "But you tell all the little things." I told him he might, too, if he could remember them. The following night he won the game!

When we take a walk, or ride downtown together, we vie with each other in remembering the most things seen on the way.

The children have become really interested in this ability to remember and have invented games of their own. A child's mind is all too apt to wander, and if he permits it to do so, continually, he is forming a very bad mental habit. While he has the free time and energy of childhood, and while his enthusiasms are easily aroused—that is the time to help him to train himself in concentration and memory. If we make this effort in a dictatorial or faultfinding manner, it is unlikely to be successful; but if we encourage making a game of it, almost any child will respond joyously.

INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL MEETS.

Dr. M. A. C. Warren, general secretary of the Church Missionary Society of London; and the Rev. Michio Kozaki, moderator of the Church of Christ in Japan.

Three top-ranking German church executives are also accredited delegates to the Whitby meeting. They are Dr. Walter Freytag, secretary of the Evangelical Missionary Council of Germany, Hamburg; Dr. Karl Hartenstein, director of the Landeskirche, Stuttgart; and Dr. Carl Ihmels, professor at Leipzig University and director of the Leipzig Mission.

Among major topics scheduled for discussion at the meeting will be the problem of "orphaned missions" which have been cut off from their home base during and after the war, religious liberty issues now in the forefront of debate in many countries, and the recruiting, training and support of Christian workers overseas.

According to Dr. L. S. Albright, assistant secretary of the Council, the basic purpose of the Whitby conference is to "re-examine fundamental missionary principles and policies in the light of past experience and changing conditions and to seek a plan of action for the whole missionary enterprise that will enable both the younger and older churches to go forward together with renewed vision and fresh confidence in their common task—the winning of mankind for Christ."

"In examining the new setting of the church's task in the modern world," said Dr. Albright, "attention will be given to political, social, and cultural changes as they bear upon evangelism, and to trends of government policy which influence the prospects of religious liberty and the relations of the church with the state in the educational, medical, and other fields of Christian activity."

The following countries are represented at Whitby: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, China, the Belgian Congo, Union of South Africa, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, India, Burma, Ceylon, Holland, New Zealand, Norway, the United States, Canada, the Philippines, Siam, Sweden, Switzerland, Mexico, Iran, Finland, Syria, Korea, Malay, the British West Indies, Japan, Indonesia, Argentina, Angola, the Gold Coast, Cuba, Uruguay, Puerto Rico, the South Pacific Islands, Egypt, Palestine, and Iraq.

ROCKINGHAM WOMEN MEET.

The Missionary Rally for the Rockingham District was held at Linville on June 8th. Three societies were represented. The devotions were given by the young people and women's society of Linville Church. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was the guest speaker and gave an inspiring talk on her visit to India. Mrs. Florence Bryant was elected president of the district for the coming year. Mrs. R. A. Whitten, president of Women's Board of Valley of Virginia Conference, was also in this meeting.

AFRICAN APOSTLE.

The Ovimbundu Christians of Angola, Africa, met at Elende in April for their annual council. This council comprises the churches resulting from the missionary effort of the American Board and that of the United Church of Canada. There are also some other participants, for union is the accepted procedure among the younger churches. The national pastors are in charge and conduct their program and business in a dignified and efficient manner.

At the 1946 meeting of the Council they had voted to send Rev. Pauline Ngonga, a pastor of one of the Elende churches, to Johannesburg to visit the organized work which has arisen among the Umbundu speaking miners there. They also voted to pay his expenses. A whole year has been consumed in getting the necessary passports in order but now, at this meeting, the Rev. Mr. Ngonga was commissioned anew to this important task. Those whom he goes to visit are workmen who have made the long trek from Angola to Rhodesia in search of better working conditions than those which obtain in their own country. The Johannesburg mines are not noted for ideal conditions but compared to those to which Angola workmen are subjected they are excellent.

Mr. Ngonga made the long journey by train and was met at various stations by delegations of Ovimbundu bringing him presents of money and food. He was ceremoniously escorted across the border between Angola and the Belgian Congo by his enthusiastic countrymen eager to do him honor. At Johannesburg he was met by Dr. J. Dexter Taylor and introduced to the complex life of the mine compounds, a situation entirely new to his experience.

One arresting thing about this is the way the people from Angola have carried their religion with them and the deep interest they have in it. Another is the view it gives us of the younger churches competently managing their own affairs and sending out their own apostle.

GROW FOUR DAYS IN IOWA!

counseling on the home with college students and youth campers.

The Thursday, Friday and Saturday sessions are to offer a balanced program of worship, Bible instruction, forum discussion, addresses, special luncheons and dinners, denominational group conferences and fellowship, and music. In addition to choirs, orchestras, bands, and soloists, there will be ample time for congregational singing, led by Rev. Fred-eric Miller, minister of music at the First Presbyterian Church, Youngs-town, Ohio.

Sunday, the final day of the convention, will emphasize both the world view of Christianity and the personal responsibility to "Live Christ—Teach Christ." In the morning visiting national leaders are to occupy Des Moines pulpits, all speaking on the same theme. In the afternoon four or five Christians of foreign lands will bring a bird's-eye picture of Christian education abroad under the general topic: "Teach Christ As World Redeemed." Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, has as his subject for Sunday afternoon, "Christians Have No Option."

The climax of the convention will come in a worship pageant featuring a service of commitment Sunday evening, written and directed by Professor Pflug of Eden Theological Seminary, Webster Groves, Mo. It will feature a choir of one thousand. In addition to the 10,000 delegates, the state of Iowa is planning to recruit from 5,000 to 8,000 others to share in the evening's service of dedication.

Among convention speakers for the general sessions are:

For Bible hour—Dr. Paul Hoh, president of Lutheran Theological Seminary, Mt. Airy, Pa.; Dr. Ernest Trice Thompson, professor of church history, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.; Dr. A. G. Wehrli, head of the department of Old Testament and dean of Eden Theological Seminary.

For morning and evening addresses—Former Governor Stasses; Thomas Clark, Attorney General of the United States; Mrs. Harper Sibley, Rochester, N. Y., president of the United Council of Church Women; Dr. Charles Turck, St. Paul, Minn., president of Macalester College; Dr. Mordecai Johnson, Washington, D. C., president of Howard University; Dr. Reuben H. Mueller, Dayton, Ohio, executive secretary of Christian education, Evangelical United Brethren Church; and Dr. E. C. Farnham, executive secretary, Southern California Council of Churches and of the Los Angeles Council.

SPEAKING OF VACATIONS

By DAVID E. ADAMS

We all need rest, and most of us do not take half enough. Rest is a divinely ordained necessity for man. We see this need abundantly recognized in the everyday life of Jesus. He was always going apart to rest and pray. "Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile"—a characteristic bit of thoughtful care for the physical health and mental sanity of those men who followed Him, constantly living at a high pitch of intensity in their new experience.

But why the need of rest? Simply because the human mind and body and spirit are not machines which go on and on without a stop until the power is turned off or something breaks down. A man is more like one of the great power reservoirs back in the hills. When hot weather comes the brooks which feed it get lower and lower, and finally dry up. Slowly and more slowly the wheels of the power-house turn as the water gets low, and finally the station must be shut down until the reservoir fills up again.

So it is with a man. He cannot keep forever giving out power, be it physical, mental, or spiritual, without those replenishments of rest and prayer which Jesus used so wisely to control the strength of those men who worked with him.

The term vacation might well be applied to all the pauses in the steady work of life. It means literally an "emptiness" from work and care. In one of his lectures, Dr. Crothers urged the necessity of little vacations every day, even if they consist of nothing more than deliberately changing the subject of conversation and getting away for a few moments from those tiresome beings who weary us all day—namely, ourselves.

After such a momentary vacation from the accustomed rut of thought, one may come back with all the freshness of new discovery to the company of his own mind. We need the daily vacation. We need the weekly vacation far more than most of us seem to think by the way we use it.

And we need furthermore that vacation which is a real rest for a period of days from the routine work of life. We need the change of scene if possible, we need the change of activity, we need the change of companionship, we need the fresh enthusiasm and energy for our work which comes from being at a distance from it for a little space. It is a mistake to think your work so important that you cannot afford to rest from it.

But a person's vacation may and ought to have certain religious values. And these values are available to the man who spends his vacations on his own front porch, just as to the man who travels on a special train or who crosses the ocean. A vacation, to fulfill its highest purpose, ought to be a period of rest and leisure from routine work, a period of variety and change, if possible, but it ought not to be a vacation from God, and it ought never to be what people are sometimes tempted to make it—a moral holiday.

You cannot suspend the practice of personal devotion, of prayer, of public worship, and of association with people of high ideals without drying up the very sources which ought, during your vacation time, to be replenishing your reservoir of spiritual power against the days when the drain upon your resources will be heaviest. Jesus took vacations from work to seek God, not to escape from Him, and so should we.

If you can so use your vacation, short or long, that it brings you back to work refreshed and not jaded, strengthened and not weakened, deeper and not shallower, then it will have served the purpose for which it was intended. Then you can feel that it was indeed the Spirit of the Lord which caused you to rest.—"The Expositor," June, 1947.

The Sabbath

"As was his custom, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day."—Luke 4:16.

O Thou Who hast caused to be remembered in every age the changeless commandment,

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;"

Its dawn breaks again upon the deepening shadows of our stricken world, Calling the children of men to dedicate themselves to the worship of the highest;

And in fellowship with the best.

Seated in the silence of the sanctuary, we await the vision of Thy visit,
As quietness possesses our souls in the surrender of our wills to Thine.
With the promise of Thy presence to all who are in the Spirit of the Lord's Day,

We whisper, "Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth."

We are now conscious of a sense of eternity in our hearts,

And what we considered important in our estimation, becomes impotent in Thy presence.

The claims of the world which are too much with us,

And the demands of time drop into nothingness in the light of Thy timelessness.

Our cares and anxieties, with their irritating repetition, are lifted and left behind,

As we wait upon Thee in the mystic unity of our souls.

There are so many happenings we do not understand;

So many mysteries we can never hope to fathom;

But when we practice the assembling of ourselves together,

And listen to the voices from the Unseen,

We believe that love explains more than knowledge;

We have the assurance that we are always saved by hope;

We know what it means to put our hands into Thine in life's darkest moments,

And that the true antidote for all our fears is faith in God.

If there are any before Thee this day who are drifting in doubt,

Lift the light of Thy countenance upon them, and make Thy Word a lamp unto their feet.

Be to the weary their rest, to the heavy-laden their comfort, and to the sorrowing the balm of Gilead.

We beseech Thee to befriend the persecuted and the homeless;

Draw back with the cords of love the wayward and the lost;

Save us from becoming callous in our service for others;

May the sweet suggestiveness of the Sabbath heal our hurts, and calm our souls.

And as we come to the end of this day, grant that each of us shall say:
"I have met and talked with God."

Pilgrim Congregational Church,
Portland, Oregon.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Rev. T. Fred Wright was assisted in his meeting at Mt. Gilead last week by the former pastor, Rev. J. Frank Apple.

This week the revival meeting is in process at Mt. Carmel. The pastor, Rev. J. Frank Apple, is being assisted by Rev. T. Fred Wright.

Last week Rev. T. D. Sutton was assisted in his meeting at Oak Level, by Rev. W. W. Snyder. The meeting was well attended and the results were very satisfactory.

Time stands still for no man. In less than three weeks the Virginia Valley Conference will again be in session. The dates are August 6-7. Are you planning to be present?

LIBERTY SPRING HOLDS LEADERSHIP TRAINING SCHOOL.

A very successful Leadership Training School was conducted in the Liberty Spring Congregational Christian Church the week of April 7 through the 11th. The school was sponsored jointly by the following churches of our denomination, Bethlehem, Cypress Chapel and Liberty Spring. The following churches of the community participated, Great Fork Baptist, Whaleyville Methodist and Somerton Friends.

Rev. Graham McChesney, pastor of the Suffolk Presbyterian Church taught the course, "The Book of Acts;" Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Field Director of the Southern Convention of the Congregational Christian Churches taught the course entitled "Teaching Young People," written by George L. Cutton; Miss Ruthanna Foard, teacher of Weekday Religious Education in the Nansemond County School taught the course entitled, "At Work With Children in the Small Church," by E. L. Gillet.

Classes were held in the Liberty Spring Church with a two-hour period each night. One hundred teachers and church leaders enrolled in the school. Mr. R. Wesley Harrell, Superintendent of the Liberty Spring Sunday School, acted as dean of the school and presented sixty-seven credit cards for progress made in preparation for Christian leadership by the completion of their courses of study.

CLOTHING BAGS FOR CONFERENCES AND CAMPS.

Summer is conference and camp time for church people in America, when young and old gather for fellowship, learning and teaching. What better occasion is there for telling people about the work they are doing through Church World Service and encouraging them to share their possessions with suffering people in lands wasted by war? A clothing collection bag at every summer camp and conference would be one concrete way of presenting the need and the means of action. It would help make a clothing bag in every home as much a matter of Christian practice and privilege as church attendance. Write the Promotion Office at New Windsor, Maryland, Church World Service Center for one today. The clothing bags are available upon request without charge. They hold between thirty and fifty pounds of clothing, shoes and bedding. Shipping back to the Center is only a matter of minutes. Just tie up the top and call the express office. The address of the Center is stencilled on the outside.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

BOARD OF EDITORS.

PORTRAIT OF A MOVIEGOER.

By PAUL F. HEARD, Executive Sec'y,
Protestant Film Commission, Inc.

When we criticize films, we are told that inferior films are what you want—you pay millions of dollars for them in quarters and nickels and dimes. And what happens when a good picture is produced? Very often you simply do not go.

You want escape. You do not want a film to have anything to do with life—that life which frustrates and inhibits you and of which you are unconsciously afraid. You do not want a film which makes you feel too deeply, or think very much at all. You like typed characters, the obvious plot, the pet phrase. There are stock situations of which you may be counted on to laugh or cry, with infinite regularity. The hero who marries the boss' daughter, the poor girl who becomes rich—yes, the criminal who breaks jail—there, in truth, are your delights. Purring motor cars, vast houses, beautiful clothes, sexy women and virile males, the attentive butler and the easy drink—it is by the portrayal of these that the movies satisfy the alleged desires of your secret heart.

You pretend to be shocked, but you really love the brittle talk, the suggestive innuendo of gay dialogue, for these elements glamorize and make "right" the kind of life you want but cannot have.

And how you love the happy ending! It must—it simply must—turn out all right, at least on film. For the days of your life are deadly, monotonous and dull, and neither gregariousness nor solitude, industry nor leisure, morality nor vice, nor all your scoffing or all your piety, can quite banish the deep despair which clutches at your heart.

Your idols are money, sensation, and a brand new car, whatever lip service you may give to other creeds. You have no faith. You have no real God.

This is you, the moviegoing audience. Or is it?

If it is not, why have many good films, in terms of box office, been colossal flops? Films like "Abe Lincoln in Illinois?" This was certainly a good picture. And where were you? If this is not the kind of audience you are, why have you disappearingly gone to bad films, and let the good films fail?

Do we really want better films? The only way to prove to producers that we mean business is to stay away from bad films and to support the good films at the box office in terms of dollars and cents.

FIREPROOFING THE GUESTS.

Prominently displayed in the elevator of the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria, Va., is a sign which contains some good wit and much sound philosophy:

WE CAN FIREPROOF THE HOTEL BUT WE CANNOT FIREPROOF THE GUEST WHO SMOKES IN BED.

There is a very sober principle of life embedded in this practical warning to which we humbly commend the attention of our readers. There is a widespread tendency in our time to evade responsibility. Literally millions of people expect the government to be doing for them the things they ought to be doing for themselves.

Too many parents are assigning their responsibility for their children to the Boy Scouts, the Sunday School or the summer camp. Businessmen, farmers, workers and industrialists alike turn to the state for the solution of their problems.

There are, however, certain basic responsibilities which every man must assume on his own account. The hotel landlord can provide safe sleeping accommodations, but it is beyond his power to make the sleeper a safe guest. The obligation must be assumed by the sleeper himself.

This tendency to evade responsibility appears very frequently in our prayers; we plead with God to give us the things we should be out working for; we ask for blessings that are to be had only as we comply with certain strict and unalterable conditions.

A discerning psychologist offered a comment along this line not long ago when he said, "You can choose your attitude but cannot choose the results of that attitude. Those results are inevitable. If you want different results you will have to choose a different attitude."

God can give us a world packed with privileges but we must work for all the privileges we enjoy. There is something very significant in the fact that the great mineral deposits are all buried in the earth where men have to dig for them.

A secular-minded layman was talking about a devout old man of the congregation. "I wish I could pray like he can," the secularist said. "It must be wonderful to speak and make God hear."

It is wonderful, and the old man was effective in prayer. But his efficiency was not a native instinct. Rather, it was an acquired gift and any person, including the secularist, may have it, providing he is willing to pay the same price for proficiency that the old man paid.

We are all acquainted with the person who goes about surrounded by a cloud of gloom and who spends his time wondering why life is so difficult. And we are likewise acquainted with the one who radiates sunshine and good cheer and who finds life a glorious adventure. The difference between the two is not their environment, but their inner resources.

A Negro maid in a sanitarium was discussing the situation with a patient and in the course of her remarks said, "I have noticed that it makes an awful lot of difference what kind of environment a person has got inside of them."

There is a hint of this philosophy in the Old Testament in the familiar words, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it cometh the issues of life." The great influences in our experience are not those which crowd in upon us, but those we raise up within us. It is the fireproofing we do on our own souls which protects us from the flames.

A spirit of suspicion, a disposition to criticize our friends, the persecution complex, the inflamed spirit that comes with a sense of continual outrage, these things have the effect of ruining life for anyone, no matter how pleasant the physical circumstances of their surroundings may be.

No church service has ever been able to lift the load off a man's mind if that man came to church determined to find fault with every item of the service. No sermon has ever saved the sinner who preferred to be lost. It is very hard to be hospitable toward the stranger who turns his back on the outstretched hand of friendliness.

All of us live every day in constant companionship with the fears we have encouraged. We feed on the pictures with which we have filled our minds. We are tormented by the foul imaginings of our own perverted anticipations.

On the other hand, we also live every day with the hopes and the faith we have cultivated; we draw sustenance and strength from the scriptures with which we have flavored our minds; we rise up on the wings of our confidence in godliness and goodness.—Roy L. Smith in The Christian Advocate.

"The great difficulty with the world is not its ability to produce, but its unwillingness to share."

THE CENTURY OF THE UNCOMMON MAN.

Much has been said and written lately about the "Century of the Common Man." Dr. Palmer facetiously remarked that this is the secret of his election as Moderator of the General Council! There is a great truth in this conception which is the essence of democracy. The dignity and the prerogative of the ordinary man must be zealously guarded. His franchise must be recognized and his ability utilized. Great reservoirs of leadership and good will may be found among the masses. Progress is realized from the bottom up as well as from the top down. But beneath this democratic philosophy lies a more profound truth, the truth of the Christian gospel.

The first century was the century of the Uncommon Man. Dr. William E. Park says that "You will never find in the New Testament that Jesus made any reference to the common man. He recognized clearly that all individuals are different and one of his greatest powers was in being able to understand the separate identities of the persons He met, and with an almost clairvoyant realism discover their unique problems. The thought of there being such a thing as the common man goes contrary to all the basic ideas which Jesus expressed. He always emphasized the fact that every human being was unique and precious in the sight of God, and that individual human personality was sacred."

The unequivocal words of Christ were: "Be ye perfect as your Father in Heaven is perfect." Those who respond to the demands of Christ, who open their lives to his spirit are no longer ordinary or common persons. Dr. C. H. Dodd described the first century Christians thus: "They were conscious of living in the presence and power of the living God: in the immediate contact with the deep and permanent springs of life in the unseen world. In making the gift of the Spirit a part of their public proclamation, the early Christians did not intend to rest their case upon essentially incommunicable inward experience. They meant to say that there was a new kind of community life, exhibiting the marks of inward spiritual power in its freedom, unity and constructive energy."

The first century, the great century, was formative and determinative. The meaning and nature of the birth of Jesus, the significance of his death, and the place of the Spirit which was so potent in the experience of the Christians—all these engaged the attention and stimulated the thought of the Christian minds. A Christian literature arose. New ethical standards were established. Men were released from moral bondage and impotence. Kenneth Scott Latronette writes of this first great century: "There was a conviction that through Jesus had come not only forgiveness for sins but also a new life of victory over sin, and that true Christians had at work in them a power which should hold them to conduct higher than that of the average mankind around them. From Jesus came an impulse which disturbed men in their easy acquiescence in that they could reach something better and higher. Moreover, through Jesus had come a new motive. Men were to love God and one another because in Jesus God had loved them. Righteous living was to be sure, still the command of God, but it was to be inspired by gratitude to God who in Jesus had loved men and given Himself for them. With the new motive also came power. Through what Christians called the Spirit, men had a fresh experience which enable them to make progress towards the seemingly impossible moral ideals set forth by Jesus." Converts, we recall, came thronging into the church. A pagan empire began to yield to the influence of the Christian fellowship.

What of our own century? We must admit, first of all, that there is much that is common, common in the sense that it is mediocre, mean, cheap, trite, plebian, inelegant, vulgar. There are yet those whom the refining influence of Christ has never touched. There is much in our society today which is nothing more than common, in the lowest sense of that word. The newspapers, courts and crime records attest that fact.

Think once more of Simon, Levi, and Zaccheus, how these very common men became men of superlative character. The ancient miracle must be reproduced. Truly this is an age for greatness. The exigencies of our age call forth the qualities of the uncommon man. Great causes wait to be served. Destiny remains in the balances. How dare any one live at less than his best? The story of Nazareth and of the first century is the story of the uncommon man. Nineteen centuries have lived for ours. This, therefore, should be the age of the noble, heroic, unselfish, uncommon man.

R. L. H.

Phillips Brooks once said: "Sad will be the day for any man when he becomes absolutely satisfied with the life he is living, with the thoughts he is thinking, and the deeds he is doing; when there is not forever beating at the doors of his soul some desire to do something larger, which he knows that he was meant and made to do because he is a child of God."

There are few of us so blind as not to realize that unless the moral force of religious conviction impels, the goal of true and lasting international cooperation cannot be attained; who do not appreciate the vital truth of the words, "If God does not build the house, those who build it build it in vain."—Sumner Welles.

Religion is to life what the forests are to hillsides. The spring of integrity and goodness, of human kindness and whatever else saves us from worse than brutish lives are kept alive and flowing beneath its shelter. When religion is gone the springs dry up and life becomes parched and arid.—Gaius Glenn Atkins.

Adversaries and Open Doors

By MRS. W. E. WISSEMAN

An Address by the Retiring President Before the Woman's Convention in Session at Elon College, June 17, 1947

In our home mission study on Race Relations this past year, one of the methods we used with some of our young people and children was a quiz. One of the questions was: "In what age are we now living?" I was interested to note that even the youngest knew that we have passed into a new age—the atomic age—and I think that many of them realize that this new age is a crisis in our way of living. Do you remember several years ago when we studied China as our mission study we learned that the word, crisis, is written with two characters—"danger" and "opportunity." Paul had the same idea in mind when he wrote many years ago to the Corinthians: "For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." Some modern Paul might well write that same message to the Christians of our world today: "For a great door and effectual is opened unto us, and there are many adversaries."

How many adversaries there are in the world, hindrances to the coming of the kingdom of God. Think of the war-torn countries—the destruction there, the panic, the tragedy, the fear, the looting, the suffering, the disease. See in your mind's eye the children of these countries—their wasted bodies, their eyes too large for their faces—sad, hopeless eyes. No child should know the suffering and sorrow which the eyes of these children portray. And fear is there. Fear of the future, fear of the stronger nations. And I am afraid hatred is there also.

But do you know, the greatest adversary to our missionary work is not the destruction of so many of our churches, schools, and hospitals, nor what has happened to the people in the war-torn countries. The greatest adversary is our own thoughtlessness and neglect. Our indifference—our nonchalance. Missionaries who return to our country on furlough are amazed at our lack of feeling. Back in the 1800's when the American Board was born at that haystack meeting they had something which we, their descendants, have lost. They were concerned for the "heathens." Today the word, heathen, is out of style. Pray God, that our concern for others is not also out of style.

There are many adversaries, but Paul would remind us that there is also an open door of opportunity—a great door and effectual. Opportunity is the dominating word today, as someone wrote from China: "We are not unmindful of the dangers, but we are thrilled at the thought of the opportunities before us."

There is first of all the great opportunity to relieve suffering, to provide homes for the homeless, to feed the hungry. Many of us are prone to feel that now that the war is over the need is not so great. Almost the opposite of this is true. Leaders who have been to Europe and the other countries tell us that never has the need been greater. Anne McCormick says, "The problem of hunger hangs over the war devastated area of the world like a blight." Hunger is a great and destructive force. Men will steal to feed their children. Men will fight for food. We who love our children and want the best life has to offer for them must also want that same good for all other children. It is well and good to provide the proper vitamins for our own children, but we must be concerned also with those other children who greedily search garbage cans for a crust of bread. Many people feel that America, a land literally flowing with milk and honey, is today at the crossroads. Ours is the opportunity to share out of our abundance with those who have so little—to clothe the naked, to feed the hungry, to visit the fatherless . . . to hear the words of our Father, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Second, there is the open door of new and enlarged fields of work.

Once again we see the wonderful truth that God takes evil and makes good out of it. Most of the missions work in China up to the time of the war, was in coastal China. Not many missionaries had gone inland. Vast areas of China were untouched. Now we know how they were forced inland. The glorious story of the trek of these Chinese people is something that will go down in history. We know how missionaries and students moved a whole school for hundreds of miles inland. People who had never heard of Christ and Christianity have been touched by these people. It reminds us of the days of the early Christians. They were persecuted and driven out of Jerusalem. Their enemies tried to put out the fire of Christianity by kicking it out. But as they kicked the coals scattered and every coal was fanned into flame. Instead of putting out the fire they started more fires. So it is in China.

I believe that we will find, too, that the church in Japan was strengthened during the war. Because all missionaries were withdrawn and the responsibility was thrown wholly upon the Japanese Christians—in spite of the hardships which they had to endure—the work continued and grew.

For us of the Southern Convention our new opportunity is the Shaowu Mission. Closed for many years because of lack of funds, it is now our responsibility. When several years ago Mr. Lester said to the American Board, "Give us of the Southern Convention some task, some work that will not be done unless we do it," they gave us Shaowu. And to it we gave the Jacksons, and to them we gave our pledge of support. As we read the letters about Shaowu and the people there and hear of the real hunger they have for things spiritual, their eagerness to learn, the sincere welcome they gave the Jacksons it makes us feel that here indeed is an open door!

The open door to relieve suffering, feed the hungry; the open door in new fields of work. And there is another open door—shall I call it the opportunity to make America Christian? I am thinking of our opportunities as parents to make our homes citadels of faith and love. The opportunity we have as teachers of children and young people to instill in them the ideals of Jesus. How heartily I agree with the person who said, "It is a wonderful thing to take a bit of gold and a few jewels and make out of them an instrument that will keep time with the sun. A

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Christian Missionary Association, an over and above association for generous and courageous Christians, will meet this fall in the Suffolk Christian Church. Its session will be held in the afternoon and evening of the first Tuesday in December. It will consist of a business meeting in the afternoon at 4:30 when some twenty-five (according to last year) churches will pool their memberships into a sizeable sum for the helping of strategic fields in our conference. More than $2,500 will be thus raised (according to last year's experience) for the building and sustaining of some growing churches and pastorates within our boundary. It is a really great home missionary work, and many of our best people find it a joy to see what we can do.

Newport News led the way last year with $450; Liberty Spring followed closely in their wake with $420; Suffolk was third up with $280. This year Suffolk will seek to add at least $200 to that figure, and step out front unless others pull up, too. The field of the Rev. Dr. I. W. Johnson led all last year—taking his field as a unit—with a total of $650. (I wish a number of good Suffolk folk would read these lines and say: "Pastor, we will try to go beyond even that figure this time!") It is not unthinkable that we could have one hundred memberships at $10 per head.

Besides the good fellowship we may all have in raising good sums for our respective church's reports, we can greatly help in building up the church in our conference, and the Kingdom of God in our midst. Right now we see the urgent need for at least $4,000 instead of $2,500 as was raised last year. Why can we not get the spirit of progress for several of our needy fields, pastorates, and as yet untouched sections? We are a compact, solid, progressive conference of good church people. Let us build up our conference. Let us catch the spirit of this age of advancing church life, and great need, and see to it that churches which need full-time pastors get them, and that struggling building programs feel the encouragement of help—real help from a good conference able to help them.

In this letter I wish to appeal to the pastors of the nineteen churches which made no contributions to this fund last year to help their churches this year to do so. Nineteen churches at an average of ten memberships could give us a great thrill, and find joy and enthusiasm for themselves. I also wish to appeal to church treasuries, Sunday school classes, and church organizations to see to it now that their respective churches and organizations are in the records this coming year. Turn to page 193 of the new Annual (1946) and look for your church, or Sunday school, or organization and make an earnest prayer that you do better this year. I happen to know that this is a most worthy conference enterprise, and that really good work can be done with your help. Begin planning now, and come with an enthusiastic report to the annual meeting in Suffolk in December.

ADVERSARIES—OPEN DOORS.

wonderful thing to take a canvas, some brushes and some paint and create a Millet's 'Angelus.' A wonderful thing to take a pine board, a pot of glue and some strings and make an instrument that can sob out an Ave Maria. But the most wonderful thing in all the world is to sit down with a child, and enlarge his horizons, push back the foothills and enrich his understandings." That is our task and opportunity . . . to so teach and inspire our children that they will be dissatisfied with the world which is and will build together a world of love and brotherhood and understanding.

I am thinking, too, of the opportunity we have of living out Jesus' teachings of brotherhood. We, of America, a land made up of many races and colors have the best opportunity in the world to show the United Nations how people of different races, religions, colors and castes can live together in brotherly love. For if we cannot love the Jews and the Catholics and the Niggers whom we see—how can we love the Russians whom we have not seen.

The things which I have been saying are not new. They are the things which you feel as you read the newspapers and magazines, the things your pastors have been preaching. But I dare to repeat them because I believe that the doors which are opening before us are great and effectual.

And I would add this—the best instruments God has for opening these doors are you and me. God could if He chose, feed all the hungry, clothe the naked, reach all the unreached. But He doesn't do it that way. He uses people. People like Lord Shaftesbury of England—rich, cultured, highly educated, at twenty-five a member of Parliament. One night sitting by the fire, he excused himself at ten o'clock, and with his two hired assistants went out into the slums of the city. When Parliament dismissed at midnight he went forth with his lantern. He was a lover of good music and good books, but he denied himself long hours at night with them in order to minister to the poor. He gave his Sunday afternoons to exploring lanes and alleys. His first reform was for the waifs and strays. He founded fifty or more ragged schools attended by some 10,000 children. Night schools he founded, industrial schools, Sunday schools. Finally as an old man he stood before Parliament and said, "My lords, I am now an old man. When I feel age creeping upon me and know I must soon die, I am deeply grieved, for I cannot bear to leave the world with so much misery in it." And his funeral was such as London has rarely witnessed. In "T" Square there were 40,000 factory hands, flower girls, working people whom he had befriended. The boys from the ragged schools lifted this banner: "I was sick and ye visited me." The costermongers lifted this: "I was a stranger and ye took me in." What doors this man opened for God.

God uses people like William Booth who when asked the secret of his success replied: "God had all there was of me. There have been men with greater opportunity for an education than I had, men with greater brains, but from the day I got the poor of London on my mind and a vision of what Jesus Christ could do with the poor of London I made up my mind that God should have all of William Booth there was."

God uses people like you and me—wherever we live, whatever we are doing. He needs us to open his doors. Herman Hagedorn in his poem, "The Bomb That Fell on America," has the voice of God say: "Give me your life and I will make it a spade to dig the foundations of a new world, a crowbar to pry loose the rocks, a hoe to mix sand and cement, a trowel to bind stone to stone and make them a wall. Man without God is a bubble in the sea, a single grain of sand on an infinite beach. God without man

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

WHEN SHALL WE BUILD?

I would call your attention again to two serious emergencies at Elon College, our own church institution of higher learning: houses for students and faculty members to live in and faculty members to instruct the students when they come.

To supply the first emergency would materially help to supply the second. There is no question about the need for new additions to our dormitories and needed improvements for the dormitories that we now have. These needs have been recognized and preliminary steps taken looking toward the meeting of these needs. But building operations have not begun. The one great question confronting the total constituency of the college today is: when shall we build, now or later?

There are arguments on both sides, but bear this in mind, I beg of you, that arguments will not supply these needs. We do not need arguments; we need action. "They" tell us that it is too expensive to build now. True, it is. But will "they" tell us when it will be cheaper. "They" say: "Never go in debt again at Elon College for anything. We have had sufficient experiences with debts at the College, and no building operations of any kind should be undertaken until we have the money in hand to pay for the same." That sounds good, sounds like a safe policy. But what are "they" doing to provide the money with which to pay? At the present rate at which "they" are giving, when would the College ever have sufficient money to pay for one building to say nothing of the seven needed? "They" should be careful not to use existing conditions as excuses for failure to do their duty. Excuses are flimsy articles in the realm of realities.

Building cost is high, higher than this generation has even known it to be. Materials are costly and difficult to secure. Wages are more costly and less productive. The laborer works fewer hours and gets less done than ever before. He has to take time out for a "coke," a "smoke," and a "breather." All of these cost money and add up when the week is done. Too expensive, you say. Yes, but what are we going to do about it? To justify our failure to build does not help to meet our emergency. It does not improve our present dormitories, does not provide new ones to meet our needs.

Would it be fair to look at the other side of the picture? It is costly, too costly, but on the other hand, we and "they" have more money than ever before. Profits and wages are higher; money is more plentiful. We and "they" are more able to give than ever. When building costs come down, money will become less plentiful and more difficult to secure for building purposes. After all is done and said and all arguments are in, the comparative cost of building is about as great at one time as another. The question for us—trustees, Church, and alumni—to decide is: "Are we going to meet the emergency now existing at our college, or are we not?" If we are, the question is, "When and how?"

The writer is well aware of the fact that our local churches, every one of them, have things that should be done. They can plan large enough to require all of their surplus money to tax their giving to the limit so that they will not have money for other things. Also, we may assume obligations in other fields than our own church that will tax our capacity financially. But after all, is it not true that progress is practically impossible without trained and sufficient leadership? This is true in the pulpit at home, in the pulpit on foreign fields, and everywhere. It is also true that Elon College is our institution for the training of our leaders. When we neglect the College, we necessarily reduce the quality of leadership required for progress. It would seem to be a part of wisdom to put contributions today where they would mean the most to the total program of the church. Emergencies exist all along the line, but let's turn our attention to the essential emergency—the one which if met will help materially to meet others. Your co-operation and suggestion will be greatly appreciated.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

Habit is a great thing. When you do a good deed from time to time until it becomes a habit, you have gotten yourself into a service that is really worthwhile. To fail to do this deed when the opportunity comes occasions an uneasy conscience and an audible demand within that you perform your duty. It would be wonderful if all of our churches and Sunday schools would make quarterly contributions to the college as requested by the Convention until it becomes a habit with them. Such a habit would insure the college of a degree of support that would mean much in its economic life. Someone said to me, "It is too bad that the college has to be continuously appealing to the Sunday schools and churches for support." I disagreed. I think it would be too bad for the church and the college if such were not the case. It is only by mutual support that we attain mutual assistance and mutual inspiration. So long as the church supports the college, the college is conscious of its obligation to the church and shall endeavor to seek to do its best for the church. The college does not repay the church in dollars and cents directly, but it pays dividends on the money invested in the college by the church in trained leadership for pulpit and pew. By working together both the college and the church shall be strengthened and the fruits of their efforts shall be mutually beneficial. The college is most appreciative of the church's assistance.

THE CONTRIBUTION OF CHRISTIAN COLLEGES IN CHINA TO THE WORLD CHURCH TODAY.*

By DR. T. C. CHAO, Dean, Yenching University School of Religion.

It is with pleasure and intense eagerness that I accept your kind invitation to speak on the subject of the Contribution of the Christian Colleges in China to the World Church Today. Perhaps it is not inappropriate, nor immodest for me to say that I am one of those who ought to appear before you to bring the vision which you certainly have already had, of the actual and possible contributions of the Christian Colleges. As a graduate of a Christian University in China, as a teacher first in one and then in another of the Christian colleges, and as a minister of the gospel, deeply interested and involved in church life in China, I am acquainted with the activities and aspirations as well as the great and urgent needs both of the educational institution and of the ecclesiastical organization. Both of these—the University and the Church—owe their existence, maintenance, and support to the prayers, plans and efforts of the Christian people in this country. For all these we are not without gratitude and appreciation. We do not often show our gratitude and appreciation in lip service which you do not need; for we assume and feel certain that you understand that as a people who have the foundation of their corporate life in gratefulness to their ancestors, to the sources of life, we consider it a shame and a stupidity not to acknowledge our heartfelt gratitude to those who give us the good things for growth and development. We, the Chinese people, are still a race, (in spite of political, social and intellectual revolutions that have thrust our whole culture into a process of disintegration and collapse) that contains in its very blood a religion of gratitude, to heaven, earth, ancestors, teachers, friends, and all who give their best to us.

*Delivered at Annual Dinner of Associated Boards for Christian Colleges in China, in New York City, May 12, 1947.

As to the contributions that the Christian colleges in China can bring to the World Church, is it not already quite apparent to you that they are as they have been, the sharp thrust of the moral and religious spearhead of ecumenical Christianity.

I need therefore only to remind you of the fact that the Christian Colleges in China, by their academic interest and achievement are the most vital force in China now leading the intellectual element to an understanding of the Christian gospel and call. The intellectual element, being the true leading power in Chinese life, must be won to the side of Christ, partly to be converted and entirely to be convinced of the need of Christianity for the rebirth of China in moral and spiritual life, so that with their sympathy and often cooperation, the gospel may be spread among the people without too much hindrance and handicap. This element cannot be won merely by religious fervor and evangelistic efforts. To meet the expectations of this element, it is of paramount importance that a high academic standard be rigorously maintained and that sufficient scholarly achievements in the field of science as well as in the field of the humanities be constantly brought forward as a token of the vitality of Christian thought and life. A few Christian Universities in China must struggle to be on a par with the best of China's growing and expanding government and private institutions of learning. Equality of academic standing today is a necessity. The old type of Christian college that looks forward only to recruiting and educating Church leadership is not sufficient, if the Christian institution of higher learning is to contribute adequately to the extension of world Christianity in China. It must reach the deepest and highest in Chinese life. And yet, at the present moment, because of the lack of funds and personnel, those colleges which have thus far more or less established their academic work, are in grave danger of being curtailed in this exceedingly vital phase of their tasks.

In the earlier years of the war with

Japan, I called on a professor of philosophy and in the course of an earnest conversation I inquired if, among the philosophers of our country, there was being put forth a philosophy of the Chinese nation. The answer was prompt and in the negative. It was too early to expect that. And yet, we all know the Christian colleges have a definite moral and religious philosophy in the faith of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, in self-denial and self-giving, in active loving service and peaceful fellowship in common discovery. In having such a definite philosophy, the Christian colleges can speak in unequivocal terms and in action for freedom of thought and deed, for freedom of academic work in the midst of external influences that are only too ready to curtail such freedom. The Christian colleges in China do not worship mammon, do not tolerate oppression and partisanship in political struggles, and do not yield to threats and allurements of any kind. They have amply proved their Christian stand during the war. Instead of submitting to Japanese rule, which would mean the abandonment of the principles upon which these institutions were founded, most of them moved to the interior under untold difficulties. I am a member of Yenching University for which I can speak from direct and first hand experience. On December 8, 1941, the Japanese sent a military detachment to surround the institution, take it over, close it down. No one of the Chinese on the faculty had a thought of yielding. Fifteen people together with a group of the best of our students were arrested and imprisoned. Efforts of almost every kind were made by the Japanese to coerce or to lure them into collaboration. Suffering, pain, and death might be the result of quiet resistance, but they stood the test. Four of our best professors and administrative heads were very near death in prison; but in the Providence of God, they were delivered, and today, in utter self-abnegation and privation, they are carrying on and trying to restore the institution to its former standard and capacity. They hope against hope but they do not despair for a moment. They earnestly desire that people in this country understand their aspirations, and at such a distance, they cannot but have the feeling at times of separation and of inability to explain. However, all this may be beside the mark. What I want to point out is the tremendous influence the Christian colleges under exceedingly great handicaps, are exerting on Chinese life by their firm stand upon a definite Christian philosophy of life and by their witness in suffering during and after the war, to the truth that what China needs is the kind of unity, peace, cooperation, self-sacrifice and hard work that they embody in the works that they are now carrying on. Can the World Church wish a better thrust of its spearhead in China than this? Can there be a better contribution to its extension and a more ample tribute to the soul of ecumenical Christianity?

In the second place, let me point out that the Christian colleges in China are the study centers and experiment stations of world Christianity. Small contributions have already been and are being made to the Church in artistic expressions of the Christian faith. For instance, a new religious language is needed to make clear the essential content of Christianity. If I am allowed to speak out of my own experience, which is mostly connected with Yenching University, I must first of all express my deep appreciation for the freedom it has given to spiritual experimentation in forms of worship, in hymn writing, in the composition of religious music, in the writing of original prayers, and in the production of religious literature. Yenching University, as far as I know, is the first institution that started the Christian fellowship and coined the word "Tauchi" that have been taken over and adapted by the other Christian colleges. From Chinese architecture adapted to modern use in the University plant, to the three hymn books that Yenching has had the privilege of producing, or of cooperating with other agencies in producing, the experiment has never ceased in its fearless on-going. It has the honor of being the first institution in the literary sphere. One of our professors of theology is the first Chinese that wrote a book on "the Life of Jesus" and another on "the Life and Letters of St. Paul," from the Chinese angle, in which the poetical language of the Chinese literati was used, vitally artistic and therefore hardly translatable. Before the war, there had gone out from Yenching two religious periodicals—The Amythest and The Truth and Life—which exerted a profound influence upon the life and thought of Christians in China. During the war, a professor who buried himself in his books in order to be unnoticed by the Japanese militarists, wrote a long anthem on the Nativity which was put to music by a friend of his in Tientsin and was sung in public in place of "The Messiah," attracting large audiences and newspaper comments. An American colleague of his, who is at present in this country, has written books on the adaptation of Chinese music to Christian use. During the war, also, the New Testament was translated by another who is now studying in this country. These things and a thousand other matters are like little streamlets that flow together in irrigating the fields that the World Church desires to cultivate, to plant, and someday to reap rich harvests from.

Thus far, China has not produced any noted theologian, I regret to say. This takes time. But if in the not too distant future, a Chinese theologian of note should appear, I feel I can assure you he will be a contribution of one of the Christian colleges in China. He will not be likely to be a member of any theological seminary not closely associated with a Christian institution of higher learning. In the nature of the case, theology of the original kind is an expression of full "Churchhood" if I may be allowed to coin a word. Chinese culture, like Greek philosophy and art in the early days of the Christian era, has a wealth of offerings to make to our faith. The offerings will come when certain difficulties are overcome and when the leader or leaders of thought arrive on the scene. So far as the difficulties are concerned, there are to my mind three. First, there is the difficulty of the over-accumulation of past and even of recent thinking in the west which a thinker has to wade through before he comes to his own under God's leading. Unlike the first century Christian, he bears a burden of history which the former did not have to put his shoulders under, and consequently the Chinese theologian is slow in appearing. Then, there is the type of culture, which he inherits that retards his creative adventures, and so he must have a careful orientation in order not to relapse into his own rich inheritance and after all leave out the most essential elements of Christianity, which as elements of faith do not come within the categories of culture or human wisdom. Chinese thought, though quite various as represented in the schools of Taoism, Motism, Legalism, Confucianism, and so on, agreed that we human beings have only ourselves and this changing and unstable world which is our home. At best, China from ancient days up to the present, has believed in cosmic moralism which is pure immanentism. The idea that God comes into the world from Himself as beyond our world of space and time and reveals Himself as the Word Incarnate, is quite beyond the Chinese mind which finds it incredible that man should hold on to his world and at the same time to the world to come. To many Chinese Christians, Christianity is no more than an ethical way of living and as such no theology is possible. But still, in spite of these difficulties, the theological mind gradually emerges, proving that cultures grow in conflicts in which new creative processes are set in motion. Buddhism was completely out of gear with Confucianism, and yet for centuries they existed side by side, (Continued on page 13.)

FAMILY FUN.

Fun for the family may cost lots of money. I've discovered a secret though, which perhaps you've learned also—family fun need not cost much money. Our family seems to get the most fun out of being together and doing things together. Last week I told you about how we went to Church Vacation School as a family. That was so much fun and it only cost us eighteen cents a day bus fare.

Near us lives a family of four—mother, father, big brother and little sister. This summer the parents thought that it was time for them to get away for a few days at the beach. Mother Arthur had not had a vacation away from children in four years, for her son would be four this summer. They started planning in February so that they could have a few days in June. A practical Negro nurse was hired to take care of Allison and Peter at home. Another maid was hired to come in during the afternoons and care for the children while the nurse washed the children's clothes and ironed. The children liked their nurse and got along fine, until on Thursday evening she had to be gone for an hour and a half. The maid was left to look after the children who had been given their evening meal and put to bed. The maid disobeyed the orders left by the nurse and took little two-year-old Allison out on the porch and let her sit in the big rocker chair. Allison got a spill and a nasty cut from the point of the rocker so that next morning the nurse had to take her to the doctor's office and have three stitches taken above her left eye. All went well Friday, but on Saturday afternoon the maid took the children walking along a busy highway. She started across the street with the children and little Peter dashed out too soon. A car struck him and he was carried to the hospital where the X-ray showed that his right collar bone was fractured! I'm sure that the parents had fun at the beach but when they got home Saturday night to find both their children injured, I'm afraid that they felt their fun had cost too much this time!

We had lots of fun celebrating the Fourth of July last week. It was work but fun just the same. Our lawn and garden had grown up and gotten full of weeds while we were busy with the Vacation Church School. Last week the father of our family was busy speaking over the radio each day. On July 3 he got the tools out and started trying to catch up with the grass and weeds. On July 4 the children and I got out early. Oliver got his big wagon. Rebecca got her little wagon. I used the snippers and hand scythe. The children brought the rake, broom and trash pan together with a bushel basket to pick up the grass. Such raising of blisters we did! Our neighbors have been saying such nice things about the way our lawn looks though!

We tackled the garden in the afternoon. Daddy joined the gang for the battle against garden enemies. He dusted the plants to ward off the insects; tied up the tomato plants to stakes where the wind had blown them down, and suckered them. We weeded and hoed and watered. Rebecca did more playing ring around tomato plants than anything else!

Just the same we had lots of fun. We laughed and sang. We didn't get anything worse than blisters. Instead of it costing anything, we saved the fifty cents we pay Jimmy Green, who is away on a vacation, when he does it. If you haven't tried such a fun time we think it would be good for you to do so once.

YOUR CHILD'S CONFIDENCE.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. James with Ronnie, her five-year-old son, had come to visit her sister whom she had not seen for a long time. The sisters were so glad to be with each other and there was so much to talk about that Mrs. James did not notice at dinner-time that her little boy was making unwise selections and was being served much too bountifully. Later, both he and his mother paid the penalty for this over-indulgence; and the next morning, although relieved of his discomfort, the usually active Ronnie was content to sit quietly on his mother's knee. Mrs. James was feeling remorseful—reproaching herself for not having guarded her son more carefully.

"Don't worry so much," her sister advised. "He'll be all right. You always did take things too seriously."

Maybe Bess was right, Mrs. James thought. Bess' children were happy and healthy. But Ronnie was different—more delicate and a little oversensitive. She couldn't be too careful.

Just then some acquaintances of her sister's dropped in, and Mrs. James sat holding Ronnie and half-listening to the idle, pointless chatter that filled the room.

After a while Ronnie whispered in her ear, "I think they're talkin' kind of silly."

His remark was so surprisingly to the point and it amused her so much that thoughtlessly she repeated it. Everybody shrieked with laughter.

Ronnie buried his head in her neck, embarrassed. "I didn't mean for you to say it out loud," he whispered.

Realization that she had betrayed his childish confidence came to Mrs. James with a shock. To herself she vowed never to do such a thing again. But there was something to be done now. She must meet the present situation; she must restore Ronnie's self-possession.

So she kissed her boy warmly and said in a low tone, "They thought it funny, Ronnie, and enjoyed it. They like you. You laugh, too, so they will know you like them."

The child sat up, but the flushed little face showed no smile. "They laughed at me," he whispered.

"No, not at you but with you," she answered. "Don't you remember that when Daddy tells jokes we all laugh? We laugh with him—not at him!"

Ronnie laughed. "Yes," he said, "we laugh with him—not at him. I think I'll go out and play now."

With a sigh of relief Mrs. James leaned back in her chair. She could not forget the occurrence and she felt almost as grateful as she would have had her child been in danger of devouring flames and she enabled to save him. Fervently she gave thanks, but still the question would come, "How could I have been so utterly thoughtless?"

This incident to some readers may seem a matter of little importance. Mrs. James, however, knew that her moment of thoughtlessness could have had tremendously disastrous outcomes—both for her son and for herself. She might have forfeited her child's trustful confidence in his mother—such a precious, fragile thing—a trust that ought to have a very great influence throughout his entire future. Lifelong effects are often pro-

THE BIBLE TODAY. C. H. Dodd. The Macmillan Co. New York. $2.50.

One of the theological quips which has gone the rounds of the seminaries is this: "Thou shalt love the lord thy Dodd with all thy mind and thy Niebuhr as thyself." C. H. Dodd, Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, is better known, to be sure, in England than in America. But he is realizing a growing popularity in America and this book, published both in England and America, will bring his rich scholarship to a host of readers.

Here is a study of the Bible, but more; it is a study of history and the church in their Biblical settings. "The Bible," says the author, "is offered to us by the Church as a revelation of God; not, certainly, as a sort of inspired encyclopedia, where chapter and verse can be turned up and questions settled out of hand, on the contrary, it makes us aware of the depth and range of our problem, rooted as it is in the remote but still living past. It plunges us into the stream of history in a peculiarly significant part of its course. It makes present to us crucial events of the past by which the stream cut for itself the channel in which it still sweeps us along. . . . The Biblical history is meaningful because it is related at every point to the fundamental reality which lies behind all history and all human experience, which is, the living God in his Kingdom; and because it moves toward a climax in which the Kingdom of God came upon men with conclusive effect."

Dr. Dodd claims that the foundations of biblical criticism were laid in the first four centuries of the Christian era, that a most comprehensive and thorough critical edition of the text of the Old Testament was produced in the third century by Origen of Caesarea, and that "the sustained labours of generations of early biblical scholars gradually established certain broad controlling principles of interpretation." The author works within this historic and exalted tradition.

This volume of lectures surveys both the Old and New Testaments in their historical settings. It summarizes changing attitudes toward the Bible in the early church, in the Middle Ages, during the Reformation, and today. The author then discusses in detail the idea of "History as Revelation," and suggests how it may be applied, even to the troubled events of our own time. For example: "Whatever response the words of Scripture may evoke in our minds, through meditation and waiting upon the truth, must submit to control by facts. Otherwise we are in danger of taking 'autosuggestion' for the Word of God, and missing something that might tear to pieces the fantasies we have woven, and tell us truths about ourselves that we never suspected. Consequently there ought to be no separation between the 'historical' and the 'devotional' study of the Bible." R. L. H.

HOW TO HOLD AN AUDIENCE WITHOUT A ROPE. Josh Lee. Ziff-Davis Publishing Company. $3.

At last—a practical book on oratory that recognizes the need for inspiration, sincerity, directness and conviction . . . that calls upon the word pictures of Jesus for inspiration . . . the sincerity of Paul for illustration . . . and the fire of the French Monk, Peter the Hermit, for conviction. According to Lee, "unexpressed ideas are of no more value than kernels in a nut." His book offers guidance—by example as well as precept—for projecting ideas through personality, straightforward argument, logical reasoning and intellectual honesty. Lee points out that "many of the world's greatest orators have been preachers, ministers of faith" and his recognition of the need for simple truths and honest reasoning will make his book of special value to clergymen.

"The first prerequisite to becoming a speaker is to have something to say" is one of Lee's salient premises. Using George W. Truett, one of the great preachers, as an example, he demonstrates the need for a rich background of reading and experience. He recognizes the Bible as the speaker's greatest reference medium and utilizes Biblical lore for examples. He warns that there is no substitute for brains and quotes Paul's advice to the Roman's concerning the substitution of zeal for knowledge, "for I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." He calls upon the parables of Jesus to display the value of word pictures and cites the sustained faith of Peter the Hermit whose fiery preachings raised one crusade after another as an example of firm conviction.

Josh Lee is a former United States Senator from Oklahoma whose eloquent oratory gained him the respect of America's outstanding statesmen and speakers. From his early boyhood in Oklahoma, the son of a country doctor who moved his family throughout the territory in a covered wagon, Lee showed great interest in public speaking. He worked his way through the University of Oklahoma giving lectures and speeches at community gatherings. Later, as the head of the speech department of the University, he wrote a conventional, academic book on public speaking which has served as a textbook in many schools and colleges. He is now a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board and makes his home in Washington.

THE QUEST FOR INNER PEACE. William E. Park. The Macmillan Co. New York. $2.50.

A previous volume of sermons by Dr. Park appeared under the title, Narrow Is the Way. The present volume is a collection of sermons preached at schools and colleges throughout the country. The subject of one sermon is the title of the book.

These sermons are easy, informal and interesting reading. The author gives many insights into life on high levels. The popular approach to current problems is beautifully illustrated. A knowledge of psychology is used frequently to a very good advantage. The author does not indulge in platitudes.

Those who are looking for sermons which abound in textual exposition and Biblical scholarship will be disappointed. There are few references to, or quotations from, the works of the great theologians. Having taken a text, the author rarely returns to it. In a number of instances the choice of a subject is weak; the subject does not grow naturally and inevitably out of the text. The author gives the impression of being better acquainted with literature in general than with the literature of the Bible.

Dr. Park has served Congregational and Presbyterian Churches. He became the president of Northfield schools in 1941. R. L. H.

WISDOM IS THE PRINCIPAL THING.

LESSON IV—JULY 27, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; yea with all thy getting, get understanding.—Proverbs 4:7.

LESSON: I Kings 3:5-14; Job 28:12-28; Proverbs 1:1-7; 20:23; 3:13-18; 4:1-9; 8; 9:1-6, 9, 10; 16:20; James 1:5.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 9:1-6; 9-10.

A Young Man Who Made a Wise Choice.

A young man once had a dream in which God gave him a blank check. "Ask what I shall give thee," said God to Solomon. It was a hard choice, hard to say what one thing one might want above all others. For instance, what one thing would you ask of God if He told you he would give you the one thing for which you asked? Well Solomon made a wise choice. In chaste language a humble spirit he asked God for an "understanding heart" so that he might discern between good and bad, and be able to judge the people whom God had committed to his care. The choice pleased God and God not only gave this man wisdom above all other men, but he gave him riches and honor as well. "Lo, I have given thee a wise and understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither shall there be any after thee like thee."

The Words of a Wise Man.

This young man, grown to manhood and maturity, out of the treasures of his heart accumulated by observation and experience, gave utterance to what is known as proverbs, which were later written down and preserved in permanent form. Solomon is said to have spoken three thousand of these proverbs or wise sayings. As someone has said, "a proverb is a thought boiled down until the residue is concentrated wisdom." It says much in little. It is distilled wisdom. It is highly concentrated thought. It is usually put in striking language, easily remembered. We have such a collection of proverbs in the Bible in what we call "The Proverbs." It is not necessary to believe that all of them came from Solomon. But they are typical of the ones he uttered and for general purposes are attributed to him.

What Is Wisdom?

As used in Proverbs, wisdom means at least three things. First of all the word is used on the ordinary level of life, as a guide to conduct, the discretion which life teaches or should teach, the sagacity in dealing with affairs, the knowledge of men and things that comes from experience. In one sense it is what we usually call "common sense" which is one of the most uncommon things in a way. A proverb is a maxim of ordinary conduct, practical words about the practical affairs of life.

In the second place, there is a deeper meaning to the word. It is the discernment that looks beneath the surface and sees cause and effect, the ability to get at the heart of things, a guide to the heart as well as to the feet, a guide for thought and feeling as well as for conduct. In this sense wisdom is looked upon as the law of God.

And finally, the word is lifted to higher levels at times, and is made divine, almost identical with God Himself. It is an attribute of God, a quality which God displays in all his works.

In all this, it can be seen that wisdom is more than knowledge. It is something beyond "book learning" or "book larnin'" as some folks refer to it. A man may be supposedly educated and still lack wisdom. On the other hand a man may not be able to read or write and still have true wisdom.

The Value of Wisdom.

In poetic and picturesque language the writer tells of the value of wisdom. She is the principal thing; therefore one ought to seek her. She is more precious than rubies, and nothing that a man can desire is to be compared with her. To gain her is far more desirable than to gain silver, and to have her is greater profit than to have fine gold. She gives length of days—all the wise do not live to old age, but the exception proves the rule—and quality of life. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. She is as a tree to those who lay hold upon her, a shelter and a stronghold. And to possess true wisdom is to find the secret of happiness. She makes the inexperienced wise and the wise more wise. Wisdom in the thought of the writer is one of life's summum bonums, one of life's supreme values.

The Beginning of Wisdom.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding." This is the starting point and the foundation of all true wisdom and sound knowledge. An attitude of reverence toward truth, and obedience to the laws of the universe, a sense of awe in the presence of God, a sense of dependence upon a "power not ourselves that makes for righteousness"—here is the beginning of wisdom, true wisdom. Nowhere will you find greater humility, for instance, than in the heart of a true scientist as he stands before some truth. Jesus said that this same spirit was necessary to entrance into the Kingdom of God. It is only as we become as little children that we can have wisdom. Knowledge is not enough.

The Promise of Wisdom.

Thanks be unto God who hath not reserved this true wisdom for a favored few. "If any man, or if any of you, lack wisdom, let him ask God who giveth liberally to all men and upbraideth not; and it shall be given unto him." Here as elsewhere God is no respecter of persons. I have known humble men, some of them unlettered Negroes, who had wisdom beyond some college graduates. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. The meek will he show his way. That which we see not he will teach if we ask in humility and sincerity. True wisdom is the gift of God, one of God's best gifts. Christ himself was referred to as "the Wisdom of God and the Power of God."

"Everything can be improved."

CONTRIBUTION OF CHINA COLLEGES TO WORLD CHURCH.

without too many conflicts and controversies. Christianity will in a similar manner come into its own theological consciousness and expression. And when that time arrives, it is the Christian colleges, in their fearless, intellectual and spiritual adventures, that will offer the thinker and the thought, perhaps even alarmingly so to the World-Church. Is not such an expected contribution after all?

In the third place I venture to say that the Christian colleges in China are places where Christian unity and ecumenical consciousness find their dynamic and practical expressions. International in character and interdenominational in formation, these colleges and those who work in them cannot but find the World Church expressing its own in the process of their interaction and consciousness or unconscious integration. The members of these colleges come from very different cultural backgrounds and heritages and bring with them theological differences, but they have to face the necessity of living and working together and to find a common and united front in their dealings with the immediate and often hard problems that demand solutions. As the days and seasons roll on, they are tried in the crucible of cooperation, forget their numerous differences, understand each other, and gain the consciousness of their common loyalty to a common cause, while at the same time they hold on to their own faith and continue in their unswerving devotion to the organizations and societies they severally represent. They become in a peculiar way the World Church in miniature. With them, that is, with the Christian members of the faculties of the Christian colleges, the diversion of denominations is completely forgotten and the consciousness of Christian unity, even in the sense of organic union becomes the natural result. There are very few theologians among them and so acute theological disputations cannot arise and ecclesiastical distinctions when mentioned would only astonish and puzzle them. If, therefore, the World Church needs the laity that has attained ecumenical consciousness to give it an increased impetus towards Christian Unity, it has no better group of such people to serve the purpose than the mixed and international faculties of the Christian colleges in China. Of course I cannot say what effect this can have on the World Church today. But as far as contribution to it is concerned, this fact of unity cannot be neglected or cannot be allowed to slip by without mention.

Moreover, in such a consciousness of unity and in an atmosphere of international fellowship, the cross-fertilization of cultures or the confluence of cultures goes on in ever-increasing momentum. The World Church stands for world peace and order that should be just and endurable. But peace and order cannot come without the mutual or the cultural synthesis understanding of the nations. Anyone can say "Scratch a Russian you find the tartar beneath." But is that true? Is this old saying conducive to enduring peace and order? Anyone among China's radical scholars can say that the country needs a thorough-going Westernization, without the slightest thought of retaining any element in China's ancient culture in the new culture that China is to adopt. But is that really the way to give China a rebirth or a new life, a turning away from corruption, avarice and selfishness that now characterize so much of China's public life and a turning toward righteousness, justice and freedom? The national universities and colleges in China are now carrying on an increasing amount of research in China's past. As far as I know there has been great academic interest in ancient things, but little eagerness or earnestness in conserving the best that is in China's past as vital elements in an emerging culture of the China of Tomorrow. The question, it seems to me, is "With what will the best elements of China's old culture be combined or synthesized into a new and vital foundation for national life? This question can never find an answer if the vital thing is not found to enter into a synthesis with Chinese culture. Nor is this to be found by the non-Christian institutions of learning. For as far as I can see, it cannot be found outside of the Christian faith itself. There is that in Christianity, strange as it may seem, that can and will find an echo or a response in the best of China's cultural wealth, in spite of the differences that exist between them. I am not here tonight to define it. I am only thinking aloud before you and thinking more and more convincingly to myself. Those who reject Christianity, which is a matter of the spirit, will ipso facto, reject Chinese culture in toto; those who love Christ and the wealth of the Christian heritage, will find the treasure that is hidden in Chinese culture and is not much thought of by China's secular mind. Therefore, it seems to me that the Christian colleges in China, in holding on to a definite Christian philosophy of life, may be the instrument whereby China's needed cultural synthesis may somehow and someday be effected. Until this great task is partly performed, for the completion of the work may never come and if it should come it will take generations—until this task, I say, comes to a partial success, China cannot come into her own or to her real self. She will not be fully able to contribute to world peace and order. In a vague way, therefore, the question of a cultural rebirth now depends upon the ecumenical mind. The Christian Colleges in China will undoubtedly make a precious contribution to the World Church if in this matter, they could with the moral support and material reinforcement from Christians of the ecumenical type, fulfill the high aspirations of the human spirit under God's guidance. When that time comes, they will have not only made a contribution to Christian unity, but also to the unity and the peace of the nations.

Lastly, in my opinion the greatest contribution the Christian colleges can make is in the preparation and education of leadership for the Church. The most wonderful gift that God bestows upon the church and the world, through these colleges is after all not discoveries in science, not new trends in philosophy, nor even creative productions in art, but men and women that come in contact with the vital truth of the Christian Faith and live the Christ life. The Christian colleges do this, that is, educate leadership in two ways, in a broader way and in a narrow way. Many young men and women come from families that have a long cultural lineage. For four years they are kept in touch directly and indirectly with Christian activities. They are affected by Christian ideas and ideals which, even though they do not lead them to Christ, exert a real influence in their thinking and in their attitudes towards the Christian religion. When they leave their colleges they create without their realizing it a sympathetic atmosphere for the Christian religion, in which the propagation of the gospel becomes a matter not of overcoming hostility, but a matter of interpretation and clarification. In other words, the Christian colleges prepare the ground and the climate for the church to go forth and gather the harvest. It

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt

Dear Friends:

Several weeks ago the Loyal Men's Bible Class of our Burlington church decided to give the Christian Orphanage a Bendix washing machine—one that does all the work except hanging the clothes out on the line. The man who undertook to raise the money in his class, after he had explained the need, said to the class, "I will give $25." Another said he would give $25, and then several others joined in with $25. Still others gave smaller amounts, and in a few minutes the money was raised to buy the washing machine.

This Bendix washing machine has been installed and is doing the work very nicely. The matron who looks after the washing is well pleased with it. It will be a wonderful blessing to the orphanage.

If someone would take the lead, we have several Sunday School classes who could and would do things for the orphanage that would help us a lot. For instance, we are very much in need of three refrigerators, kelinators, or something on the same order, that contains from nine to twelve cubic feet. Smaller ones are too small for our large families. If someone in these men's classes will get up in his class next Sunday and start off by saying he will give $25 to help buy one of these refrigerators, I feel sure we will soon have three units, one in each building. Try it and see how easy it will be. It will take something like $300 each.

Twenty years ago we needed a heating plant in the Baby Home very badly. It cost $2,000, and one man said he would give $1,000. A member of the men's class in our Suffolk church said to me: "If you will come before my Sunday School class next Sunday, and tell the class of the great need of this heating plant, I will raise you a $1,000." I went and explained to the class how the little children were suffering from cold because of improper heating facilities. When I took my seat, this good old man got up and told the class that he wanted to raise $1,000 to meet this need. It looked as though the spirit of the Master took hold of the class, for in less than fifteen minutes the $1,000 was raised. It was very easily done, because this good old man took the lead.

The Burlington Rotary Club of Burlington, N. C., made the Christian

Orphanage its project for 1947. This club is composed of business men of Burlington. It has done a number of nice things for us during the year. Two weeks ago the committee presented our library with 140 new, and well selected, books. These books were selected for all ages of children. It was a splendid addition to our library, and we were very grateful.

Our good friend, Rev. Walter Hall, brought his Sunday school to visit the orphanage last week. We were happy to show them through the entire plant. They were a happy group of children, and we were happy to have them.

CONTRIBUTION OF CHINA COLLEGES TO WORLD CHURCH.

therefore depends in a way upon the adequate preparation of the church to follow up the work of the colleges. Then, at the same time the Christian colleges are vital centers of democracy which in essence, can only be expressed in the Christian spirit. This affects the atmosphere also, not only for the development of political ideals in China or for better international relations in the coming years, but for the advancement of ecumenical Christianity.

But the Christian colleges educate young men and women for leadership directly for the church. This is the narrow path they have to follow. This also is the far more important and far more difficult task—difficult especially today when the churches cry for more immediate and adequate native guidance in evangelism, in self-support, and in activities that relate Christianity on the one hand to the Culture of China and on the other hand to the ecumenical movement—difficult when attention to academic efficiency and to religious influence has to be at least evenly distributed and when the youths of China insist on Christian action, as an evidence of the reality of the faith, to be effective in social, economic, political, and international affairs. The Christian colleges must keep an open mind on religious questions and must allow freedom in the choice and acceptance of religion. If they could gain a small number of young men and women who are truly and vitally Christian and lead them to decide for life work in the church and in the Christian ministry, they would have truly succeeded. And they must succeed. The future of the infant church in China deepnds upon their success. When they give the church the needed leadership, then they will have made the greatest contribution to the World Church; for these same leaders, in the nature of the case, will, some of them, participate in the ongoing of the World Church towards the expected unity and the God-given task of world-evangelization.

In conclusion, let me say that even more important than the contribution of the Christian colleges, the theological seminaries must be looked upon as institutions that finally prepare the kind of leadership that the church needs. We have the Nanking theological seminary well - provided for and well taken care of. It stands by itself, with more or less connection with the Christian colleges near-by. There is besides this institution, the graduate School of Religion of Yen-ching University, which is an integral part of a college with all the advantages of the institution of higher learning, with all the opportunities to help strengthen the Christian character and atmosphere of that great institution, but also with all the disadvantages of being neglected because of its being a part of a Christian University. It has no board to look after its special interest. It has no committee to pay close attention to its great needs, its important plans, and its developing possibilities. I say, a School of Religion like that has the possibility of making important contributions to the World Church today and tomorrow, because it can be placed in a position to interpret Christianity against China's cultural background, to educate for the church an efficient, learned, and spiritual ministry. It is theologically loyal to the God-man Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Its contribution to the World Church if adequately staffed and financed, will be inestimably valuable in original Christian thought and literature, in the making of the needed theologians for China and for the World Church, and in the maintenance of a fearless but orthodox self-criticism, and in the offering of an educated ministry which China cries for. But today it is largely misunderstood and forgotten. Its passion for Christ may be wasted.

I do not mean to conclude in a spirit of dissatisfaction. I have implicit faith in you, who are the founders and supporters of the Christian colleges in China. I only want to remind you that within one of these institutions there is a theological school which desires to be the spearhead of the Christian movement in China, and which needs your attention and support. The Christian Colleges have so far made great contributions. If they be continued in the proper way and with the proper emphasis they will be a power that the World Church can count upon, now and in the years to come.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

duced on a young child by happenings, the details of which pass quickly from his memory.

If a child cannot go to his mother with everything that puzzles or interests him, and if he cannot know that his confidences will be safe in her keeping, his emotional stability and his faith in human nature are likely to be endangered. Unfailing worthiness of confidence on the part of a parent has often made, for the child, the difference between an ill-adjusted and a well-adjusted life.

Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards; they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly, as we wake or sleep, we grow strong or we grow weak, and at last some crisis shows us what we have become.

In Memoriam

MARSHALL.

Salem Chapel lost one of its fine members in the passing of Mr. Joe W. Marshall. His life had been one of quietness, yet progressive living. He is survived by his wife, two sons, three daughters and a host of relatives and friends.

Many gathered at the church April 25 to pay their respects to this fine gentleman. The funeral service was conducted by the writer and assisted by Elder Reid of the Primitive Baptist Church.

W. J. ANDES.

WILLIAMSON.

John J. Williamson, son of the late Brother and Sister Alec Williamson of Mecklenburg County, Va., was born April 8, 1862, and died at his home near Buffalo Springs, Va., April 21, 1947.

On March 23, 1862, he married Miss Melissa Moore, who died several years ago. He is survived by four sons, W. P., J. C., W. W., and H. W., all of the Buffalo community. There are also nine grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Brother Williamson united with Mebron Christian Church when a young man. For fifty years he was a deacon and an influential leader in his church. His honesty and good judgment were never called into question. He was one of the best and most prosperous farmers of his community.

The funeral was conducted at the home by Rev. Mark W. Andes, assisted by the writer, and burial was in the family cemetery. A very large crowd attended. Floral tributes were many and beautiful.

C. E. NEWMAN.

WHITLEY.

Whereas, God has seen fit to call to his reward our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Myra Richardson Whitley, and, we as a church and individuals desire to record our appreciations and sorrow in our loss,

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Isle of Wight Christian Church Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies and Ladies' Bible Class have lost one of their most loyal and faithful members, and for whom we mourn and feel the great loss sustained in our church and community.

2. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers that God's blessings may rest upon them and give comfort to their broken hearts.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the church records, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. W. J. DARDEN,

Mrs. H. M. WILSON,

Mrs. W. E. WILLS,

Committee.

SIMPSON.

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst on June 27, 1947, our neighbor, co-laborer in Christ and brother, Robert Simpson, we offer the following resolutions of respect to his memory.

That in the passing of our brother and co-laborer in Christ, Mt. Bethel Church, Sunday school and community will miss his presence from us.

That we bow in humble submission to God our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well in our bereavement, and give thanks for the worthy Christian life that has been taken from us.

That we extend our truest heart-felt sympathy to the members of his family, and ask the blessings of God to sustain them in their hour of trial, bereavement and in their loss.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the members of his family, to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be placed upon the records of the Sunday school and church.

L. P. RIPPY,

CLARA S. CUMMINGS,

CLAUDIA C. McCOLLUM,

Committee.

GAYLE.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom, has seen fit to call from earth to heaven our friend and brother, Mr. Henry James Gayle, we, the members of Oakland Christian Church bow in humble submission to His divine will.

Prevented during his later years, because of ill health, from taking an active part in the work of his church he had earlier in life served as superintendent of the Sunday school, treasurer of the church, and as a member of our Board of Deacons—of which body he was a member at the time of his death.

In his passing we recognize the loss of a loyal, faithful and interested member of our church, an upright citizen of our community, and a devoted and understanding father of his family.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we record our sincere appreciation of his character and services and of his devotion to his church and the Christian way of life.

2. That we extend to the members of his family our deep sympathy in their sorrow and pray God's blessing upon them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of Oakland Church and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Respectfully submitted,

COMMITTEE ON MEMOIRS,

By Miss Mildred Godwin.

BOOK REVIEWS.

versity, Dr. Miller's purpose is to show the interplay of science and religion, and to strengthen religious faith in this modern age. He has written this book to restate the essentials of Christian thinking for modern men who realize the conflict between tradition and modern knowledge. Read this book then place it in the hands of your neighborhood skeptic.

Self-reliance can turn a salesman into a merchant; a politician into a statesman; an attorney into a jurist; an unknown youth into a great leader. All are to be tomorrow's big leaders—those who in solitude sit above the clang and dust of time, with the world's secret trembling on their lips.

Courage to Live at Your Best

A Radio Talk by Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell

Courage is universally admired by mankind. The highest type of courage is that which can face moral and spiritual issues without qualing. St. Paul possessed it. From a Roman prison, waiting for the heavy tread of the executioner outside the door of his narrow cell, and for the rasping sound of the bolt ere he was led forth to his doom, he sent forth this exhilarating message of hope and confidence: "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me."

In that dread hour he writes as his last testament to his young friend, Timothy: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." The Apostle's morale is unimpaired. His hopes are undimmed, and his courage never falters.

Christian courage springs from a realization that our hearts and lives are garrisoned by the spirit of Christ. It doesn't advertise itself; it doesn't boast of its deeds; it is quiet, strong, unobtrusive.

Recently it was my privilege to sit on a public platform in New York and witness the recognition of a group of returning heroes. Among them was a young flying officer of the American navy. He had brought down thirty-four enemy planes in the Pacific. His entire career had been distinguished by an amazing series of courageous deeds, so that he had been awarded practically every decoration to which a flying officer of the navy is entitled. In a final exploit, going beyond the call of duty, time and again, he rescued his imperiled comrades, and was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor.

I studied the face of this youth standing a few feet away. He looked just like an average American boy. I was deeply moved, however, to observe that when the military choir stood and sang of the valor of the men who fought for freedom the eyes of the young hero were flooded with tears, and I could see that his thoughts were far away in the Pacific with his comrades who would never return.

True courage is quiet, strong, unobtrusive, and, withal, tender and sympathetic. This is supremely true of the courage of Christ. The centuries melt away, and we are back in a Roman judgment hall, where a young Man is on trial for his life. He is only thirty-three years of age. It seems as though all the minions of hell are arrayed against Him. He stands there, tall and straight and silent, while his accusers confound themselves and each other with falsehoods and perjury. The Roman magistrate at last was impelled to say: "I find no fault in this man at all." Yet, they sent him to the cross, and "the desperate tides of the whole world's anguish coursed through the channels of a single heart." Yet, that seeming defeat on Calvary was a glorious victory, and the triumphant spirit of Christ has marched down the corridors of time, challenging men and women in every generation to live for the noblest and the best.

Where do you stand with respect to Him? The measure of your success in life will depend on the closeness of your allegiance with Him. Make Christ the lode-star of your journey. Make Him your goal and prize. Draw unceasingly upon the spiritual resources available in Him. Then, in such, you can face life undismayed whatever comes, for you will be able to say with the heroes and martyrs of old: "I can do all things through Christ, Who strengtheneth me."

NUMBER 29.

A Pastoral Prayer

By RODERICK W. HURLBURT

Thou who art our Maker, our Ruler, our Guardian and our Friend, we praise Thee for Thy greatness and Thy goodness. We thank Thee for this good life Thou hast given us: that Thou hast given us hands with which to toil, minds wherewith to think, and hearts that we may love. We thank Thee for the homes from which we come, the loved ones with whom we are surrounded, our own privilege of loving and serving in return. We lift our hearts in gratitude for the knowledge which we have of Thee: as Thou art revealed in the rhythm and beauty of nature, in the words of the Bible, and in the ministry of the Christ. We thank Thee for Thy Church, for her long centuries of service, for the many lives that have been aided in and through the Church, for our own church and all it means to us.

Help us, O God, that we may take life's blessings and use them to worthwhile ends. May we use our health and our strength, our time and our talents, in helping to establish Thy Kingdom here on earth. May we make of our homes centers of Christian influence, from which will radiate a sureness of Thy presence in the affairs of men.

We pray today for this needy, sinful, suffering, sorrowing world. May Thy presence be with those upon whom life's treagdies have fallen most severely, and Thy peace be upon them. Wilt Thou guide and assist those who go in the name of the Christ to minister in needy areas. Be with all missionaries, social workers, relief workers, and others who have gone forth to give Christians aid and Christian fellowship.

Be with all who suffer the pains and loneliness of illness on this day. May Thy Spirit guide nurses and physicians, as they go about their tasks. Give to them understanding hearts, keen minds, and a tender touch, that they may soothe and heal. May those who suffer pain know the strength and the comfort of Thy presence, in their hour of need.

Watch over our loved ones who are far away. Some are in school, some are working in distant places, some are engaged in travel. May they not forget that there is a God who watches over all, but may they ever remember Thee and turn to Thee for guidance and for strength. Keep them from all harm, lead them away from temptation, and guide them into the life of righteousness and fellowship with Thee.

Help us that we may never forget Thee. In all our waking hours, may we be conscious of Thy presence, assured of Thy love, and ever-watchful that we shall do Thy will. These things we ask in the spirit of the Christ. Amen.

NEWS AND VIEWS

The 21st International Sunday School Convention is being held at Des Moines, Iowa, July 23-27.

Superintendent Wm. T. Scott has returned from the Ministers' School held at Deering Center, Hillsboro, N. H., the past month.

The ninety-ninth annual session of the Virginia Valley Conference will meet with Mt. Olivet Church in Rockingham County, August 6-7.

Rev. L. W. Goebel has been re-elected as president of the general synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Dr. William E. Lamp was re-elected as secretary.

We are glad to learn that Dr. I. W. Johnson who has been under observation at the hospital recently, is much improved at this time and expects to make his usual trip to the Masanetta Conference.

Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, field director of Young People's Work and Religious Education was unable to be present at the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention this week because of illness. We hope for her a speedy recovery.

Roderick W. Hurlburt, writer of the Pastoral Prayer which appears on the front page is a graduate of Defiance College and Hartford Seminary. His present parish is at Hardwick, Vermont. His father is a minister at Bangor, Maine.

Rev. Joseph E. McCauley, pastor of our Waverly, Virginia, Church, was a caller at the publication office last week. We are always glad to see Mr. McCauley. We learned that his wife had been quite sick, but were glad to know that she was much improved.

Mr. House, the pastor of the Richmond Church, was unable to be present for the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, but his wife made an admirable substitute. Mr. House is expected to return to his duties with his church and THE CHRISTIAN SUN the last of this week.

Congratulations to Christian Temple on their representation at the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention. One enthusiastic member offered to pay for the gas and oil for all who would come. Even he must have gotten a shock, although a pleasant one, for their representatives numbered twenty.

On Sunday, July 13, the technicolor sound movie, "Fair Wind," was shown at the evening service at Rosemont Church, Norfolk, of which Rev. Herbert Council, Jr., is pastor. The picture presents life in China of today, and the color film gives a picture of China in all of its natural beauty. The attendance at the service was good, and Mr. Council read a letter from the Jacksons which had appeared in the previous week's CHRISTIAN SUN just before the showing of the picture. If you have a projector, why not show this picture in your church?

From the writer of our Sunday School Notes we have received the following: "In keeping with my custom during the past few years, I have asked several of my fellow ministers to be Guest Editors during the month of August." Those asked to serve by Dr. Harcastle are as follows: August 10—Dr. W. E. Wisseman; August 17—Dr. Stanley C. Harrell; August 24—Dr. Will B. O'Neill, and August 31—Rev. Robert Kimball. Dr. Harcastle deserves a respite from this well-done task, and we welcome the guest editors of the month with a confidence that his place will be well filled.

The Sunday School Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference was held in Richmond on Tuesday of this week. A large crowd was present to represent their respective Sunday Schools and an excellent program was well carried out. The ministerial representation was very good indeed. We saw the following ministers: J. Frank Morgan, Peter Young, J. Everette Neese, Herbert Council, Jr., Joseph E. McCauley, H. S. Harcastle, John G. Truitt. If there were others present we are sorry that we missed shaking their hands. Next time we hope they will have time to visit THE CHRISTIAN SUN office.

The Bible Conference at Massanetta Springs, near Harrisonburg, Va., will be held August 11-24 inclusive. Originally planned for Presbyterians, this conference has outgrown denominational boundaries. In commenting upon this year's conference, Dr. Wm. E. Hudson, its director, says that the "list of illustrious speakers reads like the roll of 'Who's Who in the Religious world'." Prominent speakers during the conference include. Dr. Adam Burnett, pastor of St. Cuthbert's Church, Edinburg, Scotland; Bishop Arthur Moore; Dr. Norman Vincent Peale; Dr. Roy Smith, editor of The Christian Advocate; Dr. Clovis G. Chappell; Dr. Robert E. Speer; Dr. Harold J. Ockenga of our own Church. THE CHRISTIAN SUN's editor is slated to preside on the day set aside as Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed Day.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

A Letter From Dr. Hermann Sauer*

March 16, 1947.

John F. C. Green,
McKeesport, Penn.

Dear Brother and Friend:

Today your second letter came with newspaper clippings on Niemoeller and the so-called "Rebirth of the German Church," as Stewart Herman sees it (book review) and your essay on "Christians in the Roman Army," and above all the pictures of you. Now we have a personal presentation.

There is, here, an increasing ratio of tuberculosis. The main item of diet has been potatoes, of which each family received two hundred pounds per capita. They have been, mostly, used up, especially by the refugees from East Germany, because of inadequate additional supplies. So that we now stand, despite the ending of the hard winter and the in-coming of the spring, before very serious problems. The neurosis of the people is increasing. The inner fear is terrible. We find our powers taxed to assure the people with the word of God in their faith. And it is painful to feel, within oneself the experience that one is torn by these tragic impressions, in the effort to meet the lethargy, being tempted to preach "Ersatz" as Gospel, contrary to the better intention and will. I have previously written of this temptation: that, at the end, in the effort to meet the needs, one has reached the limits of his strength, and then one asks afterwards whether he has not, despite everything he could do, given stones instead of bread. And yet, our church attendance is increasing. And we have real joy in being able to offer the last food, of men, the Word of God, to those who are suffering and are also hungry for each Word. So there we are: We should do little to spare our strength; or should we, in the daring faith that God's power is might in the weak, undertake everything that is placed before you, also that which is not wholly to our liking. Then we do the latter.

Your newspaper items have interested me greatly. Chiefly, the press was friendly on Niemoeller, but it dealt really very little with the content of his speeches. His picture was very poor. One might think that the snapshot had purposely been badly made. Certainly that nut-cracker-like man does not correspond to our conception of the man. Better and more appealing is the invitation of the committee. It smells a little after advertising, but, since I re-read it, that impression disappears; first, by the sentence which asks that the reader come to hear the prophetic voice which Hitler had failed to silence. Whether there is not more to be said than prophecy, today: that is the question. Niemoeller is an eminent personality and an honest fellow, but he seems to me to be a being without the final stillness (Inner springs of peace?—JCFG) as to that which he has realized ("erkannt"), and which he passionately represents—that is his strength! Whether he is not like Apollos, who through Aquila and Priscilla has explained to him the Word of God with greater clarity. And that is also the limit of the Barthians, with all their stubborn attitude as to the Word, a thought which has given us who were not original Barthians a great deal to think upon.

I have a great fear, that the German experience, in this crisis, which now promises much and could mean much, will not be valued and used, but will be blown away. Whether, this I would say to Herman, the Church has really been born again, that cannot be shown in the struggle under Hitler, but in the period after the struggle. For it can well happen that the exorcised devil may return with seven other demons to find his house adorned, and that he will deal more hardly with men than ever before.

It was not strange that Niemoeller should have had strong opposition from the left; first, objectively, then subjectively. Objectively: it could not have been other, after a war. When I was in London, in 1929, ten years after the World War, I met a Germanphobia, in the middle-class and among the educated. It could not be other now, after the newspaper-war (propaganda). The returning soldiers will bring a lasting clarification on Germany as she is. And therefore, it were well, that it be asked that you—for the sake of truth and international understanding—send us not only soldiers, who cannot be placed in civilian positions, for management of affairs, but, above all, students, men of "Geist"—(culture-spirit), who in a sense might give their year of practical studies here in the study of old Europe. For such a period of military service can always bring something of fertilization—as the Stauff knights received from the old Roman culture, in the age when the Emperors left their garisons in North-Italian cities. And we should be happy if young theologians would come over to study our history and the history of our soul (spirit). There is a great uncultivated field. That Hitler gained the loyalty of many idealists, who had many misgivings, in 1933, was not strange. It was not conditioned by their vanity. Two factors served, as to that: First, to escape, finally, from the inner confusion, in which more and more the little parasites of the fifteen years of democracy had gained control through the Reichstag. They—the democratic element—had been sent into the desert by the winners; they had dispossessed the Kaiser in the hope of their acceptance by the world and the victors. And then—at the cruel insistence of Clemenceau that there were twenty millions too many Germans, they had to sign the (dictate) of Versailles, despite the Fourteen Points of Wilson. Thus, already in 1919, they had lost the confidence of the people as to their promised democratic world peace-promises.

Our plea to the Americans—and our hope, is that you won't again let us sit, as you did at Versailles at the conference table, between Wilson Lloyd and Clemenceau. And Marshall's energy, as confronting Russia, gives us some hope, that the mistakes won't be repeated. At that time, the German people were forced to a psychological isolation—to feel an abandonment of themselves in the world. That prepared the way for Hitler.

There was the Versailles peace, preceded by the Fourteen Points! That was the spring-board. And what could the historians say to that, to a desperate people? The logic was "God helps those who help themselves." That had to become the confession of faith of real politicians. At that time I thought less in politics. I was, soul and body, theologian. I expected improvement, if it were possible, from the spiritual side. But one must see the other side also. The second thing was the increasing strength of Russia, and its influence in Germany. Little minds without horizon, romantic idealists who had some material inclinations and much jealousy in their hearts—I knew many personally. Many were not, in themselves, bad men. But do not present developments prove that people saw things then as they really were? Surely, this war which Hitler made with weak pretenses (but it must be said with emphasis: it was never our war) has pushed Russia decades for-

THE SOURCE OF KNOWLEDGE.

"Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge." We live in a world of speech, thank God. The ability to utter and comprehend speech is a priceless one. It distinguishes man from the rest of God's creation. It is his privilege to explore and utilize the lexicon of life. The voluminous speech of the day—in home, school, business and play—among children, youth and adults—is enormous and prophetic. The volume and range of speech have been greatly amplified by the advent of radio. Destiny is being shaped by the character of daily speech.

The highest form of speech is the proclamation of the gospel. Profane speech reverses the creative purpose of speech and prostitutes man's highest capacity. Emil Brunner says: "Capacity for speech is not given to us by the message of Christ, but it is claimed and used for the message of Christ. Wherever the Gospel is proclaimed this capacity is presupposed." Think of it, the gospel is proclaimed in Chinese, Japanese, and the speech of many people! Communication, human and divine, is one of the great miracles of life. Therefore thank God for the day, the gift of speech, and the sound of many voices.

Night brings contrast: shadow and darkness, stillness and silence, rest and sleep. But the night is important in God's economy. It is not simply an interim between the days. It is not designed simply to affect a moratorium on speech at regular intervals. One may reflect upon the lessons of the day. Success and failure may be evaluated.

The night is intended to be germinal, creative. Great ideas develop and mature in the realm of the subconscious. God becomes our unconscious ally, for "he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." Night should become alive and eloquent, especially during the summer.

The greatest value of the night is found in its constructive and meaningful sequence. It is only through this purposeful sequence, "Night unto night," that real wisdom is attained. This cumulative process, unceasingly multiplied in eager minds and receptive spirits, is at the heart of God's redeeming plan. Let the ancient words find fulfilment in your life: "Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge."

THEOLOGY AND WORSHIP.

Emil Brunner says that the prayers of a mother at the bedside of her child have definite theological implications. If that be true, and it assuredly is, how true it is that our public prayers and our conduct of worship have definite theological implications. Like St. Peter, we are betrayed by our speech; our theological stripe becomes apparent.

Now it should be stated that our theological orientation may not be orderly and consistent in the conduct of public worship. Close scrutiny or examination would probably reveal a mixture of naivete, superstition and faith. The lack of a clearly defined theology is no more apparent in the sermon than in the worship.

What is the meaning of worship? Who and where is God? On what conditions does he answer prayer? How keen is our social conscience and ethical awareness? Just what is our Christology? How profound and adequate are the sources of comfort in the Christian gospel? Is the minister a priest or a mere performer? What are the valid uses of Christian hymnody? Is prayer recitation or dedication? Which is more important, sermon or sacrament? How deep and accessible are the springs of grace? How great is our concern for sinful humanity? Is ours a gospel of forgiveness and redemption? How brightly burns the hope of eternal life? The answers to these and a host of related questions become all too apparent in our regular conduct of worship.

"The hour cometh and now is when the true worshipper shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth." Worship must have intellectual content and emotional drive; it must motivate as well as educate. As Henry Sloane Coffin expresses it: "True worship is a means of growth in both knowledge and grace." Worship embraces the tangible and the intangible, the natural and the supernatural. The theologically inept leader of worship is in fact a blind leader of the blind. "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness?"

The minister engaged in the preparation and conduct of worship has resources both human and divine. The saints and theologians lay their rich treasures at his feet. All things are his: the ascriptions and appurtenances of worship, the canticles and versicles, the collects and creeds, the psalters and prayers, the symbols and sacraments, the beatitudes and benedictions. The hour cometh and now is when theology and worship must join hands in bringing people into the presence of the living God.

R. L. H.

In time of great anxiety we can draw power from our friends. We should at such times, however, avoid friends who sympathize too deeply, who give us pity rather than strength. Like so many unwise parents, such friends — well meaning, though they be — give. "set lessons in fear" rather than in courage. It is said that Napoleon before one of his great battles used to invite his marshals to file past his tent, where he grasped their hands in silence. Certain friends, like Napoleon, can give us a sense of triumphing power.

Ministers of Jesus Christ

A Message Given by DR. HARRY THOMAS STOCK at the Deering Pastor's School

Although we are often properly spoken of as ministers of Congregational Christian churches we prefer to speak of ourselves as ministers of the gospel. We, like Paul, are ministers of Jesus Christ.

We are ministers in churches where men have found their faith and freedom in, and through, Jesus Christ. Our fellowship has no common creed to which all must subscribe. For us, creeds and politics and programs of councils do not have equal standing with the gospel as it is recorded in the New Testament. Unlike Catholicism, with us there is no man-made official point of view to which we must bend our minds.

We are members of free, autonomous churches. But today the ecumenical church assumes new importance. We now and then protest against this trend which magnifies the church universal, but we know that if there is one Christ there is one church of Christ. If there is one world which suffers and sins together there must be one church of Christ to make this one world in Christ.

Jesus must have spoken simply and clearly so that the untutored could understand. Else the later gospel record would not be so clear that simple minds can understand those things that matter most. The gospel, read today by common people who never saw a Bible, comes with startling and convincing freshness to their minds and wills. Jesus talked to men's condition in words that had meaning to them. He so speaks today if we but let him.

He proclaimed a gospel, good news. It appears that he did not often use the common Old Testament names for God, although he knew them and understood them and believed them. He spoke of God in terms of fatherliness. He taught this fatherliness of God not in abstract or philosophical terms or by definitions, but in pictorial language, in illustration, by demonstration, and in application to the plain necessities of daily living.

This gospel was also good news about man, about man so thoroughly bad and yet so potentially good, man within whom rages the battle between low impulses and high desires, man so helpless and yet so strong when he lays hold of the eternal resources of God, man lost to sin and yet so possible of salvation through the mercy and grace of God, man who may be forgiven and who may take on aspects of the divine nature—such things about their lives men could understand, such things plain men experienced when Jesus lived the life of a man among them.

It was good news about moral responsibility. None of us would hold that morality is all that there is to religion. But most of us would insist that intellectual correctness without ethical fruitage is poor religion if it is any religion. We fear the post-war reaction which seems to give us a new doctrine, "Be not good overmuch." Jesus understood the ethical teachings of the Old Testament and he let down no bars. Rather he insisted upon a higher morality, a plus morality, an inner morality, an all-inclusive social morality. Men were known by their fruits, and these fruits were not merely those of sabbath observance or even abstention from gross evil, but they were of the spirit: love, compassion, sympathy, brotherliness. No prophet ever called men to social activism with more point and power than Jesus. How could men love God without also showing love toward their neighbors?

The gospel was first preached to common people. They heard Jesus gladly. It was from their number that the first followers came. As time went on it became necessary to explain Jesus in terms of the history and expectations of the Jewish people. Thus began the systematic formulation of ideas to prove that he was the fulfilment of prophecy, that he did that which God had promised he would in the fulness of time do.

When Christianity moved beyond the bounds of Jewish culture, it had to be explained in terms of the philosophies of the Greeks and of the legal thinking of the Romans. As the word was preached to those familiar with the wisdom of the world, much of the simplicity of language disappeared, the parables and the pictorial diction gave way to more labored arguments. In preaching the gospel to both the simple and the learned, later disciples used various approaches, various methods of interpretations and various arguments to convince men of the validity and power of the gospel. But it was still the gospel that was at the heart of their message. Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, expressed his agony of mind that some had substituted the authority of Paul for that of Christ.

What were first differences in approach and emphasis, in time, came to be regarded as differences in essential faith. Schools of interpretation developed. Partisan points of view broke the unity of the fellowship. The interpretations became more important than the gospel which they were intended to explain. Pride of opinion developed. Then came the era of councils when it was sought to determine truth by vote, when official doctrine was pronounced, when orthodoxy and heresy fought each other, when men were compelled to conform on threat of expulsion and damnation.

The peril always exists that the centrality and relevance of Jesus Christ shall be obscured by his earnest followers who seek to make the gospel clearer than it is. In some places we are still under the spell of a superficial evangelism which does not emphasize the meaning of commitment in terms of the daily life situations into which people are thrown. The so-called simple gospel is sometimes so simplified that we do not convince men that it has profound meaning for the complex problems which none can escape. We tend to be smug with words and phrases and the language of Zion which has little meaning for him who knows only the language of the street. Platitudinous injunctions are often repeated to young people who live in a world of science and international relations, to men who have studied philosophy and history and the ideologies of secular movements, some of whom are eager to know whether Jesus Christ does indeed have meaning for modern life, some of whom need to be shown the shallowness of these secular systems. No superficial understanding of the gospel will suffice for the present-day pastor.

The gospel is for all men, the thoughtful and the untrained mind. The minister today must be prepared to proclaim that gospel to all types in ways that are convincing to all. Deering should give us experience in wrestling with profound truths, with the conflicting points of view of men whose minds evolve different interpretations of the gospel but who are committed with equal earnestness to the same Christ. It should give us help in translating such profundities to meet the thought-forms of little children and of graduate students, of the unschooled and the sophisticated.

Any intellectual discipline brings with it the danger that our own precious ideas may obscure the gospel. The theologian seeks earnestly for more and more of truth. The

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There are many beautiful gardens in our city of Suffolk. It takes love of God, love of nature, and love of home and neighbor, and tender care to make a beautiful garden. These qualities were possessed in a marked degree by the late Mrs. W. H. Jones, 302 Bank Street. She and Miss Dorris Jones, her daughter, saw to it that beauty lived and grew in their garden, as well as in their lives. How often my attention has been called to their lovely home and the pretty lawns, flowers, and flowering shrubs and the evergreens that grace it.

An ordered and well planned garden speaks of an ordered and well planned life managing it. When there is symmetry of lay-out, as well as choice and care in planting, and diligence and faithfulness in upkeep you can be assured that these qualities are a part of the personality back of it. There is no fan-fare about the way a garden grows—quiet, peaceful, patient it is in putting forth blade, and bud, and flower. So was the life of its late owner.

Her garden gave out and does give fragrance, and helpfulness, and beauty. To the rich and poor alike it puts forth its treasures—even the passing stranger is made happier by its unfettered beneficence. Those of us who had the joy of the friendship of this particular gardener knew that such were her ways—as quietly and gently did she serve many in her day. Not long ago she was laid to rest but the fragrance of her noble life follows after her, and ours is a better, bigger, finer community, church, and neighborhood because her life was beautiful.

In this writing I am thinking, too, of another who lived long and well. One who never had a home of her own—in the sense of being married and rearing a family—but she brought the joy of living and serving to the center of homes dear to her, and to whom she was dear. Her faithfulness across many years to her family and friends, to her church and her church people and programs was like a beautiful garden of loving services ripening into flower and fragrance for many. Within a month of each other these two lives, Mrs. W. H. Jones and Miss Vickey Ellis, were called home to Him whose gardens are never-ending. Our church will miss them but the beauty of their lives will ever remain in our hearts. Allow me to close with one of my own bits of verse:

Out of my window I look each day,
At a neighbor's garden across the way;
And there each spring the roses blow,
On a bush she planted some years ago.

The neighbor is gone but the roses are there,
In bloom each spring so radiant and fair;
A lovely witness from the soft brown sod
To her noble life and her faith in God.

Oh may we leave with our friends so dear,
Some fragrant roses still theirs to cheer;
Some words of love, some deeds of worth,
To help and to head this sorrowing earth!

THE BAR IN THE BASEMENT.

"You should see the new house we are building—and especially the bar daddy is putting in the basement." So said a young person the other day as she raved about the new home her father was building.

Her father is well known to me. He is a member of the church. He used to be an office bearer in the church. In those days he was proud of the position he held in his church. Now, however, he's just a private in the rear ranks. And he's not much of a soldier there either. The church would be about as well off without him, and he would be about as well off if his name were not on the church register.

But now he's building a new home, and in the basement he is building a bar where he can entertain his distinguished (?) friends who will call on him. I suppose they will leave his house with high praises of his thoughtfulness and of his entertaining ability. And they will talk about the good time they had at his house.

But that man has some children in his house, too, and it's a safe bet that he is not building an altar in that home to which he can retire at stated intervals and pray for the guidance of God as he undertakes to rear them aright. In other years it would have been an altar, and the bar would have been left out. And those were the best years of his life—and the happiest. Ask his wife.

This way of church members putting bars in their homes leaves me cold. It leaves me worse than cold. If they were as concerned about being spiritual as they are about being popular, they would be worth something to the church and to the world.

As it is, about all they do is pay some money to the church. And the church could well afford to get along without that.

That bar in the basement. I wonder what will come as a result of it. A drunk child may stagger home some night . . . who knows. If it had been an altar, what would have come of that? It might have helped some boy to climb into his father's lap and say, "I'm going to be a preacher." Take your choice, brother. I'll choose the altar. If you're going to choose the bar, you should put it in the basement for that's where it will lead all who patronize it. —Norman M. Lovein, Executive Secretary, Georgia Temperance League.

REPORT FROM CHURCH WORLD SERVICE CENTER.

The first week of June, 1947, was the biggest week in the history of the Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Maryland, for receipts. In the first five days, more than 240,000 pounds of goods were brought in from cities and towns throughout the seven-state area served by the Center. The biggest week for receipts, also had on its record the top-ranking day. On Tuesday, June 3, 120,000 pounds of relief clothing, shoes and bedding arrived for unloading, more than ever before on a single day. Most of this came from North Carolina, where a state-wide drive for relief clothing is in progress, and from Richmond, Va., where a city-wide drive netting well over 120,000 pounds was held on May 31. To the end of May, the New Windsor Center had received 1,282,868 pounds of goods to be processed, and shipped out 1,310,710 pounds.

No matter how busy you are you usually find time to see to it that your automobile is kept in repair. would never think of starting out if your automobile brakes, motor or gears were not functioning properly. But, how about your body? Has it ever occurred to you that you should have it checked up at least once every year? How do you know whether or not your vital organs are functioning properly? The man who submits himself to his family doctor for regular examination will rarely need to worry about his health. His physician will advise the proper diet, exercise, recreation, etc. If his advice is followed much trouble may be averted; many serious conditions can be halted in their early stages.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE SMALL COLLEGE.

As a rule the small college means a church or church-related college. A state supported college may be small at its beginning but it seldom, if ever, remains small. It has what it takes to make a college large—money—money for buildings, equipment, and teachers. The small church colleges, however, have made worthwhile contributions to the intellectual, physical, moral and spiritual life of the nation and of civilization the whole world over.

In the so-called small church college there are certain advantages offered to the students who attend:

1. There is an inviting and friendly atmosphere on the campus such as you will find in any comparatively small group. No one remains a stranger very long. He is soon known by everyone and brought right into the group. Such intimacy and interest become a bulwark against wrong and a telling force in character building.

2. Practically all instruction given in the small college is done by full faculty members. Seldom, if ever, are there students on teaching fellowships such as is the common practice in large colleges or universities that include graduate schools. In the small college the student not only has the privilege of being taught by the professor himself but he is on "speaking terms" with his professor. He has ready access to him. He may go to him for counsel, advice, or instruction almost at will. This intimate association with his professor means much to the student after college days are over.

3. A student goes to college that he may know something about books and their contents, what there is in the world, and what there is to be done in the world. He also wants to discover what there is in himself, what he can do in life and how to do it. In the small college there are practically as many opportunities for leadership as in a large college, but far fewer students. Hence, in a small college there are comparatively many more opportunities for individual development. After all is not this the chief end of college life?

4. The world is beginning to sense the importance of religion in the development of human personality. Science, literature, music and art make their contributions, but after all man is predominately religious. The spiritual side of his personality needs training, development, and guidance. Such advantages should be offered in college or during the period in life when young people are expected to attend college. In the small church college such advantages are offered under inviting circumstances. No one need be embarrassed in the least because of enrollment in classes of religion. It is interesting today to note how European countries are turning to religion in search of solutions for their many perplexing problems. By experience they have learned that the things of the world literally pass away; whereas, they were abundantly supplied with the things that the world has to offer, they are now without, poor and poverty-stricken. Many of the things that perish have gone from them. They realize that they must get hold of the things that endure, that the possession of these enduring values will make possible for them the remaining necessities of life. It is the literal fulfilment of the injunction of Christ himself: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." The college, whether large or small, that fails to administer to the spiritual life of its students, is missing its opportunity and depriving the students themselves of one of the most significant advantages that could possibly come to them in their days of preparation. The Christian Church has done a commendable thing in establishing Elon College and in continuing its contribution to society by supporting the College. We need to support it more generously that it may do its job more commendably.

CONTRACT AWARDED.

The contract for the erection of the building for the new heating plant for the College has been awarded to the H. Frank Mitchell Construction Company of Burlington, North Carolina, at a sum not to exceed $38,000. Mr. Mitchell assures me that there can be savings to the College out of this figure with certain changes that can be made, subject to the architect's approval. These changes, he assures me, will not lessen the durability or availability nor will they detract from the appearance of the building.

This contract is for the building alone. It does not include the coal bin or the smoke stack. These items must be contracted for separately. I should remind you that the College has already purchased two 200 h. p. boilers at a cost of $10,400 f.o.b. Elon College, two Detroit stokers complete and installed for a sum of $6,000. This makes a total cost of contracts let to date of $54,400. The remaining work to be done: cost of installing the furnaces, purchase and installment of necessary equipment such as valves, etc., materials to convey the heat and hot water from the new heating plant to the present point of distribution on the campus and installation of the same, the coal bin, and the smoke stack, should not exceed $40,000, making a total of $94,400. This is less than was originally estimated. The writer's opinion is that the above items can be secured and installed at a figure less than that named.

The Building Committee and the Board of Trustees realize that this is a most expensive time to build and install heating facilities. We wish that this work could be postponed. Present equipment will not pass inspection. We are compelled to make these improvements. There is no other alternative. The College has about $45,000 that can be applied to the cost of the heating plant and facilities, which means that we must raise at least $50,000. The architect's fees are not included in the figures given. This is quite an undertaking. The cooperation of the church, alumni, and friends of the College will be needed. It is not a question of getting one or two people to foot the bills; the responsibility is ours. It rests upon every individual who is interested in Elon College and the general cause of Christian Education. Practically all states are putting huge sums into their programs of higher education. The church schools must make necessary improvements and needed additions. They have no source from which to expect funds other than their own constituency and public spirited individuals who may be interested sufficiently to join in the support of the church-related and privately endowed college. Other churches are rallying to the support of their institutions of higher learning. I know that the Congregational Christian Church will

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
July 1, 1947.

Dear Friends of the Southern Convention:

Another month has slipped by since we last wrote to you, and a long month it has been. We now know what the "rainy season" means—day after day of hard rains, flooded rivers, mould on shoes, books and even on our clothing. We've been told that it's about over now and we're surely thankful. The rain has certainly made things grow. My garden contains corn, tomatoes, sweet potatoes, string beans, okra, parsley, beets, carrots, etc. We bought a year-old bull calf which we plan to butcher this winter (and incidentally, at this moment he is making a real contribution as a lawn mower). We were given three rabbits and three chickens, so you see we are really in the farming business for sure.

During the past month a young adults organization began with over thirty teachers, business men and other professional young people—the future leaders of Shaowu. They meet each Friday night in our home. First, there is a short worship program followed by a discussion. Last week they animatedly discussed the "meaning of salvation" for over an hour. Then comes a period of recreation—sometimes we have slides, sometimes games and again music on the vic-trola. Both young people's groups have organized choirs which are di-rected by Dorothy with the able as-sistance of Silas Chiang, a teacher in the school. They plan to sing alter-nately in the South Gate and in the East Gate Churches. A Bible School begins this week in the South Gate Church each morning from 9:00 to 12:00 for six weeks. Over one hun-dred children have indicated that they want to attend. I am to teach a short course on beginning English, Dorothy will teach art and some sing-ing.

It is amazing what can be done here with so few materials. When I think of the crayons, paints, pictures, books, and other materials available in America and see how little they have here, I marvel that they are able to do so much.

Another thing which impresses me more and more about the Chinese is their eagerness to learn. Dorothy vol-unteered to teach high school students English three mornings a week for the summer and twenty have already joined the class.

We recently celebrated a very en-joyable holiday called the Dragon Boat Festival (the fifth day of the fifth month—Chinese calendar). On that day teams of young men com-pete with each other rowing very pic-turesque dragon boats on the Min River. The story of the festival goes back to ancient times. It seems that there was a very honest and honorable official who refused to take graft and who tried to help the people. How-ever, he was too honest and when he became discouraged, he jumped in the river. The people all loved him so they got out boats and went out to look for him. Every year, the dragon boats are taken out and go up and down the river supposedly looking for the official. The festival re-minds us very much of our fourth of July with the fireworks, special food, etc. The spirit of the occasion re-minded us also of the tournaments we used to enjoy so much in Waverly.

Incidentally, we made the local newspapers as a result of our activi-ties on that day. The Chiang family invited us to a delicious dinner after which we went down to the river to watch the race. We found a bamboo raft and rowed out in mid-stream so we could better see the activities of the day. The next issue of the local paper carried in its "gossip" column the following:

"So-and-so family entertained 'Al-lied Nations' friends on a raft during the dragon boat races. They all seemed to be having a very enjoyable time. Foreigners and Chinese were like one family." As a matter of fact we felt very much like one fam-ily and we realize more each day that we all belong to a great family, chil-dren of one God, our Father.

The price of rice has tripled in the past two months. The ministers are finding it quite difficult. There's no use trying to do any planning in advance as far as finances are concerned whether for churches, institutions, or individuals. Ten thousand dollars a month from now may only be equal to $1,000. Yet, in spite of it all, everyone carries on with a cheerful spirit, and a minimum of complain-ing.

We really enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN and we are eager to hear the news of our Southern Con-vention Churches. We note with in-terest the progress individual churches are making. We are thank-ful to read about the fine way you are contributing toward our work here. As we see the contribution of each

NEW CONVENTION PRESIDENT.

May I present to you Mrs. O. H. Paris, newly elected president of the Woman's Southern Missionary Convention of the Congregational Christian Church. Most of us know her well, but for those who don't, the following article, written by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, will introduce her to the women of the Convention:

MRS. O. H. PARIS—OUR NEW PRESIDENT.

To one who does not know Mrs. Paris, a true appraisal of her worth would sound like flattery—for she is truly a remarkable person. For many years she has been active in the conferences and the Convention. She has served as president of the North Carolina Woman's Conference, as well as in many other offices of the Conference. She has served on the Mission Board of the Convention, the Board of Publications, and the Board of Superannuation. At the last session of the General Council, she was elected a member of the national committee on evangelism.

But perhaps the best test of a person's ability and character is the test of his or her actions in the home church. For the past twenty years or so Mrs. Paris has been a member of our Greensboro Church and her opportunities for service have been unlimited. Perhaps her greatest contribution has been as president of the Woman's Auxiliary. Three different times she has been chosen as president for a period of several years each time. She says her secret is in knowing how to appoint good committees. The women of her Auxiliary would say it is her own willingness to work and her gracious and lovely way of making them want to work with her.

As superintendent of the Adult Department of the Sunday school, she has contributed much to the progress of the Sunday school. She has served on many committees and boards of the church itself, for her wisdom and her courage to stand up for what she believes to be right have won for her the confidence of all.

Mrs. Paris is a graduate of our college—Elon—with the class of 1915. Before college days her home was Bellevue's Creek, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Paris have one son, Oscar, a high school junior. They live at 747 Park Avenue, Greensboro, N. C.

It seems particularly fitting in writing these words about Patt Preston Paris to pay tribute through her to one who has helped more than any other to make her what she is today—her father, Mr. A. W. Preston. For Pat's mother died when Patt was a wee lass, leaving seven children for the father to bring up alone. That he did his job well is evidenced today in the Christian homes these children have built.

GRAHAM R. WISSEMAN.

MRS. O. H. PARIS.

We salute you, Mrs. Paris, as our new president, and pledge to you our utmost in cooperation and devotion.

CAREY ANDES.

DENDRON.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Dendron Christian Church will be an honor roll society, having met the requirements of the Standard of Excellence and sponsoring missionary education and giving among the young people under the leadership of Mrs. Thurman Williams, the children being led by Mrs. Owen Whitmore, and the Cradle Roll by Mrs. Garland Morris. A St. Patrick's Day dinner was held for the young people with Rev. J. E. McCauley as guest speaker; and an Easter Sunrise service was held with the groups from the other churches. One of the most interesting studies on India was given by a young man who had spent over two years there in the Service, showing pictures, curios, and souvenirs he had sent home while there.

On the second Sunday in January movies on India were shown with the societies from New Lebanon and Wakefield being guests. The World Day of Prayer was observed with the New Lebanon Society and the other denominations of the community. The pastor of the church, Rev. J. M. Roberts, gave a review of the Divine Fatherhood and Mrs. Carroll Beale of Wakefield reviewed the Portrait of a Pilgrim, with the study on India being reviewed by Mrs. M. B. Joyner and Mrs. Garland Spratley. The members of the group expressed the opinion that the Year Book is the best the societies have ever had to use.

MRS. L. T. WILLIAMS,
Secretary.

SHELTON MEMORIAL.

The Missionary Society of Shelton Memorial Congregational Christian Church, Portsmouth, has had a very interesting program this year. On the night of January 7, Mrs. Frank Morgan reviewed our study book on India. We invited the First Christian and Elm Avenue Churches to meet with us. Mrs. Morgan gave a splendid talk. The collection was sent to the Jacksons.

The Spring Missionary Rally of Norfolk District met with us in April. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill gave most interesting talks, especially on her trip to India.

On May 2, we sponsored a "Fellowship Day" program, which was well attended. The First Christian (Disciples), Park View Baptist, and Park View Methodist Churches participated and all the women seemed quite enthused and voted to make it an annual affair. The meeting was followed by an informal tea.

On June 5, Rev. and Mrs. Morgan were our guests at our regular monthly missionary meeting and on that occasion Mr. Morgan reviewed "The Divine Fatherhood."

We have received the clothing and grease container, which the other churches in Park View will help us fill.

We are enjoying our little adopted girl at Elon Orphanage. We send her boxes of toys and clothing at regular intervals.

MARY T. SHAFER,
President.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

A WISH COME TRUE.

Gordon Crump jumped up and down in his excitement. His mother was taking sister Helen to a birthday party this afternoon at three o'clock but on the way there she was going to take him to Jerry McGill's home. Jerry's mother had asked Mrs. Crump to let Gordon come and get acquainted with Jerry. There were not many boys and girls living close to Gordon's home so he was all excited at the prospect of having a new friend.

Finally Helen's gift with its wrapper of bright paper and big bow of ribbon was all ready for the trip. So were Gordon and Helen. Down the driveway their green car rolled out by the flower and vegetable garden, then through a cool wooded drive with baby rabbits scurrying to get out of sight. When they passed Beaver Lake they saw bright bathing umbrellas with bathing-suit-clad children playing in the sand beneath them. Soon they were climbing the hill to Jerry's house, up, up and then a sudden turn into the driveway. Mrs. McGill came out to greet them and soon Jerry came running to be introduced.

"Gordon, you stay here and get acquainted with Jerry, and then I shall be back in about ten minutes to take you both riding out to Uncle Irving's," promised Mrs. Crump.

"Come out into our back garden and see our 'Bashful Dwarf' by our fish-pool, Gordon," invited Jerry. Away they scampered around the house and down the steps into the back lawn. There stood Mr. Bashful on the edge of the pool blushing the same color as the bright fish that swam in the water beneath his nose!

"Come into the garden. There is a St. Francis Shrine out there by the rose bush. My see-saw and my swing are out this way, also."

By the time that Mrs. Crump had returned the two boys had taken a turn at swinging, see-sawing and riding in the wagon. They were ready to sit in the car and ride for a while.

"I think that we shall be back within two hours," Mrs. Crump said, as they started down the hill.

"We shall be watching for you! Have fun!" called Mrs. McGill.

On the way to Gordon's Uncle Irving's they had to go through a tunnel. Before they got to the entrance of the tunnel Jerry said, "Gordon, do you know about making a wish as you drive through the tunnel?"

"No, I don't. What are you supposed to do?" asked Gordon.

"Just as you enter the tunnel you make a wish. If you can hold your breath until you get through the other side, your wish will come true!"

Both boys made wishes and then started holding their breath. Mrs. Crump drove a little faster than usual through the tunnel so that they wouldn't have to hold out so long. Hurrah! They both were able to hold their breath all of the way! "Now don't tell what you wished for, or it will not come true!" cautioned Jerry.

"Oh, I'll not tell you until it does come true!" replied Gordon.

Soon they were turning into Uncle Irving's driveway. Mrs. Crump blew the horn to let them know she had arrived. No one was at home! They tried each entrance but no answer. The car was out of the garage, so Mrs. Crump said, "Well, boys, I guess they have gone riding as we have this afternoon. Don't be disappointed now. We'll go to another interesting place." Soon they were on their way to the city again. Just before she got to the tunnel this time Mrs. Crump turned off the highway to the left. A big sign said: "City Recreation Park!"

"What do you know, Gordon," exclaimed Jerry! "That was my wish! I wished that I could go to the Recreation Park!"

"Well, Jerry, I did not hear your wish, but I am glad that I am helping to make it come true!"

Gordon and Jerry had a wonderful time in the Park. On the way home Gordon made Jerry promise to come visit him the very next week.

EASY MONEY,

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Come on, Jerry, ask your mother! She'll give you the money."

The coaxing tones of a small boy's voice came to me through the open doorway of the children's room of the city library, where I was shelving some books. Two boys, engaged in earnest conversation, were sitting on the front steps.

"It's no use to ask my mother,

Jack," the other one replied. "I've spent my allowance for this week."

"So have I," Jack responded, "but Mom always gives me extra money when I need it. Why don't you ask your mother to give you enough for the movies just this once? It's a good show, and this afternoon may be your last chance to see it."

"Then I'll just have to miss it," Jerry Walton answered with conviction. "My folks make me keep to my allowance."

"I'm glad my folks aren't like that," Jack Stafford concluded in superior tones. "I'll go over and get Boyd Heathman to go with me; his mother gives him plenty of money."

A moment later a sober little boy came into the library and began turning the pages of a new magazine. I longed to go over to him and hand him the price of admission to the theatre, where I knew a fine picture was being shown that afternoon—a story of pioneer days in the West that was good for boys to see. However, I was sure his parents were wise in insisting that he keep his spending within his allowance, so I resisted the temptation. The fact that Jerry Walton is the son of good friends of mine made it all the more imperative that I should not interfere with their sensible arrangements. But I could provide him with a substitute for the picture show.

"We've been receiving some good books this month, Jerry," I told him. "Would you like to see them?"

"Yes, thank you, Miss Mallory," the boy answered. He came over to my desk and was soon interested in the display I was preparing. "That picture looks like one of those in front of the Rialto Theatre," he said, pointing to a book jacket that carried a likeness of a big covered wagon against a background of dark blue mountains.

"You didn't see the show at the Rialto?" I inquired, wondering what the boy would say about his enforced self-denial.

"No, I spent my allowance for other things this week," Jerry replied ruefully.

"Did all your friends go to see it?" I asked.

"Yes, some of them get extra money when their allowances are all spent. Mother does not like to have me do that. She explained to me that having an allowance now is just like having my own income when I grow up. She says that if I keep within my allowance now I'll know how to keep within my income later. That way I shall always be free from debt.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

ATTENTION, BOYS AND GIRLS.

I was just looking at my calendar and as I write this I observe that our date at Camp Hanes is only a little over twenty-three days off—the exact days dependent upon your age. I understand that much preparation has gone into the planning of a "bang-up," first-class young people's summer conference. Its complete success, however, will be dependent upon you. We can't have a good camp without good young people. So, if you have any "yen" whatsoever to attend, you better be making preparations to do so.

"First come, first served" is the cry for now, because we aren't planning to limit the number attending from the various churches. So you had better send in that registration today. Get a registration blank from your minister or write me and I'll send you one. You are asked to send in a partial payment with your registration blank (for the Senior Conference, young people entering grades 10, 11, 12, or those out of school, $5; for the Junior High Conference, boys and girls entering grades 7, 8, 9, $4). The remainder of the amount you will pay upon arrival at Camp Hanes (Senior Conference, $11; Junior High Conference, $7).

If you register and then discover that you can't attend, write Miss Betty Chicoine, Elon College, N. C., before August 5, for a refund.

The Senior Conference is from August 12 to 18. You will arrive on the morning of the 12th, register, get your cabin assignments, unpack, and so on. Your first meal will be lunch on August 12. Your last meal will be breakfast on August 18.

The Junior High Conference is from August 18 to 22. You will arrive on the morning of August 18, register, get your cabin assignments, unpack, and so on. Your first meal will be lunch on August 18, your last meal will be breakfast on August 22.

Miss Chicoine says: "Be sure to bring the kind of clothes in which you can have a good time out of doors. You'll want to dress a little more formally than slacks and shorts for the evening meal and the program following (dresses for the girls, etc.)

—but as for the rest of the time, we are in camp. Be sure to bring comfortable shoes, too. Bring your own bedding. A flashlight will be helpful. Bring your Bible, some writing paper and stamps—you will want to write home. If you play a musical instrument, bring it along. (Your writer would not suggest that you bring your piano, it might be a little too heavy.) Bring a little extra money, probably, to buy books, special postcards, or to give 'an offering for others'."

Summer Camp will include: Getting up, Quiet time, Eats, Fun, Planning, More fun, Sleep, Swim, Friends, Consecration, Worship. Everything for you to have a swell week of Christian fellowship. Here's hoping I'll say "hello" to you very soon.

LIBERTY SPRING YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Liberty Springs Congregation Christian Church has had a very successful year under the leadership of Mrs. Wesley Harrell. We have our regular monthly meeting Tuesday night after every second Sunday.

We had a thank offering program in the month of November with a large number present. This year we have a membership in the C. M. A. We gave a Christmas program in December and invited the public to attend. All the members took part in the program.

Miss Betty Chicoine was invited to come to our church to talk to us about our work for the year. We invited the young people of Bethlehem and Cypress Chapel to meet with us. There was a large crowd present.

We purchased Volume IV of the Society Kit. It has helped to make our programs and entertainment more interesting. We raised and sent away $15.00 for the War Victims and Reconstruction Committee.

On Easter Sunday morning the young people gave a Sunrise Service. The attendance was gratifying. Both members of the society and the church were present.

We voted to send $10 to the Franklinton Institute to buy shades. We are confident that when we close out this year's work we will have accomplished much good for the church, ourselves and the Kingdom.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is a source of satisfaction and encouragement to have the churches and Sunday schools of the Convention continue to manifest their interest in their college by giving financial support through their respective organizations. We are doing pretty well this year. We are a little ahead of any previous year. This fact is greatly appreciated since the financial demands upon the College continue to increase. A bill for the printing of the catalogue came this morning from the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Virginia. The publisher, Mr. John T. Kernodle, stated that the cost of materials and printing had increased from twenty-five to thirty per cent over last year. This is not only true with printing companies but it is true with practically all companies or concerns with which the College deals. It is not only necessary for the Sunday schools and churches of the Southern Convention to continue their support of their college but it is essential that such support be materially increased.

The College is most appreciative of every dollar contributed for its support.

PARENTS AND THEIR CHILDREN.

LESSON V—AUGUST 3, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Raise up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it.—Proverbs 22:6.

LESSON: Ruth 2; Proverbs 1:8-9; 2:3; 4:1-6; 6:2-23; 10:1; 13:1; 15:5; 17:1; 6; 19:18; 22:23-26.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 23:22-26.

Dad and Mother Do Know Something.

"My son, hear (listen to) the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother. My son, keep the commandment of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother. Bind them continually upon thy heart, tie them about thy neck." Dad and mother may seem a little behind the times, may act like "old fogies," may at times seem to be "wet blankets" and to take joy out of life. There is a period in a young person's life when he or she thinks that they know more than dad or mother, when he or she knows best. But come to think of it, mother and dad have lived a little longer than the youngsters; they have learned some things by observation, and more things by experience; and they really do know something, indeed they know a great deal. Therefore their instruction and their commandments ought to be heeded. Mark Twain once said that one of the most amazing things he ever heard of was how much his father had learned between the time he (Mark Twain) was sixteen and the time he (Mark Twain) became twenty-one. The writer of these Notes here bears glad witness to the instruction and counsels and commands of a mother and father who never had much, in fact but very little, "book larnin," but who did have a lot of common sense, and who tried to bring their children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

And, of course, mothers and fathers not only know something; they care a lot. They usually love their children more than they love themselves. They want their children to profit by their mistakes, to avoid the pitfalls and the by-paths that play havoc with so many lives. Wise is the young person, and happy, too, who heeds dad's and mother's instruction and advice.

The Hidden Springs of Action.

"When thou walkest, it shall lead thee; when thou sleepest it shall watch over thee, and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee." Psychologists and psychiatrists are discovering more and more the power of the unconscious and the sub-conscious. The writer of Proverbs knew this long ago. Let a young person put ethical ideals and principles in the heart, and even when he sleeps, they will be working toward the formation of strong character. And they will be as lamps and as lights by day and by night.

Peace or Civil War?

"Better is a dry morsel, and quietness therewith, than a house full of feasting with strife." Life in some families is practically a civil war. There is tension, dissension, strife and even fighting. And sometimes this is true of homes that have much, of homes that seemingly have everything. The trouble often lies in the fact that the family has too much. Things, not ideals, are dominant. On the other hand there are homes which do not have much of this world's goods. Food is simple, toys inexpensive and few, clothes not elaborate, furniture simple, the children earn the money for themselves, have to work on holidays, but in such homes there is a wholesome atmosphere, there are high ideals, there is the spirit of cooperation, there is mutual appreciation and loyalty, there is wise discipline, there is a sane and sound religious faith. Here is home in the finest sense of the word. Thank God for the humble homes of the world. Fine furnishings do not make a home. A home is primarily a thing of the spirit.

The Glory of Grandchildren.

"Children's children are the crown of old men." I like to see a man walking or playing with his children. But there is a special appeal in a grandfather and his grandchildren. Grandchildren are indeed the "crown of old men." To have reared sons and daughters and then to have them go out and establish their own homes and to bear children—that is one of God's greatest blessings to men. The grandparents who read these Notes will be their own interpreters of this particular passage.

Discipline or Delinquency.

"Spare the rod and spoil the child"—so runs the ancient adage. "He that spareth the rod hateth his son." "Withhold not correction from the child"—quotations could be recited almost indefinitely concerning the place of discipline in rearing children. To be sure "the rod" does not mean brutal beating—it may not mean even what we call a whipping. But lack of discipline means delinquency, sooner or later. Delinquency on the part of parents results in delinquency in the life of children. Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, who ought to know something about delinquency declares, "Our high crime rate, particularly among juveniles is directly traceable to a breakdown of moral fiber—to the disintegration of home and family life . . . law enforcement needs the help of the home, church and school." Generalizations are dangerous, but one suspects that the reason there is more delinquency today is because there is less discipline in the homes. Lack of discipline, or discipline unwisely administered, brings a nasty fruitage and exacts a heavy penalty. One wonders sometimes if it is not modern parents, instead of today's children who need a good spanking.

According to His Way.

"Train up a child in the way he should go—'according to his way'—and when he is old, he will not depart from it." There are, of course exceptions, but they only prove the rule. The early years are formative and determinative. Instill in a child while he is young those basic attitudes, those ideals; train him in those habits, which are elemental in good character, and it will be hard for him to get away from them. But there is something else in these words quoted above. "According to his way" is the true translation. Parental training. (Continued on page 13.)

MINISTERS OF JESUS CHRIST.

more he studies the more certain he is that that which he surely believes is what all men need to believe. Yet a theological colleague on the same faculty, equally committed to the will of God and to Jesus Christ, formulates his convictions in utterly different terms with equal assurance. Such formulations necessarily involve philosophical and metaphysical terms, and with such language the common man is not acquainted. But the pastor must understand them. In such terms the profound meaning of the gospel must be interpreted to the trained mind. Yet he, the pastor, must ever be conscious of the fact that intellectual acceptance of man-made systems does not alone make him a better Christian. It may enable him to be a better minister to some in his parish, but it is also possible that he so lives in another thought world that he is no longer a good minister of Jesus Christ to the common man.

So it is, too, with the Christian educator. He is committed to Christ and his gospel. But he sees how poorly we succeed in our work of Christian nurture with children, young people and adults. He knows that the work of the ministry is not confined to mature minds that at every age level children and young people need to grow in the understanding, experience and expression of the Christian religion. So he is ever seeking surer methods of achieving this result. He turns to specialists in secular education, and faces the danger of following them instead of the Great Teacher. He experiments in the hope of finding wiser methods and the method may be exalted above the end. In his effort to help people to learn how to think he may be too little concerned with what they think. In recent years Christian education has given much emphasis to method; it has given too little place to Christ, the gospel and the Christian faith.

The social activist falls into a similar temptation. He knows, as Amos and Hosea did, that God cannot look with pleasure upon the human scene, that there is "no place where earth's sorrow is more felt than up in Heaven." He sees widespread suffering due to the sin of man. He observes the acquisitive motive prevalent all about him, the pride of clan and race and class and nation and creed. Are not all victims of injustice objects of the concern of God the Father? Can those who name the name of Christ rest content or impotent in the face of misery and shame? If the forces of evil are wise in strategy and strong in unity, must not the forces of righteousness go forth with wisdom and strength to fight the battle of the Lord? Can anyone read the gospels and insist that social justice is not a necessary fruitage of Christian faith? So it is easy for the activist to confuse the deeper meaning of the Kingdom of God with the perfect state. It is easy for him to identify the will of God and the gospel of Jesus with secular movements which may bring greater justice or temporary relief to part of our population.

The sin to which all such earnest workers are prone is that of enthusiastic pride of opinion, of substituting their own convictions about the Christian gospel, about the way in which God's will shall be accomplished for the truth which was in Jesus Christ. For Christians the decisions of councils and the opinions of experts do not have the same authority as Christ does, they are not part of the gospel. Our central loyalty is not to Paul or Calvin or Luther or Niebuhr or Jefferson or Marx or Dewey. We are disciples of Jesus Christ and his gospel is that which we are called to preach and teach. We study to know what some trusted thinker thinks about what some other thinker thought about some one else's interpretation of the gospel—and we pray that Christ may not be obscured in the process. We try to learn how others have communicated the Christian faith and we seek by experiment and experience to become better teachers—but we pray that we shall never forget that in all we do we serve as ministers of Jesus. We examine and evaluate proposals for healing the wounds of society and dedicate our energies to the expression of Christian brotherhood—and we pray that in it all, we shall serve Christ our Lord and do only that which is the will of God.

God grant that we may always be good ministers of Jesus Christ, that it may be said of us, as Paul wrote of himself: Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not in wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made void.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

ing is not worth much if it is a matter of forcing children into a groove which parents select for them. A child must be trained with the due consideration for his individual capacities, "according to his way." It is wrong even to bring undue pressure on a child to have him enter the ministry. All too many square pegs in round holes are due to unwise insistence on the part of well-meaning (and sometimes of selfish) parents, in choosing a vocation for their children.

This scripture offers a word of encouragement to parents. Do your best to train your children in the way they should go. And God will honor your efforts. You cannot be responsible for the youngsters after they have gone out of the home. But you can go a long way toward controlling their lives after they have gone from the home, by what you do while they are still in the home.

When She Is Old.

"And despise not thy mother when she is old." She may not be as attractive as she was when dad married her, or when you were a child. Hard work and care and sickness and suffering and concern for you, have taken their toll. Perhaps she does not wear fine clothes, because she has gone without so that you might be better dressed. She may look old fashioned, and she may not be as well-educated as your friends or as sophisticated as the gang you go with. But do not despise her, do not hold her in low esteem, do not call her "the old woman" or "the old lady." You owe more to that woman than you will ever be able to pay. Honor her, love her, respect her.

A Partial, But Satisfying Payment.

"The father of the righteous will greatly rejoice . . . let thy father and mother be glad, and let her that bare thee rejoice." You cannot repay your parents, at least not many of us can, in money. But if we live good lives, if we render faithful service, if we honor them by word and work, they will feel amply repaid.

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

church, I have the urge to sit down and write a personal letter to each of you, but with our language study and other activities there is so little time, so please consider this letter as a personal note of thanks to churches, Sunday schools, missionary societies and individuals alike for your generous support of our work. We hope we may be able to make your gifts really count in changed lives and a more Christian China.

Sincerely yours,

DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt

Dear Friends:

Our Burlington Church people are always doing something nice for the Christian Orphanage. Sometime ago Mr. Vitus R. Holt appealed to the Loyal Men's Bible Class to donate a Bendix washing machine, one that does the work while you look on, to the Christian Orphanage. He started off with a sizeable check, and in a few minutes the class had donated enough money to buy the washing machine. A few Sunday's ago he made a plea for a refrigerator for one of the buildings. (We need three.) When he took his seat Mr. John Barnwell said he and his wife would donate one, and it will be delivered in the near future.

Our Burlington Church has all these years been very much interested in the Christian Orphanage, and has always given it loyal support. Just last week, Mr. Donnell Tate sent us two nice second-hand suits that had been worn very little. We had a grown boy who needed a Sunday suit, and one of these suits was a perfect fit for him. It looked as nice as if it had been tailored for him, and saved us from buying a new suit. Our Burlington people back up their their interest with their money, and other donations which are the same as money to us.

We had a very pleasant visit from the Bethel Sunday school last week, the largest group we have had lately. We took a great deal of pleasure in showing them through the buildings and the dairy barn. They complimented the appearance of the buildings and barn very highly, and especially the ladies complimented us on the cleanliness of the buildings. They said with our number of children, they hardly saw how it could be done. We were happy to have these good people, and hope many other Sunday schools will pay us a visit.

Rev. Snyder has had two of his Sunday schools to visit the orphanage, and he said the other day when was here with the Bethel Sunday school that Mt. Zion Sunday school would pay us a visit in the near future.

One of the men in the Bethel group said after looking over the buildings, barn, and dairy, that we had everything in fine shap, and he did not have a single criticism to make. We have been working on the repairs for three months, and except for the jobs that we have not been able to get done, we are about through.

We cordially invite you to come and look over the orphanage. We think we have one of the nicest orphanage plants in the State, and the finest group of children you will find in any orphanage.

Respectfully submitted,
SUSIE D. ALLEN,
Treasurer.

Not the truth of which one supposes himself possessed, but the effort he has made to arrive at truth, makes the worth of the man. For, indeed, it is not by the possession, but by the investigation, of truth are his powers expanded. Possession makes us easy, indolent, proud. If God held all Truth shut in his right hand, and in his left nothing but the ever-restless instinct for truth, and should say to me, Choose! I should bow humbly to his left hand, and say, "Father, give."—Lessing.

A LETTER FROM DR. SAUER.

ward, in her international position. That, however, does not alter the very urgent fact (for us) that "Red Russia is preparing for war" behind her curtain. Yet, as Christians, we could not simply let this anti-God setamroller roll over ourselves and our neighbors. So many were driven to the consequences of war by these realities—realism which at first persuaded many idealists, who then, later as the character of the evolution revealed itself more clearly, had to deny it for themselves.

America should have more sympathy with Germany, which in 1933 hoped for the help of God and expected it. And it were a tragedy, if it were true, as the President of the Juristic Chamber, Mautner has recently written, that Russia is planning by the "Spruchkammern" (Juristic system—I take it JFCG) to eliminate German intelligence altogether, by raising charges of "Old Fighters" (the name of the first Nazi, who, after their victory, had the highest honors under Hitler—JFCG). And then, with the collaboration of democratic forces, to create an intellectual desert between the West and Russia; and that would be done by wholly legal means! Then Russia might march into that territory without drawing the sword. Thus, Mrs. Roosevelt's criticism of Niemoeller, that he was merely defending the church, is not validly taken. We, I also, become very quickly vocal, as we smell betrayal from Hitler and, God knows, we did what we could; and, certainly, it took courage. Thus I—and I cite as merely an example—in the service in my church, May 1, 1933, when the mass meeting of men had come to the first "Labor Day," preached of the voyage of St. Paul, Acts 25, and the storm, and said that a journey begun without God will be, at first, a good journey; but then storm will come after which we shall be glad that we may save our souls without the Ship of State. And no one dared to attack me. I pleaded further: Back to God, all the way—back to Christ. And so I preached until it became wearisome, for they pretended not to hear. Or when I, when Mueller had become Reich-bishop, wrote a statement against the German Christians to the Ministry of the Interior, and that while the right-hand supporter of Mueller had already become the expert for church affairs in the Kultus-Ministry. I then expected daily my deposition. We do not try to make political capital out of such things as these. We did them standing alone, we did them before God. But we have the right to ask: who in the world has the right to cast the first stone at us, of those who did not sit in the same hell with us. And then the question must arise whether this demonic attempt is not symptomatic, as having merely appeared first in Germany, whether the European spirit has not been subjected to slow poisoning for the last centuries? Ought we not make objective studies of that, as physicians do and then deduce factual consequences, and pursue this quest with energy?

Subjectively there are inhibitions in Niemoeller that may appear doubtful to us, whether he is the bearer of the New. He is a Westphalian "Schaedel" ("skull"—hard-headed, I take it—JFCG), of great character, a heart, I am sure, full of zeal for God's work and house, and in my last letter, which you have probably meanwhile received, I spoke of my respect for this genuine man, but expressed my doubts as to "jegliches Gehrim" (of his ultimate wisdom). That is a hard saying. But Niemoeller is not a theologian, and he appears to me to incline towards oversimplified solutions, a way out which causes, in this complicated world, a series of problems, in the place of every one that is thus solved.

If the newspaper report from Pittsburgh gave correctly his addresses—as there given by Niemoeller: it would mean that Niemoeller would have to proclaim the oekumenical church:—that would have to be the theological consequence! And when he speaks thus as the representative of the foreign section of the German Church (for he cannot in the position he holds speak as a private person—when he goes abroad, in this office)—there are all sorts of problems thrown up.

I personally would not be displeased at such an eventuality. Such problems are truly Congregational, and in them is a good deal of good, new liberalism. But one must, also, understand why then the confessional Lutherans—here with us—"bei Kopf stecken"—oppose. I shall probably get into this problem more from now on. I have been appointed delegate from Nassau for the Oekumenical Church—for 1948. When I was notified of my selection, I had just finished two-thirds of the preliminary work for a volume in European Culture-Philosophy, toward the question of the World Church in the space of today. It seems to me that I shall be able to deliniolate these elements very satisfactorily.

That which I have found in your Congregational materials, as to the spiritual witnesses of your church, has caused me to want to elucidate further the Protestant type, in my oekumenical studies. We Germans tend to universalize our Protestant character. I seem to feel, here, a stronger "Tat-Glauben"—confession-by-deed. That makes me think seriously. And I concur, here, with Langner's impressions, who speaks of the personal responsibility which is present in your churches but not so in our territorial churches. But one must not minimize the significance of the character that, in the course of history, has been developed in our type of church, and what this signifies in value for the world, provided that the clergy is at its best. For the clergy's independence of the will to rule on the part of the contributing laity is also an advantage, however great the disadvantage of a professionalization of the professional clergy may be.

Would it be possible to have correspondence of your boys and mine. We have here the higher school of the Rhine, and such exchange of letter might give excellent values.

Very cordial greetings,

(S)—H. S.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

And then I'll learn how to save enough money to have a home and other nice things of my own."

"Your mother is right about that, Jerry," I assured him. "It's a good feeling to be free from debt. If you don't need to spend all of your allowance some weeks, how about putting a little of it away and saving it for extra things—like this Saturday's afternoon show?"

"I do save part of my allowance, Miss Mallory," Jerry replied. "But this week I needed to buy materials for a model airplane I wanted to make. That took all my savings; but the plane will be worth it. May I take this book out?"

"Indeed, you may, and I know you'll enjoy reading it," I told him as I stamped his card and placed it in the new book he had selected. "There will be many more books here at the library and many more good shows at the Rialto."

"I know that, Miss Mallory, and thank you."

As Jerry smiled and left the room, I wished very much that his friends' mother could realize, as Jerry's mother did, that no little boy should be allowed to grow up in an unreal world of easy money.

A True Shepherd

Meditation Used in the Vesper Service at Deering, 1947

By KILBURN K. HOLT, Staples, Minnesota

If sheep could talk, and a wise and a foolish were conversing, I imagine that the foolish sheep might boast, something in this manner:

"I know where the crystal brook bubbles out of the fern-bordered spring: I shall not want for clear, refreshing water.

"I know every sun-kissed knoll and dew-drenched hollow of lush and tender grass. I shall not want for fresh, abundant food.

"I know where the giant oak lifts her leafy arms over the corner of the pasture. I shall not want for cool and fragrant shade.

"I know where the door to the sheep-fold stands open wide. I shall not want for safe and ready refuge. I am a knowing sheep. I shall not want."

Then might the other sheep answer on this wise:

"O foolish sheep, who hath bewitched thee?

"Suppose the summer sun drinks dry your babbling brook? Where then will you quench your panting thirst?

"Suppose dread drought, disease or pestilence lays bare and brown your soft, green slopes? What will you do then, famishing for food?

"Suppose the sudden lightning strikes black the sheltering tree? Where then will be your shade?

"Suppose the gaunt, grey wolf leaps over the sheep-fold fence? Where then will you flee for your life?

"O silly sheep, I have a much better reason than you for knowing that I shall not want: I have a sure shepherd!

"If the spring dries up, he will find me another.

"If the pastures are stark and sere he will lead me to newer, sweeter grass.

"If the tree is felled, he will bring me to the shadow of a mighty rock within the weary land.

"And if the wolf comes, he will lay down his life, if need be, for his sheep. I have a good shepherd. I shall not want."

We who are the people of God's pasture and the sheep of His hand are prone to argue in the first fashion; aren't we? We say:

"I am keen of mind and skillful of hand. I shall not want.

"I have sound investments and a comfortable bank balance. I shall not want.

"I have influential connections and loyal friends. I shall not want.

"I have a steady job, and I have my health. I shall not want."

O foolish soul, who hath bewitched thee?

Clear minds can snap, and artful hands can lose their cunning.

Stocks can drop and banks can fail.

Authority can shift, and friends can prove false.

Positions can be lost, and health can become a memory.

And when these are gone, what will you fall back upon?

It is not the favorableness of our circumstances, but the surety of our shepherding which is our pledge of security. He Who said, "I am the Good Shepherd" is alone He Who, when material and temporal good deserts, still promises "life abundant and eternal." Blessed is the man who can say:

"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD, I SHALL NOT WANT . . ."

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME XCIX.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 31, 1947.

NUMBER 30.

I Love Thy Church, O God

The first church of Evanston, Illinois, is a fine Georgian building in red brick and limestone on the town square. This church of 1,500 members has been a great force in the Chicago area for many years. Its pastor, the Rev. Dr. Hugh Elmer Brown, was for some time President of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational and Christian Churches.

Therefore, when we build, let us think that we build forever. Let it not be for present delight nor for present use alone. Let it be such work as our descendants will thank us for. And let us think, as we lay stone on stone, that a time is to come when these stones will be held sacred because our hands have touched them, and that men will say, as they look upon the labor and the wrought substance of them, "See, this our Father did for us."—John Ruskin.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Pattie Lee Coghill is spending her vacation at her home in North Carolina.

Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk was the World Day Service speaker at the Campostella Heights Methodist Church last Sunday at 9:30 A. M.

The Rev. Elmer S. Freeman of Menasha, Wisconsin, has been added to the staff of the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, according to an announcement by Dr. W. C. Timmons.

The choir of the Rosemont Church, Norfolk, presented a musical program last Sunday evening. The program featured choice selections learned by the choir during the season. The choir, under the direction of Mrs. Dorothy Gallup, has completed one of its fullest and best years.

STANDARDS FOR PARSONAGES.

By WM. KINCAID NEWMAN, Sec'y,
Church Building Department.

The following standards are recommended to churches contemplating the erection or purchase of parsonages:

1. The parsonage, if not on the same plot as the church, should be located within easy walking distance.

2. If adjacent to the church, the architectural style should be harmonious with that of the church.

3. The parsonage should be of a quality equal to or slightly better than the average homes in the community around it.

4. The parsonage should have a good yard.

5. The personage should have a large living room suitable for committee meetings and small social gatherings. This should be arranged to inconvenience as little as possible the parson's family. Thus the living room

A. Should not be connected with dining room by an open arch;

B. Should not be a thoroughfare;

C. Should not be entered directly from the front door but by a hall preferably so arranged that people can enter the front door and go through the hall to other parts of the house without passing through the living room.

6. The parsonage should have a large hall cloest so that wraps of visitors could be accommodated. Also a downstairs lavatory.

7. There should be a pastor's study the accessibility or inaccessibility of which should be determined by the facilities provided in the church building and by community customs, i. e., whether it will be used chiefly for the consultations or for studying.

8. There should be suitable space into which the pastor's family may retreat when the pastor is having committee meetings, etc.

9. The parsonage should have at least three bedrooms.

EASTERN VIRGINIA SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

"Living Together" was the theme of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, which held a one-day annual session at the First Congregational Christian Church, Richmond, Va., last week. The president, Mills E. Godwin, Jr., assistant commonwealth's attorney of Nansemond County, presided with dignity, and a spirit of progressive good will that made the meeting a success from the opening gavel. The church is fortunate in having such a talented, consecrated, and capable young man devote time and talent to both its local and larger aspects.

The attendance was large, considering Richmond is at the outer edge of the Convention, geographically. Dr. E. B. Gatten of the host church made the welcome address, to which the Rev. J. Everett Neese of Bayview, Norfolk, made response. The business session included reports by Secretary W. H. Baker of Newport News, and Treasurer Miss Mary Lee Folk of the Bethlehem (Nansemond) Church; and the appointment of committees by the president. Mrs. Emily Harrell Lynch prepared an address on "Why I Go to Sunday School," which was read in her absence (on account of the illness of her husband) by Mrs. I. W. Johnson. Superintendent W. T. Scott was unable to make his address on "Your Sunday School and Its Future" because he was detained on urgent duties elsewhere. Dr. H. S. Hardeastle discussed "Our Sunday School Literature," and the writer presented "Worship In Our Sunday Schools." Thus was brought to a close the morning session.

After a most delicious dinner served by the ladies of the host church, the afternoon session was opened with an address by Mrs. Ayler J. Holland, of Holland, Va., on "Why a Good Sunday School Member Also Attends Church Service." Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, field director of the Southern Convention, was unavoidably detained, and her address on "Sunday School and Recreation for Youth" was omitted. There followed a business session which included the election of officers for the coming year as follows: Mills E. Godwin, Jr., president; Rev. H. E. Crutchfield,

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

SOUTHERN CONVENTION 1947 DATES TO REMEMBER.

- August 6-7—Valley of Virginia Conference session at Mt. Olivet (R), near Elkton, Va.
- September 2—Valley Women's Missionary Conference at Antioch, near Harrisonburg, Va.
- October—North Carolina Women's Missionary Conference at First Church, Burlington, N. C.
- October—Eastern Virginia Women's Mission Conference (place to be announced).
- October 21-22—Eastern North Carolina Conference session at Turner's Chapel, near Sanford, N. C.
- October 29-30—Eastern Virginia Conference session at Christian Church, Suffolk, Va.
- November 5-6—Western North Carolina Conference session at Congregational Christian Church, Albemarle, N. C.
- November 11-12—North Carolina and Virginia Conference session at Bethlehem Church, Altamahaw, N. C.
- December 2—Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association at Christian Church, Suffolk, Va.

The churches should elect their delegates in order that the local churches may be represented at these annual sessions. Important matters pertaining to the life of the denomination are discussed and voted upon at the annual conference sessions. This year this is especially important because the question of the proposed merger between the Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed denominations will be voted upon.

REPORT ON THE WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE COURT CASE.

The case brought by certain of the members of the Pleasant Cross Christian Church and other interested parties to determine the right to the use and possession of the church property in Randolph County has been tried in the Superior Court of that County. The trial of this case which consumed the better part of two weeks resulted in a jury verdict finding that this church's relationship with the Western North Carolina Christian Church was connectional in nature and that those members of the church who had retained an affiliation with the conference constituted the congregation of this church and were entitled to the use and possession of the church property.

Notice of appeal in this case to the Supreme Court of North Carolina was given by the defendants who claim the right to the use of the church property, and pending the hearing of the appeal, the receivership order was continued in effect under which the two groups were allowed by the court to use the church property on alternating Sundays.

It was indicated that by reason of the length of the trial and the amount of evidence involved a hearing in the Supreme Court on the appeal would not be possible before the spring of next year, and under the court's order, the church property will be made available to both groups for services until the final determination of the case on appeal.

"Greatest Story Ever Told" Radio's Greatest Achievement

There may be a great many things wrong with radio, depending on what critic you read, or what programs you like or dislike. But there's one thing with radio that's right—very right. That is "The Greatest Story Ever Told," a coast-to-coast dramatic presentation based on the teachings of Christ; a radio program that, early in 1947, boldly came on the air with tradition-breaking innovations which no one dared try before, and which have proved to be exactly what a large segment of the radio audience wanted, and what this world of ours needed.

"The greatest Story Ever Told" first went on the air on the ABC network on Sunday, January 26, with nothing more than simple announcements that here was a program which dramatized the teachings of Christ; a religious program, presented with all the reverence and piety that the best talent could offer, yet given with dramatic impact that would make good radio listening.

This, of course, was not the first time a religious program was offered on the air. Others had been on before, though perhaps not on such an extensive network, and not produced with such a large cast of actors, large orchestra, and a choir. Furthermore, never before had any program used the voice of Christ on the air. Nor had any other regularly sponsored program ever gone on the air without any commercials whatever. Only the sponsor identification of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, required by Federal Communications Commission rules, was used.

But behind this opening program was a great deal of effort, a great deal of thinking, and a great many fervent prayers that such a greatly needed program would get the reception it deserved.

Five months before that opening night, executives and directors of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company were asked to listen to a recording of a new program as part of the presentation made to them by their advertising agency. When the half-hour recording was played to them, hardly anyone stirred for that full time. No one even so much as lit a cigarette. When the recording was completed, the opinion was almost unanimous that this was a program worthy of Goodyear's sponsorship.

One question came up, however. The first program, based on the parable of the Good Samaritan, was excellent. Could other programs of equal merit be produced?

Fulton Oursler, senior editor of the Reader's Digest, and one of the country's leading religious authorities, who was responsible for the original program, was sure that this high standard could be kept up. He went to work, together with the Kudner Agency representatives, and prepared and recorded a second program. This was presented to Goodyear executives, and convinced them that the high quality of the program could and would be maintained.

One other point came up here. The program was of a nature that would hardly lend itself to any commercial product-promotion. To follow the voice of Christ with a plug on Goodyear tire would spoil the entire effect of the program. It was decided, therefore, that no commercial would be used on the program. Goodyear felt that this would be definitely a public service offering, without any commercial attached to it.

A PASTORAL INSTALLATION

The Congregational Churches have a form of pastoral installation which has much to commend it. One of the central and important items is the statement of faith presented by the minister who is being installed. This custom requires the minister to review and formulate his Christian beliefs, and it gives to the congregation and the public a succinct statement of theology which is up to date.

The Old South Church in Boston has installed Dr. Frederick M. Meek as its eighteenth minister. Dr. Meek's Statement of Christian Experience and Belief has been published by The Pilgrim Press under the title: "This Is the Church."

What were some of the formative influences in the life of the new minister at Old South? His testimony is interesting, revealing and eloquent. "I begin with those people from whose life my life came, the two people who incarnated for me Christian faith and life at their feet. My father and mother provided by influence and example, by love and sacrificial deed; the impetus and background for my work in the ministry. Both of them stood in a long succession of devout laymen and laywomen who were the successors of Priscilla and Aquilla in their communities. My father is a Scot, affectionate, sensitive, with the spirit of a devout mystic, a one-time elder in the old kirk of Scotland. As a child I learned from him tales of Covenanting forbears. I listened to the metrical version of the Psalms sung in the most melodious voice I have ever heard. And today at ninety years of age he is with me. I would offer him for canonization.

"My mother was English, affectionate, brave, cheery, devoutly religious. I think she walked with God. She read much to me. She told me Bible stories in entrancing fashion. From her I learned of many of her family and their associations with the early history of English Methodism. From as early as I can remember we had morning and evening prayers together. And I discovered not many years ago that no day went by without the Hannah of our household praying that her son might minister in the house of God.

"We were fortunate in having as pastors a succession of men who were family friends and frequent visitors in our home. I learned from them many of the results of religious thought and scholarship, and naturally and normally liberal Christian thinking was my training received from them."

After describing some of the difficulties encountered in his early ministry, Dr. Meek adds: "There were two causes which contributed chiefly as the channels of God's moulding. While recovering from an illness I read and pondered the entire series of the Yale Lyman Beecher Lectures on preaching—something proving much more valuable to me than my entire divinity course and graduate work. But more important than this were the companionship and the understanding and the faith of the one who later became my wife. Her faith in me and in my call to the ministry kept alive my own faith in that call. To the validity of that call we both held in spite of opportunities to go in business, into teaching, into college administration, during a time when the door of pastoral preaching ministry seemed closed, and I knocked in vain. And when, through the efforts of two friends in Maine, I went to my first pastorate in Biddeford, Maine, she became my wife. And from her and all our children I have learned more about what the New Testament means than all my teachers. This is simply part of the record. And it is also a great argument against the celibacy of the clergy!"

The document offers a frank statement of one minister about the nature and work of the church, the threat of communism and of Roman Catholicism, the shaping of Christian theology, and the witness of the ecumenical church. Many valid criticisms and correctives of Congregationalism and Protestantism are offered. One example must suffice for this editorial. "The Protestant Church teaches practically no Christian spiritual or ethical disciplines, yet it expects its people to live as Christian in the midst of a pagan society whose standards are constantly being pressed upon the Christian minority. Here is the interference of neglect for which the Protestant Church must answer in all abject penitence. It is not possible for Protestant Christianity to remain strong and virile without training in the disciplines and even in the asceticisms which are demanded by Christian discipleship. That training will include the disciplines of prayer and the use of money, the disciplining of social customs and the disciplines for individual living. All too many catechumens, whom we later accept into full communion in our churches, know little or nothing of the fact that there are ways of life and thought which must be forsaken and resisted for Christ's sake. For too long both clergy and laity have refused to believe that Christians are a different and a separated people. Only those people who are disciplined for the sake of their cause will succeed in filling its demands. There are Christian disciplines which alone make the spirit possible. This area of teaching and practice is more neglected than any other area within the Protestant fellowship." Be sure and read "This Is the Church."

MRS. TODD RESIGNS.

After a number of years of faithful service, Mrs. Aubrey C. Todd has found it necessary to relinquish her duties as Editor of the Children's Page. The fact she has been able to accomplish this weekly stint of labor in addition to her duties in the home and in the parish has been a source of amazement to this writer.

Her copy has been promptly, thoughtfully and efficiently prepared. She has endeavored to lead her readers into a better understanding of childhood; its interests, motivations and achievements. A host of grateful parents and children are indebted to this versatile priestess of the parsonage for her protracted labor of love. Her successor has not been selected..

Crossroads of American Foreign Policy

Statement Prepared by the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace, and Adopted by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America Meeting in New York City, July 1

By the providence of God and the circumstances of history, the American people are now given a world opportunity and responsibility of unparalleled scope. If we as a nation measure up to the task set before us, a better world order than mankind has known can come into being. If we fail, the whole family of nations will suffer untold tragedies before any comparable opportunity may arise. Such are the stakes of American policy today.

We deal here with that policy as regards (I) relief and reconstruction, (II) relations with the Soviet Union, (III) relations with the United Nations, (IV) moral bases underlying these relations.

I.

The United States should contribute largely to the relief and reconstruction of a dislocated world—

Christian precept and enlightened self-interest call for United States' economic aid to a degree not yet understood or accepted by our people. When men are ill-nourished, ill-clothed, ill-housed, the material problems of mere survival dominate to the detriment of intellectual and moral growth and there cannot be an adequate realization of man's God-given possibilities. Also the United States cannot safely or happily be an island of abundance in a sea of privation, or permit its productive power to be curtailed in the face of widespread need.

The United States should, and consistently with its own economic health can, largely aid in relief and reconstruction. The amount of that aid is measured not alone by the dollars which our government appropriates, but by production and delivery of needed goods. An adequate program may involve a consideration of basic domestic policies in relation to such subjects as taxation, public debt, tariff, labor and management relations, and price policies. Whether or not the over-all program seems in its immediate consequences to affect adversely certain features of our economic life, the duty is inescapable.

What the United States can do, while large in itself, is small in relation to the magnitude and probable duration of the need. Our aid ought, therefore, to be apportioned thoughtfully with regard not merely to immediate human needs but to the revival of productive processes in the shattered economies of the world. There are in the world many maladjustments due to such evils as excessive nationalism and the use of boundaries as barriers to the healthy movement of goods, peoples and ideas. Where resources are so limited that a choice has to be made, it seems to us legitimate to favor those who are intelligently striving to help themselves and to help others. Relief ought not, however, to be used as a tool for fostering political alliances or coercing or inducing others into following our particular political or economic pattern.

Aid should not be limited to money and goods. Modern experience has found many new ways to increase productivity and to multiply the results of human effort. Americans, out of the abundance of their vitality, resourcefulness and technical skill, can do much to hasten the attaining elsewhere of self-sustaining economies and to end abnormal dependence on outside economic aid.

While mass relief through governmental action is necessary, the American people ought not to look upon that as relieving them of personal responsibility. Governmental relief is anonymous and carries no personal message of sympathy. Our people should seek out and use the many available ways of providing personalized help, not merely in terms of money and things, but in return of intellectual and spiritual fellowship. That is good for the givers as well as for the recipients. It stimulates a revival of hope and expresses the spirit of reconciliation and good will without which political or economic action will prove inadequate. The churches' program of relief and reconstruction makes a special contribution.

II.

The hope of peaceful relations with the Soviet Union lies in making clear to all that the basic international issue is the simple issue of the police state as against a free society—

The most difficult international problem is to establish working relations with the Soviet Union.* The inability of the Foreign Ministers at Moscow to agree on any major matter, the enunciation of the "Truman Doctrine" in relation to Greece and Turkey and the further penetration of Soviet political power into Europe, notably in the government of Hungary and in some influential political parties and labor unions in France, Italy and Germany, have intensified the tension between our nations.

We believe that one cause of this increased tension, and a cause which it lies within our power to control, is failure to demonstrate that the American people stand for a basic moral and political principle and not merely for self interest. The critical and supreme political issue of today is that of the free society versus the police state. It is not the economic issue of communism versus capitalism or the issue of state socialism versus free enterprise. As to such matters, it is normal that there should be diversity and experimentation in the world. By a free society we mean a society in which human beings, in voluntary cooperation, may choose and change their way of life and in which force is outlawed as a means to suppress or eliminate spiritual, intellectual and political differences between individuals and those exercising the police power. The police state denies such rights. In the Soviet Union such denial is sought to be justified by Marxian communism. As we pointed out in our earlier statement, that doctrine "in its orthodox philosophy stands clearly opposed to Christianity. . . . Its revolutionary strategy involves the disregard of the sacredness of personality which is fundamental in Christianity."

The same statement went on to say that if American initiative is to prevail it must carry world-wide conviction on two basic facts: first, that "our nation utterly renounces for itself the use internationally of the methods of intolerance;" and, second,

*This matter was dealt with by our statement on "Soviet-American Relations" of October 11, 1946. Subsequent events have emphasized the significance of that statement and, we believe, its validity.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is almost a "church event" when a minister gets a new automobile. Yesterday I bade my old car goodbye, and stepped into another Chevrolet. When a person has ridden nearly 90,000 miles in an automobile, had it to stand up under the crushing blow of a bread truck thus saving his life, and never for once called on it in vain he can understand something of the feeling of Charles A. Lindberg when he called the Spirit of St. Louis "We."

Not soon shall I forget the afternoon we were towed into the Burwell Motor Company's service department in Jacksonville, Florida, in January, 1940. It seems that our former Chevrolet had had sudden and unexpected contact with a boney bovine quadruped, which broadside battered the old car beyond recognition, but did not hurt any of the passengers. It was in just such a time as that that seeing the highly polished, beautiful blue, show-car in Burwell's sales window my wife said: "Oh, Truitt, if we could only drive out in that!" Some of the readers of these lines will guess that, knowing the lady that made the remark, we could and did! Since that day that deluxe sport model sedan, having picked us up in a time of need—a crisis—took us thousands of miles into some forty-four States, and never once failed us. It was love at first sight, and my family says—"at last sight, too." For it was on that automobile both John, Jr., and Ann, learned to drive. Ann was nearly ten, and John was eight when it became "our car"

At one time or another many of the men and women of the Suffolk Church have ridden in it. It has led the procession of many funerals, carried the pastor upon thousands of calls, and has run unnumbered errands of mercy and help. It has hauled ministers, delegates, and church officials all told over thousands of miles. It has gone from the Atlantic to the Pacific and back again. It has traveled from Maine to Florida, and from Mexico to Massachusetts. It has taken gas in Amarillo, Texas; and spent the night in Albuquerque, New Mexico. It has been parked on the rim of the Grand Canyon, waited atop the Boulder Dam, and responded to the touch of its mistress as it rounded the last height of Pinke's Peake. It has followed the trail through Yellowstone National Park, and done the road from Suffolk to Elon before breakfast.

Mostly it has been sedate and well-mannered. Once with five ministers from Eastern Virginia it did the "shoe-li-lou" enroute to a meeting in South Hill, Virginia. But while it turned completely around on a fast highway it never left the pavement, and did its daring little dance-step quite in time to avoid making any discomfort for the fastly moving traffic. I am glad it didn't try that one ever again! Never did it fail us. Like the lady in Proverbs 31:13: "She will do him good and not evil the days of her life." And those of us who were so faithfully served for so long by its noble performance will never forget how beautiful "she" looked in the show window more than seven long years ago!

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference will meet with the Mount Olivet (R) Church, between Harrisonburg and Elkton, Va., August 6-7 (Wednesday and Thursday). Roy A. Larriek of Winchester is president of the conference and has announced that this will be the 99th annual session. The opening session will begin at 10:00 A. M., Wednesday morning with a devotional service in charge of the host pastor, Rev. S. E. Madren. Delegates and visitors will be enrolled and welcomed, appointment of committees and announcements will follow. The annual sermon will be delivered by Rev. S. E. Madren whose topic will be "Values That Do Not Fade." The Conference theme will be "Abiding Values."

Rev. W. T. Scott, superintendent, will also speak at the morning session. At 2:00 P. M., Wednesday, the Rev. Paul Helm, pastor of the Evangelical and Reformed Church of Harrisonburg, Va., will address the conference regarding the proposed merging of the Evangelical and Reformed Church with our denomination as the United Church of Christ.

Kiser T. Rothgeb is also scheduled to speak Wednesday afternoon, representing the laymen of the Conference. Reports will be given throughout all the sessions regarding the work accomplished during the past year, Wednesday at 8:00 P. M. Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Field Director of Young People's Work and Christian Education will address the Pilgrim Fellowship Conference. The whole conference will unite in worship with the Pilgrim Fellowship at the evening hour of worship. Miss Isabelle Sheetz is the president of the Valley Pilgrim Fellowship.

Thursday's session will begin at 10:00 A. M. At the morning session Rev. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College, will address the conference. "Uncle Charlie" Johnston, Superintendent of the Orphanage at Elon College, will speak during the afternoon session.

Mr. Larriek reports that even though the Conference apportionments have been increased considerably this year encouraging reports are coming in to indicate that this will prove to be one of the best years in the history of the Conference, with every church reaching its quota.

The president of the Conference also states that next year, the official "One Hundredth" Session will be celebrated and it is expected that a number of churches in the Conference will ask for this special session.

Visitors east of the Blue Ridge Mountains will follow the Spotswood Trail through Elkton toward Harrisonburg about five miles to the Mount Olivet (R) Church.

vice-president; W. H. Baker, secretary; Miss Mary Lee Folk, treasurer. The Convention voted to meet next year with the Holy Neck Church at 10:00 July 20th. Dr. Will B. O'Neill of Holland brought the closing address on "Living Together."

The Convention missed the presence of the host pastor, the Rev. Robert Lee House, who was attending a Pastors' School at Deering, New Hampshire; but Mrs. House, and many faithful workers saw to it that the church was in every way ready to show its traditionally fine hospitality. Both the church sanctuary and the modern educational building were in inviting readiness—the flowers were lovely and the special music was generous and inspiring. Reports from the schools indicated progress, and the addresses sent the delegates back to their local church schools with renewed determination to do even better another year.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
June 5, 1947.

Dear Friends:

Greetings from Shaowu! We have at last moved into our new home, and in spite of long daily sessions with the language, we have begun to get into things a bit.

You have no doubt been reading in the newspapers about the soaring inflation in China. It is a most complex and baffling problem. The price of rice (the index to all other prices) has quadrupled since we arrived here. A peck of rice is now $32,000 ($2.73 U.S.). This means untold hardships to our ministers and those on salaries. To the poor, and there are millions of them, it means starvation unless some method is found to get something to eat. The main roads and rivers are reported full of bandit gangs taking things into their own hands. An American Catholic priest, thirty miles from Shaowu, was kidnapped and is being held for three billion dollars (about $3,000 U.S.). To add to the difficulties of these times, the communists have declared all China to be in a state of insurrection (since they are probably losing ground in the North). This past week an eleven o'clock curfew went into effect. It is rumored that several communists were arrested in Shaowu, but we have heard of no further evidence of trouble.

Everyone has been very friendly to us, Christians and non-Christians alike. America and Americans are generally regarded as friends and the United States incidentally is believed by some to be the most favored spot this side of heaven. All students want to go there to study. American products are in great demand and it often surprises us what we can find for sale on the street with "Made in U.S.A." on it. The church in North Fukien is small and struggling. Its pastors are able, energetic, self-sacrificing men, doing the best they can in spite of many difficulties. Many of the leaders of the community are professing Christians. But still the rank and file of people—the shopkeepers, most of the government officials, the coolies —comprising the vast majority of the people, are untouched by the church. Their religion, where they have it, is a strange synthesis of Confucianism, Taoism and Buddhism. If someone is ill, they go to a Taoist priest for some powerful charm or prayer (for a sum of money, of course) to drive the evil spirit away. If a member of the family dies, a Buddhist priest can pray them out of Hell. Images of local gods (pusas) are found in wayside shrines, with the sweet smell of incense bearing up to the god the petition of the worshipper, which may be a desire for children, health or wealth. Once a year it is customary to go to the cemetery to clean off the graves and offer the proper sacrifices to their ancestors, according to good Confucian practice. Thus religion for the poor, the illiterate peasant, worker or shopkeeper is something to stay away from for the most part except when trouble comes. The other evening we saw a Taoist priest performing a rite designed to save the life of a very ill child. The father had appealed for help. First, the child's clothes were weighed, then the priest offered certain chants and prayers. Later the clothes were weighed again—if they had gained in weight, it was a sign that the child's spirit had returned.

The more educated class of non-Christians has little to do with these superstitions. Some of them are the officials who are now lining their pockets while their country goes down in a ruinous inflation. Others are ordinary citizens who apparently feel no urge to improve their community or the lot of their fellowmen.

These factors, together with a small and struggling church, you can see present a very discouraging picture. Add to this inflation the utter poverty of so many millions and the lack of roads and communication, and the picture is dark indeed. Pondering upon these apparently unanswerable problems, I have read during the past two weeks the Book of Acts and the Commentary by Dr. Foakes Jackson (Moffat commentaries given me by my fellow ministers of Eastern Virginia). From my study of Acts, I have been able to get something of a new perspective. I have lived again with the small handful of disciples behind the closed doors in Jerusalem. I have read with renewed hope the story of Pentecost when the Holy Spirit turned these frightened men into pillars of strength. I have compared the times described by Luke with the conditions here (and there is a great similarity). I have been inspired to see how effective a small group of people guided by the Holy Spirit eventually made great inroads upon the greed, idolatry and pride of that early civilization. It was a slow, gradual growth, to be sure, but nevertheless real; and today, America, in her laws, her institutions and in the social conscience of her people, is reaping the fruits of the labors of those early Christian disciples.

So, in spite of the darkness of the present hour, I believe this small group of earnest and sincere Christians

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

What are you doing for your vacation? I hope that many of you who are in Junior High School are going to our Young People's Camp, Camp Hanes, near Winston-Salem. Many of you are attending Vacation Church Schools during your vacation. Some of you who live in cities are taking advantage of the "Y" Day Camps. Boy and Girl Scouts have had their summer camps and camporees. Some of you are on farms and having all the usual work and fun of farm life.

If all goes well, when you read this letter our family will be attending a Summer Conference at Pleasant Hill, Tennessee. There will be other children there and Oliver is looking forward to making new friends. Rebecca is almost too small to look forward yet, but she loves other children and I hope that she will make some new friends also. Our theme for the Conference will be, "Making the South the Kind of Place Where Children and Young People Can Grow Up in Freedom." Many learned leaders will be there to help make it a fine conference and I am looking forward, very eagerly, to meeting them and to finding out their ideas for making the theme come to pass in this part of our world!

This will be my last letter to you as Editor of this page. There are many reasons why I am having to give it up. I will not bother you with them. I haven't done a very good job of writing and editing for you. I have not had enough time for it. But I have enjoyed trying to write for you. Some day when I have learned a lot more I hope I shall be able to write other things for children! I know that your next editor will be a splendid one and that you will help him or her to keep your page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN sparkling with interesting things for children. I shall always think of you with love and an earnest prayer that you may grow into Christ-like men and women.

Sincerely,

DOROTHY TODD.

GETTING ALONG WITH PEOPLE.

By EDITH GABRIEL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"How many times must I tell you boys to keep away from that fence and leave those posts alone?" almost shouted Mr. Simmons as he walked toward a group of six boys, two of whom were in the act of climbing the fence that separated his yard from that of the Kerr family.

"We only wanted to get our ball; it fell on your side of the fence," explained Stephen, the eldest of the three Kerr boys.

"In that case—as I've told you more than fifty times—you may come around by the gate. Isn't that fair enough? I've straightened that fence three times already, and still you climb up there and loosen those posts so much they'll hardly stand any more repair. Don't let me have to tell you again."

The boys said no more, but they walked to the other side of the yard where the fence was higher. And before long, being somewhat troubled by Mr. Simmons' complaint, they stopped playing and went to sit on the side porch.

"That Mr. Simmons is an old crab," remarked Peter Gray. "I suppose he thinks we should play out in the street and get run over."

"He needn't get so bad tempered about it," added Jerry Tompkins. "He shouted as if we were deaf."

Just then Mrs. Kerr came to the side porch. "Game over, boys?" he asked.

"No. We couldn't finish. That grouchy Mr. Simmons scolded us about his old fence," answered Stephen.

"What happened?" asked his mother.

"Oh, our ball went over into his grounds, and we were going for it, and he holloed at us," continued Stephen.

"For going into his yard? That is called 'trespassing.' Many people won't allow that," replied Mrs. Kerr.

"I know what trespassing is. He didn't say anything about that part of it," said Lloyd Travis. "He doesn't want us on his fence because we loosen the posts. He says we should go all the way around and come in by the gate."

"Well, now that is different. I can see his side of it. Can't you, boys? Lloyd has made it quite clear to me. Mr. Simmons doesn't object to your coming into his yard to get your ball; he asks only that you stay off his fence. He could refuse to grant you the privilege of coming into his yard. I think he is very reasonable, don't you? Perhaps he is giving you that privilege, Stephen, because we are neighbors—for we all know that neighbors must get along together."

"Mother, you're right again," said Stephen. "Do you know boys, Mother is always right. She certainly gets the right of way in our family!" Mrs. Kerr and the boys all laughed.

"We must keep on good terms with our new neighbor, Mr. Simmons," continued Mrs. Kerr seriously. "He may be a very nice man. We can't tell how nice he is until we know him better."

"It must be quite a job to keep repairing the fence," mused Richard Kerr. "He's only been here two months and has had to mend it three times."

"I guess it's 'up to us' to talk with him and say we're sorry," added Peter.

"That would be a pleasing gesture," said Mrs. Kerr, "but just to say 'We are sorry' will not do much good unless you try to prove it."

"We can tell him how much we appreciate the privilege of getting our ball, and that we realize the trouble we've made him," said Lloyd.

"Yes, and we'll say that hereafter we'll go around through the gateway for our ball," added Stephen.

"Fine, boys! That is the thing to do," encouraged Mrs. Kerr.

Half an hour later, when Mr. Simmons saw Mrs. Kerr near the house, he stepped over to speak to her. "Mrs. Kerr," he said, "it would have made you very proud if you could have heard the conversation carried on with me a while ago. You certainly play magic with your boys—and not only yours. You reach out and line up all the boys who come in contact with yours."

"They may as well learn early how to get along with people," replied Mrs. Kerr, smiling. "Most of us are in this world a long time."

A common expression of childhood is, "See what you made me do." But when we become older, it is well for us to put away childish things and acknowledge wherein we ourselves are at fault.—Exchange.

Cleverness is serviceable for everything, sufficient for nothing.—Aniel.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

A VISIT TO CHURCHES.

From June 16 to June 20 the Woman's Board of the Southern Convention conducted a school of missions. The school was held at Elon College. Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson attended. On the third day of the school, Dr. Johnson was taken ill. He and Mrs. Johnson left immediately for Suffolk, Virginia. Dr. Johnson spent ten days in Lakeview Hospital. His case was diagnosed as virus pneumonia. He has recovered from the attack but his physician has forbidden him to preach until September. He hopes by that time to be entirely well and to go on with his work as he has been doing for a half century and more.

On invitation I drove to Suffolk Saturday, July 19, and was with Dr. Johnson for his services on Sunday. At the eleven o'clock service I preached at Oakland Christian Church. Dr. Johnson has served Oakland Church for nearly fifty years and has made an enviable record as pastor and minister. Oakland is one of our strongest rural churches. It has an excellent Sunday school and a church membership comprised of a very fine type of citizen. In the afternoon at three o'clock I preached at Liberty Spring, another of Dr. Johnson's churches. Liberty Spring is likewise a very strong rural church, one of the strongest in the Southern Convention. Seldom do you find a finer group of men in any church of equal membership. These men attend Sunday school and in every way look after the interests of their church. Both Oakland and Liberty Spring have good church buildings with excellent equipment for organized Sunday school work and worship services. They both have large, beautiful auditoriums for worship. The equipment of these rural churches surpasses many of our city and town churches. They, together with the church at Berea, Nansemond County, stand as a monument to their pastor's services, sacrifices, and devotion to the cause of Christ through these churches.

Since I have been at Elon College as president, these churches have responded to the cause of the College through conference apportionments and special campaigns. In the All or Nothing Campaign and the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Campaign all three of Dr. Johnson's churches have paid their suggested quotas, not in pledges but in cash. It was a pleasure to serve them on Sunday. This was the first time in fourteen years I have left the College and gone to a local church for church services and a church service only. I have gone on many occasions and to many of our churches and spoken on Sunday but always in interest of the College. It was a pleasure to render this service not only as a spiritual opportunity and religious privilege but as an expression of interest for the splendid support that these churches have given our institutions and convention enterprises.

It is my hope and prayer that Dr. Johnson may soon regain his usual health and strength and be permitted many more years of service.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

When an individual, Sunday school or church make a contribution for any particular purpose, they expect the money to reach its intended destination and serve the purpose or purposes for which it is given. For more than a half century our friends, Sunday schools, and churches have been making contributions to Elon College. They have a right to know something of the progress of the College and the part their contributions have played in such. I can only speak personally for the last fifteen years during which time the Sunday schools and churches of the Southern Convention have made regular and sizeable contributions to the College. The College has recovered from a grievous, burdensome debt. It is now free of any financial obligations to any one. Its student body has increased from 231 to more than 800, total enrollment for nine months. Its faculty has increased from 22 to 38 members. Its annual budget has trebled. The audit for the College year 1946-47 will show a completely balanced budget with a comfortable surplus. This growth has been made possible by the co-operation and loyal support of the Sunday schools and churches of our Convention.

We now come to the necessity of another definite step forward. Facilities must be improved and greatly increased. Necessary improvements and expansions will be expensive. All contracts for the heating equipment and installation of such have not as yet been let, but these facilities will be far more expensive than originally anticipated. Just as soon as the actual cost of the heating plant is determined, all facts will be given to the public with the hope that there shall be sufficient funds to meet the cost of this particular and necessary improvement.

The College is most appreciative of all contributions given.

This reasoning followed the belief of Mr. P. W. Litchfield, chairman of the board of Goodyear:

"It seemed to us that many people felt the lessons taught by the Prince of Peace should become more a part of our thinking and action than has been the case in recent years. We consider it the duty of all large business corporations, not only to their stockholders, employees and customers, but for the good of the general public, both nationally and internationally, to render any services we could along these lines and that it would be a justifiable expenditure.

"One Person two thousand years ago, confined by transportation to a radius of eighty miles, during his short lifetime, traveling on foot or on the back of domestic animal, reaching only those within the sound of His voice, left such an impression on the hearts of mankind throughout the world and over many centuries, that we thought it would be a worthwhile contribution to society if this same lesson could be brought, through the power of modern radio, to a world-wide audience who today are so much in need of it."

The production of the program presents its own problems. Because of the intimate nature of the performance, there is no studio audience. All the actors are leading radio performers, selected each week to play the particular characters needed in that week's story. In order to avoid any

PURITY OF HEART AND LIFE.

LESSON VI—AUGUST 10, 1947.

By W. E. WISSEMAN, Guest Editor.

PRINTED TEXT: Proverbs 4:23-5:4;
James 1:13-15.

MEMORY SELECTION: Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life.—Prov. 4:23.

The Heart—A Fountain.

The heart symbolizes the whole being, thinking, feeling, willing. It embraces the whole inner nature. The heart is the fountain from which are the issues of life. The fountain must be pure if the stream is to be pure. It is important that we keep our hearts with diligence or to express it in another way—guard them with diligence. Guard everything—riches, property, health, body—in which you have a legitimate interest—but above all things that have to be guarded, keep or guard your heart. Paul—“The peace of God stand guard over your hearts.”

The heart is active and therefore should be occupied with whatsoever things are honest, true, just, pure, lovely, and of good report. It is impossible to keep things from growing in the heart. Therefore it is necessary that we cultivate it, otherwise noxious weeds will occupy it. Eight principles must be cultivated. We must see to it that affections are set on things eternal.

Whatever is in the heart will express itself outwardly. True righteousness is both outer and inner. The outer form must have inner content else it is hypocrisy and not religion. Jesus said, “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.” It may be impossible for any of us to be absolutely pure, but we can want to be, we can pray to be, and in proportion as we succeed, we shall find that satisfying vision of God which guarantees abiding happiness. Selfishness, insincerity, dishonesty, envy in the inner life obscures the vision of God. The reason why many of us are not happier than we are is because there is some lurking insincerity, some hidden impurity, which destroys our fellowship with God.

The first and most ready expression of the state of the heart is in our conversation. Vigilance over the heart is vigilance over the mouth inasmuch as “out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.”

“Speech is the index of the mind.” “As a man thinketh in his heart so is he.” The heart may become a cesspool from which come forth so-called “dirty stories,” curse words, bitter words of criticism and gossip.

The Eyes and the Feet.

The eyes should be fixed steadily and unswervingly upon a goal ahead. Look right on to the goal in front: be so intent on reaching that, and on attaining the prize which awaits the winner, that there will be no temptation to depart from the straight course. We keep a straighter path by fixing our eyes on the object toward which we walk than by watching the steps we take; how much more so than by looking about us on every hand. The writer of Hebrews suggests the highest goal upon which a man may fix his gaze—“looking unto Jesus the leader and perfecter of our faith.” The writer suggests the removal of every obstacle which may impede or render insecure the way of the moral life and thus avoid every false step. Weigh your conduct in the balance. Before acting, consider the consequences and nature of the act. See that your conduct is correct; let all thy ways be definite and fixed.

Unholy Passion and Hallowed Love.

The writer of Proverbs sets the lewd woman over against the virtuous wife. One represents unholy passion, the other, hallowed love. The lewd woman is a personification of lust, represented as a seducing harlot, to whose embraces man yields, and the result is the birth of sin, which in its turn gives birth to death. The inner life is corrupt and expresses itself outwardly. The ideal woman is a perfect housewife—a chaste helpmate of her husband, upright, God-fearing, economical and wise. She can be trusted—always intent upon doing good and not evil. It is a “poetical description of the virtuous woman, a rare find. Her value is more than rubies. She is capable and industrious, watchful over all the family interests, honored by her husband and children and respected by all. She is a godly influence in the community.”

The Source of Temptation.

(James 1:13-15.)

False Theory—

Men are prone to ascribe the authorship of temptation to God. That theory is as old as the Garden of Eden. Our first parents blamed God for the first sin. The same excuse has been adopted in various forms ever since. Systems of philosophy have done so. Pantheism says that man is only a model of the divine existence and that good is God's right hand, while evil is his left. Fatalism teaches that all events—good and evil—come to pass under the operation of a blind necessity.

Materialism in our day regards the vilest passions of bad men and the holiest aspirations of believers as alike only products of our physical organism. The same theory prevails in common life. Some believe that their misdeeds are necessitated by the Divine decrees. Some trace their sins to their circumstances blaming God for surrounding them with evil influences.

A right and a left, a good and an evil are possible alternatives always, and to free creatures that which is possible may become actual. God cannot constrain them to well-doing, or they would cease to be free. In the case, then, of allowing for temptation in the very constitution of a moral world, God may be said to be its source, its author. A position of trust involves temptations. Man is placed in a position of trust by God, and the trust necessarily involves the possibility of a betrayal of trust. But may we therefore say that God tempts us to do wrong? The employer puts the employee in a position of trust. Temptations are involved. Does the employer tempt the employee to do wrong and betray the trust?

True Theory—

God is not the author of temptation. “Say not thou, it is through the Lord that I fell away: for thou oughtest not to do things that he hateth. Say not thou, he hath caused me to err; for he hath no need of a sinful man.” (Ecclesiastes 15:11-12.)

Temptation originates within the heart of the sinner himself. A man sins only when he is “enticed” and drawn away by his own lust. “Lust” includes, besides the appetites of the body, the evil dispositions of the mind, such as pride, malice, envy, love of ease. Any appeal from the outside can be successful only with the consent of the will. Every man is personally responsible for his sins. Lust is ever striving to captivate the will. Lust conceives when it obtains the consent of the will or disarms its opposition—from it all a living sin is born. And death is the fruit of sin. Sin kills peace; it kills hope; it kills usefulness; it kills conscience; it kills the soul.

CROSS-ROADS OF AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY.

that "persistence internationally by the Soviet Government or the Soviet Communist Party in methods of intolerance, such as purge, coercion, deceitful infiltration, and false propaganda shielded by secrecy, will not in fact make its faith prevail and will jeopardize the peace."

We believe that our nation has failed to carry conviction on those two basic propositions, particularly the first. There exists abroad a widespread impression that we ourselves are using, or are prepared to use, methods of coercion to impose on others our particular form of society. That impression is largely due to unfriendly propaganda; also our practice in some instances has not always made our position clear. The peoples of the world are confused. Without doubt, they overwhelmingly prefer a free society of tolerance, although many prefer state socialism to free enterprise. However, they feel caught between the two greatest and most vigorous powers of the world, each of which, they assume, is seeking to impose its will by coercive methods of intolerance. As a result, there is no impressive and decisive alignment of the moral and spiritual forces of the world. The disunity or neutrality encourages Soviet leaders to persist internationally in their own methods of intolerance and they are winning support from among the many who feel that they are offered a choice only between rival imperialisms.

In order that moral power may be potent for peace and in order that the United States may not be isolated and endangered in the world, our nation must stand plainly for something so simple that all can understand and so clearly right that all men of good will will agree. That goal is a world of free societies wherein all men, as the children of God, are recognized to have certain basic rights, including liberty to hold and change beliefs and practices according to reason and conscience, freedom to differ even from their own government and immunity from persecution or coercion on account of spiritual and intellectual beliefs. We recognize that at home our people have not eradicated some kinds of intolerance, especially in race relations. There is, however, a profound difference between a free society, in which there can be appeal to the conscience of man to bring about self-correction, and a police state where no dissent is allowed.

Our people, by word and deed, at home and abroad, ought to make clear that they stand on the principle of a free society as against a police state. Then we shall have brought into clear relief the issue on which turn the great decisions of our time. We shall have put in proper perspective the issues of communism, state socialism, capitalism, free enterprise and other forms of social or economic life, admitting the right of all to experiment and seek by fair and tolerant methods to propagate their beliefs in the world. When our nation's position is clarified in this respect, the American people will have identified themselves with a great principle which attracts the loyalty of men generally. On this principle the will of so many throughout the world could be consolidated as to make obvious the futility of attempting to extend generally the police state system. Then there would be reasonable basis to hope that the attempt would probably be renounced if only as a matter of expediency. Fear and distrust would then give place to an atmosphere in which the nations could work together for a just and durable peace.

III.

The United States should avail itself more fully of the great possibilities of the United Nations—

Our nation should not become so absorbed in dealing directly with international problems that it ignores the United Nations as a means for promoting that consolidation of moral force which is indispensable to peace. We are glad that the legislation implementing the "Truman Doctrine" recognized that the United Nations might hereafter assume the burden of maintaining the integrity of Greece and Turkey. Our nation should, however, avail itself more adequately of the great possibilities of the United Nations. The General Assembly of the United Nations has already shown that it can focus the moral judgment of mankind so as to influence the policies of governments. No nation has yet presented a program or argued a case before the General Assembly without paying deference to public opinion as registered in that Assembly. The United States ought to place greater dependence on this demonstrated moral power of the world assembly and, as a member, to submit proposals which will stimulate that power.

The Assembly has established several agencies for human betterment, in most of which the Soviet Union has so far not accepted membership. We do not believe that that abstention will persist indefinitely if these agencies actually become effective and creative bodies, doing good deeds in the world. It is probable that the Soviet Union will stay aloof from them only as long as they are relatively impotent. By invigorating these agencies out of the physical, mental and spiritual resources which the American people possess in great measure, our nation can do much to make these agencies into instrumentalities for unity in the world.

IV.

It develops primarily upon our Christian people to assure policies which rely upon moral rather than merely material power—

Our people need to do much more than they are doing to demonstrate their conviction that the greatest forces in the world are moral forces and not material forces, and that with God all things are possible, even peace. We utterly reject the idea of the inevitability of war and we oppose all national policies which have that presupposition. A casual observer of American conduct might conclude that our national affairs are operated on the assumption that war is so probable that it is not worth while to take a chance on the possibility of peace. There is increasing discussion of military establishments, military bases and new weapons of destruction. Hysteria is growing at a time which is so critical that calmness of judgment is indispensable. That hysteria suggests a sense of weakness and lack of Christian faith.

It is time that the American people made clear that, whatever may be their views about the military aspects of national defense, they do not put primary reliance upon material defense. Our chief reliance is on a moral offensive. Therefore, we have emphasized some of the ingredients of a positive foreign policy which we believe stems from positive Christian principles.

The positive foreign policy we emphasize will require strong spiritual foundations both at home and abroad. Herein lies a major challenge to the churches, now drawing closer together in a world-wide fellowship. No policy, in a free society, can be permanently stronger than the faith of the people. Dynamic international policies must reflect a dynamic faith if they are to endure; they must reflect a righteous faith if they are worthy to endure.

"We have committed the golden rule to memory; let us now commit it to life."—Edwin Markham.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Several weeks ago we wrote to the 20th Century Baracca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church, and asked them to donate one refrigerator for one of the buildings here. On Tuesday, the 22nd, we received the following letter. I quote:

Suffolk, Va.,
July 21, 1947.

Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, Supt.,
The Christian Orphanage,
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Following your request of a few days ago to our Baracca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church in which you state: "We need refrigeration in all three buildings." On receipt of your request we appointed a committee of three members of the class to consider the matter and report back to the class on the next Sunday, which was yesterday, the 20th. After hearing the committee's report and recommendation, the Class voted in less than two minutes to purchase a General Electric refrigerator promptly and forward same to the orphanage by express prepaid. This is being done today, Monday, 21st. With very best wishes, we are

Sincerely yours,

20th Century Baracca Class,
By: S. W. Kelley, Pres.

On the same day we received by pre-paid express, the refrigerator. Another class has under consideration the purchase of a refrigerator for the other building. The Suffolk people raised the money in less than two minutes as Mr. Kelley says in his letter. I think that record will be hard to beat. It reminds me of more than twenty years ago when I went before this same class and made an appeal for a thousand dollars to help pay for a heating plant for the Baby Home, and when I took my seat Mr. Woodard asked his class for a $1,000. In just a few minutes he had the $1,000 in hand.

The Baracca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church knows how to do things in a big way, and will do, if given a chance. This is the second time I have called on them, and in both instances they have answered the call.

People get a lot of joy out of giving to help little dependent children. I feel sure that the Baracca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church got a real joy out of making this contribution. We miss a lot of joy in life because we fail to do things that will bring joy to our hearts. If we would remember others more and self less, we would get many more joys as we go through life.

tians in China, with God's help and in His own time, will eventually replace the paganism and materialism inherited from the centuries, with a Christian interpretation of life. I believe that they will someday succeed in incorporating in the institutions and morality of this nation the ideals without which life becomes merely a struggle to survive. Although the problems of sustaining life are great, it seems to me that China's problem basically is a spiritual problem, and our Christian faith is a faith in the eternity and supremacy of spiritual values.

A great potential hope lies in the children, who, tomorrow, will be the leaders of a new China. I wish you could have gone with me the Sunday before last to see the beaming faces of seventy or eighty small children in the South Gate Church Sunday School eagerly listening to Pastor Huang explain the lesson. I wish you could attend the recently organized young people's society meeting held in our home every Sunday afternoon and join with us as we worship and play in Christian fellowship. I wish you could talk with one of the five young men who want to study for the ministry (if financial help can be given them). I think you would agree with me that, though the present picture has its dark side, the future is in the hands of God, and He is already at work calling disciples to witness for Him.

In re-reading Acts, I noticed the sense of urgency with which those early disciples went about their task. I can feel also that sense of urgency here. This is not the time to fold the hands and do nothing. The future of a nation, the future of 450,000,000 people, the future of the world is at stake. On the one hand, it is thrilling to have some small part in the moulding of a new China; on the other hand, it is a frightening thing to realize the amount of responsibility it entails.

I had meant this to be a short friendly letter, but it has turned almost into a sermon. Please forgive me. Concerning personal affairs, we are both well, fascinated at every turn by so many novel and interesting experiences, becoming connoisseurs of Chinese food, and learning each day a new respect for the Chinese people and culture.

Out here, letters mean a great deal to us, so write to us. I wish this could be a personal letter, but postage and time don't permit. Please accept this as conveying our personal greetings to you all.

Cordially,
DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

PLEASANT RIDGE VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

Rev. W. T. Madren writes: "The Pleasant Ridge Church of W. N. C. Conference conducted a successful Vacation Bible School the week of July 6-13. The school was well attended. Many Perfect Attendance Certificates were given. The workers were all from the church. The school ended with a Sunday School and Bible School picnic, which was enjoyed by young and old, and a very nice commencement program."

THE CHURCH BUILDING GUIDE. Elbert M. Conover. The Interdenominational Bureau of Architecture. 297 Fourth Avenue. New York 10, N. Y. $1.50.

Elbert Conover has brought competent church architecture within reach of the small or average congregation. A church building program need be no longer a wild guess or a leap in the dark. His book is designed to make available to ministers, church boards and others interested in the results of the experiences gained in working with church building committees, architects and craftsmen in thousands of projects of planning new buildings and improving, embellishing and furnishing church buildings throughout the land.

This book is a Godsend; a "know-how" book for ministers, architects, students of religion and architecture, devout laymen, and all who are concerned for the work of building, improving and using the church building for worship, religious education, fellowship, recreational activities and for human service. The book is generously illustrated with photographs and plans.

THE CHURCH AS EDUCATOR. Conrad H. Moehlman. Hinds, Hayden and Eldredge. New York. 1947. 184 pp. $2.00.

An officer of a leading religious education organization said in the reviewers study that there was no hope for the Church in America until trained religious educators had been substituted for the pastors.

The author does not put it that way. But he includes, by implication, the Church, her creeds, and the Sunday school. He eulogizes science, the public school, and the American Way. "Science is forward-looking . . . Religion is backward-looking . . . The concept of Christianity is in basic disagreement with the American way of life." And a colleague, trained in religious education, now serving as pastor of a large church, wonders aloud whether Communism were not superior to Christianity.

These things, brethren, make one wonder. Have we lost the sense of the Church, despite her failures on the human side? Are we enamored of the false progress made by science and mechanized power—despite the apocalyptic failures and abysmal hell that these have created to the point where they threaten the existence of civilization? Where is God? Has man made himself God? Are we blind, not to see that the public school, which has received far too much flattery by the way of imitation among us, is in great trouble herself; of which a highly placed teacher said but a night since: "Our high school has become nothing more than a housing project for given hours of the days of the school-year."

There is greatly needed a return to religion. And this the author makes clear by what he says and by that which he does not say.

JOHN F. C. GREEN.

commercialism from this standpoint, no pictures are taken, no connection between actors and the parts they play is permitted. The actors take their parts very seriously, and the greatest problem, according to Director Marx Loeb, is not to have them play their roles reverently enough, but to have them play them naturally enough, to act the part as actors, rather than Biblical characters, and thus overdoing it.

The orchestral and choral music, likewise, is, in its fashion, "anonymous." Musical director William Stoess prepares music which is religious in nature, but yet not the recognized music of any particular religious group. Occasionally there are exceptions, as in the case of outstanding hymns which have come to be accepted as representative music by all faiths.

Since the subject is one that might very easily offend various groups of people an advisory board composed of three clergymen representing various faiths approves each script. Such care in selection and treatment of programs has resulted in high commendation from all religious groups, even in cases where highly controversial subjects were treated. Mr. Oursler continues to select the themes and supervise the preparation of the program.

Before the first presentation of the program on the air, private hearings were held all over the country before religious, civic, and educational groups. Comments invariably were enthusiastic, with many suggestions that aided in improving the program. A "closed circuit" broadcast, to which additional community leaders were invited by the two hundred stations in the network, was also held before the first program was aired.

The response to the program was amazing. It was expected that many people would enjoy it. Everything in the preparation and production of the program was aimed to make the program not only inspirational, but also entertaining, still keeping within the limits of the respect and reverence due the subject. But criticism was expected. For example, the matter of using the voice of Christ on the air was a point that was discussed for a long while before it was decided to use it.

Surprisingly, no such criticism was forthcoming. Almost unanimously, everybody who heard the program marked it as one of the greatest things in radio.

Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick said, "This program may help save the world from chaos. It can do what preachers cannot do—it can take the message of the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God beyond the pulpit, and outside the churches into the hearts of the people."

Even more praise came from the professional entertainment world. The New York Times radio critic called it "one of the most significant ethereal achievements in recent years." "Variety," the "bible" of the entertainment world, in giving the program a special award, called it "an unselfish endeavor toward utilizing radio in the public interest, a gesture that well nigh stands alone."

Religious, civic and educational organizations have been wholehearted in their support. Publications reaching these groups have been enthusiastic in their support of the program. Priests and ministers have urged their congregations, from the pulpit, to listen. Other organizations have mailed cards and letters to all their members urging them to tune in. Some of these mailings were as high as 300,000 letters.

The program has been shortwaved to all parts of the world by the State Department, and has also been translated into Spanish for Latin American broadcast. Sunday schools have used the programs as part of their study training.

The program continues to gain in popularity, and in ways to serve the public welfare. The sponsor is continuing it through the summer, instead of taking the usual summer vacation period, since there is as much need for the teachings of our Master in the summer months as any other time. "The Greatest Story Ever Told" is certainly an important religious influence for our nation.

Christ In the Open Air

Excerpts from the address given by Mrs. Samuel G. Catli
(Manila, P. I.) at International Sunday School Convention

The Philippines has had before the war 5,000 Sunday schools with an enrollment of 170,000. You may be inclined to think that there are 5,000 church buildings in the islands to house this number of schools. Before the war we had only a total of 2,000 church buildings. But the war came and has wiped out more than half of our church buildings. This did not discourage us in our work because we have them mostly out in the open—in the meadows, or lawns and usually under the trees with their ever spreading branches as roof and the ever green trees and bushes as walls. For chairs, the green grass provides soft and feathery cushioned seats. Others are conducted in street corners or in some private homes. Every church has its own Sunday school before or after the usual morning worship. In the afternoons we have what we call the "open air" Sunday schools where the young people of the church separate themselves in groups of threes or four and go out to different directions. One of the thrills of this program is when all the teachers come together in the evening to relate their experiences and problems and each one share each others burdens.

Our present world conditions demand for us to mobilize, to strengthen and to improve all our Sunday school forces. . . . If we have not started yet, let us not wait for our buildings or for our equipment to postpone the organization of our Sunday schools. Our children are waiting for us to bring them to the Sunday schools and still others are waiting for us to bring the school to them. Let us not wait any longer otherwise we will loose our grasp on them. If our schools at home are not as modern and as well equipped as others, we should never be discouraged. What we need is to strengthen them. The process of improving them may take some time. We should never stop to brood over them. Go on working as much as you can. The day will come when your dreams of making it like what it should be. And, of course, as living individuals, we want to grow, to improve our work. Let us not be content with what we are but let us keep improving them. We want our schools to possess all that Christ offered when he said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Essential Christianity

By WILLIAM E. McCORMACK, D.D.

Christianity must never be equated with moralisms about social behavior. It may be that, but it is vastly more.

For example, honesty is a Christian virtue but it is hardly as important to the individual as the more fundamental consideration concerning the dependability of God and his august plan for the affairs of men. The concepts of honesty grows out of the prior concept of God.

Jesus was always trying to get men to see God. His advice upon the lesser customs was always relative to the picture he possessed of God, his Father.

Frequently a critic of Christian people will rest his whole case upon some imagined offense usually in the field of courtesy. Christian people will do well to strive to cause no offense by a zealous care about their manners, but certainly their deeper motives, their essential loyalties to abiding principles of living are more important.

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." His words have little significance when thought of in behavior patterns. They are great words, filled with the deep meaning of his singularly devoted life. His followers may well seek to discover their hidden message.

The profound truths of Christianity are the world's great need. We cannot offer the world's set of nice ways of getting along together. We cannot pretend to better manners and more pleasant personalities than others simply because we are Christian. We must constantly emphasize our earnest loyalty to God, our creator and our perfecter.

There are no simple, easily mastered rules of the Christian life. The whole business of being Christian is immensely difficult. We shall need to make our habits of thinking conform to our ceaseless hopes and our farseen faith. In truth we may behave better, but belief is basic to better behavior if that belief takes in God and the brotherhood of man.

We need to return to Bible study and to stretch our minds to understand what the meanings are that have given so much to the elevation of character and the improvement of society. A purely secular point of view hardly possesses the soul to save humanity.

Rev. Aubrey C. Todd has resigned as pastor of the First Congregational Church, Asheville, effective August 1.

Rev. J. Frank Apple, pastor of the Henderson Church, assisted in special services at Apple's Chapel Church last week. Rev. J. L. Neese is the pastor.

Rev. J. Howard Smith is supplying the Seventh Street Disciples Church in Richmond during August. He will speak over radio station WLEE in Richmond each Saturday at 5:45 P. M. during the month.

Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Field Worker for Christian Education and Young People's Work, has been ill for the past two weeks, but she is reported much improved and hopes to return to her work soon.

We are indebted to Mr. Lemuel Peterson, Director of Public Relations, International Council of Religious Education for releases covering the 21st International Sunday School Convention, Des Moines, Iowa, July 23-27.

Our sympathy is extended to Mrs. L. E. Smith of Elon College in the death of her brother, Mr. Miller M. Brunk of Sebring, Fla., and Mountain Home, near Hendersonville, N. C. Mr. Brunk passed away August 1 after a brief illness.

Word has been received that the Happy Home Church, near Reidsville, suffered damages by fire the past week. It has not yet been determined how the fire started. The entire fellowship extends to the congregation its sympathy.

The United Church, Raleigh, is within $2,100 of its goal for liquidating its building indebtedness, and with the exception of $590.87 the full amount is covered by pledges. Congratulations to the United Church and its pastor, Rev. Frederick B. Eutsler.

The Henderson Church has participated in union Sunday night services this summer with the Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches. The services have been well received and attended, and there has been a variety of services including two held outdoors, those conducted by Young People and also by laymen. The final service will be held at the Congregational Christian Church and will be an organ recital.

Has your church or Sunday school made a special offering for the Shaowu Mission? Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson are doing a good work as our witnesses at Shaowu. They are depending upon us for financial support. At the present time we are short approximately $3,000 of the $10,000 goal for this year. Please send your gifts at once to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. The Mission Board year closes August 30.

The Young People's Summer Conferences for North Carolina and Virginia Youth of the Congregational Christian Churches will be held at Camp Hanes, near Winston-Salem as follows: Senior Young People—August 12-18; Junior High Young People—August 18-22. Registrations should be sent to Miss Chicoine immediately. See the Young People's Page of this issue for instructions as to the camp and how to reach it by car and by bus.

DENOMINATIONAL DAY AT MASSANETTA.

Tuesday, August 12, will be Evangelical and Reformed-Congregational Christian Day at the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference. Dr. I. W. Johnson will preside and Rev. R. L. House will be the speaker. Other speakers throughout the day include Drs. Adam Burnet, Ernest Trice Thompson, Frank W. Price, and Peter Marshall. Quite a number of our ministers attend this conference regularly. It is customary for many of our people throughout the Valley of Virginia to attend the Conference on this occasion.

GYPSY SMITH, 87, EVANGELIST, DIES OF HEART ATTACK.

Gypsy Smimth, world renowned British evangelist, died of a heart ailment aboard the liner Queen Mary on Monday of this week at the age of eighty-seven. The death of the man who was born in a Gypsy tent and made the world his field for active evangelism was announced when the giant ship reached port after her first postwar commercial voyage.

He visited the United States more than thirty times, circled the globe twice, worked in South Africa and spent three and one-half years in France during World War I. When American troops were leaving for home after the armistice, Gypsy Smith was in Paris to preach farewell them.

Mrs. Smith who accompanied the noted evangelist, said her husband had made the trip for his health, and that he had hoped to preach during his visit in the United States.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

PLANS MADE FOR BUILDING SUPERINTENDENT'S HOME.

Several years ago at a session of the Southern Convention a trusted and longtime servant of the Convention introduced the idea that it would be an advisable thing the Convention to obtain a home or parsonage for the Convention Executive Officer—then the Promotional Secretary and since then designated Superintendent.

Three years ago the Executive Board appointed a committee to secure a lease or option on the T. C. Amick home at Elon College then occupied by the Superintendent. The committee reported to the Convention at the 1946 session held at Waverly, Virginia, indicating uncertainty as to the availability of the Amick house. The Convention thereupon voted that the committee be continued and that the matter of decision be referred to the Executive Board with power to act.

The Executive Board made several unsuccessful attempts to obtain a house and thereupon voted to authorize a committee of seven to proceed with plans for the erection of a Superintendent's home at Elon College. The committee is composed of Rev.

Jesse H. Dollar, chairman; Mr. George D. Colelough, Rev. W. Millard Stevens, Mr. D. R. Fonville, Mrs. W. W. Sellars, Mr. George T. Gunter, Mr. H. W. Johnson, Mrs. John G. Truitt, and Rev. S. E. Madren. The house plan has been adopted and placed in the hands of contractors with request bids for construction by September 1. As soon as the cost has been determined your committee will prepare plans for financing. It is hoped that construction of the building will begin in the fall.

The Woman's Missionary Convention has designated its 1947-48 "Thank Offering" for this worthy project, several churches and ministers have indicated their hearty support, and the Congregational Christian Church Building Society has pledged itself to the support of this undertaking.

The project for providing a home for the Superintendent of the Convention is in line with the practices of many forward looking conferences within the denomination including Florida, the District of the Southeast, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New Hampshire, Indiana, South Dakota, Washington, Southern California, and others. It is the growing practice of the local churches within the Southern Convention to provide parsonages for pastors, and it is fitting that the Convention should provide a parsonage for the Superintendent who is the servant of the Convention, its enterprises and churches when and where needed and desired.

The committee earnestly solicits the cooperation and support of this worthy project. At present it is necessary to provide money for rent and by owning the Superintendent's home the funds now spent by the Convention on rent will become a capital and permanent investment.

BETHLEHEM CHURCH GOLDEN JUBILEE PROGRAM.

A Golden Jubilee program will begin at the Begonia Church (Bethlehem), Disputanta, Va., on Sunday morning, August 10, at 11:00 o'clock, Mr. Slabey, chairman. This service will be chiefly in Slovakian with sermons by Rev. John Prucha of Cleveland, Ohio, who preached there 50 years ago, and the Rev. A. J. Moncol, also of Cleveland, and an old friend of the church. Special music will be furnished by the choir and others.

A church dinner will be served in the Recreation Hall at 1:00 P. M. Guests will be served first and then the members. A table is reserved for ministers and honored guests.

At 3:00 P. M. there will be an English service with special music and messages from Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, Rev. R. L. House, Rev. D. D. Nash and other visiting ministers and guests; recognition of charter members; brief history of Begonia Church; and a word from the deacons and trustees.

On Wednesday, all day, there will be a church picnic with all the fried chicken and other good things that go with it, including "kolache"—the delicious Czechoslovak pastry—home-made cakes with fillings of poppy seed, nuts, plums, and cheese, ice cream and soft drinks. After lunch there will be brief speeches for those who want to listen, and games and play on the fine new playground for those who love clean sport.

TEACH CHRIST AS WORLD REDEEMER.

Excerpts from Address
By DR. BELA VASADY.

The threefold mission of the Ecumenical Church:

The prophetic missions of the Church. Over against a philosophy of despair expressing itself in Europe in the forms of an agnostic nihilism, a fatalistic acquiescence, or in a final self concentration to produce a new collectivist—secular religion at the expense of the dignity of human personality—the Church must preach the Gospel, the "good news" about Christ the Redeemer. The people of Europe are sorrowful people. But over against "the sorrow of the world" that leadeth to despair and death the Church must point to the "godly sorrow" that "worketh repentance unto salvation." A third world war can be avoided only if all the churches in the world, the churches of the victorious and of the vanquished countries become spiritually one in the practice of this "godly sorrow."

2. The redemptive mission of the Church. The hunger march of death is still on in Europe. People must be raised (lifted) above the "Kaput-level of existence." Material aid provided by the American churches through Church World Service and through individual love packages is

A PROPHETIC SUCCESSION.

"Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the Kingdom of God."

John the Baptist was a strong link in the human chain of redemption. He was a voice, but that voice was articulate and authentic. He was a fearless preacher. He learned to endure hardness. By precept and example he brought judgment upon soft religious living. He stands in the great stream of preachers who were imprisoned for their faith. He was one with Christ, not only in blood relationship but also in the fellowship of suffering.

Horace Bushnell once wrote, "The school of John the Baptist will be succeeded by the school of Christ, as dew comes after a fire." Jesus preached repentance; but repentance was not the end of his preaching, it was the beginning. The great end was the realization of the Kingdom of God. This should be the continuing motif of current preaching, the mainspring of Christian living.

History contains no greater succession than that of prophets and preachers. Their name is legion, the luminaries and the lesser lights. When Elijah had completed his ministry, the Lord provided an Elisha upon whom the mantle fell. Paul lavishes his precious wisdom upon the aspiring and promising Timothy. The procession continues. Young men are separated unto the gospel ministry. God appears reluctant to declare a moratorium on preaching. A brief glance over the roster of General Council preachers during recent years reveals an imposing galaxy: Leonard Bacon, Richard Storrs, Frank Gunsaulus, Alexander McKenzie, Charles Jefferson, Ozora Davis, Raymond Calkins, Parkes Cadman, Carl Patton, Albert Palmer, McIlyer Lichliter, and James Fifield. The list of Lyman Beecher lecturers at Yale indicate that God has not left himself without capable witnesses in our generation. Our hope and confidence in the future may be expressed in the noble lines of Davis Wortman:

God of the prophets, bless the prophets' sons;
Elijah's mantel o'er Elisha cast,
Each age its solemn task may claim but once,
Make each one nobler, stronger than the last!

Anoint them prophets! Make their ears intent To thy divine speech, their hearts awake to human need;
Their lips made eloquent to assure the right
And every evil break.

Make them apostles! Heralds of thy cross,
Forth may they go to tell all realms thy grace;
Inspired of thee, may they count but loss,
And stand at last with joy before thy face.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE TWENTY-FIRST QUADRENNIAL SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

From every state of the Union, from the seven Canadian provinces, from three possessions of the United States and from five other countries, 4,225 Sunday school workers came to Des Moines for five full days, July 23-27, to participate in the 21st Quadrennial International Sunday School Convention as a demonstration of their "unity in the task of teaching for Christian living." Several thousand others from the city and from hundreds of Iowa communities registered for single sessions of the Convention, for which the theme was "Live Christ—Teach Christ."

Together representatives from more than fifty Protestant denominations in the United States and Canada—men and women Sunday school teachers, superintendents, ministers, youth representatives and professional Christian educators—have faced the realities of world problems today and have been challenged and inspired to rededicate themselves to practical living and teaching in the footsteps of the Master.

Harold E. Stassen, president of the International Council, struck the keynote of the Convention when he declared at the opening session:

"The moral foundation which is established (in the United States) will determine in the years ahead whether the great power that we develop in America carries with it a continuous concept of service, whether our remarkable strength carries with it the essential spirit of humility, whether the abundance that results from our great productivity carries with the essential humanitarian friendliness and whether within and without our country our policies reflect the basic truths of the Brotherhood of Man and the Fatherhood of God."

Twenty-nine denominational meetings were held simultaneously for three hours on three days of the Convention, each attended by Sunday school workers from the respective denominations. In addition, those meetings were attended by many denominational leaders from Iowa. Plans were presented at each meeting for participation in the denominational program "to interpret the conviction that the most compelling urgent in the world is Christian teaching."

Training for leadership also was an important subject at the Convention. Dr. Charles J. Turk, of St. Paul, Minnesota, president of Macalester College, stated that "we must spend more money on school buildings, we must train teachers more carefully, we must unceasingly struggle for a better curriculum and we must learn how to pay appropriate honor to Sunday school superintendents and teachers."

Mr. Stassen was reelected president of the Council for a second term. Six vice-presidents were re-elected and five new ones elected. Dr. Roy G. Ross was re-elected as secretary.

Nearly 10,000 Sunday school workers gathered in the Drake University stadium to take part in the final consecration service of the Convention. Included on the program were a worship pageant and a message by Dr. Paul W. Quillian, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Houston, Texas. Eight hundred singers and some 180 other persons participated in the pageant. Written and directed by Dr. Harold E. Pflug, professor of Christian education, Eden Theological Seminary, Webster Groves, Mo., the pageant combined choral music and congregational responses with scenes portraying Biblical events as well as present-day expressions of religious action.

A call for united action in Christian teaching was made by Dr. Gerald E. Knoff, associate general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, in a service held in the afternoon in cooperation with the World's Sunday School Association.

"No local church is strong enough to attack alone the strongly entrenched evil, the stubborn indifference, and the self-centered materialism of a typical American community," he said. "Nor is any denomination able to challenge these forces in our two nations. The experience of more than a century has shown we attack them only by cooperative effort or we attack to meet defeat."

A Statement of Objectives, adopted by the officers of the International Quadrennial Convention and accepted by the Convention Friday morning declared:

"We will resist within our borders the ideology of atheistic communism and all other Godless materialisms, which, believing in no God, talks of justice and equality but unjustly condemns those who fall into its power through the gross inequality and suffering of slavery in the police state; denies the foundation of truth, and employs falsehoods for the destruction of all inner integrity of its followers; and, with materialism as its only standard of value, ends in base tyranny."

A supplementary statement, adopted by the Convention Saturday, stated further: "It is necessary to give our witness of opposition to every ideology that draws men's loyalty away from God's universal will. There are many such 'evil forces' which we must oppose in addition to atheistic communism. We commit ourselves in constant effort to win men's hearts from secularism which denies God's part in all of life; from racism which denies the brotherhood of all men; from militarism which holds war as inevitable and places trust in naked forces instead of the disciplines of peaceful change; and from that materialism which puts possessions before service and holds things as more sacred than human welfare—a materialism often so glaringly displayed in our own economic system."

LEMUEL PETERSON.

BIG ADVANCES IN COUNCIL WORK IN LAST TEN YEARS.

This year's convention brings to a close a very significant decade in the history of religious education of the North American continent.

Under the outstanding leadership of Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, which is the over-head interdenominational cooperative body in religious education for the United States and Canada, significant strides have been made in every field of endeavor.

This progress is best seen in the expansion of the International Council. The budget from 1937 to 1947 has increased 300 per cent. With this development in financial resources the departments of the Council have increased from eight to 19 and the staff members from 10 to 24, with officer personnel up from 29 to 80.

Most important event of these 10 years was the publication last year of the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament. For eight years, under the guidance of Dr. Ross and Dean Luther A. Weigle, the outstanding Bible scholars of this country worked on this revision. They are still at work on the Old Testament, which will be published about 1950.

Other significant developments have been the increase of weekday church school pupils to two million in 2,200 communities of 46 states; the expected enrollment of over five million pupils in vacation church schools this year; and the development of 634 state, provincial, county, and city councils of churches and religious education.

An outstanding contribution to American religious life is the planning of Bible lessons for some fifteen million church school pupils through the committees of the International Council. The International Uniform Lessons, used in one hundred denominations, are this year 75 years old. The cooperative planning of these lessons has given a great impetus to interdenominational work.

Whereas the budget of 1937 was only $161,673.33, the budget of 1947 is $531,477.92. The growth in income has been provided by sizeable increases in appropriations from denominations and constituent councils.

THE BIBLE IN TEACHING.

Excerpts from Address

By DR. ERNEST TRICE THOMPSON,
At International Sunday School
Convention.

No nation in all history was ever founded by people so dominated by the Bible as our own. Today, every test reveals, the experience of chaplains, who came in contact with a cross section of American manhood in two world wars, confirms the fact that this book which lies at the foundation of our national greatness, and on which alone we can build safely for the future, is largely an unknown book to the rising generation of America.

The Bible is the indispensable foundation on which Protestantism depends: it lies back of much of our national greatness; it is still our best seller; and yet in spite of its widespread distribution and its unique position, it is being read less and less by educated men and to our rising generation it is largely an unknown book.

All of this raises a question in our mind. Will the Bible continue to lose its influence or can it recover its position in our modern life? If it is to be the latter, and the future of Protestantism and the future of America depend upon the answer, then, I believe we will agree that first of all there must be a revival of Bible teaching in the home, in the church, and in the schools.

First, there must be a revival of Bible teaching in the homes—more fathers and mothers who will seek to transmit the faith to their sons and daughters; more families, with appropriate changes to suit our modern times, like that described by Robert Burns in The Cotter's Saturday Night, where the Bible is read, and prayers are offered in the intimacy of the family circle.

"From scenes like these," sang Burns, "Old Scotia's grandeur springs, That makes her loved at home, rever'd abroad."

It is from families like these that the greatness of America has sprung; it is families like these on whom its future greatness depends.

There must also be a revival of Bible teaching in the church. That means more Biblical instructions, more Biblical exposition from the pulpit; and it means more adequate Bible teaching in the church school.

The brief period allotted to instruction, the irregular attendance, the small proportion of children enrolled in the Sunday school make it

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The latest and best news I have read in a long time is expressed in the following language: "Ye are of God, beloved . . . because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error. Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and everyone that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God: God is love. In this was manifest the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. . . . If we love one another God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he is us, because he has given us of his Spirit." (I John 4:4-12.)

That is good news! What wonderful news is contained in those eight verses of Scripture! They have come to be one of my favorite passages. What peace and strength they would give me if written indelibly upon my mind and my heart, and steadily put to practice in my ways. Many of our churches have many empty pews. Numbers of our members are elsewhere at the time of worship. If any sizeable number of the members of any church really took seriously the beautiful words in those eight verses the pews could be filled. In most churches there are enough members to more than fill its sanctuary. I cannot think of a church in Suffolk but that would be filled about twice over if all came.

Taking the words of those eight verses seriously one would have to look on God as a loving heavenly Father, and could ask oneself: What would an infinite, loving, heavenly Father do for us? Why, being a father he would make us like himself; he would see to it that were given opportunity to come to our fullest and best; he would give us nurture and growth; he would protect us and care for us; he would counsel us and advise us; he would love us and enjoy us; and he would honor us. I know that because I am a father myself, and these things are some of the sure things I have in my own heart for my children. I know that again because Jesus came and expressed it in his life, and teachings, and in his death and resurrection.

Feeling humble and repentant before God in the light of those eight verses, I say to myself, I should cooperate with God in all those things. God is trying to make us joyous and happy and strong, we should cooperate with him; God is trying to speak to us, to feed us, to nurture us, we should cooperate with him; God is trying to care for us and protect us, in all the many ways, and in all the few simple ways, we should allow him and help him; God is trying to give us good fatherly advice, to teach us, counsel us, to tell us the way and help us, we should listen. God would like to enjoy us, and have us in his fellowship, and to honor us. We should let him.

Such would help us to love one another; would cause us to be strong as individuals, or churches, or conferences; would give us grace and strength to do valiant battle for the Lord against the enemy without, rather than bowing in defeat to the enemy within. Let us multiply our strength by loving God and one another.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

THE BIBLE IN TEACHING.

clear to us all that the Sunday school cannot meet the educational needs of the church. Bible teaching in the home, Bible teaching in the church and in the Sunday school must be supplemented by Bible teaching in the public schools. It is encouraging to note that this movement is spreading today in almost every state of the Union. Two million boys and girls are now receiving weekday religious education in more than two thousand communities, which is more than double the number four years ago. In my own state we have a homogeneous population, a settled population, a well churched population, and yet I note that 48 per cent of the children reached by weekday religious education in the public school have no contact with ever with the Sunday school.

The Bible, I say, is a human book, written by real men, about real men, and about the fundamental problems which men face in this age and in every age.

We believe that there is a God who has revealed Himself to man in His words and in His deeds, a God who has spoken His final message to men in the life and death and resurrection of Jesus. We believe that the Bible is the Word of God because in it God's word comes to us; because we experience His saving power in Christ; because here as no where else in all the world, we came in living contact with God who is Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Why do people continue to come to church and to Sunday school, week after week, year after year, in spite of all the attractions of our modern age, in spite of the week and inadequate presentation of the Word which they find in the Sunday school? It is because consciously or unconsciously they wish to find God, to be lifted up for a moment at least out of themselves into that spiritual realm, which at times enchants them with its beauty and sustains them with its power, to hear some message from God's Word, some authentic Word of God that will speak to the real needs of their soul.

Why do men continue to read this book, written some parts of it thousands of years ago, in spite of all the modern literature which floods from our press, and the messages which flood the air? Many reasons might be given, but in the last analysis it is because the God who created the heavens and the earth and the sea, the God who thundered at Sinai, who inspired the prophets and who sent His Son, the God in whom we live and move and have our being still speaks through its pages to those, but only to those, who are willing to hearken to His voice.

And that is why we teach the Bible. Not that men may appreciate its literature, or understand its history, or even that they may know its doctrines, but that they learn to know Him whom to know aright is life eternal; that each man may hear for himself that voice of the living God, who calls us in ideals, warns us in remorse, who comforts us with His pardon, and who sustains us with His power; that each man may hear that voice and respond to it, so that His kingdom may come, His will be done increasingly on earth, even as it is in heaven; and that finally we and all whom we love may be reunited with Him throughout all eternity.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

VETERANS IN COLLEGE.

Frequently the question is asked, "How are the veterans getting along in college?" "Are they working or are they idling their time away?" Many of these veterans now enrolled in Elon College were students here before they entered the armed services of our country. The comparison of their efforts and grades before the war and their present achievements is most revealing. In practically every instance the student is more diligent, more cooperative, and, of course, is doing much better work.

There are different reasons for this double diligence on the part of these one time members of the armed forces of our country. They are three to five years older. Time for them is slipping away. Life is becoming more serious. Many of them are married and have children. Their responsibilities are increasing. To enjoy the benefits under the G. I. Bill of Rights they must make passing grades. To fail would mean the loss of all such benefits. Then, too, they want to complete all requirements for graduation as soon as possible that they may get started in business or profession according plans and preparation.

The majority of the veterans seem most grateful for those privileges that their government is making possible for them. They, in turn, would do their best to prepare themselves for helpful and productive citizenship. When we think of the tragic experiences through which many of them passed and the blessings and privileges that have come to our country and that we now enjoy, I am sure that we all feel that they have earned everything that the Government is doing for them or may be able to do for them in the future.

Elon College is very glad to have the privilege of cooperating with the Government in the matter of our veterans' education and is very happy to have a large number of them as members of our present student body.

The distressing fact that there are so many veterans applying for admission to Elon College now that we cannot admit. We simply do not have room for them, nor do we have the faculty for larger numbers. It is most disappointing and distressing to turn them away. To say, "No, we cannot admit you." Here is where we, all of us, have a responsibility. What are we going to do with it?

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

All of our Sunday schools and the majority of our churches in the Southern Convention are self-supporting; that is, they contribute sufficient money to meet all current and necessary demands for their schools and churches. When these schools and churches start to receive money with which to meet their local demands, the College would beg of them to think of its interests. The majority of these churches and Sunday schools had a part in the founding of Elon College and have had a part in its support through the years. I trust that they have a pardonable pride in the present status and achievement of their college. The College still needs and deserves their support, a more generous support than it has enjoyed in years that have passed and gone. This increased demand on the part of the College is evident when we consider the great increase in operating expenses in all business concerns, all professional schools, and all training institutions. You have to pay more for supplies, for labor, for everything that is required for the proper conduct of the College. If our friends and supporters would be thoughtful enough to consider these facts, I am sure they would be more generous of the College. Obviously increase resources for the on-going of the College must come from some source. The College has been accustomed, and rightly so, I think, to look to the Church and her organizations for the necessary support. I am sure that our Sunday schools and churches will be glad to make more generous contributions for the support of their college as they may find it possible.

The College is most appreciative of every dollar received. These contributions help us to keep our program of Christian education going.

A TELEGRAM FROM GENERAL GEORGE C. MARSHALL.

I have hoped until now to be able to find a favorable occasion for a public appearance in support of the effort of the United Service to China in raising funds. But this has proven impossible of arrangement. Therefore the telegram.

The tradition of friendship between Chinese and Americans is centuries old. It is based upon the firmest of foundations. Americans like Chinese; and Chinese like Americans. Over the past century this friendliness has expressed itself in many ways but primarily in cultural relations. We have learned something of the great wisdom and culture of China through the large number of professors and students of that country who have come to America. We have sent to China innumerable emissaries of American culture as missionaries, educators, doctors and business men; in fact, we have expended large sums of money in China in contribution to missions and to various foundations. This has been a very wise expenditure for our good as well as for the good of China. Today the Chinese people are suffering tragically from the disorganization resulting from eight years of warfare against the Japanese and the turbulence of the civil war which has followed. They are in desperate need of assistance and I for one hope very much that through the United Service to China Organization material assistance can be rendered. In 1941 a group of farsighted Americans organized United China Relief. Its purpose was to make effective the assistance which the American people desired to extend to the Chinese during the period of great hardship and difficulty arising out of the war. For six years private contributions to United China Relief enabled that organization to establish many worthwhile projects. The refugees were fed, clothed and sheltered; medical attention was given to the civilian population; children received expert care; aid was given to students and teachers; plans for carrying out the program were prepared by expert workers in the field and carefully reviewed in the United States by leaders of business, education, medicine

BIBLE-LADEN "MORNING STAR" LEAVES BOSTON.

Carrying a cargo of Bibles, the 163-foot missionary schooner Morning Star VI sailed from Boston Sunday, July 27, to the Marshall and Caroline Islands, whose natives have welcomed five similar ships from this port since 1856.

Officials of the American Board which also sent out the earlier Morning Stars, dedicated the craft in a pre-sailing ceremony at Lewis Wharf.

At the Morning Star's wheel was youthful Skipper Price Lewis, Jr., of Holland Patent, N. Y., a recent Dartmouth graduate and wartime Navy officer.

The ship will pick up a new crew in Honolulu, then sail for the Micronesian Islands where it will be used to transport missionaries around 5,000,000 square miles of Pacific Ocean.

God's Little Ships Do Essential Work.

Early in the work of Congregational missionaries in Micronesia it became clear that a ship was imperative. Transporting supplies and Christian workers among the thousands of islands required low cost shipping. Over five million square miles of ocean presented a big parish. The American Board told the story of need to the church, and the first Morning Star was purchased.

Morning Star Set Sail.

A cold wind searched every nook and cranny of Boston's crooked streets one November night in 1856. Park Street Congregation Church was lighted from top to bottom. A farewell service blessed the first Skipper, Captain Samuel G. Moore, and all the people who shared in the launching of the courageous missionary ship.

The next morning it sailed from Boston harbor for Micronesia. Off Cape Cod she was caught in a terrific storm. She dropped anchor. In the morning two large boats near her had been driven ashore but the little Mornings Star's anchor had held fast. After month's of hazardous sailing she reached the South Seas. Between 1856 and 1904 four more Morning Stars were purchased, blessed, and sent to these Islands.

The need for this ship is urgent. "By sail" is the most economical and most dependable way of carrying Christian workers, students, and missionary supplies from one island to another. As Morning Star VI brings to these many islands the Christian message and teaching, she will become an effective means of maintaining peace in the Pacific; for those island peoples live on the strategic cross-roads of civilization.

Morning Star VI cost $35,000.00. Gifts of $1.00, $5.00, $10.00, $25.00, $100.00 received individual receipts in the form of special Morning Star Certificates.

Conditions are still primitive, although improved over early days. The islands are numerous. The distances are great. The cost of coal and diesel oil are far too expensive to fuel a missionary ship. Moreover, the island people are excellent sailors. With an auxiliary engine for getting into lagoons on calm days and keeping off reefs in a storm, Morning Star VI sails easily and swiftly. Thus sail boats continue to be the least expensive and most satisfactory means of transportation. With the Apostle Paul we say, "Setting sail therefore."

Send Back the Missionaries.

In the fall of 1946 the United States Navy Department sent Admiral Wright and additional personnel on an inspection tour of the Marshall, Caroline, and Palau Islands to find out what these newly liberated people wanted. What should be done for their well being? Wherever they went the first request was, "Send back the missionaries."

The islands had their own way of giving military rank. Whenever a chaplain was in the group, the people flocked to him as the leader. The gold Cross of Christ on his uniform meant more to them than the braid of an Admiral. The men on the Navy Commission soon came to the point where they could tell, on stepping ashore, whether or not Christian missionaries had been there in advance with health, education, and faith. "By their fruits shall ye know them."

Admiral Wright declared, "I cannot get away from the idea that if mankind were foolish enough to have another war and wipe out western civilization with atom bombs, it might be that right in these Islands would be found the roots of a new Christian civilization that will be better than what we have been able to build up to now."

On one island the people had built a new coral church.

"Why a new church?" visitors of our U. S. Government asked.

"To be ready for the missionaries," came the answer.

"But the missionaries haven't been here for twenty-five years."

"They will come back," replied the Christians confidently.

Rev. Eleanor R. Wilson and Dr. Clarence S. Gillette are back already. More will follow soon. Our Christian schools will train the youth of the Islands as teachers and church leaders. The churches will be strengthened and community life lifted. Practical training in crafts, agriculture, trades and Christian faith will be given.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

QUOTATIONS FROM THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AND PASTORS' SCHOOL.

Mrs. E. E. McClintock:

We have our women's organizations in the church so that we may reach as many women as possible.

The five areas of work for Women's Work are: Worship, Education, Serving, Giving and Fellowship.

Points to consider when planning money-raising activities:

1. Should not provide an escape from real sharing.

2. Should not tinge on gambling.

3. Should not undercut local merchants in sales.

4. Should not only raise money, but have in it real fellowship value.

5. When you have several circles, do not overbalance program with money-raising activities—have clearance.

What kind of women should we be? We should have:

1. Great spiritual depth.

2. Understanding hearts.

3. Real concern for spreading the work in our community, conference, and convention. "Foreign missions depend on home missions."

4. World vision.

Dr. F. E. Reynolds:

Have we ever tried in our church life the program of the Kingdom as outlined in the Sermon on the Mount?

If we knew Jesus' authority, we would know Him and His faith for our day and generation.

The Kingdom of Heaven is the way of living under the sovereignty of God.

Our relationship with God is conditioned by our relationship with other people.

Miss Ruth Seabury:

The power of the congregation is Christianity's unique gift to the world.

A congregation is never an audience.

The Work of the Devotional Life Committee (As suggested by Mrs. McClintock):

1. To keep at hand and see that it is circulated literature to be used in homes. Write to: Commission on Evangelism, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City.

2. Carefully planned devotional service at every meeting.

- a. A table of devotional material at every meeting.
3. Work with Family Life Committee on family religion.
4. Encourage church attendance.

FOR THE CHILDREN

DOROTHY TODD, Children's Editor

COOPERATIVE ACTIVITIES FOR CHILDREN.

Excerpts of Address

By DR. AGNES SNYDER,*
Ass'n of Childhood Education.

Were it possible in one sweeping view to get a picture of the ways the children of the world are trying today to meet their physical, social and spiritual needs, and were the observers sensitive to the significance of what they see for the future of the world, there would be those among them so shocked, so overcome with despair that they would be unable to act.

But there would be others who, after shock would be filled with pity and righteous anger to the point where no other life's concerns would ever again take precedence over the needs of children. For they would have seen children dying of hunger in the streets of countries devastated by the war their elders waged, children boring like animals into rubble seeking a place to rest, children ruled in home and school by adults who know no other relationship with children than that of dominance—submission, children whose spiritual strivings are stifled in a psychological atmosphere of hopelessness, scepticism, fear, and loss of faith in self, in others, and in God.

In our own country they would have seen often in the same town extremes of poverty and wealth, children deprived of all that makes for normal satisfaction of needs, while around the corner other children pampered with luxury, their physical needs over-satisfied, but their social and spiritual needs so little satisfied that they grow up callous to the sufferings of those so near.

There is ample testimony in the many private and public agencies existing to meet the needs of children that there are many who have the needs of children at heart. The weakness lies in the separateness of these efforts; the correction in co-operation among agencies designed to meet the many aspects of the physical, social, and spiritual needs of children. Beginnings, however, are being made along the lines of co-operative action for children. These are on a community, a national and an international basis.

It is of particular importance in meeting the spiritual needs of children that religion and education should join hands. Such cooperation imposes, however, knotty problems in a democracy such as ours composed of many people of many lands and of many creeds, a democracy rightly committed to the divorce of church and state.

The solution of this problem calls for immediate cooperative action of leaders in religion and education. The existence of the problem must be permitted to prevent the reduction of the existing inequalities in educational opportunity. A solution can be found by a sincere effort to understand differences in point of view and motivation. And no effort is too great when upon it depends the ability of children to understand the deeper meanings of life. For when the spiritual as well as the physical and social needs of children are met then, and not until then, will we know the full measure of human potentiality.

CONFERENCE ON CHILDREN.

Regional Children's Work Conferences will be held in 1948 in 29 cities of the United States and Canada as the outgrowth of the International Children's Work Conference held in Des Moines July 20-23, according to Mrs. Mabel Garrett Wagner, director of children's work of the International Council of Religious Education, Chicago.

Based on studies made by the Des Moines conference, where the urgent need for world-wide Christian teaching of children was constantly felt, the regional conferences will give opportunity for study by children's workers in their home areas.

The importance of religious education of children was brought out here by Dr. T. Z. Koo of Geneva, Switzerland, who stated that "as educators of children and youth, we have an opportunity to build the foundation for one world and for lasting peace."

"It is the contribution we make through religious education which will aid in the upbuilding of a free democratic society in which personality stands as the highest product of life," he said.

Study groups met for intensive discussion of subjects including faith, understanding and religious education of children; common tasks for the church, the home and the community; leadership and spiritual growth of teachers; church growth and fellowship, and the role in world peace.

Summaries of group discussion disclosed an emphasis on understanding each child as an individual, better training of teachers and Sunday school workers, and a program for teaching parents their role as religious educators in the home. Cooperation between church and home was repeatedly stressed. Constructive Christian approach to teaching children foundations of peace and a oneness with the rest of the world is imperative, it was felt.

ENCOURAGE YOUR CHILD TO STAND ALONE.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"I once heard an eminent minister say, in effect, that if we wish to live happily and at peace with ourselves and the world, we must be bigger than anything that can happen to us," remarked a friend whom I was consulting on a child-development problem.

"That's a pretty order," I answered.

"A pretty big order," my friend agreed, "but if we keep this in mind, we shall make a continuous effort to teach our children to stand on their own feet."

"How would you say that this can be accomplished?" I inquired.

"Well, I believe every parent has to think out ways and means. Allowing children to plan and bring to a realization some of their hearts' desires, instead of always depending on Father and Mother, will help them to gain self-confidence. Now and then they should be obliged to go without the thing which they specially wish to have. Someone has said that the life of a child is a series of weanings from things on which he has learned to depend.

"A young mother said to me, 'I'm expecting another baby, so Bobby is being weaned from his many only-child habits. He has too often held the center of the stage, and he has been much too dependent on me. I'm making him understand that now I must depend on him a little. Although he misses the two or three former at-

MORE INFORMATION ABOUT THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CAMP AT CAMP HANES.

How to get there by car: Upon leaving Winston-Salem go to Rural Hall, after leaving Rural Hall go one mill and take the first paved road to the right, go for 10 miles, turn left at highway marker, go three miles to camp (Sand Clay Road).

If coming by bus or train come to the town of King just north of Winston-Salem and we plan to meet buses and trains arriving during the day.

If coming from Eastern Virginia by car the easiest way would be to come by way of Danville, Reidsville, N. C., and then to Winston-Salem.

Post office address is: John W. Hanes Memorial Y. W. C. A. Camp, R. F. D. No. 1, King, N. C.

What to bring: 2 sheets, pillow, pillow cases, 2 blankets, bath towels, clothes for play, and bathing suit.

The following are good if you have them: camera, tennis racket, a musical instrument, and flashlight.

You will need your Bible and if you should like to take part in the arts and crafts handwork each camper is required to pay a small fee for the materials he uses.

Opportunity will be given to the campers to make contributions to some worthy cause at the Sunday School Services.

A camp store will operate for the convenience of the campers. Stamps and postcards, pure candy, craft material, etc., may be purchased.

Senior Camp—August 12-18. First meal will be served at noon on August 18. ~

Junior Camp—August 18-22. First meal will be served at noon on August 18.

We are having some of our finest Southern Convention leaders at Camp this year—all five of the Conferences are represented. We are most fortunate to have with us as missionary guest, Miss Jennie Jacobs from China. Miss Jacobs delayed her sailing date back to China so that she could be with us at Camp Hanes. She is a fine person and it is inspiring to know such a person as she is.

It is not too late to change your plans so that you can come to the summer camp. Be sure to let me know immediately so that you may be sure of your place at Camp Hanes.

For those of you who have wanted to know about bus schedules to Camp Hanes, here are some of the times of the new schedule:

TRAINING FOR MARRIAGE AND FAMILY—THE AMERICAN WAY.

By GRACE SLOAN OVERTON.

It was not until about 1927 that we began to hear much about the philosophy and the psychology of marriage and of family living. The scholars began to see that economic security was not enough to secure the family. Divorce increased, parental neglect was apparent, and generally the moral tone of society was not improved. It began to dawn upon the scholars that the family after all was primarily concerned with the personalities within it and that as an institution it was dependent also upon the way these personalities reacted to each other and that the family itself was a "unity of interacting personalities." The changing culture had not only changed standards and methods of making a living, but it had also made a difference of how the members of the family felt toward each other and what they demanded of each other.

With this understanding came the recognition for the need of studies of the more personal nature and for the need of more intricate and refined adjustments between the actual personalities which made up the family group itself.

In America we hold that a good marriage is a happy marriage. Our folkways demand that a married couple should be united by mutual affection and that they should be sexually faithful. This means that our very conception of marriage is essentially personal; and we know that these personal adjustments must be fairly satisfactory if the marriage is happy enough to assure family success. This adjustment of married couples implies far more in America than in a society in which having large families and giving total loyalty to governmental institutions are the chief demands upon marriage. If America wants to keep her more democratic and spiritual form of marriage, she must assume her social responsibility in training for it.

Every boy and girl in America needs to be taught to accept the fact of sex and its life giving potential and to accept his and her own sex and its differing shares in paternity and what it demands of them now and in the future. Colleges today need to be training personnel to do this kind of teaching and guidance. While there is still pressure against this type of training the fact is that more high schools are ready for it, than there is, at present, trained personnel available.

There needs to be training in the skills of pre-marital living. The pre-marital living of the young is no longer in accord with the inherited pre-marital folk-ways of the earlier American culture. The earlier America was a rural culture and still under the dominance of the taboos and ancestral thoughts of a more isolated culture. Girls were safeguarded by more remote living and well defined conventionalities governing their behavior. There were not the stimulations toward romantic thoughts; nor was there the numerous opportunities for the fraternizing of boys and girls. The places to go, the habits of dating, the topics of discussion, the social patterns were all different and required different skills than now.

The case of chastity needs to be restated. There is still need for it; but old reasons alone are not adequate for today. Girls need to be quite frankly taught what they have at stake. They are potential wives and mothers. There needs to be a new definition of what is expected of the American girl and boy in their relationship with each other.

Since neither girls nor boys have

SOUND ADVICE AGAINST STRONG DRINK.

LESSON VII—AUGUST 17, 1947.

STANLEY C. HARREL, Guest Editor.

MEMORY SELECTION: Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.—Proverbs 20:1.

LESSON TEXT: Proverbs 20:1; 23:19-21, 29-35; Ecclesiastes 10:17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 23:15-21.

An Ancient Evil.

It is easy to fall into the assumption that the problems which confront the modern world are the most difficult which man has ever faced. One needs only to read his Bible in order to learn that there are no new sins; and that the evils which destroy men in our day were well known to the ancients. Noah had scarcely gotten settled after his debarkation from the ark before he went on a spree. By the time Proverbs were collected and written in book form the Hebrews had learned a wealth of truth about the dangers of indulging in alcoholic drinks. The pithy sayings of Proverbs set forth the fundamental facts about the dangers of strong drink. The effects of drinking alcohol are the same today that they were in the days of Solomon; but the dire social consequences of the drinking of alcohol have been multiplied countless times by the complexities of modern life.

A Controversial Issue.

It seems that there should be no grounds for debate about how to deal with alcoholic drinking. The physical effects of drinking alcohol are well known. One can stand on the street corner of any city and pick out those upon whom alcohol has set its mark of destruction. The columns of any daily paper furnish abundant evidence of what alcohol is doing in modern society. If the police court cases are printed in your paper, half the cases will deal directly with offenses for which liquor is responsible. To that must be added the stories of murders, maimings, sex crimes, and automobile accidents in which drinking drivers were involved.

In the face of the incontrovertible facts as to the evil which alcohol is working in society, there is the widest cleavage in thought as to how to deal with it. There is no need nor is there space herein to recount the history of the long fight against the liquor business. To date all efforts to deal with alcohol through the medium of legislation have been failures.

The World's No. One Deceiver.

One fact about alcohol ought to be clearly recognized by everyone: that is that alcohol is the World's No. One Deceiver.* It promises to the person who is tempted to indulge in its use as a beverage: release from cares and anxieties, an increase in the enjoyment of life, and the enlargement of his social contacts. It ends by making the one who indulges too much a mental and physical wreck, and a social outcast. When the drinker begins indulgence he is convinced that he can drink or not at will; but according to the most reliable figures available, there are three million alcoholics in our country, who are abject slaves to alcohol, and who have no power whatever to resist the temptation to drink.

Every adult ought to recall the campaign that was waged to discredit and nullify the Prohibition Amendment. It was said through every possible medium that "Prohibition did not prohibit;" and that "Repeal would make for temperance and less drinking." Government figures are available for thirteen years since repeal. During that time more than sixty billion dollars have been spent for alcoholic liquors. Figures are not yet available as to what was spent for liquor in 1946; but in 1945 it was over seven and three-quarter billions; and in 1946, it was probably far in excess of eight billions.

The Christian's Responsibility.

In the light of these facts, what is the responsibility of the Christians with reference to the drinking of alcohol? For manifestly alcohol stands next to war as the most deadly enemy of mankind. No matter what one's personal habits may be it is impossible to escape the dangers of alcohol. Something must be done about it.

In the light of Christian principles, the safest course for the individual, is the way of abstinence. If one is able to use alcohol in moderation, and there are such, there still remains the Christian's responsibility for the weaker brother. The liquor dealers are spending millions of dollars annually to convince the American public that the drinking of hard and expensive whiskies is a mark of social distinction. The Christian has a responsibility to contradict this insidious propaganda.

It was said above that so far all efforts to control the liquor problem through legislation have failed. That does not mean, however, that the effort to curb the liquor traffic through legislation, is forever doomed to fail. When public sentiment demands the effective enforcement of legislation against the sale of liquor, we will have such legislation, and its enforcement will produce results. Christians can, if they will, mold such public sentiment.

The most pertinent fact for Christians to consider is the conclusion which is being reached by modern study of alcoholism; viz., that the majority of people who drink, do so because they have failed to find that which is truly satisfying in the normal experiences of life. They are men and women who are poorly adjusted to their circumstances and environment. They have not made a success of their business ventures. They have failed to find the way to happy family relationships. Drink is an escape from frustration and unhappiness.

A Christian life that is free, full, and deep is the best safeguard against the temptation to drink. We are very conscious of the members of our churches who fall a victim to alcoholism; but they are relatively few as compared with the great number of alcoholics who have no church connection. It may be that a study of how and why the church has failed in those individual cases, will point the way to avoid such failures with others who are in the churches, and how we may hope to reach and help those who are not now church members. Saint Paul voiced the most meaningful statement of the New Testament relative to alcohol, when in Ephesians 5:18, he said: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit."

LIBERTY SPRING.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Liberty Spring Congregational Christian Church has had a most fruitful and joyful year together. We have followed our theme, "The Lord Thy God . . . And Thy Neighbor," having adopted a "Good Neighbor" project whereby each active member was given an inactive member's name and during the year has kept in touch with her, striving to keep her interested and urging her to be present at our meetings—and always signing her name as "Your Good Neighbor." This project is to end at our August Vesper Meeting and Picnic when each "Good Neighbor" will disclose her identity.

Then, too, we have derived a great deal of Christian fellowship through cooperating with our "neighbor" churches. We had our Foreign Mission study book with the Bethlehem Christian Ladies' Society, and participation in the World Day of Prayer Program with the Cypress Christian Church Ladies' Missionary Society.

We have presented Life Memberships to two of our faithful and beloved members: Mrs. John L. Rawles, and Mrs. M. E. Harcum.

During the year we became a member of the C.M.A. and sent our delegate to the meeting in Newport News.

Our Society was happy to raise money, through a church supper, for an Electrolux cleaner and have presented it to the church.

We believe we have met all requirements of the Standard of Excellence, to date, and are anticipating being among those on the Roll of Honor.

MRS. J. E. HARREL, JR.,
President.

TURNER'S CHAPEL.

As our year's work comes to an end we have some feelings of regret and some of gladness. We regret of course that we have done and given so much for us, but we are glad that He continues to give us the opportunity of helping to send His gospel to all mankind.

Both interest and attendance of Turner's Chapel Missionary Society have improved since the beginning of the year. Therefore, we have had some very good meetings. Having Shallow Well Society meet with us to observe the World Day of Prayer helped us realize more fully the true meaning of why we had met. In April we were glad to have Shallow Well and Sanford Societies meet with us to hear Rev. B. V. Munger of Chapel Hill review Portraits of a Pilgrim. Needless to say, he did a splendid job of it. We are very grateful for his kindness and trust that God will continue to bless and use him. Another interesting meeting was when Sanford and Turner's Chapel Societies met with Shallow Well to hear Rev. R. T. Grissom review The Divine Fatherhood. He also did a splendid job and we are grateful for the chance of hearing him. Now, we are looking forward to another such meeting when Shallow Well and Turner's Chapel will meet with Sanford Society to hear Miss Betty Chicoine review India At the Threshold. We feel sure that this will be as enjoyable and inspiring as the others. We find these joint meetings to be beneficial in many ways—we like them very much.

MRS. D. V. WICKER.

HOLY NECK MISSIONARY-AID SOCIETY.

We of the Holy Neck Missionary-Aid Society feel that we have had a very good year under the leadership of our president, Mrs. B. D. Jones. We are striving on to reach the Standard of Excellence and feel sure we will reach our goal.

During the year we have held two of our meetings—World Day of Prayer and a Fellowship Supper—jointly with the Holland Christian Church Society. We had a very impressive World Community Day Service with our pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, conducting the worship service.

At Christmas time, we helped to cheer the sick and shut-ins of our community with Christmas baskets and Christmas carols.

On January 17th our Society celebrated the 31st birthday of our society. We had a very enjoyable party. Mrs. John Truitt, president of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference, led a very inspiring worship service. We had 71% present for the party.

We have had very good teachers for all our study books.

We gave one Life Memorial in honor of a deceased member.

As we draw near the end of our Missionary Society year, we find that we have had a very inspiring and profitable year with an increase of four new members on our roll.

IRENE C. PILAND, Ass't Secretary.

RICHMOND.

The Women's Fellowship of the Richmond Church has had a good year. We feel that the program material has been fine, and the Year Book and Gray Book especially helpful as guides.

Perhaps the most interesting program of the year was the one presented in February, on the theme, "Thy Neighbor Beyond All Preju-

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:
I received the following letter from my good friend, Rev. Walstein W. Snyder, several days ago, which I quote in full:

July 11, 1947.

Dear Mr. Johnston:
This is a letter of appreciation and thanks for the kindness shown to us when the Bethel and Concord Bible Schools came to the orphanage.

The groups of children, parents and myself were highly impressed with the courteousness of the children. We were very happy, also, to see their living quarters so homelike. We could see that each of them was happy and contented to be a part of the orphanage.

Also, the groups were impressed very much with the appearance of the buildings and campus. The orphanage is a very worthy institution of our Southern Convention. Each of our churches should give it her support.

May God's blessings rest upon you and the orphanage as you continue your work.

Sincerely yours,
Walstein W. Snyder.

After people come here and look over the orphanage, and see it firsthand, see the rooms in the buildings where the children live, see the condition of the buildings, the grounds, the dairy barn, and the hogs that will make our meat for another year, it makes us happy to receive letters of this kind.

For more than thirty years we have been trying to build a plant that our church people would feel proud of, and we would not be ashamed to carry them through. It has been done through sacrifice, and the little we could save out of our small income from year to year. Today we have a nice up-to-date plant—as nice as any small orphanage plant in the State of North Carolina.

We are always glad to have constructive criticism and suggestions that will help us in our work, if we are financially able to carry them out. It has always been the policy of the Board to pay as you go, which I think is a very fine policy, and your superintendent has always tried to carry out this policy.

Being superintendent of the Christian Orphanage has not always been sailing on flowery beds of ease. We have had our days of discouraging financial worries from time to time. We well remember more than thirty years ago before we took charge, the income was $35 for one week. The orphanage had forty children in its care. That was about eighty-seven and one-half cents per child per week. That was more than thirty years ago. But did you notice in our report in THE CHRISTIAN SUN's issue of July 31, that the churches and Sunday Schools sent only $63.39 to the orphanage for the week? Would you have thought it? The churches have sent in, up to July 31, $6,845.03, to care for more than eighty children. I notice in Charity and Children, the Baptist Orphanage paper, the churches and Sunday schools have already sent its orphanage $174,000.00, and they have six hundred children. Quite a difference in per capita income.

dice." We had a guest speaker, Mr. Harry Thompson, Jr., a member of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, an ex-G. I., and now a student at the University of Richmond.

For two reasons Mr. Thompson's presence was interesting and inspiring. We were happy to get better acquainted with a member of the denomination with which we are negotiating a union, and we were impressed with the earnestness of this young man in his concern about Christian attitudes toward our erstwhile enemies.

Mr. Thompson was a chaplain's assistant in Japan. He spent much of his time in a small Japanese village where he and his chaplain established a Christian Church, and where not only service personnel worshipped, but also the native women and children. It was strange to be told that these American Christians had great difficulty gaining the confidence of the Japanese civilians who had been thoroughly indoctrinated with the belief that Americans are barbarians. But once they were won over, these villagers became eager, devoted friends of the chaplain and Mr. Thompson, and they came to enjoy a mutual love and respect.

The Japanese loved the hymns and learned some of the English words. Mr. Thompson said he worked very hard at translating some of the favorites into Japanese for his native friends.

We enjoyed the scrapbook of pictures which our speaker brought with him, and when he had finished we were more than ever convinced that Christian missions are essential to the development of a world neighborhood without racial or national prejudice.

A DISTINCTIVE CHURCH.

A plea for the Church to be humble if it is to assume leadership in the world of today was made by Miss (Dr.) Ruth Isabel Seabury of Boston, Mass., secretary of Missionary Education, American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregation Christian Churches, before the sessions of the 21st International Sunday School Convention in Des Moines.

"The Church must be distinctive today in the Christian life of its members," Miss Seabury declared. "The Church is called to be a fellowship that is different, it must teach its message to the world, starting with its own children, and it must be an evangelizing fellowship."

Calling upon the Sunday school leaders of America to bring up a new generation that knows the meaning of "our Father," Miss Seabury called for a message of vitality and life from the Christian churches that shows people how to live.

The American Church has never needed evangelism as much as now, Miss Seabury concluded, urging that evangelism—telling the good news of the Christian faith—become the business of the laymen of the Church.

CHRIST AS WORLD REDEEMER.

at the same time a spiritual aid to the church members in devastated Europe. And one can notice in the life of these church members that their physical survival is followed by a spiritual revival. It is the redemptive function and mission of the Church to teach Christ as World Redeemer through physical relief as well as spiritual resoration. The aid-giving churches of America sharing what they have with the aid-receiving churches of Europe and Asia must be thankful unto God for this unique opportunity to realize and to recognize their ecumenical one-ness with them.

3. The communal mission of the Church. The merger of the fellowship of suffering and of the fellowship of compassion represents the universal Church of Christ the Redeemer. After World War II Americans became one world conscious. But as Christians we must become one Church conscious. World unity on economic and political lines can only be achieved after it has been realized on ecumenical lines. In the trains of America one can read the inscription: Dining Car in Opposite Direction. It is the mission of the ecumenical church in every land to evangelize the politicians and the economic experts by telling them again and again: Jesus Christ is in the opposite direction—and not on the lines of individual, national or hemispherical self-interests. The world's only hope lies in the growing ecumenical fellowship of redeemed men and women and in their communal testimony to Christ as World Redeemer.

and social welfare specialists. Contributions to the program were carefully budgeted and expended under scrupulous supervision with regular audits. These procedures, applied to the United Service to China Program, assure the maximum effectiveness of what it can do to assist the Chinese people.

I am personally and deeply concerned over the present situation in China and I sincerely hope that through voluntary private contributions urgently needed assistance can be rendered the suffering people of that country. They need our help, the help that in the past has always come from Americans wholeheartedly and generously.

MARRIAGE AND FAMILY.

been taught the skills of being available to each other conversationally, psychologically, recreationally, emotionally and socially it is not surprising that they have so often by-passed all of these availabilities and become available to each other physically.

Everywhere there are evidences that our present-day boy and girl of dating age are in need of practical training on what is expected on a date and what constitutes good dating. The ideal place for this is to be, of course, in high school.

Our American pattern of marriage cannot much longer survive the splintering ding-dong of the brazen defiance of all that has gone into making the American home a stable institution. If we want to keep our American home, presided over by one man and one woman—husband—wife, father—mother, with fidelity to each other, mutually sharing responsibility for their children—then education must train, economics underwrite, communities support, and religion train and inspire.

There is today a national hypocrisy—our laws and religions are those of a chaste, modest and monogamous society, our amusements and much of a gay amoral culture, and our sex habits have become something of a world-wide scandal.

Morals coded by church and court, with their system of enforcements and penalties, will either be underwritten by education, both secular and religious, as well as expressed in the arts; or the church and court will have to eventually change their code. For a stern hand of church and court on a wayward people cannot long control toward creative goodness.

The dogma of proclamation for good marriage and family, however heroically declared, cannot achieve desired goals without the detail of training. It is the shyness, and even fear, of really good people to face this detailed process of training which is more largely to blame for our present moral confusion than it is comfortable to admit.

tentions of which I am purposely depriving him, because I let him know in many ways—without putting it into words—that he is helping me, he is happier than ever before. He is growing more manly, too.

"Another friend of mine said that it had been a temptation for her to buy everything for which her child asked. 'I thought it great fun for both of us,' she recalled. 'Soon, however, I discovered that what I was doing was unwise. Often, now when Kathay thinks she wants very much indeed something that she doesn't really need—we call such things extras—I say, Kathay, think this over for a few days. If you decide you want this more than any other extra for the month"—the period of time depends on the importance of the article—"then come to me, and we will discuss it further." I find she is becoming much more appreciative.' "

"That is very interesting," I said. "Your answer to my question has given me food for thought."

My friend continued. "A cousin of mine—a woman of a good deal of wealth—had a fourteen-year-old daughter, Elsie. The child was getting to the point where money meant very little to her. With her mother's approval, I called her to me and told her I wished she would begin to earn some money for herself, as a number of her friends were doing. She looked surprised, but in a few days she came home happy and excited. A neighbor had engaged half-an-hour of her time, twice a week, to tell stories to her twin boys. It was not long before Elsie had a story group on Saturday afternoons, and a little income of her own. That money began to teach her the real value of money. Having charge of the children during the story-telling period developed a sense of responsibility, too."

"Thank you," I said. "The incidents you have related show there are many ways and means for developing a child's ability to stand alone. Of course, it is the parents' job to consider carefully and to choose the procedure most adaptable to the particular problem involved."

The Bible and I

Excerpts from Address by Dr. A. G. Wehrli, Dean of Eden Theological Seminary, Webster Groves, Missouri, during the International Sunday School Convention. Eden is a seminary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

God takes no pleasure in dead boys. He is everlastingly against their being slaughtered even if their sacrifice vindicates their fathers' religion, or their politics. It is pagan and heathenish to give to God what he doesn't want, even from the best of motives and with the fullest devotion. Calmly and clearly the story (Genesis 22:1-13) proclaims God's eternal displeasure with our devotion expressed in the slaughter of our lads. Like Abraham, hadn't we, too, better listen for the voice of the angel? Let us give God our all, even our best. . . the way he wants it.

Interdependence rather than independence seems to be God's underlying plan for the nations as well as for individuals. And great spirits who can see and sense the depth and magnitude of life's processes dare not shirk their duty, as Moses attempted to do (Exodus 4:14-16). Nor can the world and its future be left to efficient and flashy production managers who can successfully make, or head up, something under the sun, good or bad, develish or sublime, like Aaron.

God loves freedom, for everybody, even for poor, ignorant and inexperienced slaves. Fortunately, now and then some Moses remembers that such stirrings in the hearts of the oppressed are planted there by God, and that no Pharaoh, ancient or modern, can long thwart his divine plans.

Even as Elijah we, too, must learn the lesson that God does not always roar. He sometimes whispers. He does not confuse and mystify as a matter of preference. Nor does he wish his words and ways to remain entirely hidden that he may terrify the earth and torture men. On the contrary it is his delight to reveal his will and to disclose his purposes to them that seek him. His presence, his will and his ways are most truly found in the simple processes of life, in the ordinary relations of man to man, in the still small voice of conscience, in the impulse to speak the truth, in the urge to stand for what is right, in the courage that moves us to expose what is false and to challenge things evil wherever found.

In a future world after God's own heart human greed for wealth, power and self-indulgence will have given way to appetites more normal and more decent. In short the wide-spread knowledge of God will radically change not only men's habits, but their motives as well.

Nations somehow have an urge in the direction of greatness . . . but their methods for achieving it . . . are often bad. Again and again they have assumed that great armies make a nation great. Then again with a slight variation of the formula, it is great navies that they rely on. Diplomatically enough the wise man suggests that this method does not produce results. Eventually they achieve recognition only as the nightmares of history. Sometimes it is believed that wealth exalts a nation. Thus vast possessions are acquired and great wealth and high living promoted. But again the wise man shakes his head, implying that such nations are remembered chiefly for their wanton corruption and immoral death. In the long run only righteousness stands the test as a method for national greatness.

An Outstanding Rural Church

GRACE'S CHAPEL

Located near Sanford, North Carolina, this church was organized in 1885 with 30 charter members, and now has over 150 members. The present structure was dedicated May 23, 1947. (See story on page 3.)

NEWS AND VIEWS

Rev. J. Frank Apple of Henderson, N. C., has been conducting revival services at Salem Chapel.

Dr. H. S. Harcastle announces that Revs. J. Everette Neese and H. G. Councill will fill the Newport News pulpit during his vacation.

Dr. William Kendrick Grobel, Congregational minister in Randolph, Vermont, has been appointed on the faculty of the Vanderbilt School of Religion.

We are indebted to Mrs. Mary A. White, who sent in the sketch of Grace's Chapel, published by the Sanford Herald of July 7, and written by Roy L. Coggins.

Rev. R. E. Brittle writes: "We are planning a 'Home-Coming Day' at Bethlehem, near Suffolk, with morning and afternoon services, observing the 100th anniversary of the church on Sunday, August 24. It is our hope that all former members and pastors will be there as guests of the church. Lunch will be served similar to the 'old protracted meeting dinners' of other days. In planning the services it is the hope, too, that all former pastors, who are living, will be there to have part."

OUT AT PLEASANT RIDGE (GUILFORD).

It was a privilege to be at Pleasant Ridge, near Guilford College, recently with Dr. W. E. Wisseman, the pastor. One feels that there is a constant working of the church and its minister. Several joined the church on Sunday before the revival meeting began, though several joined at the close of the revival, July 25.

The work of the choir under the direction of Miss Edna Glenn Huffine was notable. The solo, duet, trio or quartet or numbers by the choir as a whole would be helpful to any church service.

This is a beautiful rural church. One feels the presence of God and the spirit of worship as entrance is made into the sanctuary. Sunday school rooms are beginning to come into the news as the walls are being redecorated. A heating plant is expected to be placed in the church for use this winter. It was good to share in this fellowship.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

PROGRESS BEING MADE AT PALM ST. CHURCH, GREENSBORO.

It was my privilege to visit the Palm Street Church recently and I saw something of their splendid spirit and something of the splendid results of the ministry of Rev. M. A. Pollard who has served the church faithfully for ten years. At the last quarterly conference of the church it was my privilege to hear the reports of the various departments of the church and to realize we have a strong and substantial church at Palm Street. It is with regret of the entire membership that Mr. Pollard completes his work at Palm Street in the near future. He has served there for ten years and leaves the church in good condition and with a mind and heart set upon building a more adequate church sanctuary and Sunday school facilities. The church now has on hand nearly $20,000 for the purpose of building, and we anticipate for the church a most constructive and significant work.

During Mr. Pollard's ministry the church has increased in membership, in Sunday school, and in financial strength. He is greatly beloved by the church constituency and the friends of the church. We wish him

Godspeed in his new work and we trust that the Palm Street Church may be able to secure a worthy successor to Brother Pollard.

GRACE'S CHAPEL—A SKETCH.

By ROY A. COGGINS.*

Grace's Chapel Christian Church is located five miles south of Sanford on U. S. Highway 1 on a site selected in October, 1885, by Rev. D. F. Jones. After organization, which was speeded by whole-hearted cooperation on the part of the community, Rev. Mr. Jones was confronted with choosing a name for the church. As there was a Jones Chapel in Moore County at that time, the minister chose his daughter's name, Grace. Hence the church received its name, Grace's Chapel.

The original board of trustees and the building committee were made up of the J. H. Register, Joseph M. Johnson, and F. Lloyd. (Mr. Lloyd, incidentally, was the last of the 30 original charter members to die.)

Many efficient ministers have established records of lasting service at Grace's Chapel. Among them are included the following: Rev. D. F. Jones, Rev. J. A. Pusey, Rev. G. R. Underwood, Rev. A. R. Way, Rev. T. T. Lassiter, Rev. Sanders Klapp, Rev. P. T. Klapp, Rev. M. E. Hammer, Rev. C. C. Peel, Rev. T. E. White, Rev. Thomas Green, Rev. E. P. Earp, Rev. A. P. Barbee, Rev. E. R. Stack, Rev. T. E. Stack, Rev. R. L. Williamson, Rev. M. R. Knight, and the present pastor, Rev. J. A. Denton.

There have also been many faithful members attending Grace's Chapel since its foundation in 1885. R. S. Coggins who has been choir leader since he was twenty-two, Mrs. R. B. Coggins, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Pierce, Miss Mary Willett, George Willett, Mr. and Mrs. Sam MacDuffie and Charlie McDuffie. These cherished members are absent only in case of serious illness.

The original wooden structure of the church was torn down and rebuilt with brick and was completed on December 31, 1936. The church lost two services in the process of rebuilding.

*Mr. Coggins is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Coggins of Tramway. He is a member of Grace's Chapel Christian Church and will be a senior at Jonesboro High School next fall.

One of these was held at Buffalo Presbyterian Church and the other at Pocket Church. The bill for materials was paid by the time the work was finished.

Another recent improvement was the installation of a modern heating system, which was promptly paid for. Today Grace's Chapel is on a firm financial standing.

The present church deacons include R. B. Coggins, senior, J. H. Register, S. H. MacDuffie, J. F. Coley and W. J. Wofford.

The Board of Trustees is composed of R. B. Coggins, W. A. Pierce, and S. H. MacDuffie.

The secretary is Mrs. Mattie Foushee, and the Treasurer is Garland Cox. A. L. Craig is the present superintendent of the Sunday School.

During World War II, there were eighty-two service men and women from Grace's Chapel in training and scattered over the various fronts. One—Pvt. Calvin Conder—was killed in action during the Battle of the Bulge. The church is encouraging discharged veterans and servicemen to rejoin the membership.

Of course, the principal aim of Grace's Chapel is to save and bring comfort to lost souls, and to improve the community.

The average attendance at Grace's Chapel on Sunday is approximately 140-150, and everyone is invited to attend preaching every fourth Sunday and Sunday school every Sabbath.

COME YE APART

After the disciples returned from their first mission of preaching and healing, Jesus said to them: "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while." They had performed their difficult assignment with great ardour and success. A deep interest was created, and the crowds thronged around them till they had not time so much as to eat. When they returned, the Master noted their exhaustion and made provision for it. They needed relaxation of mind as well as of body, the quiet that is required after the expenditure of physical and nervous energy.

This temporary withdrawal is one of the keys to physical and spiritual health. It is a necessary corrective to our modern frustrations. The pressure of multiplied responsibilities, the stress of rapid decision-making, and the relentless demands of a jittery civilization may result in warped judgments.

The great spirits found recreation through retirement. Moses stood in reverence before the glowing Presence. Elijah lingered in solitude long enough to hear the still, small Voice. Isaiah went apart repeatedly until he witnessed the Shekinah. Jesus retired into the desert before going forth into Galilee.

Nature has its limitations. It offers the peace of the world, but it cannot offer forgiveness of sin. Many who profess to worship regularly at the shrine of nature never enter into the Holy of Holies in communion with God. Nevertheless, one needs to be bathed occasionally in that deep and mighty silence spread beyond the noise of man. Taught by the breeze, the mountains and the streams, those who so desire may find God in His creation. The enveloping quietness descends with its benediction. "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts." Distant glimpses suggest new spiritual horizons. "Speak the earthquake, wind and fire, O still small voice of God."

During these summer days many people have heard the call to come apart for diligent study and creative fellowship. To Deering, Elon, Massanetta, Winston-Salem, and a host of retreats the young and old have gone for physical, intellectual and spiritual renewal. "This is my father's world and to my list'ning ears all nature sings, and round me rings the music of the spheres."

PROTESTANT FOREIGN MISSIONS FORCES UNITE

Opening of a new era in the Protestant foreign mission enterprise was signalized as the fourteen-day sessions of the International Missionary Council at Whitby, Canada, came to a close.

Third in a series of world-wide mission assemblies which began in Jerusalem in 1928 and continued in Madras, India, in 1938, the Whitby conference is being described by church leaders as the high-water mark of cooperative Protestantism in the mission field.

Two developments support this description: (1) for the first time a growing parity between the so-called younger (mission-receiving) churches and older (mission-sending) churches has been formally recognized; (2) the conference agreed, almost unanimously, upon the need for a cooperative, non-denominational approach in missionary endeavor.

At the same time the 112 accredited delegates from forty countries frankly acknowledged, in the words of Dr. John R. Mott, honorary chairman of the Council and president of the World Alliance of the YMCA, that Christian forces the world over "are now confronting possibly the greatest concentration of major unsolved problems the Church has ever faced."

A 2,500-word statement agreed upon in substance by the delegates at the closing session declared:

"Anti-Christian forces are massing themselves and strengthening their positions. Not a few Christians feel themselves to be living on or near the top of a volcano, which is liable to erupt at any moment and are facing the future with anxiety."

The following areas of concern were listed in the statement: increasing racial tensions and hatreds, the breaking-down of traditional patterns of life, the "fatal drift" of Russia and the West into hostile camps, and the growing threat to religious liberty in many lands.

To solve these problems, the statement pointed out, the Christian Church will require "tens of thousands of leaders" and literally tons of Christian literature, including the Bible.

"We have scarcely begun to meet the need," the statement said. "There is a famine of books, both for the edification of the Church and for evangelistic use. The world shortage of Bibles is reckoned by millions of copies."

For ten days the conferees heard reports on world conditions from delegates who had passed most of their lives in the countries on which they reported.

High points of their findings follow:

China (Methodist Bishop Wen Yuen Chen, honorary general secretary of the National Christian Council of China)—"China is on the verge of national bankruptcy. . . . Disunity and contention, especially between the National government and the Communists, have been a serious concern to all people. Possibility of a rapprochement between the two parties is doomed."

Indonesia (Rev. Wilhelm J. Rumambi, secretary of the Provincial Christian Council of East Indonesia)—"Everywhere there is a shortage of ministers, teachers, and social workers. The development of the Church in Indonesia depends on good leadership."

Korea (Rev. Kwan Sik Kim, chairman of the National Christian Council of Korea)—"The problem of inflation represents one of the most serious threats to the missionary enterprise. Korean clergymen who formerly were considered well-paid if they received a salary of 60 to 80 yen per month now require not less than 6,000 yen to live decently."

India (Rajah B. Manikam, executive secretary of the National Christian Council of India)—"Religious liberty will probably be guaranteed for all citizens once self-government is achieved. . . . With the establishment of a purely Indian Central government and the transfer of power to Indian hands, all missionaries will become guests of the country. They will no longer be looked upon by the man in the street as agents of an imperial power or vendors of the religion of an alien ruler."

South America (Dr. George P. Howard, Protestant evangelist for South America)—"If totalitarianism, whether it is political or religious, is to gain a new lease on life it will come through a revival in the Western world. . . . Feudalism, aristocracy and privilege have very largely come to an end in Europe. Their prolongations in Latin America, however, still exist and are fighting for their life."

Anglo-American Nations (Dr. Kenneth Scott Latourette, professor of missions and oriental history, Yale University)—"The rise of the United States and the decline of Western Europe mean that at the next stage of the Church's history, the expansion of Christianity is probably to come mainly from the United States. Here the material means and the personnel of the Church are chiefly found."—Religious News Service.

A Statement of Personal Faith

By EDWARD JAMES VORBA

First Congregational Church, Mason City, Iowa

In giving my statement of personal faith, I realize that my experience has much in common with the experience of many others. That experience, together with observation and study, is the background of my affirmation of faith. This affirmation has become the most important thing in life to me because I realized all my action will be influenced by the faith I cherish. As the years come and go, I am convinced that the faith which I now have should grow and develop as new light and insight born of experience are mine.

I believe faith is an affirmation in regard to what God is and in regard to His relation to mankind. Faith is confidence in God's power and in His fidelity and love to His children. But faith is more than just confidence in God. It includes personal commitment and dedication to God as revealed in the life and teachings of His Son, Jesus Christ, the world's Lord and Saviour. Faith is a constant and an active attitude of devotion toward its object. It is confidence in things seen and in things unseen. It is devotion to life and to the Author of life. It is love motivated and directed in the light of a conscious filial relationship to this Creator and in the light of fraternal relationship to one's fellowmen. Faith is the alpha and omega of the Christian life and experience.

Faith is the reaching out of the total self toward God. As such, it is not opposed to reason, nor can it ever be a substitute for reason. Moreover, faith and reason are the hand-maids of each other. Faith and reason are not concerned with separate spheres of life, but both are concerned about the whole of life. As Professor Keller, one of the greatest scientists of the past generation declared, "Faith and reason run on parallel lines, each supporting the other." They never can be in conflict. The two definitely need each other and definitely aid each other. Each illumines the other. Man's spiritual nature and status is found to be in harmony with all other aspects of reality.

Faith is living in a filial relation toward God and in a brotherly relation toward man in recognition of the fact that God encounters man and speaks to him in all experiences of life, if man will but hear. We refer to God's communication with men as being God's revelation to man. It is God taking the initiative and revealing to man truths he could never have known otherwise. It is man responding to this encounter. It comes to us in the very midst of our personal lives and makes the texture of our lives rich and meaningful. It brings together the past, present and future of our lives into one continuous whole and into focus. Hazy and confusion in our thinking becomes intelligent understanding. To this creative act of God we must make new interpretations and reconstructions in our philosophies of life. This is a never ending process.

I believe that the universe was created with meaning and purpose, and that behind it all and in it all and through it all the God and Father of our Savior Jesus Christ stands as the Creator and Director of all that is. To me He is a Personal Being Whose activities from the beginning have been characterized by reason and love. Chance and caprice are absolutely foreign to His ruling. He is the Creator of the Universe and the Author of all life. It was He Who created this world and those of us who dwell in it. As Creator of the world He still remains with it and in it. He is not the creation itself but Creator of all that has been created, and all that is depends upon Him and is subject to the laws of His governing.

No words we can use can ever adequately describe God. He is more than the mind of man can conceive, more than the words of man can express. It is He Who "inhabits eternity." He is Sovereign over all He has made. Nothing can ever take His place or remove Him from His commanding position. He is Holy. He is "above all, through all and in all." Our affirmation can but be, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty!" God is all this and much more. He is the Divine Power back of all life and which brought all life into being. He is the embodiment of justice, of love and of mercy. God is far, far above all that He has created, and yet He is present in all His creation. He is both transcendent and immanent—both above His world and in His world.

God has created man in His own image with the capacity for love and understanding to share with Him in the purpose and use of His creation. Because God is the kind of righteous and fair Being that He is, He gave men the gift of freedom making man a free moral agent. In this freedom human beings come into this intimate relationship with their Creator and the work of His creation. Because of man being a free moral agent, his happiness depends upon his living in fellowship with his Creator. Though man's freedom granted by God, his Heavenly Father, allows man to deny and reject God's proffers, he can do so only at the peril of his own happiness and self-realization.

God does not force Himself upon men, nor does He coerce them. He beckons and calls, and man is free to respond or turn away. In nature's workings and in the ways of society God maintains the law and order of His universe, but He draws His own to Him by the gentler and inner leadings of the soul. Person calls unto

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This week I have my headquarters in two places—at my old parental home near Summerfield, N. C., and at the lovely new home of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Darnell, in Greensboro. Today I am writing this letter from the beautiful, spacious lawn which my sister, Mrs. Essie Mae Simpson, has developed about the old home. I am filled with wonder at every visit to this sacred old place because of its increasing comfort and beauty. It is to me a sermon in circumstances. Time was when both my father and mother were troubled greatly because a new survey of the road through this community ran the highway back of the house. For fifty years the house had faced the road. All the buildings and general lay of the place faced the road. It was a friendly, quiet road that brought neighbors right by the pretty front yard. In those days people were wont to pause as they drove by to say a friendly greeting. It was the age of neighborliness enhanced by a different tempo from nowadays. To have that old road become a waste place, and to have the new road moved back of a small forest back of the house was a colossal calamity. Several were the anxious trips made to the State Highway Department, and to the county courthouse to see if that "crime" could not be averted, all to no avail.

The old front porch still remains to remind us that what often seems a terrible disaster may be but a stepping stone to greater and better things. The new age has brought new homes all along the new highway, but the new age has not given those new homes the spacious, gentle slope up from the highway to the towering old trees, the pretty views, and the sense of summit which surrounds the old place. In dollars and cents the damage that my parents felt had been done to the place has been many times doubled in its present value. A more comfortable home has been the result of a forced re-modeling of the old one. It was they who inspired their dutiful and devoted daughter to "face around" and forward ever. They were of the hardy old rural stock that had a bent for coming out of tight spots. They were not easily crowded, or stampeded, and besides they believed in God, said their prayers daily, taught their children to do the same, and pressed on. The land about that old house grows good crops, and the lawn is sweet because the soil is blessed with prayer, and tears, and sweat. Most of the people who read these lines will feel that they are but the attempts of a country boy back at his old home to say how sweet and precious are the memories of those childhood days, but some who have first-hand knowledge will know that here are expressed hard and fast facts "in the short and simple annals of the poor." Well, they put it simply: trust in God and do the right, and just remember that all things work together for good to those who love and trust the Lord.

MINISTERIAL PARTNERS.

Three years ago Mack Welch and I became just that—ministerial partners. He was beginning his student days at Elon College and was in the Biblical Class for new ministers of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. Since he was not yet allowed to be called as a pastor of a church, the Monticello Church, Brown Summit, N. C., called me as the minister and pastor of the church with Mr. Welch doing most of the preaching and visiting. Then, he was licensed to the ministry and was called to the ministry and was called to the church as minister and I was asked to remain as an associate pastor, performing the duties of an ordained minister. During this time I was the full-time minister of the Happy Home Church.

During these years, Mr. Welch and I have acted together in the work of the Monticello Church. It has been a very happy experience. We have planned the year's work together, talked over problems of both church and minister, experiences have been shared, revivals and regular worship services have been conducted together. Though both of us are about the same age, I am his senior in the ministry by seven or eight years.

It has been a privilege to watch the progress of this fine young minister. He is doing notable work in his churches. The record at Monticello proves this, though of course much credit belongs to the fine people there who have labored in the Master's cause with him.

Recently this fine rural church renovated the sanctuary with the Sunday school rooms being next on the list. Plans for a central heating plant are being worked out. The Sunday school attendance has increased to the goal of one hundred, as set by Mr. J. E. Cumbie, the superintendent, and his faithful workers. The new goal is one hundred and twenty-five and plans are being made to reach these new people.

From $240 for pastor's salary the first year of Mr. Welch's ministry, the church promises to pay $800 next year to him. Members have been added to the church roll. The fellowship of these people is one of Christ and His Church. The church will give about $85 to the "Over-and-Above" offering for the Southern Convention.

Ministerial partnerships are good, both for the senior and for the junior members. We can do more and better work if our churches with one ordained minister will share him with churches having ministers who are students or licentiates. This is one means of developing and strengthening many of our rural churches.

W. J. ANDES.

PLEASANT HILL.

Since the resignation of Mr. Allen Hurdle of Elon College, who left to attend school at Yale, in June, the church has asked Norman Carter and M. L. Fogleman to supply the July and August preaching services.

Mr. Carter and Mr. Fogleman are promising young men from Pleasant Hill, who have gone into the ministry during last year.

The attendance has been splendid at both services, and both ministers preached plain gospel messages, which were enjoyed.

In the early spring of 1947, work was begun on a parsonage for our pastor's home. Due to shortage of building material work has progressed slowly. However we hope to have the parsonage almost completed by the first of September when Rev. M. A. Pollard of Greensboro plans to assume the pastorate for the coming year.

We look forward to a pleasant fellowship and inspirational work together with Brother Pollard and trust God will richly bless us in the years together.

And we hope our church will do a greater work in the Master's Kingdom.

Preparedness

By DR. FERRIS E. REYNOLDS.

An Address Before the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention at Carolina Christian Church, July 10, 1947

I never pass up an opportunity to talk with church school teachers if I can possibly avoid, but when the time comes to deliver the goods I always wish I had. I have these misgivings, not because it is difficult to find something to say, but because teaching religion is so broad and demanding it is hard to decide what to leave out. In order to leave out enough to make this talk sufficiently brief to be appropriate I am going to talk to six practical teacher-questions.

I. What Does It Mean to Teach?

Teaching is an adventure in sharing. It is the overflow of living passed on from one generation to another; a natural process that is often unconscious. For example, a few days ago some of the boys were building a boat in our backyard and were discussing how a certain board should be nailed on. One of the boys stated that this is the way Mr. Somers does it. (Mr. Somers is the college carpenter.) That seemed to settle the issue. If Mr. Somers did it that way, that was the right way. Now if you asked Mr. Somers, the college carpenter, if he taught woodworking to the boys in the community he would deny that he did. It was unconscious teaching. The boys were learning how to use tools from him even though he was unaware of it. This natural overflow of experience and skill that goes on between generations is a necessary part of living. It is teaching in the broad and significant sense. And in the same manner, teaching religion is perfectly natural. It grows out of this same relationship between generations. It is not a matter of whether we are going to teach or not; it is a matter of whether we are going to teach well or poorly. To teach religion means further to become a vessel of "The Word of God," an agent for delivering God's Word to a new generation. Now if teaching religion is so natural the second question is:

II. Does Teaching Require Special Study or Training?

Do children take naturally to drawing? Give a child a piece of paper and pencil and see! He will draw something. There is something of an artist in everyone. Drawing is natural, but that does not mean that to be a great artist all one has to do is to draw what comes naturally. Art requires years of training and special study. In the same manner, music is a natural phenomenon among humans. Since the first savage beat on a skin stretched over a hollow log and liked the sound and entertained his friends, there have been musicians. But, does music call for training? The answer is clear. It does. If a person is to produce music effectively he must train the natural gift for music.

Problems always were raised in my parish by those who imagined they were geniuses at teaching religion; hence did not need to cultivate the art. Albert Schweitzer was certainly a genius at the console of the organ and yet he spent six hours a day at a dummy organ keeping up his practice even when he was in the darkest part of Africa. Teaching is natural, but it is a natural gift that requires the most vigorous and careful cultivation.

III. What Direction Should Training and Special Study Take?

First, we should do everything possible to understand the children or the persons in the group that we are engaged to teach. That means knowing their motives and experiences; their likes and dislikes, the background—everything significant about them—for we are teaching the people religion and therefore people are the center of our interests.

In the second place, our training and special study should include our Christian heritage, the Bible and the History of the Christian Church and especially the characters who stand out in that noble heritage. We need to know those characters not as names only but as persons as alive as our neighbors. This material must become almost second nature to the teacher if teaching is to be effective.

In the third place, our training should include knowledge and skill of the best and most practical teaching methods; not just one or two but all of them that are applicable to our particular vocation.

Fourth, the teacher must be a seeker, a learner, a disciple in the original and true sense. It is in these pursuits of the disciple that the overflow issues is so indispensable to inspired teaching.

Fifth, our special study for the task of teaching should lead us to take advantage of every opportunity that is offered for the stimulation of imagiination. Children are blessed with a vivid imagination and teachers must match these imaginations to be effective. It is helpful to read children's stories in funny books and to listen to radio programs designed for children. All of this aids the adult in stirring imagination. Generally speaking, the difference between inspired teaching and mediocre teaching is the difference between a sluggish imagination and a vivid one.

IV. What Are Some of the Commonest Pitfalls and Mistakes to be Avoided?

Foremost among these I would say is the practice of taking refuge in apologies and excuses. Most people make plenty of excuses for themselves but church school teachers seem to major in the practice. "I didn't have time to study the lesson." "The alarm clock didn't go off this morning." "Children just are not responsive to my efforts." These are the excuses commonly heard around the church school.

Second, teachers should avoid shallow and false standards of success. Keeping the class quiet may be quite a feat, but it is not the measure of the teacher's success. The same thing could be accomplished by the use of chloroform or by a western movie picture. A punctual attendance does not assure the success of the teacher, for the parents are often vigilant in their task of getting the pupil there punctually. Personal popularity of the teacher, although it is to be desired and necessary, is not an adequate standard of the teacher's effectiveness. Neither is the abundant factual knowledge absorbed by the members of the class. God's Word must be put into the hands and feet of the children as well as in the head and often the head is more responsive than the hands and feet.

Third, beware of echoing the last newspaper article or book. This is teaching off the surface and is often superficial. Teaching needs to come from the depth, not from off the top.

Fourth, the teacher should avoid presuming to be an authority on religion. Children especially are sensitive to these basic attitudes and resent presumption and intolerance.

Fifth, ruts—how comfortable! But how easy it is to get into a rut in that matter of teaching. Variety is the cardinal principle in good teaching. Authorities on humor tell us that there are only about twenty-five jokes in the fundamental sense. All of the gags and humor that is produced is variation of those twenty-five and

NEWS FROM MISS ANGIE CREW.

The following excerpts are taken from letters written by Miss Angie Crew in Japan to the Lester family in Asheboro:

On Board S. S. President Garfield, March 18: It was a pleasant surprise to find so many letters and telegrams from Southern Convention friends when I called at the purser's office. I do appreciate them.

This boat is not a luxury liner but it is such an improvement over the one on which I came home from the Near East that I can't complain. I have to crawl over two bunks to reach mine which is the highest. I traded with a lady (timid soul) who felt she couldn't climb that high. If I hadn't been sick I'd have been all right, but after three days of no food (couldn't eat on account of my bad tooth) I began to feel rather weak and it wasn't easy to boost myself up.

Tokyo, Japan, March 30: Just a line to let you know I arrived safely, was met by friends who have taken very good care of us. Tonight we go on the train to Osaka and then to Kobe College. Our boat was supposed to go to Kobe but they cancelled that call so we got off in Yokohama.

Already the Japanese have made great progress in cleaning up Tokyo. I had expected to see more destruction than is visible to a casual observer.

It's wonderful to be back in Japan. The "smells" are familiar even if the "sights" are not. Strange to see American soldiers everywhere. We are well treated by the occupation forces.

Kobe College, Nishinomiya, Japan, April 6: Japan is a very different looking place from the Japan I left six years ago. In the cities block after block of ruins interspersed with patches of green growing vegetables and newly erected shacks make us feel lost.

Japanese friends seem sincerely glad to see us. They say that they know now it was a good thing for them to be defeated. They were so war-weary that news of surrender was a relief to many. What a lot of fears there were for them: fear of bombing, fear of their own officials, fear of starvation, of death.

Prices here are fantastic. One wonders how the people manage to live. Prices for food have increased a hundredfold or more. Many of our friends manage to live only by selling their clothing and other possessions. And there are thousands who lost everything and have nothing to sell! In America we talked a lot about the shortage of housing. You can't imagine what a terrific shortage there is here. There are whole families living in a tiny room, the different members sleeping at different hours because there isn't enough room for all to sleep at the same time. Many are living in shacks made of debris salvaged from bombed buildings. Fuel has been so scarce that often people have been unable to cook their food. As for using fuel to keep warm, that just isn't being done.

In spite of the terrible poverty the possessions of us missionaries have been (almost miraculously) taken care of, even though most of us practically gave away all our possessions when we left Japan. I was greatly surprised to find that nearly all my things were here.

How would you like to drop in for a meal with us? Canned meat, dried vegetables, and for dessert we'd have pudding mix, perhaps with the flavor of mothballs. (Some of us forgot that certain foods packed with mothballs or soap take on a peculiar taste!) To vary the menu a bit I have been digging dandelions from our yard and serving them with canned lemon juice.

Today was Easter Sunday. I attended services in the burned-out shell of what used to be the beautiful Union Church. The little room was full to overflowing, and in spite of the shabbiness of our surroundings, it was a joyous Easter service filled with hope for a brighter future. If only we could send enough workers and needed equipment, I really feel that Japan would become a Christian nation.

Respectfully submitted,

WM. T. SCOTT,
Superintendent.

Kobe College, April 27: Sundays here are comparatively quiet after the hectic ones we used to have in North Carolina. The other days of the week here are hectic enough though. I'm trying to teach 24 hours of classes of 55 students each. I have more than 550 students. They want every girl to have some time with an American teacher. I wish I were ten people instead of just one. I've called in a couple of graduates to help me and am trying to train them to teach. My best bet may be to train Japanese teachers to do the job rather than spread myself over so many.

My baggage hasn't come yet and it is now a month since I landed in Yokohama. One trunk didn't get off in Yokohama went to Manila and back and is now here, but the bulk of my belongings still repose in a warehouse in Yokohama. All that food I bought in such a frantic hurry is probably all eaten by the warehouse rats.

It is wonderful to be back, to find that most of my friends are alive (though many have aged greatly) and to find everyone so eager for help. So many of my friends are tired—terribly tired. They apologize for not having done more to keep up the English department, but how could they when most of their time had to be devoted to making things for the war. The great wonder is that they could keep up their religious services and could manage to teach Bible all through the war. When I try to put myself in their place, I have to admit that I would not have done as well as they.

Kobe College, June 6: Our school is in an uproar these days preparing for the visit by the Emperor. You never saw such excitement. The only reason we are being honored by a visit from the emperor is that they wanted a pretty place for him to eat his lunch. His purpose in coming to this part of the country is to inspect the institutions wrecked by the bombing and also the institutions for relief.

Have been fighting a cold for more than a week. Missed only one day of school, but I've wanted to stay in bed almost every day.

The other day I received a letter from Margaret Newton (daughter of Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Newton of Luray, Va., and a former Elon student) who is now in Tokyo. I hope she can come to Kobe College for a visit.

Our Japanese friends get no sugar, milk, butter and almost no fat. They do not get enough rice but are given cornmeal in their ration. Most of them have never used it and do not know how. We foreigners get plenty of bread which isn't too bad but the Japanese get none unless we give it to them. LARA gave us powdered eggs, powdered milk, canned meat, a tiny bit of sugar and dried potatoes and dried fruit to give to our friends. Whenever I give it, I'm embarrassed. They immediately want to give some of their precious possessions as an expression of their appreciation. I do not want them to lose their self-respect by receiving but with most of them I need not worry about this. They are far more generous than they should be. One of my former pupils who lost her husband and then her baby was pitifully grateful for the canned milk I gave her remaining child. I told her it wasn't a personal gift, but was from the churches in America who want the children of Japan to have a chance to grow strong. America is winning friends in this country by her generosity. Whoever heard of a defeated people liking the conqueror? Never before in history has such a thing happened, I suppose.

There is enough work right here in Kobe College for twenty American teachers. They are very eager to learn English, democracy, Christianity.

Kobe College, July 2: Except for three hours taught by Mary Stowe I'm the only American in the high school (700 girls).

Right now there seems to be a critical food shortage. People just do not get enough to eat. Americans are not dependent on food supplies here, so we have food. It's hard to think that we have when our friends do not. We give away a lot but there is no limit to what we want to give. There is a limit though to the amount we can afford to give. When you give food you know it will not last long. You'll have to find more to give—over and over again.

Your fifty cent airmail stamp was wasted. There is no way to send airmail to Japan except through an A. P. O. Your letter came by regular slow mail.

A STATEMENT OF PERSONAL FAITH.

person—God calls unto man—seeking to woo men to live in fellowship and communion with Himself.

The history of mankind and the experiences of contemporary life have shown that the person has not always answered the Person. And too frequently those who answer fail to answer without reservation. The freedom has been abused. God the Creator has been taken too much for granted. Too often He has been forgotten. Too often man has wanted his own way instead of God's way. He has set up his own creations in the place of God the Creator and worshipped the work of his human hands instead of the God of the human heart.

But in spite of all this, God has continued to extend His proffers of love to man in seeking to draw man to Himself. He has continued to seek His children, revealing Himself in His creation of the universe and in the laws of nature and in the history and lives of men. He never loses patience nor stops loving. Having loved from the beginning, He will love alway, for His love like Himself is eternal, "from everlasting to everlasting." Love, indeed, is the highest name we can ascribe to God.

Man's refusal to respond to God and to reject His love finds expression in rebellion to God's laws, which rebellion is sin. Sin, in fact, is the actual rejection of God's proffered love and His divine guidance. It is man's refusal to live in filial fellowship with his Heavenly Father. God's reaction to this rejection by man was to reveal Himself in human life in the person of Jesus Christ.

It is in Jesus Christ that God has most fully revealed Himself to man. In Jesus we see what God is like and what God would like for man to be. In him was the fullness of God. In the life of Jesus and in the Cross he bore, we find the greatest proof we have of God's love for man. Jesus as the Incarnation of God, and his life and death became the dividing mark in all history—history being divided into what happened before Jesus lived and what has happened since he was born.

Human language is inadequate to express the full significance of Jesus Christ to the life of man and the well-being of the world. In Jesus of Nazareth man sees the Man of Galilee and the Christ of God—the finite and the infinite—the human and the divine—blended in perfect symmetry, each complimenting the other, the two being one. Because of man's appreciation of this uniqueness of Jesus, they have spoken of him as the Messiah, the Lord of Life, the Teacher, the Preacher, the Son of God and the Savior of the World. All were trying to say that there was more to the life of Jesus Christ than the human and earthly side although we must never

OTHER CONTRACTS AWARDED.

Previously the contract to erect the new heating plant at Elon College was awarded H. Frank Mitchell Company of Burlington, North Carolina, at a price not to exceed $38,000. Work began on this building more than two weeks ago and is progressing nicely. On Friday, August 8, at a joint meeting of the Building and Executive Committees contract was awarded C. A. Dillon Company of Raleigh, North Carolina, for the setting of the two 200-h.p. boilers at a price not to exceed $10,000. These boilers have been purchased and are on the grounds. Also, the contract to erect a radial brick stack for the heating plant was awarded the Consolidated Chimney Company of New York, for $6,390. The stack is to be 125 feet high as recommended by the engineers. The matter of additional plant equipment and heat distribution was not awarded but was held pending consultation with the low bidder and with other contractors. Bids for this part of the work seemed excessively high. The high bid was $84,397 by Mehring & Hanson, Incorporated, Richmond, Va. The low bid was $73,447 by Rowe, Walsh & Jones, Durham, N. C. In consultation with Mr. Rowe it was agreed that with certain changes and omissions, if permitted, he would furnish all necessary materials and do the work for $62,000. The engineers were not willing to accept the proposed omissions and changes. Consequently, this part of the work is held in abeyance for the time being.

From the above it is evident that the new heating plant is to cost considerably more than originally estimated. All items seem pretty much in line with previous estimations with the exception of plant equipment (valves, pipes, etc.) and distribution facilities which are three times higher than had been estimated. Taking these figures the total cost of the new heating plant complete will be approximately $150,000 instead of within $100,000 which is "shocking" and carries with it a great responsibility. To meet the demands of this undertaking, and the undertaking is absolutely necessary, we face the necessity of raising an additional $100,000. Contributions are in order.

In yesterday's mail I received a good letter from a staunch and generous friend of the College expressing his approval of the erection of the new heating plant and enclosing check for $100 with the assurance that he would send more later. This particular friend had already sent $200 for this purpose. Certainly there are many friends who are genuinely interested in this undertaking and who will be glad to forward contributions to help meet the cost of the same.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is most encouraging that our Sunday schools and churches are keeping up pretty well with their weekly contributions for the support of the College. This is most helpful in the light of the many heavy responsibilities that the College is now facing. It is difficult to estimate what the financial requirements for the effective operation of the College will be. The ones of us who are interested in the institution and in the total program of Christian Education must stand by ready to help meet the demands, however large. With cooperation on the part of all the job will be done and paid for without borrowing. We have pooled our interests. Now let us pool our resources and do the job as it should be done.

The College is most appreciative of all contributions.

yet the humorists go on year after year making people laugh at their jokes. Why? Because they put new garments on the jokes. Beware of ruts. They are comfortable, but they are deadening in this business of teaching.

V. How Can We Interest Pupils?

Probably this is the Number 1 question as far as most teachers are concerned. Much of what has been said will contribute to the solution of it, for most good teachers will be interesting. Interest is contagious. It is like the measles. If a person has it, it is probable that those around him will catch it. If the teacher is interested, it is highly probable the pupils will be also. There are some acceptable methods of catching and holding interest which may be helpful.

Self-expression is often highly effective. Then there are the tested agents of concertion—objects, figures, maps, charts, pictures. Anything that tends to make the truth of the lesson vivid will aid in creating interest. Abstract language, even though it stands pious will kill interest like salt water on grass. Language should be concrete and lively if interest is to be sustained.

VI. How to Prepare the Lesson.

This is also an important answer to the problem of interest. Most of the complaints lodged by church school teachers center around lesson materials. It should be said that the perfect lesson material has not yet been written. Often times there is much to be desired in the material that the teacher has at hand. Nonetheless, lesson material is merely the outline. It is the meat and it needs to be cooked. Most folks will be delighted with a leg of lamb dinner, but not many would enjoy sitting down to it as it is when it came from the butcher. By the same token, people are not greatly attracted or helped by a serving of lesson material uncooked. Little wonder that there is so much religious indigestion among our people when there are so many uncooked lessons taught in our church schools. To carry on the figure of speech of the Sunday dinner. May I suggest that planning is necessary for the best results, just as planning is necessary for the most attractive meal. A sprinkling of good humor is like salt and pepper. A few well put questions will help the appetite like chilled grapefruit. Moreover, some cuts of meat require more cooking than others. In fact, most meals should be cooked well before serving and it has been my experience that Saturday is the poorest day to cook up the lesson, for the Holy Spirit seems to work least effectively on Saturday night.

The side dishes of this meal are the illustrations. They enhance it and often make the difference between a meal to be remembered and the same old meat and potatoes proposition.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP RALLY TO BE HELD AT NORFOLK.

The Executive Board of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship met in Suffolk on Saturday, August 2 to plan for the Summer Rally. The Rally will meet at the Christian Temple in Norfolk, on August 31 at 3:00 in the afternoon. At this meeting of the Conference Young People the new officers will be elected and the Rally will have two sessions, afternoon and evening.

Please be sure that your youth group in your church is well represented by at least a car load of young people. Watch THE CHRISTIAN SUN for further announcements, including the program.

Yours in Pilgrim Fellowship,

ANN RAWLS TRUITT,
President.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

Approximately one hundred people, representing seventeen churches, enjoyed the hospitality of the Pleasant Ridge Church for the meeting of the Western North Carolina Sunday School Convention on July 24. Reports indicated that these Sunday schools are increasing in membership and in activities. The secretary-treasurer, Miss Vivian Walker, reported receipts of $153.30, an increase over last year.

President Weldon T. Madren did an excellent job of presiding, in spite of the fact that he was handicapped by the absence of several announced leaders.

The opening worship was conducted by Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, while Rev. B. J. Earp conducted the worship at the beginning of the afternoon session. The theme for the morning session, "What Is Our Job," was to have been discussed by Dr. W. T. Scott and Dr. F. C. Lester. However, the court required their presence in Asheboro, and Dr. D. J. Bowden of Elon College was drafted to take their places. He did an excellent job of "pinch-hitting," combining the two announced topics into one good speech. He presented the idea of the Sunday schools with a vision, which will seek to educate children, young people, and adults; to act as a "seed bed" for church membership; to perform services for the church and the community; and to serve beyond the community around the world. He reminded the group of the possibilities of the outreach of our Sunday schools to the Christian Orphanage, to Elon College, to the peoples of the world. He took us on an imaginary trip by air to the various countries of the world, showing us the great need, the missionary and relief work which the churches are doing, and the many things being left undone because we do not give as we can and should.

The theme of the afternoon session was "How To Do Our Job Well." This was expressed in the talk by Mrs. F. C. Lester on "A Prepared Teacher," in which was emphasized the need for prepared teachers, and how we may be better prepared for such jobs in the church. It was suggested that some book, like Margaret Slattery's A Primer for Teachers might be borrowed from the Convention Office for personal study; that the teachers and officers of a local Sunday school might have a monthly meeting in the form of a Worker's Council to discuss their problems, and study different phases of their work; and that leadership training schools for a local church or several local churches working cooperatively might be held.

The group discussions also carried out the afternoon theme, being a presentation of materials and methods for the various groups. These included Superintendents and Officers led by Mr. Sybrant Pell; Children's Work led by Mrs. Sybrant Pell; Young People's Work led by Mrs. F. C. Lester, in the absence of Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, who was ill; and Adult Work led by Mr. Cyrus Shoffner.

The Sunday School Convention was invited to meet in Asheboro next year, if the long hoped-for church in Asheboro is a reality by that time.

New Officers were elected as follows: President—Rev. Weldon T. Madren, Route 4, Burlington; Vice-President—Rev. L. M. Pressnell, Bennett; Secretary-Treasurer—Miss Betty Robbins, Randleman.

One resolution passed was that each Sunday school should try to increase its attendance, setting as its goal an enrollment equal to the church membership.

The closing service of dedication, led by Rev. L. M. Pressnell, made all determined to go home and to their churches committed to do a better job.

illustration is a set of handles put on an idea. It brings the point of the lesson down to the experience level of the pupils. An illustration does something for the teacher, too. It forces clarity and makes thinking concrete. It kindles imagination, it puts words and music together. Illustrations let the light of day into what may otherwise be ancient and musty.

(b) When is an illustration not an illustration? When it carries off the point so far that nobody finds it. When it does not fit. When it is not native and familiar. When it needs considerable explanation. When it is given for effect rather than to illustrate.

(c) Where do we find illustrations? We do not find illustrations, we grow them. They issue from our experience and the important thing is that they be ours. That is not to say we must not use illustrations from books or from lesson materials. But if we use illustrations from these sources they must be more than warmed over. They must be cooked in the heat of our experiences and thinking. What would you think of the woman who served Bird's Eye peas with a roast lamb dinner just as they came out of the package bristling with frost? It is just as ridiculous to use an illustration cold just as it came from the printed page.

Conclusion: When Nehemiah was building the wall at Jerusalem Sandballot, that rascal renegade, tried to induce Nehemiah to lay down his tools by inviting him to a conference. Nehemiah's answer to Sandballot is a classic. "I am engaged in a great work, therefore I cannot come down." We who teach religion are engaged in a great work. There is no length to which we should not go to prepare ourselves for this great work.

On his return to America, Dr. E. Stanley Jones announced that he is working on a new book, The Way to Poise and Powder.

PLAIN FACTS ABOUT HONESTY.

LESSON VIII—AUGUST 24, 1947.

By WILL B. O'NEILL, Guest Editor.

MEMORY SELECTION: Prove all things; hold fast that which is good; abstain from every form of evil.—I Thessalonians 5:21-22.

LESSON: Proverbs 3:3; 11:1-3; 12:17-22; 14:5; 20:10; 23:10-11; Matthew 5:37.

The Book of Proverbs urges upon us the inherent values of the good life. This book is our Manual of Procedures in achieving that life which will be a delight to God and a blessing to ourselves. Herein are our instructions concerning our course of conduct which if followed will exemplify that right relationship which should exist between man and God, between man and man.

Again and again are we reminded that it is the better part of wisdom to be good, and that wickedness carries within itself the seeds of destruction. "Upright men are guided by their honesty; but faithless men are ruined by their crookedness." (Proverbs 11:3.)

Kindness and truth are to be written upon the tablet of the heart to become the inner law which governs one's life.

Dishonesty Demoralizes and Damages.

Dishonesty exacts an enormous toll from our human society. Because of dishonest persons are we compelled to install locks on our doors and bars on our windows; we have to pay to maintain a larger police force and courts of law; business and government find it necessary to provide auditors, bank examiners and inspectors.

What heartaches and headaches follow in the train of dishonesty! Not only is there demoralization of the character involved but how often do pain and shame fall upon those who are entirely innocent. The absconding cashier suffers irrevocable loss of reputation, his firm the loss of funds, and his family and the organizations to which he belongs become more or less stigmatized.

The congressman who peddles his patriotism for a paltry penny dishonors his name and at the same time does irreparable damage to the cause of good government.

Over the radio and through the newspaper we are repeatedly reminded of the saying: "Crime Does Not Pay," but this is not altogether true. Crime does pay its toll in the disintegration of character and in the havoc wrought upon society. There is no escaping the biblical admonition: "The wages of sin is death."

A Day of Moral Decay.

If one were so disposed he might amass a wealth of data showing what is happening to the soul of America today. As we write these lines our morning newspaper carries blaring headlines of senatorial investigation covering alleged corruption in high places. In the same paper there is a story revealing the request of a church for its pastor's resignation, and all for the reason that he sought to keep the integrity of his own soul. A popular magazine for the current month recites the appalling story of the black market in automobiles. Like Jeremiah of old we, too, can go to the "potter's house" and learn of many a flaw in the manufacturing process as well as in the practices of men. Even our "funny" papers can be at times all to revealing of the acts and antics of men. A certain "orphan" tells us of the skull-duggery of a "Mr. Gaws," a fictional political boss, who by graft and petty chiseling amasses a fortune. Another cartoon of recent date represents a popular boxer and a boxer and a "good guy" as telling a white lie in order to make a little boy happy, as if happiness were the summum bonum.

Yes, something is happening to the soul of America. While we believe its heart is basically sound, and there are many evidences of its generosity and good intentions may these adverse signs be but symptoms of a hidden cancerous growth eating at its vitals?

Honesty Not a Policy—A Principle.

There is an old song which with its mawkish sentimentality bears a grain of truth: "If your heart keeps right every cloud will wear a rain." The heart kept with all diligence will bring the promise of a better day. We must learn that our world rests upon a spiritual basis, and that the whole universe is on the side of the man who attempts to do right. That the success of any adventure, whether it be the building of a life or a better world, will depend upon our recognition of the spiritual laws which govern life.

In some communities of the old world you will find still in the market place an ancient cross erected by men that they might buy and sell under the shadow of the symbol of their redemption. We would do well to carry on our business today under the shadow of His cross as a constant reminder that the way to keep the integrity of one's own soul is by the way of the cross.

A STATEMENT OF PERSONAL FAITH.

forget or question that side. They were saying that in the life of Jesus there was a cosmic significance, something greater and more far reaching than we can fully comprehend. In Jesus Christ God revealed Himself to His erring and rebellious children that He might win them to an understanding of a commitment to His love and will for them. When we view thus the life of Jesus Christ, we must view it both in the light of the divine and the human.

In Jesus Christ we see what God is like and what men in harmony with God may be. In Him we see God. In His death we see the crowning act of self-sacrificing love. In the Cross of Calvary we see God's judgment and condemnation of sin. And in the Cross we see the limit to which love is willing to go rather than to compromise with evil. Jesus chose His cross. It was not thrust upon Him. He could have evaded the Cross, but he chose to bear it in order to reveal the sincerity of his purpose, to win men to an understanding and appreciation of their Heavenly Father.

stands at the very center of Christianity. We appropriate that love and its redemptive power by faith, and experience that, "With the Lord there is mercy and with Him is plentiful redemption." In the Cross of Jesus Christ we find forgiveness for our sins and enter into the fellowship of forgiveness under God. We then share the desires and purposes of God. We then appreciate the terribleness of our previous rejection of God. We experience liberation from the sense of guilt and enter into a growing consciousness of our dependence upon God and for His divine guidance in life. In the Cross of Christ we not only glory but become identified with God in our quest for self-realization and know that Christ's experience on the Cross actually does something to those who are willing to take up their cross and follow Him.

Closely allied—indeed a part of it—to the work of God in Christ which has been designated the Atonement is the Resurrection, the hope of eternal life. This is the fruit of our faith—that there is life extending on after our earthly sojourn. It could be no other way with the kind of God in Whom we believe. He Who created and treasures human personality could not permit its destruction. So we have His promise in the Resurrection of our Lord and Master, that as He died and rose again, so in Him we, too, shall live again.

The result of one's turning to Jesus Christ and making full surrender to him, finding forgiveness and empowerment, is the sharing of His purpose and accepting of the responsibility of doing His will. It is in service to God through Christ to all those He has created that we best express our faith in God. This participation in furthering God's will is what we know as the basic factor of the Kingdom of God. It begins when one commits his life to God and joins with his fellows in sincere response to God's love and feels the passion to enlist others in this fellowship of faith. The evangelistic responsibility of every follower of Christ is very definite as he commissions all who call him Lord to go and make disciples. Evangelism is the very heart of Jesus' teachings. Service in the name of Jesus to the world in which one lives is the framework of all his Gospel. "Faith comes by hearing; it can only live by doing." Christian faith calls men to cooperate with God in the realization of justice, truth and brotherhood upon earth. It offers world fellowship which knows no barriers of race, class or prejudice. It is the kingdom of right living to which Jesus bids all men to enter.

God has revealed Himself in nature, in human relationships, in the Bible and most fully in the life and teachings of Jesus of Galilee. The Bible is a medium of revelation. We believe that it contains the word of God in that it records the faith of men and women who responded to the love of their Creator and who shared with Him in His desire for the redemption of man. God revealed Himself to the people of ancient Israel as He tries to reveal Himself to the people of every age and clime, and the Bible writers relate their belief in and their experiences with God in the light of the knowledge and understanding of their day. The Bible is the story of mankind's search after God and of God's reach after man, or it may be spoken of as the story of God's search for mankind and man's response to God. This is the great significance of the Bible. God's revelation in the Old Testament and His revelation in Jesus Christ as recorded in the New Testament is not the object of our faith but the inspiration of faith, for our faith is in God and not in a book. It is not what people believe but whom they believe that matters most.

Prayer is another medium of divine revelation. Prayer is a two-way communication—God speaking to us and we speaking to Him. "Prayer has much in common with the using of a telephone. One cannot be heard until he takes down the receiver." Jesus found prayer necessary to his own life, and likewise his followers find prayer essential to their lives. If essential to one so good as he, how much more essential to all of us who call him Lord. Prayer is absolutely essential to Christian faith and service. Prayer is the communion of God and man. It is adoration, confession, thanksgiving, petition, intercession and commitment. It is centering our attention upon God's will and letting our own desires and wishes fall into their own proper places. In prayer our lives are dedicated to God, and we find the inspiration and power to carry that dedication through.

God works His purposes through human-kind, the work of His creation. Within each life that takes its part in the drama of living is a Voice, a Director and a Power. This is the Holy Spirit of God in men's lives. Men have always been conscious in some measure of God's presence within them, but it was not until Jesus Christ had come and had been raised that the work of God's Holy Spirit became really manifest. It was during the Feast of Pentecost that a community of people began to know their God by direct experience. This was the beginning of the Christian Church which was called into being to continue the ministry of Jesus. It was the fellowship of those who answered God's call, as He called them out of darkness into light. God poured out His Spirit in order that the saving work of Christ could be carried on in His world. Thus, the Christian Church is not just an ordinary institution. It is divinely instituted, arising explicitly out of the practical program of our Lord and His disciples. It is both human and divine. It is human in purpose and divine in origin, being inspired by God to meet man's needs in God's world. It is just as essential for churches to be ordained of God today as it was that the Church be ordained of God in its beginning.

Not unmindful of the greater importance of the Church Universal, the Ecumenical Church, I believe every church member should always keep in mind the importance of his own denomination, realizing there can be no Ecumenical Church without the participation of the denominations. I believe in the ultimate union of Protestantism, and I shall welcome every opportunity in helping to promote its realization.

We live in days when earthly fortresses of men have fallen and when the faith in Christian truth is needed more than ever. It is given to only a few people in the long march of all mankind to live in times of the great divides of history—the times of the ends of eras and the beginnings of new eras. This is such a time. It is a time which demands an adequate faith. A new movement in the history of the Kingdom of God is in the making. A new spirit of aggression is the order of the day. With a sweeping and empowering affirmation of Christian faith, we must take our places within that movement so that some day there will be, in the words of Dr. Hatch, "a church that shall outshine even the golden glory of its dawn by the splendor of its eternal noon." We must do this as the God Who revealed Himself in Jesus Christ calls us into the fellowship of life eternal with Him and the redeemed of earth.

It is in this spirit that I desire to enter the Christian ministry. It is with this personal religious faith that I am willing to accept the responsibilities as an ambassador of my Lord.

Dear Friends:

The writer had the pleasure of attending the Valley Virginia Central Conference, which met the 6th and 7th of August. This conference was well attended and the spirit was fine. The writer has been attending this conference for many years and has learned to love these good people and the beautiful mountain scenery.

The mountains are always new to the writer, and they are inspiring when we realize they are the handiwork of God. The church where this conference was held seemed to be in the midst of the beautiful valley and was surrounded by beautiful mountain scenery.

The writer used to think that the people who lived in the mountains, lived nearer Heaven than we down in the costal sections. I perhaps got the idea from a speech I heard some years ago. I was in a meeting, and they were discussing where to hold the next meeting. There was quite a contest as to where to meet. I remember there were a number who were pleading for the meeting to be held in Asheville, North Carolina, and in one plea the speaker said: "Come up to Asheville, North Carolina, where you can stand on the mountain top and kiss the Angel's feet." He won, and the next meeting was held in Asheville. We have often thought of that sentence in his speech. But we have changed our mind. While we were in the mountains we looked up into the sky, and we came home and looked up into the sky, and the distance looked the same. We have come to the conclusion that we are as near Heaven in the valley as we are on the mountain top.

We had the pleasure of going in a car with Dr. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, and Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College—two fine Christian gentlemen and excellent companions to travel with. Dr. Smith and I have gone to this conference lots of times together, and on the way this time we would call Dr. Scott's attention to the places along the way where we had gotten good meals. We did this for his benefit. Dr. Scott said about all we talked about on the way up was where we had gotten good meals to eat. Dr. Scott did the driving, and we felt perfectly safe with him at the wheel. He takes no risks and obeys the laws to the letter. We enjoyed our trip very much in company with these fine gentlemen.

THE BIBLE, THE FOUNDATION FOR CHRISTIAN TEACHING.

Excerpts from Address

By DR. PAUL J. HOH,
At International Sunday School
Convention.

Let's take a very critical problem of our own age, one suggested by the Convention theme of today—the home. It is breaking down. There are evidences aplenty to confirm this. The home must be saved. Immediately the social sciences set to work to study it. A great many factors are identified, examined—personalities, family background, health, interests, education, sex, work, housing, finances, religion, and others. Conclusions are reached, applied. And a tremendous amount of good is done. The findings may even be carried over into church-school lessons, for proper application to children, to adolescents in their courtship days, to young married couples, to parents. All this, good. But when this kind of program has had its full say, and has made its largest possible contribution to the saving and strengthening and enrichment of the family, there will still be something to say that only the Word of God, recorded in the Bible, can say.

What this is runs something like this: the home, the family, is God's creation, a divine institution, a holy estate, not merely a socially developed group. Marriage, which initiates it, is a religious act, a sacred act, not merely the entering into a social contract. Into the marriage enter, not two, a man and a woman, but three, a man and a woman and God. And by God's redemptive presence the two are hallowed, and their relation is hallowed, and all their relations within the relation are hallowed. Into this relation another may come, a child. It is not the product of merely natural human forces: it is a creature of God. Thus, it, too, is sacred; and all its relations with its parents and theirs with it are sacred. And should another child be born, then there are new relations, as sacred as all those already there. You see, this family is something entirely different from any sociological family you have read about. There is a Presence that makes it different. Of course, all the biological and sociological and psychological factors are still there. The human necessities will be the same. The parents will have to work to provide for their home. Financial obligation will have to be met. Educational processes must be set in motion. Differing personalities will need to be understood and sympathetically dealt with. There will be problems. There may be tragedies. But the Presence will make this home something that no home without Him can ever be. Science may save the home as a social unit: only Christianity can save it as a holy estate ordained of God. Such is Christian teaching: and the Word of God, recorded in the Bible, is the foundation of it.

I hope that it is now clear that the Christian faith, the creation and cultivation of which is the objective of all Christian teaching, is not unrelated to life. It touches on life, enters into life, transforms life at every point. It brings something to life, something of incomparable significance and worth, that nothing else can give—no philosophy, no science, no natural religion, no art. It is a power. Sometimes it is a revolutionary power; but always it is a redemptive power. Even when it appears to be destructive and damning, it is redemptive. It may burn with wrath, but the wrath is only a consuming love.

And I hope that it is now clear that when the Bible is the foundation of our teaching, truth, not to be found elsewhere, is brought into life and made available for its inward and outward transformation. As God speaks through His Word to men, and they respond in faith, God's divine family is reestablished and all life is sanctified.

For the Children

A RUINED CLUB HOUSE.

"Say, isn't this far enough?" asked Blackey as he stepped back to better see the results of his labor. The candle did not give much light but Blackey did not care—they were digging the new club house in the side of Whyatt Hill.

"I don't know," answered Fred. "If we dig a passageway to the top of the hill for a back door, I think we should dig another room."

Sam leaned on his pick for a moment and looked at the dirt wall. "And make it with a secret door. Let's get those old bricks from the haunted house to keep the walls from caving in. Then we could put a small opening in the corner and put a packing box in front of it."

"Randall! Randall!" came a distant voice.

"That must be Mother calling me," said Blackey as he crawled down the small passageway to the "front door." "That's Mother, fellows. I'll see you tonight," Blackey called over his shoulder. In a second he had disappeared.

"Shall we work any more to-night?" asked Fred.

"Let's quit and go up and pick out a spot for the back door—you know, some place that is well hidden by the bushes," answered Sam.

Fred leaned his shovel against the wall and crawled down the passageway. Sam followed him. Pausing at the entrance to their cave the two boys carefully parted the bushes and looked around before they left the mouth of the cave. Crouching down very low they followed a well hidden path through the bushes.

"All clear?" asked Sam when they had come to the bottom of the hill.

"All clear."

Stepping into the open they walked to the corner where the regular path led over the hill to the next street.

"If we climbed that tree in the middle of the hill we could see all over the top and find the best place to dig the back door," said Sam when they reached the top of the hill.

Two or three grunts and the boys were out on one of the biggest limbs.

"Do you see a good place?" asked Fred.

"Well, it might be dug over there," Sam answered as he pointed toward a big clump of bushes. "It would be well hidden."

"Or we might dig it over—who's that?" cried Fred, pointing to a man walking through the bushes. "Grumpy Long has found the entrance to our club house!"

Mr. Long, called Grumpy because of his grumbling nature, glancing behind him, knelt down and crawled in the cave. In a short while he appeared again. With a self-satisfied smile he brushed his hands together and left. "I'm going to find out what he did," said Fred, sliding down the tree. Together they ran across the hill. Kneeling down, the boys crawled into the cave. But they couldn't go far—dirt blocked their way.

"He has caved in our club house!" cried Fred. Nothing else was said—they just looked at the damaged cave. Turning, they left the hill and went to Blackey's house where their own whistle brought him to the door. Quickly the story was told, and as quickly plans to "get even" were formed.

"Do you think he will hear us," asked one of the boys as they set their heavy basket down by the garage late that night.

"I don't think so."

"He won't win any flower prizes this year after we cover his flower beds with a foot of dirt."

"Fellows, I don't feel right about getting even with him. Tonight at family prayers we learned the verse which says, 'If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head.'"

It will be all right—no one will find out who did it."

"Sure, there is nothing wrong with it."

"No, sir, that's not right. Father says that no matter whether you are caught or not, a sin is a sin. God will punish the one who disobeys. God knows, and He is the One who keeps the records. I'm not going to do it."

The boys were silent. Finally one said, "I guess you're right. If a fellow cuts class and is not caught he has still broken a school rule. If we sin and are not caught we still have broken one of God's rules, and He will punish us for it. I move we forget the ruined club house and go home and pray for Mr. Long that he will be saved."

"I agree," came two replies.

There was a ruined club house, but three boys went home that night without their hearts being ruined by sin stains.—O. P. Boys and Girls.

"Not man's manifold labors, but his manifold cares hinder his sense of God's presence."

HAPPY HOME.

On March 9, 1947, Rev. C. Shannon Morgan preached his last sermon as pastor of Happy Home Church—with Rev. Thurmond F. Bowers beginning his supply pastoral work March 16, serving Happy Home on the first, third and fifth Sunday mornings and second and fourth Sunday evenings.

When the church convened for its business meeting in May, committees were appointed to draw up plans for a parsonage to be built on the lot adjoining the church lot which was purchased for the building.

In June we were made to rejoice that our service flag could be lowered with all twenty-six members being in our midst. We were grieved to have a gold star mother in our church if her son was not.

July brings us to the revival and Bible school. The Bible school was held the second week with about 145 on roll. Each one attending received much benefit. The revival began July 2 with July 6 being Home-Coming Day. Our pastor, Rev. Bowers was the evangelist for the services. About seventy-five rededicated their lives and about twenty-three made professions of faith.

On Sunday, July 13 at 6:30, the Bible School rendered their closing exercises with about 125 certificates given. At 7:30 was the closing service of the revival, which was one of the best this church has had in a good many years. Twenty-three united with the church on profession of faith with three transfers.

Near the stroke of midnight on July 30 it was discovered that tragedy had struck our church building in the form of fire. Through quick thinking and acting on the part of the ones nearest the church, the building was saved with an estimated damage of $2,000 to $3,000 to the building and furnishings. The damage is covered by insurance, and will be repaired at an early date. The origin of the fire was probably due to a defective wire.

Knowledge of that Living Presence here and now is the essence of the Christian life. I do not know how you interpret the doctrine of the Second Advent—but never so emphasize the wonder of a future glorious day that you forget the thrill of the real presence of the Saviour with you in every moment of the present.—G. M. McAdam in Australian Baptist.

The Minister As Teacher

By JOSEPH F. KING, JR.

Minister of First Congregational Church, Oberlin, Ohio

Christianity is not primarily a theology; it is first of all a community which has produced a theology, as it has a morality, a body of customs and ceremonies, organizations, and institutions. But, since Christianity as a community includes a theology, a body of thought, it has a teaching function and responsibility with respect to its obligation to deepen the understanding of its theology on the part of its present members, to transmit its body of thought to the succeeding generations of children of its members, and to persuade and convince those outside the Christian community.

In our lifetime the Christian group has placed chief reliance on its church schools and on the institution of preaching to fulfil its teaching responsibility and function. Both of these are under serious question today. I do not share the extreme and long-time doubts of the effectiveness of either our church schools or preaching, though, doubtless, these will always need serious and searching re-evaluation. But I think I can see one very important reason why these two teaching strategists are no more effective than they are.

Both our church schools and our preaching deal too exclusively with ideas as abstractions and in a one-way process. This is to say that our educational process is an active and living process chiefly for the teacher and the preacher. The taught and the preached-at have to sit and "take" it, and what is "taken" does not go so deep or so far as those of us who commonly do the "giving" assume. Perhaps we can take a leaf from those who are working in the field of race relations and have discovered that, while facts can change attitudes, they are likely to do it better and quicker if the facts are clearly and closely connected with an experience in democratic living.

This is no disparagement of ideas as such or a retreat into irrationalism or non-rationalism; it is to point out that ideas and knowledge are functions of being and that life is more and bigger than thought and ideology.

This would suggest that the teaching-learning group must be the being-doing group. More specifically, it is to suggest that the Christian-learning group must be the Christian-living-worshiping-community. To the degree, therefore, that any group or organization forms a genuine and vital community with a high sense of togetherness, to that degree does its teaching have bite and grip.—The Chicago Theological Seminary Register.

A Wide Awake Suburban Church Celebrates Anniversary

ROSEMONT CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The entire Eastern Virginia Conference is proud of this outstanding suburban church located at Portlock, Norfolk. With a working motto, "As much for others as for self," it sets an example well worth emulating by our other churches. (See sketch on page 3.)

NEWS AND VIEWS

Dr. John P. Jockinsen is the supply minister during August at Tryon, North Carolina.

Rev. M. A. Pollard is assisting Rev. Thomas Sutton in revival services at Pope's Chapel this week.

Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Carter of Youngsville, North Carolina, attended the Carter Reunion held last Sunday near Wadley, Alabama.

Superintendent Wm. T. Scott, and Dr. Stanley U. North of the Board of Home Missions of New York City visited the Asheville Church during the week-end of August 17.

The Senior High Young People's Summer Conference meeting at Camp Hanes near King, N. C., August 12-18, has been well attended. The Junior High Camp begins on the 18th and closes on the 22nd.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was married recently. The officiating minister was the Rev. J. Herbert Owen, pastor of the Congregational Church on the Hill in Lenox, Massachusetts.

Churches which have not yet their offerings for the Shaowu Mission in China are urgently requested to remit these contributions to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., immediately. The Mission Board closes its financial year August 31. To date we are approximately $2,000 short of the $10,000 goal for the Shaowu Mission. The churches and members of the Southern Convention will not fail in their gratitude to Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson and their co-labourers in the Chinese Mission. We must not fail. Two million in Shaowu are depending upon us to give them Christ and his ministries. Please send your contributions at once.

NCCJ HEADQUARTERS TO MOVE TO CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Allyn Robinson, North Carolina Director of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, announced today that the national office of his organization, in consultation with local and state leaders, had determined to move the state headquarters of NCCJ to Charlotte, N. C. The move will probably be made about September 1.

The state office was located originally in Greensboro, but was moved to Raleigh in March, 1946, when Mr. Robinson assumed the state leadership. The Raleigh office will be continued, and will be served on a part-time basis by Mr. Robinson. Mr. Gurney P. Hood, general chairman of the Raleigh Round Table of the Conference, expressed regret that Raleigh was losing, at least for the time being, the state office, but declared that at a recent meeting of the Raleigh officers the wisdom of the move from the point of view of the organization was unanimously approved by the Raleigh group. Co-chairmen of the Raleigh unit are Ernest Neiman and William R. Boyle.

FIRST CHURCH PARSONAGE.

PORTSMOUTH CHURCH DREAM COMES TRUE.

First Church, Portsmouth, has a new parsonage. A dream of many years has become a realization to the people of that church. The accompanying picture shows the home in Grove Park, an attractive suburb of Portsmouth, where our new minister, Rev. W. Stanley Carne, and his family now reside.

After an interim pastorate supplied by Navy Chaplains, Mr. Carne came to the Portsmouth Church from Elizabethtown, New York, where he had served five years. With Mr. and Mrs. Carne, when they arrived in June, came Rev. George Poole, his wife (the former Margaret Carne) and their two small children. They fitted into the life of the church so well we felt a keen loss when they left for their missionary station in Quito, Ecuador. It was a rare privilege to have the Pooles in Portsmouth. The missionary interest of our church has been stimulated because of the personal interest we feel in them and their work in Ecuador.

On July 15, a reception was tendered the Carnes, which was well attended by church members and friends, two former pastors, Rev. Herbert G. Council and Rev. Randall C. Mason, and Rev. R. E. Aler, president of the Portsmouth Ministerial Union.

The Portsmouth Church is looking forward to increased activities, now that we have a full-time pastor again. However, we are grateful to the Navy, Chaplain E. L. Wade, Senior Chaplain of the local Shipyard, having supplied our pulpit with "hand-picked" men during the period beginning February 1, when Mr. Mason left to accept a call to Paterson, N. J.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

AMERICAN BOARD TO MEET.

The 138th Annual Meeting of the American Board convenes in Burlington, Vermont, on Tuesday, September 23 and will continue till noon Thursday, September 25. The highlights of the program will include addresses by two leaders of the churches in the Near East and in Africa—Prof. Lootfy Levonian of Lebanon and Rec. C. G. Baeta of the Gold Coast; by Congressman Walter Judd; by Frederick Meek of Old South Church, Boston; by Frederick S. Buschmeyer of Washington who will have returned recently from Europe; and by Dr. A. R. van Cleave of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga. A group of missionaries will participate and audio-visual aids will be demonstrated.

CHINESE SCHOLAR DIES.

Word has been received by the United Board for Christian Colleges in China of the death in Albuquerque, N. M., on August 1 of Dr. Timothy Ting-fang Lew, one of China's foremost scholars. Dr. Lew, former dean of the School of Religion at Yenching University in Peiping, had been in this country since 1942 when he came here after escaping into Free China before the Japanese advance. He was fifty-six years old.

Born in Weuchow, Chekiang, Dr. Lew, a Congregationalist, attended St. John's University, Shanghai, and the University of Georgia. In 1914 he received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Columbia University and later the Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy degrees in psychology and education. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He also studied theology at Union Seminary and received a Bachelor of Divinity degree, magna cum laude, from Yale in 1918, and was winner of the Fogg Divinity Scholarship.

ROSEMONT CHURCH CELEBRATES FORTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

Forty-five years ago, August 14, 1902, the Rosemont Church was founded.

The Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, deceased, organized the church. He was at that time pastor of the Memorial Christian Church of Norfolk and held prayer meeting in a one-room frame school building in Portlock.

The Rev. J. W. Harrell, now of Huntington Park, Calif., was called as the first pastor of the church. He retired from the ministry in 1938 after forty-three years of active service.

When it developed that the one-room school could not be used any longer for the prayer meetings, the group rented a store, across the street from the present church, and held Sunday school each Sunday afternoon.

John L. Gibson offered a plot of ground for the erection of a church building, and Edmond Christian, of the Norfolk Creosoting Company, Money Point, donated $560 in cash, and the Rosemont Chapel was erected.

The second building was erected some time around 1915 and dedicated June 22, 1919.

Rev. J. Frank Morgan, Rosemont's eleventh pastor, now pastor of the Second Church of Norfolk, dug the first shovelful of dirt for the third and present building, September 24, 1930, and, on October 2, 1930, laid the first brick. Dr. H. S. Hardecastle, the twelfth pastor, then president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, laid the cornerstone on October 31, 1930.

On February 15, 1931, a formal dedication was held by Dr. W. W. Staley, deceased, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church.

A Hammond organ was dedicated on February 11, 1934, a gift to the church by Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Smith, in memory of the former's brother, Carl Smith, a member who died.

On Sunday, July 10, 1927, the new church fund committee offered a resolution "that we give to the New Church Fund as the Lord prospers us, for three years, and that at the end of that time, if we do not have $15,000, the money given to be returned to the donors."

Many members of the church and Sunday school came forward and signed the resolution in a consecration service.

The fund grew steadily but slowly for two and a half years, then, at the annual business meeting of the church in October, 1929, plans were made for putting new life into the campaign.

On June 30, 1930, it was possible to announce that the $15,000 had been raised and the church was assured.

Today a beautiful brick English country style church stands. Its windows are tinted and it has an open trussed roof, which adds to its beauty; a high choir which can be seen anywhere in the church; a pastor's study on one side and large Sunday school quarters on the other, and a seating capacity of approximately 250. There is a cross on the tower and another on the gable. It has spacious grounds, large trees and beautiful shrubbery. It has a membership of 526, Sunday school membership of 433 and 25 in the Young People's Society.

The Rosemont Christian Church was the first church in this section to install an air-conditioned system. The church property, valued at $48,000, was operated last year on a budget of $14,000 for all purposes. It is understood that the church gives more to benevolences than to itself.

The present building fund of $3,000, raised at the end of the first year of a campaign for that purpose, will be used to add a new wing, while an additional fund of $4,500 has been set aside for the same purpose.

Other pastors, in order, are: Revs. J. W. Barrett, W. D. Harwood, C. C. Ryan, McDaniel Hawsare, D. A. Keys, W. H. Denison, G. O. Lankford, W. C. Hook, B. F. Black, J. F. Morgan and H. S. Hardecastle.

Rev. Herbert G. Councill, Jr., present pastor, was called last January 15.—Evie G. Hudgins in Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

ANNIVERSARIES.

Congratulations to Bethlehem (Nansemond) on the occasion of its Centennial, August 24. This is one of the oldest churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference. Located in a prosperous, rapidly developing section near Suffolk, this church with a fine building and a membership of 500 is in line for continued growth. Favored by history and location, the church enters its second century with great promise. We look to this mature church for increasing leadership in the Conference and Convention. Godspeed to the church and its pastor, the Rev. R. E. Brittle.

The Bethlehem Church of Begonia, near Disputanta, observed its Golden Jubilee August 10. Large congregations attended the morning and afternoon services. This substantial church has been developed by a Czechoslovak settlement in Prince George County. This church is free of debt, supports a full-time minister, and contributes generously to denominational benevolences. Under the able leadership of the Rev. A. P. Slabey, many improvements were made to the church property and $2,000 raised as a building and maintenance fund. The church is a valued member of the Eastern Virginia Conference.

High hopes and generous contributions marked the forty-fifth anniversary service at Rosemont Church on August 10. The minister, the Rev. H. G. Councill, traced "Rosemont's Steadfast Growth" which he attributed to the fact that it is a family church, a community church, and a church which gives more to others than it spends on itself. This church has one of the loveliest structures and most active organizations in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Capable and consecrated ministers, strategic location in the suburbs of Norfolk, and a loyal constituency have placed this church in the forefront of our denomination in the Tidewater area of Virginia.

All church history is not great history. There are many lamentable chapters. And yet it is true that much of our greatest history is church history. No history of a community or a nation is complete without the chronicles of the churches. Reflect on the social and spiritual impact of these three churches upon their communities. A total of one hundred and ninety-five years of church history has been written. The future years of grace should be even more significant.

A young man sat opposite a young lady in school. After studying history for a number of years, they fell in love, married and began to make history. Now they have children and all are active in the church. The study of church history is necessary and profitable, but how much greater still is the privilege of making church history. Thank God, for church history, made and in the making.

MASSANETTA.

Congregational Christian, Evangelical & Reformed Day was held last week at the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference with Dr. I. W. Johnson presiding, and the writer as the speaker. Both groups had lay and ministerial representatives. A lady from one of our churches in the Valley Conference came up after the service and brought her two children. She wanted them to know the Editor of their church paper. How fine! Many parents seem to be content for their children to know the stars of Hollywood without knowing the leaders of their church.

The ministers held a brief business session to plan for next year's observance. The Rev. S. E. Madren was elected chairman and Dr. Calvin Wingert of the Washington E. & R. Church was elected speaker for the occasion. It was proposed that we have a picnic dinner on the grounds that day. It was reported that the General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church voted 283 to 21 in favor of the union of our churches in its recent meeting at St. Louis.

During the first week of the Bible Conference, we heard the deeply-searching, heart-warming sermons of Adam Burnet of Scotland, the trumpet-call to service by Roy Smith, the description of a bankrupt Europe by Harold Ockenga, the lucid expositions of Scripture by Ernest Trice Thompson, the delineation of our social sins by Peter Marshall, and the whimsical, refreshing sermons of Clovis Chappell. It was withal a great week, a great experience. Thanks to the management for giving us this superlative cross-section of Christian preaching.

Those in attendance from the Southern Convention included the Revs. Robert Kimball, Roy Coulter and Frederick Eutsler. The following ministers brought their wives: Joe A. French, S. E. Madren, I. W. Johnson, D. D. Poythress, and the Editor.

R. L. H.

The other day a report in a St. Louis paper made the General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church reverse its vote on a Christian Social Action recommendation calling for a 40-hour week, a minimum wage of 65c and a recognition of the right of collective bargaining in institutions of the church. First the synod struck these recommendations from the report by a vote of 122-81. A few hours later when the action was reported in St. Louis papers, a newspaper's account was read to the synod, reconsideration was voted, and after spirited debate, the recommendation was restored to the report adopted as a basis for the church. In the debate, Dr. Goebels, the synod's president, declared, "If any institution of the Evangelical and Reformed Church is unable to comply with the standards proposed by the church for secular institutions, it had better close its doors."—Aubrey N. The Terror and Splendor of Life Today

By NORMAN GOODALL, Editor

International Review of Missions, London

An interpretative address based upon the Whitby (Canada) Meeting of the International Missionary Council, July 5-8, 1947

I am speaking to you from an international conference that has not broken down. That is not a cheap gibe at other gatherings where honorable men have toiled in mighty tasks and have yet been frustrated, but it is testimony to a great experience and one which has a bearing upon those other international meetings.

We are a company of about one hundred people, drawn from forty-one nations. We are from Indonesia and Holland, from India and Britain, from the Congo and Belgium, from the Philippines and the United States, as well as from many other countries. Another notable fact is that our company includes a German delegation whose members come from the Russian Zone, as well as the British and American. Then, of course, we are an interdenominational company—Lutheran and Reformed, Episcopalian and non-Episcopalian: a good cross-section of the non-Roman churches of the world. Although this experience makes us less than ever complacent about continuing these denominational distinctions, the sharing of different experiences and inheritances in the faith has once again been a most enriching business. It is one of the most revealing factors in the Christian life today.

Yet, I think the most startling fact about this little company is the diversity of experiences through which its members have recently passed. There are folk here who have been tortured; there are those who have been in prison; there are men who have nearly starved to death; there are scholars and artists who, for months at a time, have been too famished and frozen to think. There are good men who have found themselves taking a different line from one another on such agonizing dilemmas as when to collaborate with an occupying power and when to resist. There are men whose countries have been on opposite sides of the fighting line in this last and most awful of our world wars.

Matched with this diversity of wartime experiences, there are the contrasts to which we shall return when we leave here. We are all enjoying Canadian hospitality and are looking well on it. But it is not nice to think of the sort of winter to which many of our European delegates will return, especially of what lies ahead of our German brethren. And deeper than these things are the kind of situations—economic, political, and national—to which we shall shortly disperse: in such countries as Indonesia, Korea, the Philippines, Burma, the Middle East, and the European “melting pot.” We have neither come from, nor are we going back to, any sort of Garden City existence. On the contrary, as one of our members has put it, we are back at “frontier” conditions of living. Over vast stretches of the world physically and in deep ranges of life psychologically, we are on the frontiers of the primitive.

From this extraordinary medley of experiences and prospects, we have found ourselves caught up into a most moving sense of unity. There is a lot that could be said about this: its character and the explanation of it, and the grounds upon which it is based. But in this brief talk I am only going to share with you one or two dominating impressions which I think everybody here would endorse.

First, we have been gripped by a sense of the terror and splendor of being alive at such a time as this. You won't be surprised at that word “terror” when you stop to think about it. When you dare to think about it you know why I have to use such a word. When we first began to plan for this conference, we thought of it in terms of a post-war affair. We said: “After the war;” but here, despite tranquil surroundings and uninvaded Canada, we know full well that we, and all the rest of you, are right in the middle of one of the greatest wars in history. This is not scarce talk about a third world war which may yet come and hit our children. It is realistic talk about the war that has not stopped—the war that is involving us all—young and old—now.

What is the nature of this unfinished war? Partly, it is a struggle with aftermath of the fighting; we are groping our way through the debris of a ravaged world. Partly, too, it is the struggle to adjust ourselves to new forces which have been unleashed in these last years. But there is more to it than this. Amidst these grim conditions, and by the threat of new weapons, the world is continuing its assault upon the integrity of personality, upon the right of a person to be a person; to be free, not to do what he likes, but to respond with liberated spirit to the claims of God upon his soul. This is the crux of the matter. It is the world's continuing assault upon the integrity of personality.

In this battle the point of attack sooner or later proves to be an attack upon the Christian conception of truth, justice, mercy, freedom, charity. The attacking forces may be governments—new or renewed totalitarianisms. They may be organized religious imperialisms or massed economic forces. They may be the armies of technocracy, of a powerful but sub-Christian press, even of the radio and mass education. The most dangerous points of attack are nearly always the same. While appealing to needs and desires which in themselves are right and good—hunger for social justice, for a better community life, for fulness of living—these attacking forces exploit a deep-seated willingness in us all to become enslaved by something less than the love of God—by fear, class prejudice, racial prejudice, love of power, love of self. Some day the organized maneuvers of these forces may result in another physical clash of nations, with all that this means, if ever we let it happen again. But though we stop short of this final insanity, the war is already on. You and I are in it and there is no discharge. This is the terror of being alive today.

But I have spoken of the terror and splendor of being alive today. I wish I could convey to you some fraction of what we have felt about this here, but words won't do it. Somebody tried to express it by saying: “I feel as though tomorrow has come at last.” Do you see the point of that?—the tomorrow for which you have longed and prayed: when the war would be over—really over; when victory—the victory that matters eternally—would be assured; when you need not be afraid any more; when you need no longer feel frustrated or impotent or incurably tired; when you would be at peace within and yet magnificently alive and fit for anything: fit for death and eternity, as well as time and all its hazards and joys.

Well, this tomorrow has come. People here who have faced the terror know it. Those who have been tor-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Rest and relaxation has already gotten me to thinking about the work of the pastors and churches beginning this autumn, and moving ahead into the coming year. There is so much for the churches to do in this busy, changing age. As I have driven through the countryside, and been in rural homes now for two weeks I am greatly impressed with the improved roads, improved schools, improved homes with many or most of the modern conveniences. Fields have stretched out ahead of the tractor. Ditch banks and hedgerows have given away to modern terracing and laying out of the farms. Lawns are more beautiful. Life is more complex, and yet there is much of the quiet and peace which enwraps the countryside with the beautiful calm and poise of the out-of-doors.

With it all I have come to wondering if the churches have kept pace with the times. I believe that essentially there has been—at least in the sections I have seen—growth in spirit. The Sunday school is thriving, but is it thriving in keeping with the growing age? And by that question I do not necessarily mean that it is too bad to have two or three classes meeting in one large country church auditorium. That is not too good to be sure, but those classes are getting something great and fine; but are those classes sufficient? Are there not many children and young people and elders uncared for in such a situation? And when another room is built is it in keeping with the public classroom or better, and more beautiful? Does not the church—city and country, for the country has developed in the main as far as most of our city churches—need to move up abreast of the times?

I have been impressed with the fact that the leading farmers and the progressive people of these rural communities are devout members and faithful attendants upon their churches. I have been impressed with the prayers of laymen in public services of worship, and the improved singing, the trained ministers, and the number of young people given places of responsibility and leadership. Perhaps I have seen the better side, but I think the rural church is stepping up its program, but even so, I say that all of us should increase our vision of the work of the church, its power and place in any community, and its need of keeping spiritual and material fortresses in the forefront of one of the most vigorous ages with which history is acquainted.

What would the world be like if it were not for the good Christian people in every community? Let us all be alert to help make a Christian community of our world. The spiritual resources of our America are being challenged today greatly. Let us plan our work well and do our best for our Christ and His Church.

ELK SPUR REVIVAL.

The revival meeting at Elk Spur Church, in Carroll County, Va., was uplifting to this writer. From July 13 through the 20th, services were held each night. The attendance was about eighty-five each night until the last of the week. Closing Sunday night with a Communion Service, there were about 115 people present. Reverence and worship filled those present as we took part in that service. Four deacons of the church: Calvin Cole, Andrew Horton, Mrs. Hattie Strickland and Mrs. Lannie Utt, assisted the ministers in this service.

It was good to see six persons join the church on profession of faith and two by letter of transfer. Many took part one night in a consecration service as they knelt at the altar.

Elk Spur is a growing church. It is moving forward with its Sunday school, having 50 to 60 present each Sunday. Bible School is running for two weeks with some of the best work being produced there that I have seen anywhere. This church is paying part of the pastor's salary this year for the first time. The people love their church and are working hard to make the church a vital influence in the community. Paint is being put on the church and the parsonage.

A community sing is held each Wednesday evening. An active Pilgrim Fellowship keeps the young people working.

Back of all of this fine movement is the work of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Gleason, Jr. They are also being assisted by Mr. & Mrs. Robert Avery this summer. One cannot forget the work of Mrs. Everett, Mrs. Gleason's mother, as she is visiting there this summer. These are the busiest people we have in any parsonage. May God bless the work and the workers.

LET THE LIGHT SHINE.

Every true disciple of the Man of Galilee is zealous that the light of the Gospel shall shine in a world made dark by man's wrong doing. The light of Christian faith is a cluster light made up of many lights. It would be tragic for any one of those lights to be extinguished or even to be dimmed. And yet even if one of the lights of Christian idealism failed, its other lights would not automatically cease to shine to light man's way through the darkness of his earthly pilgrimage. Peace is one of the many lights which the Church holds before the world—a light so sadly needed in this day!

God grant that the Church may henceforth ever be true to that light! May that light never cease to shine upon man's pathway. And may the other lights of Christian faith, of which the Church is also the custodian, ever shine with never failing brightness. Every light of the Church is of eternal significance, embodying absolute spiritual values—for instance, the light of forgiveness of sins, the light of personal reconciliation with God, the light of spiritual empowerment, the light of Divine Guidance, the light of personal communion with God, the light of "The Golden Rule," the light of social justice, the light of social service—all these lights embody absolute spiritual values. These have never failed, and, please God, can never fail!

As at creation's dawn God commanded, "Let there be light," so today at the dawn of a new world order God again commands, "Let there be light." And He is depending upon His Church to give humanity the light of truth which the world must have to go on. The prayer of every person who sincerely cares is expressed in our theme, "Let the Light Shine!"

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE COLLEGE'S CLAIM.

Elon College did not beget itself. It was conceived and brought into being by the church. By what was then the General Convention of the Christian Church—later the Southern Christian Convention—now the Southern Convention of the Congregational Christian Church.

Since the founding of the college, the Convention has authorized and directed its every step forward. Whenever a campaign of any kind has been necessary—and that has been frequent—it has been presented first to the Convention for approval and authorization. The present campaign for one million dollars was held up for more than twelve months waiting for the Convention to meet and give its approval or disapproval.

The convention approved. The campaign is in progress but we are far from the goal. The distressing fact is that the million dollars, if we had it, would fall far short of present needs. At present prices it will require more than a million to make the improvements and additions to the physical plant already authorized. It would be short sighted to say the least to make improvements, add new buildings and leave the endowment at the present figure, $368,000.00, which I am sure that you will agree is pitifully small.

In the light of the past and the needs of the present and the future it would seem right to say that the college has a legitimate claim upon the churches of the Southern Convention for its support.

Elon College has had the privilege of matriculating more than ten thousand young men and young women for academic studies. Not all of these graduated but many of them did and many more of them never attended any other college. They are indebted to Elon College for whatever academic preparation they may have had for life. They might have gone to some other college but the fact remains that they didn't. You who attended Elon College may say, "I paid my bills—I don't owe the college one cent." But did you pay the full cost of your education? Really, how much did you pay? Count it up—you might be surprised! Did it ever occur to you that the church and benevolent friends put the building and equipment there; they helped to build the college's endowment; that the church makes an annual contribution of $12,000 for current expenses; that all of these helped to make it possible for the college to offer you the privileges of an education at such a low figure? These facts were not taken into consideration when the cost of your education at Elon College was determined. If you really want to know what you owe Elon College for your education if you will determine what you actually paid (if you received a scholarship add that) and multiply that by two—for no student in a liberal arts college pays more than fifty per cent of the cost of his education—you will have near the total cost of your education in college. Then subtract what you actually paid, add 6% interest compounded to the principle and the total balance will be near what you owe for your education.

It would seem that Elon College in its expansion program has a legitimate claim on its Alumni for financial support. Fellow Alumni, have you obligated yourselves for your share?

Elon is a church college—a private school but it is also a public institution. It serves the public as truly and as faithfully as any tax-supported college and without cost to the tax payers of the state. It has made and is making a significant contribution to the cause of higher education—Christian higher education—and deserves the support of the general public. The country as a whole and the total cause of higher education would be the poorer without institutions such as Elon College.

It would seem that Elon College in its expansion program has a legitimate claim upon the general public for financial and moral support.

In its sorely needed expansion—for buildings, equipment and endowment—Elon College feels that it deserves and is depending on the church (every church in the Southern Convention), her alumni and the general public for support.

BOSLEY GOES TO DUKE.

Dr. Harold A. Bosley, minister of the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, Baltimore, Md., has been appointed dean of the Duke University Divinity School, Dr. Robert L. Flow-ers, president of the University, has announced.

Filling the vacancy created by the sudden death of Dr. Paul A. Root, who would have assumed the position of dean early this summer, Dr. Bosely plans to begin his work at Duke on September 1. Dr. Gilbert T. Rowe has been chairman of the faculty since the resignation of Dr. Harvie Branscomb in August, 1946.

Dr. Bosley, who is well known for his work among young people at college student conferences, has preached at chapel services of numerous colleges and universities including Chicago, Princeton, Stanford, Cornell, and Harvard. He was visiting Professor of Church Ethics at Westminster Theological Seminary, Westminster, Md., during 1945; Visiting Lecturer in the Philosophy of Religion at Crozer Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa., during 1947; and has conducted lecture series at the Pacific School of Religion, Berkeley, Calif., the Pastors' Institute, Chicago, Ill., the Pastors' School of Florida Southern College, the Wyoming Conference, the North-east Ohio Conference, and the Ministers' Conference at Union Theological Seminary, New York City.

Dr. Bosley is a well known author in the field of religious literature, having written numerous articles and three books: The Quest for Religious Certainty (1939); The Philosophical Heritage of the Christian Faith (1945); and On Final Ground (1946). At present a fourth book is being printed and will be published this fall.

In accepting the position of dean of the Divinity School, Dr. Bosley made, among others, the following statement:

"The purpose of a Divinity School is to prepare men for the preaching and teaching ministry of the Christian Church. The ones who are to present the Christian faith from the pulpit and in the classroom need to be as carefully trained as persons in any other profession. We seek to understand and follow the commandment of Jesus to love God with mind, soul, strength, and heart, and our neighbor as ourselves. In a day when reason and truth are doubted or denied, when man's confidence in himself is about played out, when the neighborhood in which we live runs round the earth in all directions—it is far from easy to be an intelligent Christian leader. We pledge the Divinity School to a continuation of its glorious efforts to achieve its goal."

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
July 22, 1947.

Dear Friends:

How many of you are busy at this time with church vacation schools? Memories of the Waverly Bible Schools, the work with children in war-crowded Portsmouth and Norfolk (Clarene Andes met her husband, Bob Harding, doing that work), and the years of teaching in Washington and Virginia are crowding over me now as I experience my first real teaching in China. The South Gate Church is putting on a six-week summer school; my part is teaching two handwork classes every Tuesday; Dick has a double-period English class once a week. I also teach a Junior High English class here at home.

If my former principals and supervisors could visit "my classroom" now, what a shock they'd get! The English classes are in front of the house in a dirt-floored open-air building that was once a Chinese home with mud and plaster dividing it into small rooms. Now it is all one room with the pillars that once divided it making attractive ornamentation. Some of them have elephant heads carved at the top. The blackboard is an old crude door painted black; the chalk bought here in Shaowu, is crumbling and scratchy. The desks are two long high tables with rather rough surfaces; the chairs, the latest design (only centuries old) in convenient furniture. They are square bamboo stools. A makeshift ping-pong net across one table makes good practice in conversation with the paddles and ball right there where the players left them to begin class.

As for the church summer school, each teacher is limited in the time he can give; but all are pitching in to do something at least for the 125 children who come. Many more wanted to come; but a limit had to be set. One group of children have not had the privilege of school so they are getting a taste of school life; others proudly bring their little cloth book bags just as they do to regular school. One little boy has what looks to be a soap chip box swinging from his shoulder; it is a soup powder box from UNRRA.

The time is pretty thoroughly chopped up into small class periods in order to get in everything with the teachers available. And since the weather is so hot and the children small, it's a pretty good idea, except for the handwork. In our thirty minutes we barely get the roll called, materials given out, "desks" arranged for sharing supplies, and the work begun. Out of consideration for me, it's just once a week; but poor kids—what patience they have to have. Last week I invited them to come to my house and finish. What excited little faces greeted me shortly after returning from school! And how happy they were not to have to wait to use crayon or scissors. With my limited language I would go crazy trying to give directions if it weren't for Timothy Jang (or Chang) who stays right by and puts my broken Chinese into good sentences. The children, in their exuberance, chatter away to me as tho' I really understood it all. What pleasure our few crayons have brought them.

And how responsive they are to the few ideas I brought from teaching days in Washington and Virginia. One group made a kind of paper cap with visor today. They were wearing them all over town, saying, "Now, I'm like an American," or "Now, I'm an American." Another group have made paper figures and are now making clothes. Just like American children, they keep asking the teacher, "How's this?" "Is this right?" The Chinese expression is literally, "Is not is?"

In a room a little larger than your front hall, the thirty-two to thirty-eight children are gathered. The building resembles an old barn no longer in use; and the furnishings are in keeping. Two or three share a saw-horse stool and narrow wobbly desk. Usually I have to sidle down the aisles, and not because I'm fat either, for I haven't gained weight. Take one of my former fifth-grade periods, subtract five-sixths of the supplies, divide the work space by four, and change all the children's talk into Chinese (preferably several dialects) and you can picture "our class." Oh yes, one little item of difference that is quite important. The polite children who have to blow their noses or spit will get up and go to the window (handkerchiefs are scarce).

All the children are interested in my little supply box; and all are careful to return every pencil and crayon. We're grateful to Dr. George Shepherd and his wife, Dr. Clara, for sticking a few boxes of crayons in among the old clothes they sent, and for the pencils they thoughtfully included. One period's work is

With the month of November still in the distance, and even before the leaves begin to take on their beautiful fall coat, our thoughts turn to Thank Offering time—a time when we can go “over and above” with our gifts. After all, it’s only when we work the second mile that we have a sense of joy and pride and soul satisfaction.

Perhaps many of you are wondering about the 1947-48 Thank Offering and for what purpose it will be used. As you know, for the past two years, it has been sent to our Shaowu Mission. This coming year, we are helping Shaowu in a different kind of way, by setting aside the funds from Life Memberships and Memorials to educate in the United States a seminary student from Shaowu. So, the Woman’s Convention has designated its 1947-48 Thank Offering to be used to help the Southern Convention build a parsonage for the Superintendent.

Dr. Jesse Dollar, Chairman of the Committee appointed by the Executive Board to proceed with plans for the erection of this home, tells us that the house plans have been approved and ready for contractor bids.

I hope this project appeals to you as it does to me. It should interest everyone—men, women and young people who have the progress of the church at heart. It’s a crying need and merits our support. As Pattie Lee Coghill has said, it can be a real “fellowship” Thank Offering, everyone working together to get the job done in as short a time as possible.

Our goal is $3,000.00 and over. I have the faith to believe that when the women of the Convention get behind this project it will “go over” in a big way.

I have appointed the following committee to work out plans and program for the Thank Offering: Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Chairman, Mrs. W. J. Andes, Mrs. Robert Kimball, Mrs. R. A. Whitten, Mrs. John Truitt.

We solicit your suggestions, your help, and your prayers in making our Thank Offering the largest and best we have ever had.

MRS. O. H. PARIS, Pres.,
Woman’s Convention.

SANFORD.

On the evening of May 2, the date set aside for the May Fellowship Day, the two circles of the Sanford Congregational Christian Church joined in a meeting on the lawn of Mrs. T. G. Proctor for an inspiring program, “The Fabric of Fellowship”—a theme which brought together every denomination and race. The theme was presented with songs and reading of the vastness of God’s love; and a play using characters of various races.

Following the worship service, the members enjoyed a bountiful supper served where, a few minutes before, the service had taken place.

Each member took home with her a lasting impression of the greatness of this problem confronting us today—one which affects our universe.

UNION SOCIETY.

We of the Missionary Aid Society of Union, Southampton, are very happy to report a year of splendid work together. We recently held our August meeting at the home of our president, Mrs. Larry Overby, at which time we reviewed together the things we had accomplished during the past year.

At the beginning of each meeting our spiritual leader, Mrs. Edgar Blythe, has been in charge of a fine devotional service. In keeping with our theme, “The Lord Thy God—and Thy Neighbor,” we have had well-planned programs of missionary prayers, hymns, poems and readings given by different members in our group. These programs have been a great help to us in carrying on our work.

We joined with the churches of Franklin and our community for our World Day of Prayer Service, which was held at our neighbor church, Bethel Friends.

We have given $30.00 for our Friendly Service project in India.

At Christmas time we sent a number of boxes to the sick and shut-ins of our community and county.

We were happy to have one of our members, Mrs. S. M. Joyner, attend the School of Missions at Elon College during the week of June 16th.

During the year, we served two suppers from which we realized a nice sum to be added to our building fund started sometime ago.

Our Foreign Mission study book, India at the Threshold, was reviewed by our president, Mrs. Larry Overby. Mrs. S. M. Joyner reviewed Portrait of a Pilgrim.

We believe we have met all requirements of the Standard of Excellence so far, and are hoping to be among those on the Honor Roll.

NELLIE M. SCOTT,
Secretary.

HINES CHAPEL.

Our society is experiencing another wonderful year. The work of each member and the very fine cooperation of the entire group is gratifying.

We find that having more than one public meeting has proven quite worthwhile. So far, we have had two planned public meetings in the church auditorium; the Thank Offering Service, and the Easter program.

Friendly Service included gifts to Franklinton College, a gift package to Miss Angie Crew in Japan, and also a box is being prepared for the Carroll County Mission. On May 18th, on Sunday afternoon, a number of church members visited the Elon Christian Orphanage, carrying various gifts. This is truly a most wonderful privilege every church member has and should accept—a responsibility to a church institution. Through these personal visits we can see just what our money, our gifts and our prayers are accomplishing. Another interesting project was the preparation of a kit for a child overseas. We have learned that it is more blessed to give than to receive, for when the gifts for the kit were made, there were enough articles for two kits.

The fellowship meeting was in the form of a “Covered Dish” supper in the Madison School cafeteria. A delightful evening was experienced.

Several members of the Society and our beloved pastor, Rev. Mack V. Welch, and Mrs. Welch braved the rain and attended the Spring Rally at the Reidsville Church. It was splendid day of spiritual uplift and fellowship.

The mission study books were reviewed jointly with the Monticello Society. Mrs. Russell Powell and Miss Elizabeth Chicoine were at their best.

At present, the society is planning to give a picnic for the children at the Elon Orphanage. We covet your prayers that our society may continue to grow in favor with both God and man.

FOR THE CHILDREN

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

Dear Editor:

I'd like, if I may, have a very brief bit in one of your SUN pages sometime soon. As you possibly already know, I accepted the job of Cradle Roll Superintendent at the Woman's Convention at Elon, and there are several things I would like to do, right away.

One of these items is about cradle roll mite boxes. Several have asked me about them, and as Cradle Roll Superintendent of our own church here in Asheboro, I have found that children like to play with their boxes. It seems to give them a feeling that they are really their own. The cradle roll boxes put out by our own Pilgrim Press, are so fragile they are always torn up, and sometimes lost. For two yearas, I have been using sturdier ones from another place, and they seemingly pass the test of hard wear. They are small, so we take them up twice a year instead of the usual once. At Christmas time I take new boxes, and a gift for each child, and take up the boxes; then again in June, when we have our annual Cradle Roll Paarty, I take them up, and give out new ones, and another gift.

Mite box No. AC-11—each 5c; doz. 50c; hundred $3.50 may be ordered from the Methodist Publishing House, Box 2058, Richmond 16, Va.

Sincerely,

Dear Editor:

This is our first letter to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We want the other Junior Missionary Societies to know that we have met all the requirements to be on the Standard of Excellence. We have had our monthly meeting every third Sunday night at eight o'clock in one of our members' homes. We have enjoyed our mission study books, and have invited parents and friends to one meeting. We have paid our apportionment. We are having our picnic this week at the beach.

With best wishes,

CAROLYN BUPPERT,
Reporter.

Dear Carolyn:

Please give us the name of your church.

TINKER TAYLOR SOLDIER-SAILOR.

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"What do you think she will be when she grows up?" I asked, gazing at my three-month-old granddaughter who lay in her crib—the sleeping image of my matter-of-fact son.

"A writer," responded her imaginative young mother with assurance. "I've always wanted to be one, but I've never had the necessary time."

This surprising answer recalled to me an incident of my seventh birthday. My father, who delighted in horses, presented me who had hardly ever so much as seen a horse—we lived in a city apartment—with a young pony that was full of fire. He never questioned that his daughter would love all members of the horse family as he did! Now my daughter was making the same mistake, thinking her baby was destined to love the art of writing as her mother did.

How terrified I was of that pony! I sat on his back, held the reins as shown, and made desperate efforts not to fall off. I wanted to please Dad for his fine gift, but the experience was like a nightmare. That evening I heard him say to my mother, "I can't understand Daughter—she takes that pony the way she takes her medicine!"

We must remember that though the child is his parents' offspring he is not a repetition of either of his parents, but is an entirely new individual, with something of many of the ancestors of both his father and his mother in his make-up. He is himself, and the parents' own frustrations and desires should not influence anyone's expectations or treatment of him. To expect a son to follow naturally in his father's footsteps is not right. Even if the boy seems personally cut out for his father's occupation, no pressure should be exerted; the decision should be made by him alone.

How can we guide our children toward choosing a life work wisely? First, study the child from his infancy and be sure that his time is filled with interests. Provide opportunities for him to know about many callings. Perhaps, as the years fly past, he will keep returning to one line of activity. He may show a love for making things, a delight in music, or an outstanding desire to understand machinery. Youngsters often follow one urge and then another—each being of more or less short duration. Today it may be planes, then radio or photography may take the spotlight. A trip to the country may make the work on a farm crowd out other interests. At one time a boy may feel that a sailor's is the only life. However, if he returns again and again to one of these occupations, then we can try to help him to develop that one far enough to judge of its future prospects for him.

Many young people show no special bent. Whether they do or not, we should encourage them to put forth their best effort into all that they attempt—not by scolding, but by showing them how the giving of oneself to a project brings deep satisfaction.

The genius in any direction, though well educated for some other profession—perhaps to be a lawyer or a doctor—returns to the art that demands his energies, probably to suffer materially, but to follow to the end that gleam of the "celestial fire" that he always sees. Had this urge been discovered and heeded sooner, time and unhappiness would have been saved.

The search for talent can be made both at home and at school. At home, we should talk to our youngsters about many callings and let them see the activities that they embrace. Also, we should familiarize ourselves with the new occupations that appear daily in this changing world. In our talks we should emphasize the joy of service rather than the idea of gain. Instead of "How much money can I make?" encourage the question "what have I to give?" Becoming conscious of a great need will sometimes call out latent talents. The young are idealists, and once fired with a purpose will often surprise their elders with their enthusiasm and ability.

By studying these precious ones entrusted to our care, knowing their hearts, constantly supplying interests, we parents gain a competence to guide in the choice of a vocation.

Personal liberty will prove a poor and shrunken thing incapable of satisfying our aspirations if it does not exact as its minimum requirement that there shall be the preservation of opportunity for the growth of personality.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

YOUTH FOR CHRIST, OR YOUTH FOR DELINQUENCY.

The future of our civilization is in the hands of the 73,000,000 church members of the United States.

Youth for Christ, or youth for delinquency, which shall it be? We must realize that American youth alone cannot prevent delinquency. All church people, all patriotic citizens must cooperate.

Our appeal is to American youth to join in the fight for the preservation of their own generation. High-minded, idealistic, Christian youth of all creeds, races and groups, must lead the fight for clean living and high social standards.

Monthly Union Meetings for Young People.

Great impetus would be given to such efforts if all the Christian young people of a city or district were to join in a union meeting once a month as a substitute for their denominational young people's meetings. Such meetings should be led by the ministers, with the active cooperation of the young people, to promote Christian ideals and to oppose the liquor traffic, gambling, indecency in literature and the theatre, all vicious enemies of the church.

Get Scientific Facts Before the People.

Obtain the latest facts in reference to liquor and delinquency. Publish these truths, through news items, plays, radio programs, rallies, contests, public speaking, the circulation of literature, etc. Do not be satisfied with a negative approach—recommend the Christian solution to these problems as the real answer.

Show the Christian attitude in your own life, thus setting a good example in your home and among your associates.

Let all of us talk, work and pray for better conditions and higher standards for youth, since the oncoming generation offers the only hope for a better world.—Margaret J. Rankin, California.

There isn't a thing in Washington which you don't like that you and your neighbor can't change.

SOMETHING TO LIVE BY.

When James A. Garfield was a young man a printed slip was given him by an aged friend which he carefully cherished to the end of his life. It read:

"Make few promises. Always speak the truth. Never speak evil of anyone. Keep good company or none. Live up to your engagements. Never play games of chance. Drink no intoxicating drinks. Good character is above everything else. Keep your own secrets if you have any. Never borrow if you can possibly help it. Do not marry until you are able to support a wife. Keep yourself honest if you would be happy. When you speak to a person, look into his eyes. Make no haste to be rich if you would prosper. Live within your income. Save when you are young. Spend when you are old. Never run into debt unless you see a way out again. Good company and good conversation are the sinews of virtue. Your character cannot be essentially injured except by your own acts. If anybody speaks evil of you, let your life be so that no one believes him. When you retire at night, think over what you have been doing during the day. Never be idle. If your hands can't be employed usefully, attend to the culture of your mind. Read the above carefully and thoughtfully at least once a week."—Selected.

SOCIAL PRESSURE.

A matter of tremendous importance to young people in meeting the alcohol problem is the dominant social pattern of our times which includes the social pressure of the group at least to accept social drinking. So says Dr. George T. Harding, Professor of Clinical Psychiatry, Ohio State University. The importance of this particular pressure is increased by the fact that it comes at a time when the young person is least prepared to meet it.

"I have talked," said Dr. Harding, "to hundreds of students in the University who have told me that they are opposed to drinking, that they accept alcohol only because they are unable to resist the social pressure of their group. Unfortunately, the individual who finds it hard to be in the minority, to resist the pressure of the larger group, is too often the one least able to resist the tendency to become alcoholic. It is the exciting, stimulating, pleasurable surroundings of college drinking, even when it is done in moderation, that makes it a particularly dangerous influence in later life."

DO PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS REALLY WANT OUTSIDE REGULATIONS?

Regardless of the fact that there is strong tradition in this country for the separation of Church and State, the state is going to control the expenditure of funds it authorizes from the public treasury for church schools, if it ever does authorize such use of public funds. Funds for aiding private and parochial schools are going to be wound around with red tape and securely tied by plenty of apron strings to the public treasury. The taxpayers cannot stand for hit-and-miss scattering of public funds—at least, not if they think about it.

Then it follows that some control of private and parochial schools by the government of a given state will develop if state moneys are used to aid such schools in any way whatsoever. Since 1936 the Roman Catholic Church has exerted such influence among the citizens that a few states have voted to subsidize parochial schools at least in one way: transportation of the pupils to and from school by public school bus.

The nation noted that Wisconsin in the 1946 election met the issue squarely with the rejection of an amendment to the State Constitution which would have provided for transportation for the private and parochial school pupils. Massachusetts is facing the same sort of problem, except that in that state there already is a law (1936) authorizing free transportation for these pupils, and Protestant leaders are now getting up petitions to repeal that law. They will have to have 20,000 signatures in order to be allowed to place the issue before the 1947 legislature. Then 5,000 more signatures will be necessary to get the question on the 1947 ballot, should the legislators not support the repeal petition. Kansas legislators recently received a bill providing for public funds for transportation of parochial school children. The matter seems definitely settled in Iowa and yet bobs up every so often. Taxpayers in one township in New Jersey who rebelled against the burden put

WISE WORDS ABOUT WORK.

LESSON IX—AUGUST 31, 1947.

By REV. ROBERT M. KIMBALL,
Guest Editor.

SCRIPTURE TEXT: Proverbs 6:6-11;
18:9; 24:30-32; Ecclesiastes 5:12.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Eccles. 9:10.

During the past five Sundays much of the lesson material has been taken from the Book of Proverbs, which is considered to be a manual of conduct, containing practical suggestions for everyday living. So far we have studied what this Book has to say about parents and their children, purity in heart and life, the evils and dangers of intoxicating drinks, its advice about honesty, and now Wise Words About Work.

The Proverbs were compiled by King Solomon at a time when Israel was enjoying great prosperity and luxury. Wealth and ease had brought vice and attending evils, and in these conditions we have the historical basis for the Book. But as we read the proverbs we realize that while the advice was needed by people in those days, the ideas are just as alive and meaningful for us today. Therefore, let us see what Solomon says about work.

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard: consider her ways and be wise."

There have always been people who are workers and people who seek every opportunity to avoid work. Solomon saw them in his day and we can find them today. Whenever the urge may come to us to shirk a responsibility or neglect our work, it would be well for us to "go to the ant" and "consider her ways." Those who have studied the habits of these tiny insects have discovered that they all have their tasks, they help one another, they work together for the common welfare, and all share equally in the products of their labors. They do it voluntarily, without "guide, overseer, or ruler." Life within the family as well as in the community and the world would be happier if people would learn to work together, if every person would assume his share of the work and responsibility.

"I went to the field of the slothful . . . and lo, it was all grown over with thorns."

It is certainly true that you can judge a man by the kind of work he does. Character is revealed by the quality of our work and the interest and dependability we show in carrying out any task. A lazy man will never be a successful farmer. The weeds will get ahead of him every time.

It is always sad to see a piece of work that has been left unfinished. Many people are eager to undertake new projects, but when the work becomes difficult they give up. Look about your home. Are there jobs you have started and then laid aside because the work was too hard? Consider your church. Have plans been made and committees appointed to do a certain thing? Has the work been begun enthusiastically and then stopped because the workers lost heart and interest? Let us never forget that "It isn't what you start that counts, it's what you finish." We are thankful for every man in the church who can be counted upon to enthusiastically endorse and support every new project of the church, but God bless the man who will work to carry that project through to a successful conclusion.

"The sleep of a labouring man is sweet."

Haven't you discovered that you always sleep best after hard work? Everyone enjoys a day of leisure now and then, but nothing can compare to the peace and satisfaction that comes at the end of a day of hard work when some big task has been completed. Consider how a farmer feels when his crop is harvested or a housewife when spring cleaning is finished; think of the satisfaction which a banker feels when the bank books are closed and balanced, or a surgeon after a difficult operation. It is a great thing to be able to go to bed at night with a clear conscience and the knowledge that you have accomplished something during the day.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

In the Golden Text we discover the secret for finding satisfaction in our work. We'll never enjoy our work unless we really put our heart into it. You have heard the story many times of the men who were mixing cement. Someone asked the first man, "What are you making?" "Twenty dollars a week," was the reply. When the question was put to the second man he said, "I'm making cement." When the third man was asked, "What are you making?" he replied, "I am helping to build a cathedral."

We have got to see something bigger than the task we are doing, or our work will be drudgery instead of joy. A woman must not think of cleaning and cooking and washing and ironing as ends in themselves. She must realize that she is making a home for her family. The man in the factory must see beyond his little job to the great machine being built and the service it will render to mankind.

The humblest task will take an new dignity if we can realize that it is somehow contributing to the advancement of mankind. And when we realize that the work we are doing is really important, then it should naturally follow that we would want to do it well and with our whole heart.

THE TERROR AND SPLENDOR.

tured, half starved, and frozen know it. The bereaved, the overworked, the naturally timid have discovered it. The tomorrow of God, made alive in Christ and by the power of His Spirit, is with us here and now. We can live in it, feed on it, glory in it, and rest in it. It is the glorious liberty of the children of God. It is life—the life that is life indeed. It belongs to those whose lives are hid with Christ in God. This is not our exclusive possession: it is yours; yours for the taking.

Now out of this splendor of living, we have seen afresh the kind of job that is to be done if, for all mankind, the terror is to be overcome, and the splendor seen. We've to go into all the world with good news, and we've to take it not chiefly by professional preachers and in professional language, but through all sorts and conditions of men and in the language that is life as well as speech. We've to go into all the world, into the domains of politics, economics, public administration, education, journalism, the arts and science, where the battle is on. Not glibly suggesting that stubborn technical problems can be solved by piety or amiability, but raising up and sending first-rate men and women into all these fields; technicians, if you like, but persons—persons in whom tomorrow has come; men and women whose conceptions of truth, Justice, mercy, freedom, and charity are Christian through and through: men and women who believe in life because they believe in God and have been saved to serve. This is the new priesthood of all believers: the new missionary vocation of all believers; the new world war of the spirit to which we are called. And while this opens up new mission fields in what we used to call Christendom, our special concern here is still with those lands where millions have had no chance to know who Christ is and what splendor of living means in Him.

As part of this task, we have to do something about those fellowships of Christian insight and experience which we call the churches.

This conference has made us more than ever thankful to God for His gift and creation—the Christian Church. We have seen how, if it had not been for the faith, the worship, and the fellowship of companies of Christian men and women throughout the world, tomorrow would never come to us as individuals. In the congregation of the faithful, often small, poor, persecuted, or in peril, the vision has been given, courage has been bestowed, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ has appeared, bringing wholeness and spiritual peace. Moreover, we have learned afresh that even the smallest and poorest little congregation is never a solitary unity. There is spiritual interaction between it and the whole Church of God; between your parish church or village chapel and the whole Church throughout the world; between each local congregation in this world and the Church of the centuries past; the Church in the heavenly places. Here is the real international, the supranational society

Yet with all this, we have been gravely disturbed about the churches. Physically they have felt the full force of war's destruction. Thousands of buildings have gone. We are twenty million Bibles short. There is a famine in Christian manpower. All over the world the churches are inadequately equipped with resources to do their job as it ought to be done today. Here in the work of the International Missionary Council we are initiating plans on a world scale and on an interdenominational basis to remedy these things. But serious as this is, we are far more worried about the fact that so many people do not know how much alive the Church is meant to be; how rich is the truth entrusted to it; how accessible to it is the spirit and power of God. Some of the people who do not know this, or have forgotten it, are in the Church, as well as outside. They are so near and yet so far from being alive in Christ, vivid members of the most dynamic society and committed to the service of all men through the love and fire of the living God.

Now why does this awful thing happen so that to speak of the Church often suggests only coldness, formality, dullness? I think we have seen the secret of this also while we have been here. One of our most memorable sessions was not originally provided for in the program. In a sense it was "off the record." It occurred when we listened to half a dozen people who are what we call "first generation Christians"—that is, they have not inherited their Christian allegiance but have come into Christianity from non-Christian backgrounds—Islam, Hinduism, modern secularism, nominal Christianity. Don't forget that merely nominal Christian religion. As we listened to these folk, what we all realized is this: there is really no such thing as "second generation" or "third generation" or "fourth generation" Christianity. Oh yes, there are precious inheritances which we cherish if we have any sense. We learn from them and appropriate them and owe more to them than we can ever know; but the real thing—the touch of the living God upon the very mainspring of your life—this has to be a first-generation experience for us all, so that whatever language you use about it, you understand the meaning of St. Augustine's cry, "Thou hast touched me and I am on fire for Thy peace." And the miracle is that this happens. It is happening here and now; it can happen all over the world. It can save mankind into sanity, and fearless, serviceable living, into the community life for which we were born and which, though rich in its present experience, is but a foretaste and assurance of the splendor of eternity.

The proclamation of this Good News to all mankind is our commission and task. It is the real thing that gives point to being alive at a time like this. We who have gathered here are giving ourselves to it afresh. We call you to it also so that by the grace of God men everywhere, disillusioned or despairing, may lift up their heads and say: Nobleness walks in our ways again and we are coming into our heritage."

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

planned around some religious pictures Miss Bascom (see the May 29 issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN) sent. There are enough to give each child one.

Four boatloads of hospital supplies arrived Sunday; so Ed's been having a grand time opening boxes. Another nurse came, too; so expects to have the hospital open, at least for emergencies, any day now. How glad we'll all be when patients won't have to be turned away to die. One patient who would have been in a hospital bed, is still miraculously alive. A snake had bitten his hand; neglect and ignorant doctoring had done their worst when the man came to Ed three weeks later. Gangrene had set in and amputation was needed to save his life. But of course there could be no such operation. However, a "spontaneous amputation" took place, Ed says, and the man with his dangling, useless arm, is doing fairly well.

The work of the School of Missions and Pastors' School you folks had at Elon this past spring sounded grand and inspiring. As you can guess, we were especially thrilled to learn that the Woman's Convention voted to use their Life Memorial and Life Membership Fund for aiding Chinese ministerial students. It's as important to have trained leaders here as to have missionaries, more important, we believe. For we missionaries can never do for China what her own people can and must do. We are here as agents to help them help themselves.

We feel your support of us as strongly as we feel the problems ahead of us.

Affectionately,
DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

One of the eternal conflicts out of which life is made up is that between the efforts of every man to get the most he can for his services and that of society disguised under the name of capital to get his services for the least possible return.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

I am quoting a letter that I received from Mr. C. E. Young, Treasurer of the Men's Bible Class of our Durham Congregational Christian Church, which I think will be of interest to you. I quote:

August 8, 1947,
211 W. Trinity Ave.,
Durham, N. C.

Mr. Chas. Johnston,
Elon College, N. C.
Dear Mr. Johnston:

We assure you it was a great pleasure to donate to the Orphanage the third refrigerator. Enclosed you will find a check for $268.51.

Wishing you the best of luck in the work you are doing such a splendid job of.

Yours in His service,

C. E. Young, Treas.,
Men's Bible Class,
Durham Cong. Christian Church, Durham,
North Carolina.

This class gave this refrigerator because they got a real joy out of giving. Our Durham Church has been one of our loyal supporters for many years and we are grateful.

The orphanage is like a home and family. It seems that there is always a need; something every day. The refrigerators have been amply taken care of. We now need two cook stoves, the large family size. They are very hard to find. Several manufacturers made this stove before the war, but they do not make them. We have found a company that has one left, which we can buy for $130, and the freight bill will probably be eight or ten dollars at it has to come quite a distance. Now, what class will send us a check for $140 to pay for this stove? This is factory cost. When we get this stove, which is the only one this company has on hand as they have quit making this stove, we will try to find another for the other kitchen. We will then be supplied with cooking fixtures, and the matrons who have charge of the kitchen and dining rooms will be happy.

When one need is supplied, another need appears. It is like painting a house inside. After you paint one room the other looks so badly you have to paint all of them to make them harmonize.

We can almost see the end of our repair work. We have put a new roof on the cottage where Mr. Wagoner lives. We have also repainted it on the outside and inside and it looks very pretty. We have one more job to do, and I think that will finish this undertaking.

MRS. VEAZEY PASSES TO HER REWARD.

Mrs. Maude Louise Veazey, wife of Rev. Guy H. Veazey, died at her home in New Market, Va., Saturday, August 16, 1947, following a lingering illness of nearly two years.

Funeral services were conducted in the Bethlehem Church, at Tenth Legion, Sunday afternoon, August 17, by the active pastors of the Valley Conference (Madren, Coulter, Newton, Whitten) and the choir of Bethlehem Church. Following the services the remains were conveyed to the Stiffler's Funeral Home in Columbus, Georgia, where the family and friends met together on Tuesday at 4:00 o'clock P. M. for a brief service before the body was laid to rest in the City cemetery there. Mrs. Veazey was a woman of excellent Christian character, a friend to all who knew her, a devoted mother and a loving wife.

We pray that God will comfort the hearts of her loved ones and friends in the consolation that having laid her burden of suffering down, she has received the crown of life to be forever with the Lord.

SYNAGOGUE TO BE DEDICATED.

The Touro Synagogue in Newport, Rhode Island, the most historic synagogue in America and one of the nation's oldest religious monuments, will be formally dedicated as a national shrine on Sunday, August 31, 1947.

The Touro Synagogue is the first Jewish temple to be honored as a national shrine, and its selection is a fitting tribute to the great tradition of religious liberty in the United States. Newport, itself, is a city of churches, with three Baptist, two Congregational, one Church of England, one House of Worship, and the Jewish Synagogue standing within a radius of two block for almost two centuries.

The Touro Synagogue was the scene of one of George Washington's most famous messages. Appearing in Newport in 1790 at the invitation of Moses Seixas, head of the congregation and a personal friend, the first President delivered the famous lines: "The Citizens of the United States of America have the right to applaud themselves for having given to mankind examples of an enlarged and liberal policy: a policy worthy of imitation. All possess alike liberty of conscience and immunities of citizenship. It is now no more that toleration is spoken of, as if it was by the indulgence of one class of people that another enjoyed the exercise of their inherent natural rights. For happily, the Government of the United States . . . gives to bigotry no sanction."

Early members of the Turo Synagogue Congregation included veterans of the American Revolution and prominent patriots—such as Aaron Lopez, an early colonist who sacrificed his personal fortune to further the revolutionary cause. Ezra Stiles, pastor of the Congregationalist Church at the time the Synagogue was dedicated and later President of Yale University, was among those who attended the dedication on December 4, 1763, and left a full account of that historic event.

Present at the ceremonies on August 31 will be many prominent national figures, the Governor of the State of Rhode Island, the U. S. Senators of the State, and representatives of many religious faiths. Keynote address will be delivered by the Honorable Joseph W. Martin, Jr., speaker of the House of Representatives, and Rabbi David de Sola Pool, of the Shearith Israel Congregation in New York City, will unveil the tablet commemorating the occasion.

In Memoriam

BRIGGS.

Fuller's Chapel Church lost one of its most loyal and devoted members in the passing of Mr. S. W. Briggs. He was a charter member of the church and served as superintendent of the Sunday school for many years. He was always ready with time and money to assist in the work of the church he loved so much. His memory is cherished by all who knew him and he will be greatly missed for it was his custom always to attend the church services.

He is survived by a large family of sons and daughters and grandchildren. These are of his first wife who preceded him many years ago. The wife of his later marriage preceded him November 12, 1944. To those who survive we extend our prayers and best wishes.

E. M. CARTER.

SEABRIGHT.

Mrs. Lula May Boxwell Seabright, wife of Deacon Harry W. Seabright and the mother of Mrs. Orville Hoover (Anna Amelia), died at the Winchester Memorial Hospital Monday morning at 7:00 o'clock, August 4th. Mrs. Seabright had been sick for about two years.

Funeral services were conducted in the church Thursday afternoon, August 7. A large congregation were present to pay the last tribute of respect.

For more than thirty years the deceased had been a faithful member of the Winchester Church, and active in the Women's work. She was kind and gentle in disposition and made friends of all her acquaintances. The church has lost a loyal supporter but her life of Christian service will live in the hearts of us all.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

JOYNER.

WHEREAS, on June 14, God in His infinite love and wisdom, took from Bethlehem Christian Church one of our loyal and beloved members and devoted friends, William J. Joyner; and,

WHEREAS, "Uncle Willie," as he was affectionately known in his community and church was truly loved by all who knew him; and,

WHEREAS, he loved his church and was a charter member of the Taylor Progressive Bible Class, and was always ready to do some kindly deed for others; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we shall never cease to miss his smiling face and kind words.

2. That we extend to his family our deepest sympathy and pray God's richest blessings upon them in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, a copy to the family and a copy be placed upon the church records.

Mrs. ANNIE R. SMITH,
Mrs. J. E. HARRIS,
Mrs. T. A. POOLE,

HARRIS.

WHEREAS, God in His infinite love has seen fit to call to his reward one of our faithful and devoted members, Joseph Fenner Harris, who departed this life May 24, 1947.

Although failing health had prevented his regular attendance at church for quite a while, we felt that Brother Harris was present in spirit and prayer. Now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we extend to the family of Brother Harris our sympathy in our mutual loss and sorrow of one so faithful and true in service to his church and community.

2. That we bow in humble submission to God's will, knowing that our loss is his eternal gain.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be placed upon the church records.

WEST.

On January 1, 1947, Colonel Junius Edgar West, of Suffolk, Virginia, passed from this earth. It is good that the women of the Southern Christian Convention pause for a few moments to pay tribute to the life and honor to the memory of this great and grand man. Colonel West was a man of strong character, determination and wide vision. He loved his church and through his faith, prayers and works, his great influence was realized in her various institutions; foremost in his heart and life was his love for missions, his devotions and loyalty to every cause of our missionary work have been unsurpassed.

In appreciation of the unselfish and magnanimous life that Colonel West lived we would pay our tribute of respect to this valiant leader with the realization that—

FIRST: He was a Christian statesman. For many years keenly interested in things pertaining to State, as Lieutenant Governor, Colonel West was recognized as one of the leaders of the great Commonwealth of Virginia, at all times fearless and determined in his convictions for right and straightforward thinking. He was a legislator and a Christian gentleman.

SECOND: He was a loyal and active church member. His influence and good works will live on in his own church, where for many years he was a member of the Board of Deacons and the beloved and honored teacher of the Philathea Bible Class. He was courageous in his thinking and loyal to his church at large. For many years he was a valuable member of the Board of Trustees of Elon College.

THIRD: He was a great missionary leader. He was chairman of the Southern Mission Board of the Congregational Christian Church for forty years. His great vision, enthusiasm and interest were sources of great inspiration and help to those working with him. As chairman of the committee that set up the Southern Christian Convention Home Mission Fund, he was an ardent supporter of the Christian Missionary Association. Strong churches stand today as monuments to his faith and works. For a number of years he paid the entire salary of the pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, now one of our strongest churches. After the death of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Executive Secretary of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, Colonel West assumed an even greater responsibility and made a most valuable contribution to our mission work at a much needed time.

We, as a missionary group, are grateful for this great character, this servant of God. We miss his inspiration and enthusiasm, his good and wise judgment in our council, we reverence his memory and pray that his mantle will fall on another who may be worthy of such a noble heritage. May we strive to emulate the example of his life by carrying forward the great work to which he was deeply devoted and to which he gave so much.

We recommend that this Convention send to his family an expression of appreciation and gratitude for his beautiful life of service.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. RUSSELL T. BRADFORD,
Mrs. LEON E. SMITH,
Mrs. CLAUD E. ELEY,
Committee.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

upon them by a state statute authorizing the cities to provide the free transportation for the parochial school pupils were unsuccessful before the United States Supreme Court, for by a decision of 5 to 4 on February 10 the Supreme Court ruled that public school tax funds may be used to pay for transporting children to Catholic parochial schools.

Nevertheless, parochial and private schools may well look with favor upon efforts to stop the tide of aid to them through free transportation or in any other way. That is, they should see clearly that some controls will always follow the aid and that, try as they may, their administrators cannot remain supreme in their own bailiwicks if public moneys are forming part of their means of support. The public may rightly come along and make tours of inspection whenever it wishes.

And, while the interference and outside control may not be apparent to parochial school authorities right now, today or tomorrow, it will come. It will surely come. Not long are taxpayers going to allow public funds to be spent to support sectarian schools without wondering just how those schools are run and without insisting upon inspecting them, criticizing them, and maybe changing them in a number of ways. This would indeed be a departure from the tradition of separation of Church and State. That is exactly why the opening wedge of a little public support here and there for parochial and private schools is dangerous all around.

Church Strategy in California

By JAMES W. FIFIELD, JR.
Minister of First Church, Los Angeles

Congregationalism has always been a force for good in Southern California. Its effectiveness has varied greatly, with the competence of its leadership—and with the tides in this church, which furnishes a large part of its strength.

Our Order has not kept pace with the development of Southern California, but yet may come into its real strength here. During 1940 strong pressures were exerted on the Conference Board to have the field surveyed. Some felt that ground was being lost and that opportunity was at hand. Finally, after considerable resistance, a splendid and comprehensive survey was started in November, 1940, and completed in March, 1941. Its findings were made the basis of a new era for our denomination in these parts.

This is destined to be the strongest Conference in all Congregationalism. We ought to be making statesmanlike plans toward that end NOW. As other forces shift toward the Pacific Slope, so Congregationalism well may. The real challenge is to match our opportunity with our vision and courage. The problem is not primarily financial—there will be money for whatever worthy plans are developed.

Assistant Superintendent Rowles reported recently to the Los Angeles Association that our Conference leads the nation in Apportionment Giving which in 1946 increased 61 per cent. During the same year, giving for War Victims increased from $1.05 to $1.89 per capita (83 per cent). The Unit Plan Goal was $6,200, and $7,000 was contributed. Ours is one of the twenty-three Conferences that paid their per capita tax to the National Council in full, at the insistence of Superintendent Dreier.

New residents are moving into Metropolitan Los Angeles at the rate of 15,000 monthly—and into other communities within the Conference in about that proportion. The opportunity and need for statesmanship are NOW. I hope some way will be found to get the strong Laymen of our Conference into active participation in its affairs. Where bodies have the benefit of such direction they have vision, power and commanding influence.

But back of strategy there must be spiritual devotion on the part of each constituent. We cannot share what we do not have. Congregationalists' religion does not get to the molten point often enough!

American Board Seeks Charter

Mrs B F Frank

2-1-48

If the Congregational Christian - Evangelical and Reformed merger goes through in what ways will it be possible for the corresponding boards of the two denominations to combine without loss of any essential interest?

That is a problem to which Board executives of both denominations gave three days of intensive study in Columbus in October. They came away with the encouraging report that several alternative courses had been discovered which would all lead to this result.

But in preliminary investigation of the legal difficulties to be removed, the attorneys for the American Board brought to light an embarrassing situation. The American Board is a Massachusetts corporation, dating from 1812. In common with other Massachusetts corporations of that period it has a charter which can be amended only by special act of the Massachusetts Legislature. And the provisions as to conditions of membership in the American Board are at present in its charter, not in the by-laws. So before any step could be taken at this point the sanction of the legislature would be required. As the legislature meets only every other year this might entail annoying delay.

But the legislature is in session in 1947. So a special meeting of the American Board was called for November 4, 1946, in Boston, in connection with the Plenary Session of the Prudential Committee. At that meeting a carefully drawn petition to the Massachusetts Legislature was authorized. If this petition is granted, it will have the effect of transforming from the Charter to the By-laws, which are subject to direct action by the Board, all provisions having to do with qualifications and election of members of the Board. There is reason to expect that the Legislature will act favorably as precedent exists in the case of the Board of Home Missions, of which the corporate status in Massachusetts is established along these lines.

So, without prejudging the issue of the merger, which is still pending, the American Board is taking the necessary steps to enable it to cooperate promptly if the merger is approved by the negotiating bodies and also to alter its present set-up in any other way which its membership may desire without any longer postponement than may be required through discussion among all its constituents. No By-law will be adopted, of course, until such discussion has occurred. The existing arrangements are continued indefinitely. But the road is being opened for revision if that should ever appear desirable by democratic procedure within the Board itself, without need of state action to sanction it specifically.

RUSSELL HENRY STAFFORD, President.

RESETTLEMENT OF PUERTO RICANS.

By DR. MARK A. DAWBER, Ex. Sec'y,
Home Missions Council of North America.

The recent flood of Puerto Rican immigration into New York City—now reaching well over 2,000 a month—is a sharp reminder to Americans that Puerto Rico is stifling with overpopulation. The ratio of 1,600 persons to one square mile of arable land is one of the highest in the world. Vast sugar plantations have absorbed a large part of that land which would otherwise be used for subsistence farming. Puerto Ricans are being pushed off their island by the pressure of unemployment, landlessness, and sometimes actual starvation.

Little wonder then, that airplanes bring in new loads of Puerto Rican immigrants daily. New York is experiencing the largest mass immigration since the Quota Laws were established. It would be ill-advised to try to stop this immigration, even if they were the legal means to do so. One million people have got to leave the island of Puerto Rico if our Caribbean possession is to have a stable and prosperous society.

If we let this Puerto Rican immigration pile up in the "port of entry," New York City, Puerto Ricans will find that the lack of jobs and housing will become increasingly acute. Already there have been instances reported of 20 men, women and children inhabiting a four-room apartment. Although they are now finding jobs in the garment trades and domestic service, there are just so many jobs in New York City and the limit will soon be reached.

Americans must help these immigrants to resettle in American society and make it possible for them to contribute to the general welfare.

Protestant missions have pointed the way toward a sense-making program for the resettlement of Puerto Ricans in America, both through missions work on the island of Puerto Rico and in New York City.

Puerto Rican missions work has emphasized education for public health and soil conservation. The Puerto Rican government bought land from the large sugar plantations and distributed it among the farmers. Through an interdenominational rural reconstruction and rehabilitation program, sponsored by the Home Missions Council of North America, the Protestant churches are helping these farmers to make the best use of their land through diversified farming and other modern agricultural methods.

Beyond that, however, work has been in education. English language mission high schools, working in close cooperation with the Government's educational system, give courses in agriculture and various mechanical trades. The Polytechnic Institute at San German, Puerto Rico, originally under Presbyterian auspices and now interdenominational, gives courses in liberal arts at the college.

These educational institutions not

LETTER FROM TOSHIO SATO KATO FROM JAPAN.

Many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN have wondered about the welfare of Toshio Sato, Japanese Christian Church young woman, who attended Elon College and graduated in 1920 as valedictorian of her class. She returned to Japan and married, her husband having attended the University of North Carolina. Toshio has a host of friends in the Southern Convention, and we print this letter received by Miss Lucy Eldridge, a classmate of Toshio's at Elon. Toshio's spirit of helpfulness to her country and people of Japan is touching, and she strengthens our belief in the lasting value of the Christian witness. It would inspire her to hear from her friends in America, and her address will be found at the bottom of the letter.

Wakuya, Japan,
August 1, 1947.

Dear Lucy:

Miss Angie Crew wrote and gave me your address. I bet you can't imagine how glad and happy I was to hear from her again, and to know that you still thought of me well enough to ask her about me.

Well, thankful that the war is over, and I'm writing you again! It seems like a long, horrible dream to me but every one of my family is alive and recovering from the shocks of bombings.

Just before the first Christmas after the war I met a soldier going back to the States. He promised to take messages for me, and I gave him your address, also several more. And sometime after that I sent you a card to let you know that we were alive and working just as hard as a donkey. During the war I had to run away from Kobe to Tokyo and from Tokyo to the country way up in Northern Japan where I was born. The name of the place is Wakuya and as you see I'm still living at the place. My husband remained in Tokyo and after the last bombing he got a very serious heart trouble and once no doctor thought he could pull up through. Of course I had to work hard to take care of my two younger boys who ran away from Tokyo with me and help him too while he was sick. He is now almost well but still under doctor's care.

Our oldest son—he was about 12 years old when you visited us in Kobe—was called up to join the Army just one month after he entered the Tokyo Imperial University. He mostly stayed in Jawa and returned home last June a year ago. He said he did not have to fight at all and believe I'm glad of it too. He came back home with a bad health but now he is back in the University, staying with his father. We are supposed to move back to our Tokyo home but we lost nearly everything we had and the house too.

The food situation in Japan is a very serious one and I've to work very hard to get even rice. Ice cream, candies, coffee, or cakes are the dreams of the long ago-past. To feed and clothe the boys warm enough is the hardest burden of my life now.

Soon after the war was over, the U. S. soldiers came up to the northern part of Japan, too. At first Japanese people were very much afraid of them and tried their best to stay away from them. I knew better so I volunteered to be a service to them. One of the very things they badly needed was a place to do their laundry service. I knew a quite large drying cleaning and laundry shop in Sendai city (biggest city of Japan where Christian church used to be) and helped the work there. To go to this city it takes me three hours to go and three hours to come back but I thought the time was here for me to do my best to show my appreciation for what you Americans did for me while at Elon. I was very happy for the chance.

Last September I moved to the dry cleaning and laundry room HQ IX Corps building. From 5:00 A. M. to 8:00 P. M. every day except on Sunday I am away from home, and the two boys help with the house work whenever they are at home. You see they too go to their school.

Now I must close this time and write you again.

Till I write you again, with lots of love,

Yours,

Toshio.

My address is: Mrs. Toshio Sato Kato, Shiroyama, Wakuya-mura, Tota-gun, Miyagi-Ken, Japan.

VIRGINIA COUNCIL EXECUTIVE REPORTS.

"Unless America increases aid to the impoverished Europeans, hundreds of men, women and children will die of cold and hunger, and the political tensions that now appear dangerous will increase throughout the continent."

This is the report of the Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Jr., executive secretary of the Virginia Council of Churches. Mr. Robison returned on August 24 from a 55-day tour of England and the continent as a representative of four large religious organizations.

"Europeans are bravely digging their way out of the ruins of war, but they have a long way to go before their countries become homelike again," the church executive said. "The task is a difficult one because the ruins are spiritual as well as material."

Only in Switzerland did Mr. Robison find any thing like an adequate supply of necessities of life, such as food, clothing, medicine and tools of work.

"Industries are running at a fraction of their pre-war capacities," he reported. "All crops are poorer than last year. Germany, once the industrial center of Europe, is in shambles. In some lands, notably Poland and Greece, an alarming proportion of children have tuberculosis. Hospitals are barely half-filled, because medicines and bedding are lack-

THE DISCIPLES OF UNION.

The third world convention of the Disciples of Christ was held this month in Buffalo, N. Y. Reports indicate that church union was one of the predominant themes of the convention. Dr. Roger T. Nooe, one of their leading ministers of Nashville, Tenn., declared that "competitive denominationalism, when we are asking for a cooperative world, mocks our efforts." He then went on to say: "If peace be indivisible, the hour is come to set our own house in order. Let the world catch the contagion of its spirit from us as individuals and from the church. Divided minds can do little to unite the world. Spiritually split personalities are poorly prepared to bridge chasms between races and nations. Religion itself is split wide open when it is departmentalized, and is content with solemn assemblies, new moons and appointed feasts and days, having no voice in the market place and star chamber and no vision where the people perish."

Dr. Hampton Adams of St. Louis, president of the convention, spoke in the same vein. He declared: "The unity of the church by the leading of the Holy Spirit is growing. Recall the unions of the Evangelical and Reformed churches, of the United Church of Canada, of the Methodist churches and of the Congregational and Christian churches. Within the next two or three years we almost certainly shall see the consummation of union between the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian Churches. This will bring into one body four historic communions. Anticipating this union, I hope our convention will take action looking forward to conferences with that new united church for the purpose of discussing the possibility of our brotherhood's becoming a part of that growing body of unity."

The hope of the president was embodied in a resolution which was approved by the Convention. The resolution stated that the United Church, when formed, will "bring together four historic communions of diverse history, doctrinal emphasis and ecclesiastical policy, manifesting that there can be unity in diversity."

The Disciples of Christ desire a share in the growing body of unity. This is one of the creative movements of our age. It is a great privilege to witness it and have a part in it. Thanks be unto God who has matched us with this hour.

REPORT ON WORLD CHRISTIANITY.

The first world-wide survey of the state of Protestant and Orthodox Churches since the war has been published by Morehouse Gorham, Company, under the title "Christianity Today." Sponsored by the American Committee for the World Council of Churches, the survey was made by 44 authorities on Christian faith and order in all parts of the world under the general editorship of Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, Secretary of the Committee.

In his foreword to "Christianity Today," the Archbishop of Canterbury states that "an evident condition of a fuller cooperation of the churches of our Lord throughout the world is at least a rudimentary knowledge of what these churches are, what they are doing, and how they fare in a critical period of the world's life."

The contributions of the various authorities are noteworthy for their emphasis on political and social problems affecting the growth of the churches, as opposed to discussion of dogma. "Hispanofilo," the Spanish correspondent for the survey forced by circumstances to use a pen name, sees "an imperative need for a strong, aggressive Evangelical Church in Spain" to minister to those "many people who are seeking spiritual help outside the Roman Church." Doubting that there is more than "a slight risk" that Communism would gain control under a resoration of the Spanish Republic, "Hispanofilo" declared that "a moderate Republican government would insure religious liberty for all." A resoration of the monarchy, however, "does not encourage optimism."

Particular attention in the survey is given to the progress of the "Younger Churches" of Asia and Africa and the Pacific. According to Dr. John W. Burton, President-General, Methodist Church of Australasia, on many islands in the South Pacific "the entire European missionary staff was either withdrawn by the military authorities or else carried off by the enemy. The native churches had to stand on their own feet, and they stood nobly." There follows a list of the names of 17 teachers, stewards, and members of one mission station who were shot or beheaded during the war.

In Africa "political restrictions based on color are a rock of offense in the past of African evangelization." Hence the churches there are attempting to build an "all-embracing church which is fully interracial." "The growth of such a church would do more than any other single factor to heal the racial divisions of South Africa," it was stated by Edward W. Grant, former secretary of the Christian Council of South Africa.

Reporting on the state of the church in Russia, N. S. Timasheff, Professor of Sociology, Fordham University, states that government-sponsored anti-religious propaganda was toned down during the war and the League of Militant Atheists is in a state of "suspended animation." Although the Orthodox Church has gained legal status, Dr. Timasheff writes that "religious tolerance is, however, not only something short of religious liberty, but it is also more precarious." In discussing the ecumenical relation of the Russian Orthodox church with the churches of other countries, Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, questions whether Russian members, if they joined the World Council of Churches, "would be prepared to discuss, in an atmosphere of freedom, what Christianity means for economic policies, for international relations, for the rights of minorities, ecclesiastical or political, for freedom in the utterances of personal conviction."

American protestants, according to Dr. Walter M. Horton of Oberlin School of Theology, are "facing a more radically secularized and perilous situation and are more deeply conscious of the need for radical religious renewal, than was the case a generation ago." Dr. Horton considers this secularization a greater danger than "the threat to our Protestant liberties from Catholicism and Communism." Americans are reminded that missionaries are not the only ideological export sent to other shores. William James Hughes, Anglican Bishop of the Barbados, reporting from the British West Indies, gives the following illustration. "A planter told a man of African descent that when his ancestors came from Africa, they had no God. The African replied, 'That is true, they had none, but they have learnt to worship and serve your God—money'."

regularly all services, does not wait to be coaxed into doing whatever he is capable to promote the program of the church. He puts forth his best efforts, taking the attitude that:

If you cannot on the ocean
Sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the highest billows,
Laughing at the storms you meet;
You can stand among the sailors,
Anchored yet within the bay,
You can lend a hand to help them,
As they launch their boats away.

He realizes that people's talents differ greatly, and though his own may be few and small he puts them into use. He despises not small things and waits not for deeds of greatness that he may do, but is true to the many duties ever near. The layman should accept the responsibility of leadership wherever there is need; he should look always for the best in life's changing conditions, in every individual, in every undertaking. He should be lenient and generous toward those of outstanding faults and habits, remembering that we all have faults of greater or lesser degree. Galatians 6:1 — "Brethren, if any man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." When harmful rumors are afloat, the layman should do his part in helping to correct and stop them, using tact and kindness, mindful of the fact that most of us are prone to talk and criticize too much. In this connection may I read here a few lines in rhyme that suggested themselves while I was thinking upon this subject.

You have faults, and I have faults,
There's not a doubt about it;
I make mistakes, you make mistakes,
We can't get by without it.

You say things, and I say things
That should be left unsaid;
I criticize, you criticize,
When we should praise instead.

There's good in you, there's good in me,
But in us all there's badness;
And with your best, and with my best,
We'll build for good and gladness.

You have talents, I have talents,
The question, Do we use them?
Or hide away, and dream and play,
Neglect them and abuse them?

You've a work to do, I've a work to do,
And we, ourselves must do it;
You fill your place, I fill my place,
And God will see us through it.

The Layman's Responsibility In the Community.

Extending from the church far out into each community, the layman's responsibility in helping to establish righteousness is never diminished. There are always the sick, the lonely,

The Layman's Responsibility

Address by MR. KEYSER T. ROTHGEB at the Virginia Valley Central Conference*

First, I wish to say that I deem it a compliment and an honor to be invited to address this body as a representative of the Laymen of the Virginia Valley Central Conference. In writing me about this matter, our president stated in his letter, "I think we should have at least one layman to give an address to this session of our conference, and I am asking you to do this. There will be only one address given by a layman." This is why I feel honored, knowing there are so many who could take this part much better than I. At the same time I am made to realize my weakness and inability, and am aware that it is quite an assignment. But I am glad that it is my privilege to be here to represent the laymen.

For my subject I have chosen, "What Responsibility Does the Layman Have in Helping to Establish Righteousness in the Nation." The scripture reference used in this connection is taken from Proverbs 14, "Righteousness exalteth a nation." And as you have noticed on the Conference programs the conference theme is "Abiding Values."

What is a layman? Our good friend, Webster, says that a layman is "one of the people, as distinguished from a professional man." And may I emphasize in the beginning, that while the word layman is usually spoken and written in the masculine gender, it applies with equal meaning to the feminine, especially so in these modern times. Therefore, these remarks are applicable to you ladies as much as to the men. If I may elaborate a bit on Webster's definition, I would say, take out the doctor's, lawyers, teachers, preachers, specialists, nurses, professors, technicians, experts, scientists and "Atom Busters" and what is left will be the laymen. Some years ago when I came into the world my parents chose the name of a prominent doctor, and M.D., for my first name, and that of an eminent minister, a D.D., if you please, for my middle name. Of course they must have thought that I would be a doctor or a preacher, but I turned out to be neither. I'm just a layman.

Out of the scores of responsibilities a layman has in helping to establish righteousness in the nation, time forbids mentioning more than a few, so in order to bring the subject down to more of a working basis let us consider first—The Layman's Responsibility in the Church.

First, he must realize that he is a part of the church; that God has arranged in His great plan for His work to be supported and extended on earth through human instrumentality, and each individual has a part to play; that he must assume responsibility for that part and no else can take it for him. Some folks seem to be under the impression that the pastor and a few church officials are supposed to do the entire work of the church. They say, "That's what we pay the preacher for, and that's what we elect the officers for." Such an attitude of course is a hindrance to the progress of the church, and has no place in the mind and heart of an active, consecrated laymen. Out of this group called laymen must come the church officials, the teachers and officers of the Sunday School, the officers and leaders of the Christian Endeavor Society, the Missionary Society and all other organizations and activities of the church. The layman who desires to have the "Abiding Values" in his own heart and life and to keep them alive and growing in his church, is always alert to her needs. He cooperates willingly and gladly with the pastor and officers; he is eager to be of service; he gives of his time, of his means. He attends

SUFFOLK LETTER.

For thirty years or more I have heard of the Georgia and Alabama, and the Alabama Conferences. A long time dream of seeing these good people, and their great country has now been realized. For nearly a week John and I have been in the heart of this old Christian Church section. We are now in Wadley, Alabama, where I am assisting in a union meeting, preaching in a Baptist Church with the Methodists and Congregational Christians cooperating. We are most hospitably housed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John T. Gibson—a Christian host and a Baptist hostess. Every convenience of a lovely home is ours.

We are being told that the largest congregations in many years are turning out to greet the Suffolk, Virginia, minister; and at any rate the people are most appreciative of the services which I am trying to render in the name of the Christ. I am greatly impressed with the sincere, devoted people of this section. And I can see why we are pleased with the excellent ministers that have come to Virginia and North Carolina from these parts. I have just called on the parents of Mrs. Jesse H. Dollar, and yesterday I called at the home of the Rev. G. D. Hunt, who accompanied us to the old New Hope Church—home of the Christian denomination in Alabama. With us were Dr. and Mrs. J. T. Clack, and their sister, Mrs. Thyra Swint. We visited the church and I knelt in prayer at its altar, and thought of the Elders, the Smiths, the Mannings, the Dollars, the Hunts, and many others whose names are household words in the former Christian Church.

From this country and nearby came our present honored and faithful president of Elon, Dr. Leon E. Smith. Yesterday I rode by the old farm home where Dr. H. W. Elder was born, and looked on the fields which were plowed by Dr. J. W. Manning of the Christian Temple when he was a boy. Just outside of the town of Wadley is the old home of Rev. E. M. Carter, and next door the home of his brother, J. J. Carter, who is a layman of great strength in this community and in the Wadley Church. Also this is the land of the Rev. G. O. Langford, and Mrs. Langford. It is the home, too, of Southern Union College, a school of tremendous value to this whole section. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is read in these parts, and our institutions are loved by these people.

From these hills came several of our ministers: Dr. G. O. Langford, Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, Rev. W. Millard Stevens, Rev. Carl C. Dollar, Rev. M. A. Pollard, Rev. Joe A. French, Rev. Roy A. Coulter, Rev. E. M. Carter, Rev. R. A. Whitten, Rev. Guy H. Veazey, Rev. Chaplain W. W. Elder, who made such a fine record in the U. S. Navy, and is now pastor of our Lanett Church near here, and others. One is impressed with the fine type of Christian character and culture found here. I wish there were space to speak of many things that have inspired us while on our visit to this section. This much I can say: The entire Christian family can be proud of the kind of homes and people found in our fold in Alabama and Georgia.

LABOR AND THE SOCIAL IDEALS.

The ethics of Biblical religion is based upon the infinite worth of the human being, justice between all men, brotherhood, benevolence, mercy, equal rights and opportunities for the least among us, and the good society, i. e., the Kingdom of God.

Labor battles today for a living and a saving wage, the right of organizing, which means the worker has the right to have a say about his contribution in terms of skill and producing power, for security for his family against the perils of unemployment, for time to live and enjoy life outside wage earning hours. The battle for unionization is a battle for democracy in industry, for the welfare of the millions who labor for wages, for the man before the dollar. Labor's century-long drive for a living wage and the right to bargain is the greatest effort in human history to emancipate man from poverty.

The Federal Council of Churches adopted a series of ideals in 1912, reaffirmed them and enlarged them at Cleveland in 1919. All the great denominations have adopted them, and both Jewish and Catholic authorities have adopted like ideals.

In summary, they are: equal rights for all men in all stations of life; abolition of child labor; abatement and prevention of poverty; protection of the workers from all occupational hazards to life, limb, or health, and against unemployment; the right to a job and to organize; the use of conciliation and arbitration; the fewest hours and greatest leisure possible; security against hazards such as unemployment, injury, and old age; a basic living wage; the highest wage industry can afford; the most equitable division of the profits of industry that can be devised; against class domination; for constructive democracy in industry; the sharing of shop control and management; legal minimum wages; profit sharing and progress toward cooperative ownership.

Jesus prophesied that if the church was built upon the solid rock of His teachings, the gates of hell could not prevail against it. Where it has been so built, or the extent to which it has been so built, the gates of hell—that is, evil and injustice—have not prevailed against. But it has not always been so built. For the first 200 years it succeeded well against the opposition of a pagan world. Then it took too much of the world and its ways into partnership, and has all too often narrowed its ethical insistences on individualistic morals to the neglect of social ethics; in other words, it has prevailed mightily in its personal evangel but failed dismally with its social evangel. For millenniums it supported slavery and feudalism; it has confined its battle on poverty to charity, and allowed the monetary contributions to its laudable enterprises to stifle its commission to right wrongs done the poor, the wage earner, the minority groups, and to bring in the Good Society of justice and good will which Jesus and the prophets meant by the Kingdom of God—a society of brothers under a common Father.

The "social ideals" enumerated by the leaders are adequate but they have not percolated down to the rank and file in the pew.

MISSION BOARD NOTICE.

The Mission Board of the Convention will hold its annual session at the Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Virginia, September 17-18, 1947. The meeting will begin at 2:00 P. M. on the 17th and will conclude at noon on the 18th. Any church, ministers, or individuals having business with the Board are requested to communicate at once with Superintendent Wm. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C.

H. S. HARDCASTLE,
Chairman.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

1947-48.

On Tuesday, September 2, the 58th annual session of Elon College will open. In some respects this will be the most unusual opening in the history of the College. It will open with the largest enrollment certainly within the past sixteen years, if not in its entire history. Counting specials, there will be more than eight hundred matriculated students. This is considered more unusual since equally as many more have sought admission whom we have been compelled to refuse for the lack of rooming space and teaching personnel.

The College will open with a larger faculty than in any previous session. During 1946-47 there were 36 members of the faculty; for 1947-48 we have added six full members: Dr. Hoff in science, Dr. Sloan in Christian education, Mrs. Howell on the library staff, Mrs. Stoffer comes as social dean who will have charge of the social programs for the college and will assist Dean Hardy and Dean Bowden. This is an entirely new position and we think it will add much to the campus. Mrs. Sloan will assist in the English and Spanish departments, and Mrs. Hoff will assist in the department of mathematics. Two of these additions to our faculty have their Ph.D. degrees, one from Cornell and the other from Northwestern. Three have their master degrees from outstanding universities and the other has had long years of experience in teaching voice, and in social and religious activities of the campus.

Unusual efforts have been put forth to make sure that the buildings and grounds are in readiness for the opening. The grounds are in excellent condition. Ladies' Hall has been completely redecorated. Two additional baths have been installed, the floors sanded and refinished; there is new furniture (except beds) in all rooms. Considerable improvement has been made in West Dormitory. The first floor rooms and halls have been sanded and refinished. Some new furniture and rugs have been added with runners in the halls and on the steps leading to the second floor. The second and third story floors have been put in order. Both halls have been painted and some rooms where needed. All other dormitories and buildings have received careful attention and will be ready for the opening on September 2.

Twelve to fifteen new Bendix automatic washing machines will be installed for the convenience and use of all students. A student may have her or his laundry done for twenty-five cents. This is an experiment but it is thought that it will be a helpful and popular one.

The College is having three all-weather tennis courts constructed and all athletic fields have been greatly improved.

The most unusual sight that will greet the new student body on its arrival, of course, will be the beginning of the Expansion Program. The heating plant is under construction and it is hoped will be completed by January 1948. This is the first unit in our building program which includes the gymnasium, the dining hall and four new dormitories.

PUERTO RICANS.

only equip younger Puerto Ricans with the skills needed for jobs in the U. S., but give students a familiarity with customs and institutions which they need as immigrants to America.

The tremendous potentialities of a resettlement program for Puerto Ricans, once they have arrived in the United States is indicated, among others, in the work of the First Spanish Evangelical Church of the New York City Mission Society, located at 52 East 102nd Street, New York City. Under the leadership of Rev. E. N. Rodriguez, the church members have developed an exchange for jobs and housing. Classes in English are given three times a week, with an average attendance of 40, for those who did not receive a high school education in Puerto Rico.

The problem of child care in the East Harlem community is particularly pressing, since the jobs which immigrant men and women receive usually do not pay enough to allow the family to live with only one member working. To assist working mothers, the church has developed an extensive children's program, including a vacation play school attended by 180 youngsters, and a summer camp experience under the auspices of the New York City Mission Society. Over 600 children from the church will be attending the camps this year.

The lack of care for very young children whose mothers work has led to plans for setting up a nursery school in a nearby building under the auspices of the church.

Italians, Negroes and Puerto Ricans are packed together in the comparatively small area of East Harlem. Overcrowding creates tensions and frictions which Rev. Rodriguez and the members of his church are trying to overcome. The doors of the First Spanish Evangelical Church are open to everyone and many of the services are conducted in English for the benefit of the Italian, Greek, and Negro members of the congregation. The choirs of the Spanish church exchange with other Protestant churches in the area, Italian, German, Lutheran and Negro. Rev. Rodriguez has shared his pulpit not only with Rabbis but with a Japanese Buddhist. Courses in community living have included group trips to the fire department, police department, local hospitals, schools and museums.

Through these specific actions, the church has made every effort to give recent immigrants from Puerto a sense of "belonging" in American society and not of being shut up in a hopeless Puerto Rican ghetto within the city precincts.

These programs, both in Puerto Rico and in New York, are simply the spade work for what must be a much larger program. The resettlement of hundreds of thousands of Puerto Ricans cannot be handled at all adequately by private agencies. Plans are now being considered in Congress for the resettlement of 500,000 Puerto Ricans in Argentina. Regardless of the outcome of this plan, however, the United States will be confronted with the resettlement difficulties of Puerto Ricans for many years to come. Adequate planning must be made by the Federal government in cooperation with private agencies, industries, and community organizations throughout the country. Such a program, carried out with respect for the great potentialities of Puerto Rican citizenship, will put a minimum of strain on the American social and economic order.

If there is no planning, however, no advisory service or effort at constructive resettlement and distribution, the flood of Puerto Rican immigration will create congestions and tensions that will take us straight into another minority problem, into all the hatreds and bitterness that play havoc with the American social order. We must and we can avoid the creation of another minority by taking action—now.

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

Shaowu, China,
Easter Sunday, 1947.

Dear Friends:

An important event was the arrival yesterday of Mr. Chandler. He is a veteran of North China, who is acting as one of the Board Secretaries in Boston during the last few years, and is now out with his wife in Foochow for a last short term before retirement. His duty is to inspect and coordinate the work of all the churches in Fukien, giving us younger hands some of the benefit of his North China experience. Of course, the Shaowu area is part of his field, and he originally had wanted to make the trip up here with the Jacksons when they came. But it occurred to him that they would be busy setting up house and studying the language the first two or three weeks, and would have more time for visiting the churches and tackling the church problems if he waited awhile. And for awhile it looked as if he would have a good chance to come up with Dr. Yao and the CNRRA supplies, in the dependable CNRRA trucks—an important consideration in these days of dangerous roads. But Dr. Yao kept delaying and postponing, and finally Mr. Chandler gave up waiting for him and started out on his own. We received a telegram saying that he had started, and were afraid he was going to try to make the trip from Nanping on by bus, the way the Jacksons came, although we had repeatedly warned him by letter not to do that. But yesterday he arrived, in good shape and relaxed after a pleasant trip. It seems that he had taken launches up the river, past Nanping, to another town by the name of Yankou, and then had chartered a Chinese boat from there on to make the remaining eighty miles of river—mostly rapids—in only four days. That made it as quick as the average bus trip these days, somewhat cheaper, and infinitely safer and more comfortable. In the old days, the boat trip used to suffer from bandit attacks, but none bothered him. So that seems to be the ideal way to make the trip. He was only eight days en route. Unfortunately, if there is any baggage to be brought one cannot take advantage of the launches; and the trip is apt to take from two weeks to a month. At any rate he is here, and is sure a sight for sore eyes. He will stay here for two weeks and go over the local situation with Dick and the pastors. Then he and Dick will make a walking tour of the other towns of the North Fukien area where there are churches, before he goes back to Foochow.

The next event that gave my spirits a boost was something that I had been looking forward to with dread. My language teacher and interpreter left just recently for Shanghai, and I have been on my own in the clinic for past three days. But I have been no end amazed and delighted to find that both my nurses, although neither of them speaks a word of English, are so clever and resourceful at translating my brand of Mandarin that I am getting along with the translation of patients' talk as well or better than when my interpreter was here. I say better, because the nurses have enough medical background so that they elicit a more accurate history, and give the patients more accurate instructions than my teacher was able to do, because he did not know anything about medicine. So I am facing the immediate future with considerably more confidence because, with the nurses skilled as they are, I think the patients will get as adequately treated as they were before, and I think I will learn the language even faster.

I looked over the last hundred records of the 303 patients I have seen to date, to see the trends of the more recent days. The variety and severity of the medical conditions continue unabated. There is a little dropping off of the respiratory diseases, and a temporary dropping off of the malaria—because the flare-up of quartan spring relapses is over, and the mosquitoes have not started biting yet to give new infections. I saw my first case of what I thought was appendicitis, but heard later that the patient got well just on bed rest, without an operation; so surgery still doesn't seem to be too urgently needed. I also had the impressive experience of having a patient whose husband has been treated for syphilis and who is expecting a baby in three months, insist on being given a very expensive prophylactic course of penicillin, to protect her unborn child from congenital syphilis. In the absence of a reliable blood test, that is the latest advice I would give an American patient, in view of the latest results of its use in the various kinds of syphilis. But here in this remote spot was a wealthy Chinese lady, insisting on the very latest and best in Western medicine for herself. Perhaps that does not sound as impressive to you as it was to me, but most of the patients, naturally of course, do not think in lofty scientific terms. The average Chinese, like many Bostonian or New York clinic patients, will come in the one time, looking for a miracle medicine for his ailment, and will not bother returning for the lab tests, followup observations, etc., just because I happen to think there is a good scientific reason for doing things that way.

I also saw, last week, my first two cases of typical beri-beri. They were both in the same family, although one was the typical "wet" type, and the other was typically "dry." This has been another surprise, because I had expected to see far more evidence of vitamin and nutritional deficiency than I have come across so far. The

THANK OFFERING.

The following letter, written to Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, chairman, in regard to our Thank Offering this fall is one which might have special appeal to you, since it comes from one of our Secretaries on the Foreign Mission Board, and a special friend of ours:

Dear Graham:

I have your letter and want to wish you every success as you plan the Thank Offering service. What do I think about it? I feel sure that building a home for the Convention Superintendent will have a special appeal. It will help to undergird our whole work. The mission of the church begins in strengthening the churches themselves. This means a strong program of Christian education among children, young people and adults. Any good Christian education has as its very center missionary education. I have always thought that when you develop missionary persons, missionary giving just naturally follows.

Anything which makes the local churches strong so that they have good worship and preaching services and a sense of real stewardship, strengthens in proportion the whole cause of missions at home and abroad. The churches must be vital, dynamic Christian "centers," sensitive to their own spiritual growth with arms of service reaching out to others.

I also feel, Graham, that it is a good time to secure a parsonage while money is a little more plentiful. It is surely a cause which will enlist the interest of men and young people as well as the women. It can be a real "fellowship" Thank Offering. In the long run, it will put us in a position to better help the whole church enterprise. Providing a home for the Convention Superintendent will give us a sense of security as we face the future. This is something of the feeling all across the country. I can't tell you how many states have bought, or built, parsonages for the Superintendents within the last three years, using the "state" part of the "benevolence dollar" to do it.

I feel that this is a part of "beginning in Jerusalem" which extends "among all nations."

Sincerely,

Pattie Lee Coghill.

SUPERINTENDENT'S HOME.

That beautiful word "home" appeals to us all, and especial to us women. Perhaps it is significant and proper that the women of the Southern Convention should launch an effort to build one for our superintendent by making our Thank Offering this fall for that purpose. I believe in the guidance of the Spirit of God upon the work of His Church, and I feel sure that we shall come to rejoice in the fact that a home is to be built for the Superintendent of our Convention.

It is a great help for a pastor to have the blessing of a parsonage to feel that his church cares for him and his family, and that they wish him to be as free from that sort of anxiety as possible in order that he may devote his time and energy to his chosen work. The Superintendent of the Convention is a servant of us all whoever he may be. Whoever he is, he has had the vote and confidence of the people in being called to that responsible task. He should be supported and helped in his work. To have a comfortable home of which he and the whole Convention could be proud will be a constant reminder of the trust placed in him and will send him forth a stronger and finer servant of his people and his church. His duties are of necessity varied and complex, and just as a pastor needs a parsonage as a constant reminder of the church membership's cooperation and help, so does the servant of the whole Convention also need a home.

I wish to appeal to the women of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference to get behind this measure as one of real progress and good foresight. Let us all be proud of our church and do our part to make it a real strength for Christ and a progressive church among the other denominations. May God bless us in being truly thankful and help us to make our Thank Offering in sincere gratitude for His love and and goodness to us.

MRS. JOHN G. TRUITT.

SUFFOLK SOCIETY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church, under the leadership of Mrs. W. A. Daughtrey, is trying very hard to go over the Standard of Excellence, set up by the Woman's Board.

Mrs. John G. Truitt as program chairman planned very interesting activities and somewhat different from the previous years, in that more members would be required to take part in the programs.

In November the Thank Offering was under the direction of Mrs. W. H. Yates, who used slides to show the work of missionaries in China, and also the latest pictures of Dorothy and Richard Jackson. At Christmas time a program and party were given at church with Mrs. Roy Richardson leader. A lovely Christmas tree, gifts for everyone present, and refreshments made the old and young alike truly feel the Christ-like spirit of long ago.

Under the able direction of Mrs. E. C. Wilkins, a play about medical missions, "Along an Indian Road," was presented on a rainy January night with eighteen members in the cast. The society had as its guest the W. W. Staley Society and in April we joined them to hear the home mission study book reviewed so very beautifully by Mrs. Thomas Woodward.

The society celebrated its 35th birthday anniversary in February. A lovely evening was enjoyed with games, contests, and special music, with Miss Ruthanna Foard in charge. To this writer, the sweetest thought was the making of Valentines by each one present, which were later sent to our local hospitals and used as favors on the trays.

One of the highlights of the year was the Mother-Daughter Banquet sponsored by the society for the women of the church. Mrs. Robert Kimball was guest speaker and many expressed their wish that this affair would be held each year during Family Week. In June a fish fry was given at the Lea-Jordan Clubhouse, with about 75 members present. Mrs. J. C. Webb was to be complimented on such a fine dinner and program.

"Missions in the Church School" was the theme of the July program presented by Mrs. J. C. Ramsey, Jr., with the assistance of Mrs. H. W. Trump. Interesting reports were given from each department and they expressed their desire that more emphasis would be placed on missions in the Sunday school.

FOR THE CHILDREN

SCATTERED SEEDS.

Margherita had a frown on her forehead and a worried feeling of wrong in her heart. She hadn't been really happy for two days—not since she had spoken unkindly of her little friend, Marie, and repeated a story about her that she was not sure was true.

She knew she would never feel comfortable about it until she had talked it over with Mother, but she hated to have her know. Finally, she couldn't stand it any longer, and, throwing her arms around her mother's neck, she told all about it.

Mother looked very sorry, but all that she said was, "Rita, I want you to go to the three-acre lot down by the blacksmith shop and gather a handful of the brown seed-pods and let the little winged seeds fly away for a frolic with the wind. Then come back to me.

This sounded like a very light proof, and Margherita quickly found milkweed plants. She ran and hopped and jumped through the field, throwing from her hands the silky, floating seed. Pink-cheeked and smiling, she came back to her mother.

"Now," said her mother, "go back to the field and, on the way, gather the seeds you have scattered, every-one, and bring them to me."

The little girl set out to do as she was bidden. But as she passed along, she found that the frolicsome wind had scattered the delicate seeds far and wide. Even among the leaves of the wayside trees they had flown, and through the hedges, and over the little river than ran through the town. Some of them had found a new field, where they settled themselves to establish new colonies of milkweed plants.

At last, discouraged and almost in tears, Margherita went back to her mother with only a few of the seeds she had scattered.

"My little daughter," Mother said very slowly, "it was just this that you did when you scattered unkind words about Marie, whether they were false or true. Spoken words of blame and suspicion may be like little sparks of fire falling in dried grass; they may cause great damage at home, perhaps, or at school, or even in the world. And words once spoken are scattered like milkweed seeds."—The Children's Story Garden.

MAMA'S DON'T RUN.

By IRMA DOVEY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Come on, let's hurry!" Mrs. Siems took her seven-year-old Judy's hand and ran from the store to the family car. It was nearly time for Aunt Sue's train to arrive, and only some quick action would get them to the station on time. Little Evelyn, who was four, had already scampered ahead.

Judy dragged behind.

"Can't you run as fast as I? Come on Honey!"

But Judy held back and pulled her hand loose. She looked miserable.

"What's the matter?" her mother asked as she slid under the steering wheel and turned the car toward the station.

"Mamas don't run!" said Judy hotly, her face averted.

"Oh? Some times they do, dear."

Mrs. Siems struggled to keep her composure. She felt thankful for her slender figure and the fact that she could run as fast—well, almost as fast—as ever.

The incident, however, gave her cause for thought. She was glad that her daughter had been frank in giving the reason for her embarrassment. Should Judy's notions be corrected—or was the child right? she asked herself. Did children like their parents to have dignity? Was it a healthy respect on their part that did not allow mamas to run? Or had Judy's idea been built up by her mother's usual behavior?

Mrs. Siem's mother had been forty when her child was born. Her prim aloof manner had set a pattern for her daughter's life. "Perhaps now, as a mother herself, it was time to play more.

But for days, whenever she attempted to put this resolution into practice—hurried blithely, or took a skipping step—mentally she heard the words, "Mamas don't run!"

Then she planned a family picnic which included a game of baseball. Mother played, and even Daddy took part—although Daddy had been a little hard to persuade.

"Go on out there and bat," Mrs. Siems urged her husband quietly. "If you had a son you would be playing ball with him, wouldn't you?"

Each day, Mother and the girls watched the birds and the kittens and the pup, as they always had done. Now, however, Mother made it a point to stop her work for a moments and talk to the children about the birds. She took time to listen when Judy said, "There are little wrens in the house. I heard them talking to each other!"

Together they went to listen by the wrenhouse.

"She's a good provider, like Father and I've tried to be," the mother thought. "But food and a roof over their heads are not the only things to be concerned about when you raise a family, Mrs. Wren, I'm just learning."

With Judy and Evelyn she watched the kittens on the lawn and they chatted about them. When they went to the park, Mama climbed the big rock, too. They took advantage of the radio music according to their mood—marching, skipping, and sometimes even finger-snapping. "Judy is old enough to learn to waltz," Mrs. Siems decided when the child came home from school singing a song about waltzing.

"Don't get kittenish!" Mr. Siems had warned, smiling, after his wife had related to him some of her experiences with the children.

"I won't—I hope," she said soberly. "That remark of Judy's has really made me think, though. I was getting to be such a staid sort of person. Plenty of mothers can't dance. As long as I can, I'm going to have my girls remember dancing with me, as well as washing dishes, mopping and dusting."

She kept trying to think of other ways to share fun with the girls.

"I get plenty of exercise climbing stepladders and scrubbing floors," she told a friend, "but all of that is work. I think next I'll take Judy and Evelyn to the lake and teach them to swim. It's years since I've been in swimming, but I'll show that child of mine! I'll show her that mams do run, and swim, and climb—and dance, and play. I refuse to be put in a rocking chair—yet!"

Does your town have a recreation-planning committee? It is a good thing to close up the taverns, clean out the slot machines, and otherwise spray the premises against undesirable critters, but it is equally good to set up substitutes for these places so the young people will have "some place to go."

One thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning.

I'M LOOKING FOR CHANGES IN YOUTH.

By W. ROY BREG, Executive Sec'y,
Allied Youth, Inc.

A teacher asked me just the other day, "What changes do you see occurring in the lives of young people because of Allied Youth?"

The inquirer had in mind that Allied Youth Posts have been "on test" for ten years. By the scores, these youth-led and school-sponsored organizations have been aiding a variety of communities in alcohol education and alcohol-free recreation.

I find that the young people coming within reach and influence of Allied Youth Posts and Allied Youth field work divide finally into three groups. That grouping is not affected as much by home life and other environment as you might suppose. Nor is the grouping based entirely on how long and how intensively certain young people have been exposed to the Allied Youth attitudes and influences.

These are the three major groups which I can recognize:

1. There are the young people that Allied Youth has helped to abstain from alcoholic indulgence. Allied Youth helped with facts for the alcohol-free choice. In the Post program and in other social ways, Allied Youth offered them companionship in this important matter of saying "No" to the drinks that usually would be offered them. Membership, and perhaps leadership, in the Allied Youth Post in local high school, college, or neighborhood, helped this young man, that young woman, to feel joined with others in seeking as a group the higher way of self-control and wholesome social influence. Together these youngsters have worked out an important and probably far-reaching decision. They have found a satisfying alternative to drinking and a substitute for a social set in which drinking is expected.

That is not the end of our service to the young people through Allied Youth's visits to high schools and colleges and through the Allied Youth Posts voluntarily formed by young people, as result of such visits.

2. We discover a group of young people which will not practice abstinence but has been made more mindful of the handicaps of alcoholic indulgence. I do not mean that Allied Youth "gave them a scare." Instead, Allied Youth supplied an example—a demonstration of the satisfaction found in "little or no drinking." The Post brings some moderate drinkers into its active orbit. Young people at Post meetings and parties, guests and friends of the active and abstaining members, know the prime requirement for attending: you don't drink when you are with the Post, you don't go out for drinks from a Post party. There is a clear demonstration in those parties and in the people you meet at them that drinking isn't the sole route to fun and popularity. And that is a highly important discovery. Such contacts with the Post are well calculated to interest many young people in less frequent drinking, if any drinking is to be done. Allied Youth has been aiding many young people to regard their self-control with more serious concern that if our Posts had never been.

3. A third group within the communities served by Allied Youth and its Posts is not noticeably influenced against drinking. These young people will have found other pressures and influences more attractive and powerful than the alcohol-free example of Post members and Post activities. Many pulls have come in this other direction: customs of the times, example in some homes, pressure from advertising, influences of radio and periodicals, friendships with those who take drinking for granted, habits often encountered in campus and business and professional life. But somewhere in the thinking and practice of these young people—if brought even casually within the Allied Youth orbit—it seems there develops a more understanding regard for those who decide to say "No" to alcoholic drinks. Too, there comes a more alert recognition of just such dangers as the year-after-year drinker may face—dangers of which Yale School, Alcoholics Anonymous, and other institutions and groups will want to make the general public more intelligently aware. Due to the voluntary action of some young neighbors in joining and working with the Allied Youth Post, a host of young people who are now occasional or frequent users of alcoholic drinks have had a "caution" light flashed in their direction. More important, they have been led to suspect that alcohol-free living is not so drab and dismal and friendless a proceeding as they might otherwise suppose.

I would remind you that there is still a fourth group, and large one, composed of young people who have not had any direct contact with the Allied Youth idea. These are young people who have heard little but scorn and ridicule for the idea of "staying away from liquor." Such instruction as they received on the nature and effects of alcohol, in the elementary grades of school or elsewhere, has not been applied by them to the choices and acts of this moment, when they face seemingly attractive opportunities to drink. An objective of Allied Youth is to reach every public high school student in the nation, at some time within his high school course, with arealization that alcohol poses a big personal problem for him to settle. We are after a verdict for or against alcohol—based on facts, supplemented by attractive alternatives if the young person decides to say "No" to alcohol.

THE USE AND ABUSE OF WEALTH.

LESSON X—SEPTEMBER 7, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Better is a little with righteousness, than great revenues with injustices.—Prov. 16:8.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Eccl. 9:11-18.

Folks Do Not Believe It.

"Better is a little with righteousness, than great revenues with injustice." Do you believe that? If you had your choice of being poor, of living in a small cottage on the other side of the tracks, eating simple food, wearing plain clothes, driving an old model car or going without a car altogether, and without any assurance of financial security for old age—if you had your choice of these things, or the chance to make "your pile" or "to get while the getting is good," or to make fat profits by cutting corners, which would you choose? Come now, be absolutely honest with yourself, which would you choose, a little with righteousness, or great revenue with injustice? It is a searching question. Generalizations are usually dangerous. But in the light of the investigations which are being conducted concerning war contracts, and in the light of how multitudes of people make their money, and the extremes to which they will go to get money, it can be said that a great many people do not believe it. One does not have to be purist or a pessimist to feel that there are all too many people today who think that the main thing is to get money. And to get it by fair means or foul, by hook or by crook. Money is an acid test of character, make no mistake about that.

Scattering and Yet Having, Holding But Wanting.

The wise man puts it in striking language. He says "there is that scattereth, and increaseth yet more; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to want." It is not the arithmetic of the kingdoms of this world but it is the arithmetic of the Kingdom of God. Strange as it may seem, for instance, the person who tithes can make nine-tenths of his money go farther and do more than the whole ten-tenths used for himself. To be sure he may not have as much to spend on pleasure and for things, but there is a saving that is losing, there is a giving that is saving. One great steward of God said that about all he had saved was what he had given away.

Good for the Soul.

"The liberal soul shall be made fat; he that watereth shall be watered himself also." One suspects that God was not concerned primarily about money or things when he commanded men to give and to share; He was concerned about men and character. And generosity is one of the marks of a great character. Giving exercises the soul. Giving is one of the best means of saving one's soul. This does not mean, of course, that a man can buy salvation. It means that as one gives, as one shares, as one thinks of others, his soul waxes wholesome and strong, and develops both strength and beauty. Giving liberally is the best antidote against covetousness, one of the most general sins, and yet the most unnamed sin. Xavier said that men had confessed all kinds of sin to him, but that he could not recall that anybody had ever confessed that he or she was covetousness.

Cornering the Market.

"He that withholdeth grain, the people shall curse him." Our modern world has seen many attempts to corner the market, to form monopolies, and thus to get practically any price one asked. It is a good way to make money, but it is a poor way to make manhood. And if the truth were known, those who do it thereby bring down upon their heads the ill-will and curses of their fellowmen. One wonders what judgment will ultimately be wrought upon those who by sharp practices, control markets, and especially the things that even poor people must have. It is bad enough when it involves luxuries; it is criminal when it involves necessities. Get all the traffic will bear, and to heck with folks.

Uncertain Riches.

"He that trusteth in his riches shall fall. . . ." That does not happen literally. There are many rich men who do not go broke, or who do not go bad. But if a rich man trusts in his riches, he will fall. In a penetrating word Paul wrote to his young friend, Timothy, to charge them that are rich that they trust not in uncertain riches, but rather to trust in the living God. The writer of these Notes wishes he had a greater assurance of financial security in his old age. He is representative of millions of his fellowmen. But he knows, as millions of his fellowmen know, that riches are uncertain. "Woe is the man indeed whose only trust is in material things. Riches not only do not insure security; they do not even bring happiness. And Jesus says they are actually dangerous. Indeed he says that those with riches are faced with peculiar dangers and difficulties in the things of the spirit.

He Must Have Heard His Brother Talk On This Subject.

The Book of James, by almost common consent of the scholars, is attributed to James, the brother of our Lord. James must have had in mind some of the things he had heard his brother, Jesus, say concerning riches, and especially ill-gotten riches. Read James 5:1-6 which forms a part of today's lesson and you can hear the words crackle and snap as James denounces the rich for the way in which they have made their wealth, and as he pronounces doom upon them because of their inhumane ways. "Gentle Jesus, meek and mild"—thus we sing the hymn. He was gentle, he was meek and mild. But on occasion he could be and he was stern and terrifying as he denounced the misuse of wealth. His teachings are full of words of warning against covetousness and concerning material things, mammon and money. Our Lord knew the subtle temptation which wealth presented.

The Right Use of Wealth.

But money is not an evil in itself. Money can be a blessing. What the world needs is not less men with money, but more men with money, if they are the right kind of men, and if they use their money as a sacred stewardship and trust. The kingdom of God will never come simply with money, but neither will it come without money. Money consecrated to the Kingdom of God is one of the most powerful factors in the coming of the Kingdom of God.

LAYMAN'S RESPONSIBILITY.

the bereaved, the needy who should be visited, cheered and helped. This is as much the layman's work as it is the minister's.

If there is a questionable business enterprise or amusement place or anything detrimental to the morals and welfare of the community, the layman should not only raise his voice against such things, he should take whatever action may be necessary to get rid of them. The layman is responsible for the kind of influence he exerts in the community. We frequently hear people say, "Oh, I can't have any influence over anybody one way or the other. No one pays any attention to me." That is a mistaken idea. Everybody has some influence on somebody. Mr. "A" stood well in his community, was respected for his business judgment and ability; was a church member and a regular attendant at church service and a generous contributor to every enterprise of the church. One day several young people who held Mr. "A" in high esteem were walking down the street, and to their astonishment saw this man coming out of the A.B.C. store with his little package. They were disappointed in him, but began to reason among themselves that if a man like Mr. "A" patronizes such places, there must not be any harm in it. That man's influence is not for righteousness! Then there was Mrs. "B," a church worker, Sunday School teacher and a favorite with the young women and girls. She was seen by a group of these youngsters entering a dance hall of shady reputation, accompanied by a man who was not her husband. That woman's influence is not for righteousness! Mr. "A" was never seen drunk. Mrs. "B" was never seen engaging in immoral conduct, but think what effect their influence and example had on the lives of others! We have to be careful of our conduct, our daily walk in life, as much for the sake of others as for ourselves.

The layman must be public spirited, a booster for his community, lending his support to the worthy causes, discouraging anything which does not contribute to its good. On his shoulders rests largely the reputation of his community.

In practically every locality there are those "fallen by the wayside." This applies more often in a spiritual and moral sense than the physical, but in all cases those people need a helping hand. Here again the layman's responsibility is obvious and he finds opportunity to be "The Good Samaritan." Too often the professional crowd pass by on the other side, leaving the unfortunate one to his fate, and if the layman fail to come to his aid he is in a hopeless plight.

*The Layman's Responsibility

There are people who do not recognize certain national leaders as men of authority unless they happen to have a particular liking for them or unless they happen to be of the same political and religious faith. This class goes so far as to say, "He's not my President; he's not my Representative." In Romans 8:1 we find these words: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that are ordained of God." This is a nation of majority rule and it is a responsibility of the laymen of the land to cooperate with the leaders to the greatest possible extent; to work for harmony and good will; to pray for Divine guidance and wisdom and vision for them. It is the laymen's responsibility to obey the laws of the land as nearly as they can and to use whatever influence they possess to promote law and order and to uphold officials in the performance of their duties. A true layman loves his country and displays his patriotism in convincing terms when sinister forces seek to undermine her principles and interfere with her way of life. Still another great responsibility the layman has in helping establish righteousness in the nation is in his use of the ballot. Many times has the nation suffered moral and spiritual reverses because the church people were too lax in their privilege of voting their convictions. Great moral issues have been lost because the laymen failed to avail themselves of the franchise. It is a power for good in the hands of those whose hearts are set on the "Abiding Values" and who believe that "righteousness exalteth a nation."

And so may I say to all laymen, do not despair because you are not a professional man or woman with a list of titles attached to your name, and remember that your work is as important and you are as necessary and a great power in the hands of God toward making this beloved land of ours an exalted nation through the establishment of righteousness within her borders. I thank you.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

In February a contest was started to help increase attendance at the general meetings. Mrs. R. L. Smith and Mrs. J. C. Philhower were appointed captains of the two teams—Reds and Blues. This continued through the July meeting and the Reds lost by a low three points. In late July the Red team entertained the Blue team at a party in the lovely garden of Mrs. J. C. Webb.

Along with the highly interesting programs which have been held each month except August, there have been worthwhile business sessions. The nine circles of the society have given splendid reports at each meeting, with a large number of visits, cards, flowers, trays, and gifts being made to the sick, aged, and bereaved of our church and community. The society is indebted to Mrs. J. L. Byrd, spiritual life chairman, for the fine and inspiring devotionals which are given at each meeting.

We do feel that we have had a good year so far working together, and we believe we have done many worthwhile things in our community.

MT. CARMEL.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church, even though small, feels that it has accomplished much, during the past year for the work of our Master.

We have contributed to the War Veteran Relief Fund; Franklinton Institute (our Friendly Service gift); sent our Thank Offering in; also sent a box of clothing to the Orphanage at Eastertime.

We had our foreign mission study book and World Day of Prayer program in joint session with Antioch, Isle of Wight and Windsor, thus practicing in our society the spirit of cooperation, and trying to live up to our theme: "The Lord Thy God—and Thy Neighbor."

Then, too, we have had all study books taught; two members to attend the School of Missions at Elon, and five new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Our society sent cards and gifts to the sick at Christmas, also to all sick members during the year.

We feel that we have met all the requirements of the Standard of Excellence, and we are thankful for the time, talents and means with which it has been done. We are praying as a society for God to give us more strength and courage to go forward to do more work for His Kingdom in the future than ever before; that before too long the entire world may be Christianized.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

We are getting near the end of the repair work on our orphanage plant. We are repairing the concrete belt around the Baby Home at this writing. It has taken more time to do this work than we anticipated. But material has been hard to get and workmen have been about as hard to get as material. We had to grab materials when we could get them. We have spent a lot of money, but we have done a lot of work, and done it when prices of labor and materials were at the peak.

We well remember in the year 1884 when my father built an addition to our home. He hired two of the best carpenters in our section. They worked early and late for $1.25 a day, not by the hour, and room and board. What difference then and now. We have had to pay from $1.00 to $1.50 per hour. We remember my father hired a Frenchman painter to paint the house for $1.50 a day. Still, what a difference in then and now! But the repair work is almost completed and we are happy to have had the job of having it done.

We now have one of the nicest small orphanage plants that there is in the State of North Carolina, and we have seen the most of them. We have received many compliments from visitors on this work, and the taste used in the color of paint used in the rooms, and the cleanliness of the building. Painting the main orphanage building solid white has added much to its appearance, and visitors who have seen it have been highly pleased, and speak of the wonderful change in its appearance.

The continued dry weather in this immediate section has practically ruined our corn and hay crop. We planted corn with the expectation of making two thousand bushels. If we make a fourth of it now, I believe we will do well. We sowed 150 acres in lespedeza, expecting to make a bumper hay crop. The weather has been so dry and parching that it has not grown as high as the wheat stubbs where we cut wheat. But we have no control over the weather or the rain clouds. We will and can get by somehow.

We well remember in the year 1929 in November our large feed barn packed full of hay—the year's crop—burned. We had quite a number of cows and four mules to feed. The way looked dark and discouraging, but we got by that year somehow, and none of our stock perished. In many parts of our state there has been good seasons and they have bountiful crops, but not here.

ing and trained personnel cannot be found to staff these institutions."

"The coming winter promises to be even more severe than the past," he said. "Unless American can increase aid, many Europeans will die of cold and hunger. And the political and social tensions, which are now dangerous, will increase."

Mr. Robison traveled alone during half of the tour and during the remaining time he was with the party of church leaders sponsored by the Church World Service. The group talked with leaders of all non-Roman Catholic churches, consulted with government officials, saw heads of relief organizations, looked into warehouses where boxes of American supplies for relief distribution were stored, visited orphanages and children's summer camps, watched prisoners at work, and visited homes of peoples far removed from the "show windows" and metropolitan centers of the continent. He attended a church service in Warsaw where equally as many worshippers were standing as were seated in the available pews. He had interviews with the head of the church council in Prague and the Greek Orthodox Archbishop of Athens, talked with the chief of the International Relief Organization in Italy, and the World Council of Churches officials in Geneva.

Mr. Robison represented four religious bodies on this trip. The Virginia Council of Churches sent him to observe the administration of relief materials contributed by the people of the Commonwealth and the nation.

He also represented Church World Service, the Brethren's Service Committee and the Methodist Committee on Overseas Relief. Dr. Robbins W. Barstow, of New York, Director of Church World Service, in the U. S., designated Mr. Robison the CWS delegate, while Bishop Herbert Welch, chairman of the Methodist Committee for Overseas Relief, appointed the Virginian to represent the Methodist Church. He also attended the two-day conference of the World Council of Churches and Church World Service meeting at Geneva, where the group tour ended, before returning to the United States.

Now that he has returned to Virginia, Mr. Robison plans to report the story of his findings in Europe to the churches and the people of the Commonwealth. This will be the first step in organizing the campaign to collect materials for overseas relief. He plans to travel throughout the State, acquainting people with the situation overseas as he had found it on the tour.

Since last fall, Mr. Robison has been directing the collection campaign in the State sponsored by the Virginia Council of Churches. Vast quantities of materials have been contributed by the people, but more is needed, the churchman pointed out. The supplies contributed were directed to Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland, from where they were shipped overseas for distribution.

"The need in Europe is great. The time is short . . . and we cannot hope to have peace unless we help the distressed, and the suffering in the world," Mr. Robison declared.

METHODIST HOME CAMPAIGN OPENED.

Start of a campaign to raise $100,000 for the purchase of a site for the proposed million-dollar Methodist Retirement Homes project was announced at Durham, N. C., recently by the Rev. W. V. McRae, executive secretary of the board of hospitals and homes of the North Carolina Methodist Conference.

Designed primarily for retired Methodist ministers, the project will be open to both lay and clergy of other denominations, Mr. McRae said. Following the purchase of a site, funds for the construction of the development will be raised by the conference.

LITTLE.

WHEREAS, God in His infinite love has seen fit to call to his reward C. F. Little, a beloved brother and member of the Waverly Congregational Christian Church, the "Acorn" Bible Class, and the "We-mens" club; therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That the Waverly Congregational Christian Church, the "We-mens" club have lost a beloved brother and member.

2. That we extend to those surviving him our heartfelt sympathies and prayers, that God's blessings may rest upon them and give them comfort in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of the church, the "Acorn" Bible Class, and the "We-mens" club and that a copy be sent to the family, and another to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

people here all eat polished rice, but most of them apparently also seem to get enough meat and vegetables to maintain a sufficiently balanced diet. Almost, but not quite, for I am finally deciding that the tremendous numbers of mild edema of the feet, usually complicated by ulcers, are probably on a nutritional basis, although they are not accompanied by the "classical" signs of beri-beri. Incidentally, a word is in order about the kinds of food eaten and available here. Somebody asked if eggs were common here, because I had mentioned having them in the inns on my way to Shaowu. The basic staple food of South China is, of course, rice; and the whole economy and prosperity of the people rises and falls with the current price of rice. It happens that Shaowu is one of the few rice-exporting areas of China at present. They produce more than they need locally; it is cheaper here than anywhere else in Fukien; and yet a lot of local people make a lot of money trading it in and exporting it to Foochow, etc. So the principle article of diet here is rice, which as I said, is "polished" rice—not very white or clean, it is true, but still more expensive and must less nutritious than the unpolished rice. It is usually just boiled, but special dishes are made of it, and rice flour is used for their pastries, etc. The rich people, especially at feasts, serve noodles made of wheat flour. That is practically the only use made of wheat, which is grown in some places, especially around

Foochow. Then year around there is available, for those who can afford it, Chinese cabbage, fresh or dried, bean curd, bean sprouts, bamboo sprouts, and to some extent onions, turnips, cauliflower, etc. Then in the higher income brackets there are available hen eggs and duck eggs, chickens and ducks for meat, and lots of fresh pork. The chickens and pigs look much like their American counterparts although the chickens are skinnier and the pigs a little fatter and more repulsive looking. The chickens live off the wayside grass, and the pigs eat the garbage, acting as scavengers for the country. So they don't cost too much to raise, nor require much land. For the same reason beef is the rarest meat of all, because cattle require land to graze on, and some feed, impossible luxuries, in China. So the only beef in the market is from superannuated retired buffaloes which the rich farmers have used for draft animals. Actually much of Fukien could support cattle on the hillsides, which are at present burned over and not used for anything; but I guess the Chinese have never learned the secret of that. Here in Shaowu, one of the old time doctors imported some American dairy cows and started a herd, and made quite a name for himself studying and stamping out rinderpest. At present descendants of those animals still survive and many Shaowu-ites have learned to drink milk and eat butter, quite a novelty for China. Finally, there is fish, which consists of large fresh-water fish, domesticated and grown in local artificial ponds, and fed on grass which is cut and thrown into the pond in large amounts. The fish grow quite large, and do not taste too bad.

All the above foods are boiled, or half-boiled, half-fried, and served steaming hot. There is no sanitary problem there, except for the fact that the bowls, spoons, and chopsticks are not clean, and I suppose in the summer flies settle on the food while it is being eaten. In addition, at feasts, there are peanuts, watermelon seeds, oranges, water chestnuts, and various kinds of confections, all served raw, or at least after standing for a long time unprotected. When we first came, we sampled them all, because the weather was so cold that it did not seem as if any kind of bugs could survive on them. But now we are turning them all down, except that in our own cooking we use oranges and peanuts, which can be sterilized and skinned before eating. These foods may be a source of disease spread among the people in the summer. But I suspect that the main trouble is water, flies, and dirty fingers. I will know more about it after I have seen how things go after the weather gets warm. At present there is no intestinal disease to speak of—except that every other person is loaded with ascaris—round-worms, which don't seem to bother them much.

We have just returned from the Easter morning service at Shaowu's largest church, at which Mr. Chandler preached. It was packed, mostly with children, who did not have their separate Sunday school today. They were as noisy and restless and ill-behaved as a similar group of American children in church, so that the service was anything but peaceful. In addition, there were two typical Chinese features for the special occasion. One was a string of fire-crackers, shot off right in the church, both before and after the service, to celebrate the occasion. The other was some beautiful dances given by a group of six small girls who had been trained in dancing class in the local school. They were in colorful costumes and as cute as they could be, and did some very involved songs and dances—which looked as if they were originally adapted from western style, but were quite "orientified" by the time they were produced here.

Best regards to all,

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE

The relations between workers and employers—whether in factory or on farm, in office or in store—create some of the most important problems of our time. The decisions of responsible men and women in these relationships profoundly affect the lives of millions of people.

The Church cannot disregard the problems created by these relations nor overlook their effects on men, women and children. The Christian Gospel affirms that men are brothers because all are created in the image of God and each is important in his sight. How can the Church effectively express its concern for people? How can it promote a true recognition of the inherent worth of each person, the right of each one to a place in society in which he can contribute to the community while he supports himself and his family?

The beginning must surely be made in the Church itself. There must be a vigorous effort to see that no congregation is a class church or a racial church. That is not easy, for churches are usually neighborhood organizations, and people live in neighborhoods of similar economic status.

Clearly the Church must reject both the idea that most employers are greedy conspirators who combine in gigantic soulless corporate entities and the idea that organizations of employees are usually a rabble led by demagogues. The Church recognizes that each individual is a part of many groups almost from the cradle to the grave. He is a part of a family, a school, a lunch club, the round-house crowd. But the Church will always appeal to the conscience of the single person and call upon him to assert in his group what that conscience says, even in the face of hostility of that group.

It is also important that the Church should see the problems of the responsible leaders of labor and of management. It has been increasingly effective, during and since the war, in service to the sick, the bereaved, and the troubled. But the Church has not faced adequately the problems of the layman, employer and labor leader alike, who have to decide between alternatives, none of which is pleasant, each of which carries with it some apparent evil to some people. The Church today is seeking ways to meet such problems, and the help of every pastor and every Christian layman should be enlisted.

One of the serious elements in this particular field is the corruption of power. Most of us have an urge for power. Organization is essential in society but the corruption of power is a danger in any organized activity. The bigger the organization, the greater the danger. The urge and competition for power can exist among employers and union leaders, and even among church officials. The danger of business monopolies requires constant limitation by government and constant vigilance by the people. Internal politics today troubles many labor organizations. That has been the problem of democracy as it grows in size, ever since its dawn in Greece.

The democracy that we in America derive so largely from the independent churches of three hundred and more years ago gives us hope that the Church today can greatly help to solve this problem. For the kind of democracy exemplified by our forefathers depends upon our seeking God's voice to guide us in what each of us does and says, and equally upon listening for God's word in what others seek to tell us. This humble reliance upon a Power higher than ourselves and this constant recognition that others may be closer to God's will than we, have always been characteristic of those most trusted by the American people.

The churches can also stimulate the consciences of people as we listen to the threat of the future, derived from our past experience of the business cycle. We Christians cannot face in silence or inaction the prospect of recurrent business depressions in which unemployment rots the souls of men. We recognize that this is a problem of profound complexity and that men, highly qualified, differ widely in their interpretations and their remedies. But we are equally impressed with the area of agreement among these experts. We propose to the utmost of our ability to create a background of Christian principle in which the study, discussions, and plans for action to meet the situation will proceed.

Tomorrow will confront us with new problems and new crises. We must approach the future with confidence that skill and resources are available for fresh answers which will bring us into a better economic life. This confidence can be sustained only if we know that our objectives are rooted in God's purpose. The realization of the fellowship of men under God, and the sense of a common destiny—these are all part of God's purpose revealed in Jesus Christ. For these we must strive; out of them will spring new life, new understanding and a new unity of spirit and purpose.—Issued by the Federal Council of Churches.

THE CHURCH THROUGH WHICH OUR FELLOWSHIP MINISTERS TO ITS STUDENTS IN THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA

Rev. Bernard V. Munger, the minister of our church at Chapel Hill is a paid servant of this church, the Southern Convention, and the Department of Student Work of the Division of Christian Education, Board of Home Missions of Congregational Christian Churches. Mr. Munger's ministry will be made more effective if ministers, parents and friends of University students will send him information concerning students to whom the church should be extending its ministry. Send information to him immediately at 232 McCauley Street, Chapel Hill, N. C. Show this announcement to students who are going to Chapel Hill this fall. Remember! This is your ministry to University students. Do not fail them.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Rev. R. L. House spoke on the history of our denomination on Wednesday evening of this week at the Broad Street Methodist Church, Richmond.

Dr. I. W. Johnson had the able assistance of Dr. F. S. Lewis in the annual revival services at Liberty Spring Church.

Rev. Joe A. French, chairman, has called a meeting of the Board of Publications on Thursday of this week at Elon College.

The Central Alabama Association met August 22-23 at Liberty, East Tallassee. Professor C. W. Williams was moderator and Rev. J. T. Barker was host pastor. Addresses were given by Mr. Haygood Patterson, Miss Margurite Davison, Mrs. Maxine Jackson, Revs. Collie Seymour, S. M. Penn, D. W. Shepherd, and President Paul Bechtold.

AMERICAN WOMEN'S SURPLUS HANDBAGS WELCOME OVERSEAS.

Pack a purse for relief! Thousands of women are sending their discarded hand-bags and purses to the Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Maryland, full of items badly needed overseas. Officials at the Center are sending these bags abroad without opening or changing the contents.

The idea started in North Carolina, where club women started collecting purses and hand-bags no longer needed and stuffing them with articles unobtainable by housewives overseas. Practically all the bags sent to New Windsor thus far have been in good condition. A conservative estimate of the contents' value in Europe would be at least $15 per bag. Since more than 99 per cent of American women have extra hand-bags, this project seems to have universal appeal in all women's groups.

The plan briefly is:

1. Take purses or hand-bags.
2. Stuff with thread, needles, scissors, pencils, buttons, soap, lipstick, tube handcream, tooth brush, tooth powder, stockings, socks, underwear, pins, safety-pins, comb, thimbles, ribbon, shoe laces, compacts, etc.
3. Mail to Church World Service, New Windsor, Maryland. Put name and address inside purse also. It will be sent overseas unopened.

4. Tell others about this plan. This is one way of sending supplies abroad in containers that will be as welcome as the contents.

All purses are packed in large wooden boxes for shipment. Distribution overseas is handled by local churches there and donations are distributed solely on the basis of need.

NO PICTURE-OF-THE-MONTH.

For the first time in the history of its reviewing service, the Protestant Motion Picture Council cooperating with the Protestant Film Commission has decided that no picture "adequately meets the Council's standards for the designation" of picture-of-the-month. The lack of any suitable picture the Council considers "an indictment of current movies and a challenge to movie-makers."

Reviews and ratings of the two agencies are issued monthly to church periodicals of national circulation and mailed to ministers of many denominations for bulletin board use. The designation of "picture of the month" is a coveted "Oscar" of the religious groups, and has honored such outstanding motion pictures as "Miracle on 34th Street," "Great Expectations," and "The Beginning or the End."

Meanwhile, praising the execution of "Black Narcissus" and "Life With Father," the Council felt that both pictures contained grave distortions of religious life. The defeat of the missionary sisters in "Black Narcissus" is "far from being in accordance with the almost unblemished record of Christian missionary perseverance." The use of "so serious a matter as baptism" as a major comic theme in "Life With Father" was also deplored.

In the statement issued, the positive standards set up by the Council for the "picture of the month" was reiterated. The picture "must be clean, technically outstanding, with a strong story, containing above-the-average acting and direction, and having unusually artistic and dramatic qualities. The picture's social, moral and ethical values must be favorable, too, or compatible with Christian ideas and ideals."

"On the negative side, the Picture of the Month must not violate taboos common both to the Christian conscience and the Motion Picture Code. Among such taboos: the sympathetic portrayal of criminals or criminal pursuits, unnecessary violence, flagrant drinking, gambling, or other loose conduct, infractions of the sanctity of the home, and representation of religious subjects or persons in a false or bigoted manner."

The Protestant Film Commission includes among its major objectives the increase in the volume of usable religious films for church use, aid to church exhibitors in their use of the screen, consultation with the motion picture industry with a view to raising the standards of all films produced. A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

New Churches in the World Council

By HENRY SMITH LEIPER

Associated Secretary, World Council of Churches

Recent affiliation of six additional Orthodox churches and two more of the younger Asiatic churches with the World Council of Churches gives proof that the World Assembly, to be held in Holland in the summer of 1948, will not be dominated by any single concept of Christian principle and social order. In the day-to-day World Council activities following its actual formation in 1948, the interaction of the ancient Orthodox churches with the Protestant and younger missionary churches will mean a rediscovery of the importance of those rock-bottom principles and concepts, common to all Christian churches, which are the foundation of the Christian faith.

The growth of national and denominational churches in the past has made it appear that Christianity was the hand-maiden of a particular social order. This identification is not only theologically unjustified, but has done the churches immeasurable harm. We have a right to expect that the World Council of Churches, made up of many types of churches arising out of many social orders will establish a spiritual agreement based on no particular social order, and applying its principles to all social orders.

The Orthodox Churches.

The Orthodox churches joining the World Council in the past six months are some of the oldest bodies of Christians in the world, including the Patriarchates of Jerusalem, Antioch, and Alexandria dating back to the Council of Nicea in the fourth century, and the Coptic Church and the Syrian Orthodox Church of Malabar (India) dating back to the Council of Chalcedon in the fifth century. Throughout the centuries, waves of persecution from the Moslem population have kept these churches small, close-knit, and almost entirely autonomous, although the Coptic Christians now number about a million and are spread up the Nile Valley from Alexandria to Ethiopia.

The Church of Greece, however, has not been exposed to Moslem persecution and has maintained a large and strong organization which has recently sponsored a youth program—the Zoe movement—which is currently showing considerable evangelical vitality. We can expect that the comparison of experience between Zoe leaders and those leaders of various Protestant youth movements at World Council Youth meetings will develop new methods of youth work.

The growing ecumenical consciousness of the smaller Orthodox churches has during the past twenty years been enhanced by the work of the Fellowship of Unity in Cairo, a unique association of Anglicans, Copts, Orthodox and Evangelicals developed to deal with problems of Christian concern. Undoubtedly the cordial relations between the Christian groups has increased the willingness of the various patriarches, to participate in a larger ecumenical movement.

Once these Orthodox churches are fully participants in World Council activities after the official formation of the Council in Amsterdam in 1948, there will undoubtedly be a shift in the emphasis of Orthodoxy from the defense to the offense, newer leaders of Orthodox congregations stressing evangelical activities along the lines laid out by the Zoe movement in Greece. The affiliation of the Orthodox churches with the evangelical Protestant churches through the World Council heralds a new and dynamic Orthodoxy which has not been known for centuries.

Full cooperation between Protestantism and Orthodoxy, however, awaits the outcome of the present negotiations between the World Council and Patriarch Alexei of the Russian Orthodox Church. If full cooperation is attained between the main bodies of Protestantism and the main bodies of Orthodoxy, we will have achieved one of the most significant fulfillments of Christian history.

The Asiatic Churches.

The recent affiliation of the younger Asiatic churches, the Protestant Church of Indonesia and the Presbyterian Church of Korea, are examples of the increasing participation of these "younger churches" which are no longer under the guidance of missionaries but are being carried on under native leadership. The actions of the youthful delegates at the World Youth Conference in Oslo this summer give ample proof that the native leadership of these churches can not only take care of their own church affairs but can make a dynamic and sometimes revolutionary contribution to the ecumenical thought. It is noteworthy that Christians in these Asiatic countries have been in the forefront of the various independence movements and have taken responsible places in the native government. Mr. Amir Sjahrifoedin, a Christian, is the Prime Minister of the Indonesian Republic.

The American Churches.

In America, the affiliation of the American Lutheran Church, third largest American Lutheran body, and the United Evangelical Lutheran Church, previously the Danish Lutheran Church, gives evidence that Lutherans are increasingly aware of the pull of ecumenical relations with other denominations. It is significant that the key-note speech of Dr. Ralph H. Long, American Lutheran leader at the Lutheran World Federation's recent meeting at Lund, Norway, gave considerable attention to the ecumenical relations of the various Lutheran bodies. "We believe that the World Council will be a better balanced organization if it has strong confessional groups within its ranks," Dr. Long stated. "We are definitely in favor of the ecumenical progress that has been made and we want it to result in the strongest organization possible."

There are now 116 member churches of the World Council of Churches in 36 countries.

I never knew of an early-rising, hard-working, prudent man, careful of his earnings and strictly honest, who complained of hard luck. A good character, good habits and iron industry are impregnable to the assaults of all ill-luck that fools ever dreamed.

WHITHER MISSIONS?

Two religious groups, Jehovah's Witnesses and the Seventh Day Adventists, held official meetings in Los Angeles during August. It was estimated that 30,000 delegates participated in the encampment of the Jehovah's Witnesses. The theme of the meeting was "One World." Officials of the organization reported conspicuous success in a post-war campaign to spread the sect's training through the Catholic Latin-American countries. Before the war, it was reported, adherents throughout Latin America totaled only 505 individuals. Presently the total was said to be 5,000 in Mexico alone and 10,000 in other Latin countries. Some convention sessions were held in Spanish for the benefit of 500 Latin American delegates.

An estimated 12,000 persons participated in the ten-day encampment of the Adventists' Conference. David Voth, Conference president, reported that Adventists had spent more than $5,000,000 on relief work since the end of the war, and have invested more than $200,000,000 in foreign missions within the last 75 years. He characterized 1946 as a redletter year in their missionary sailings, with 370 missionaries going to stations in various parts of the world. "Our church," he added, "works in more than 800 languages and dialects, and prints literature in 85 languages." Denominational investments abroad were valued in excess of $100,500,000.

While many have been content to criticize Roman Catholic intolerance in Latin America, Jehovah's Witnesses have penetrated the iron curtain. One could wish that the people of Latin America were being introduced systematically to a more representative type of Protestantism.

There is a disposition to dismiss all thought of these religious movements by simply saying, "They have a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge." Their amazing program of stewardship, publication and missionary activity cannot be dismissed with a lift of the eyebrows or the shrug of the shoulders.

Our own denominational program of stewardship, publication and missions is comprehensive, edifying, according to knowledge; but its vitality and influence is curtailed by our lackadaisical response. Our missionaries have not gone off on a tangent. Their teaching is undergirded by Biblical scholarship and a sane world view. These statesmen of the Kingdom of God deserve our unstinted support.

"Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" Every generation must give an answer to this historic question. We have a report for the nations, one according to knowledge, but it must find its way into print and into personalities. The progressive and expanding revelation of God is conditioned by the quality and volume of our publication as well as by our faithfulness in stewardship. If we desire a sane presentation of God to the peoples of the world, we dare not surrender this divine prerogative to the sects and the lunatic fringe of Protestantism. "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and Kings to the brightness of thy rising."

HOPE FOR THE FARMER ON TWO COUNTS.

From time immemorial the farmer has been beset by two evils: flies and weeds. For centuries the farmer has offered hostages to these twin pests. Some have fought a losing battle while others have given up and retreated to the cities. Generations have been cheated of the abundant life because they were not able to cope successfully with these major problems. Now it is intimated that this is to be the generation of emancipation.

Thanks to DDT, we are witnessing such things as the effort, now underway to rid the entire State of Iowa of flies during 1947. Early in August, Entomologist J. O. Rowell, of the Virginia Agricultural Extension Service, declared that the fly "is on the way out in Virginia." The Richmond "Times-Dispatch" commented editorially: "This scientific method of wiping out one of man's greatest enemies, a notorious carrier of deadly diseases, is well-nigh epochal. It is neither particularly difficult nor expensive to wipe out the fly population on a farm today. The gradual elimination of the fly is thrilling to contemplate for flies are not only horrible nuisances, but the bearers of such maladies as typhoid fever, malaria, diphtheria, tuberculosis and diarrhea. Medical science has been struggling with these diseases for generations, and now DDT seems certain to accomplish a great deal toward their elimination. With all the bad news that is coming over the cables from various sections of the globe, it is pleasing to reflect upon the tremendous inroads that are being made into the fly population, and the greater ones that lie ahead. It should mean a lowering of the birth rate, and a raising of our joy in living."

Dr. Robert P. Sweet, a Cornell University scientist, predicts that by 1950 chemicals and other means—including flamethrowers—will be developed to the point where farmers can completely eliminate weeds from their vegetable fields. He stated: "The progress we have made in experimenting with weed killers at Cornell justifies the prediction. We have sprayed vegetables from pre-eminence to within a month of harvest, completely eliminating weeds and not impairing the crop." Dr. Max E. Brunk told the Vegetable Growers Association of America that labor expenses contributed heavily to production costs in vegetable growing. He concluded, "Our only hope in cheaper foods lies in eliminating the weeds."

Countless civilizations have been penalized by the wide-spread feeling that the (Continued on page 13)

THE SIN OF DOING NOTHING.

A Sermon

By C. SHANNON MORGAN.

"Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin."—James 4:17.

Most people when defining "sin" think of murder, adultery, theft—of some atrocious, outrageous, pernicious sin. We think of those sins that make the monkey deny kinship with us:

Three monkeys sat in a coconut tree
Discussing things as they are said to be.
Said one to the others, "Now listen, you two,
There's a certain rumor that can't be true,
That man descended from our noble race.
The very idea is a disgrace.

"No monkey ever deserted his wife,
Starved her babies and ruined her life.
And you've never known a mother monk
To leave her babies with others to bunk;
Or to pass them on from one to another
Till they scarcely know who is their mother.

"And another thing you'll never see,
A monk build a fence 'round a coconut tree,
And let the coconuts go to waste,
Forbidding all other monks a taste;
Why, if I'd put a fence around a tree,
Starvation would force you to steal from me.

"Here's another thing a monk won't do—
Go out at night and get on a stew,
Or use a gun or club or knife
To take some other monkey's life.
Yes, man descended—the ornery cuss;
But, brothers, he didn't descend from us!"

We think that in order to sin we must break one of the ten commandments. The first commandment is, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." So we say that we have sinned if we put God secondary to anything. The second commandment is, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image . . ." Therefore we say that the poor, ignorant heathen in Africa is sinning when he bows down to wood and stone. The third commandment is, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain . . ." Accordingly, we say that the man who is always cursing is a sinner. The fourth commandment is, "Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy . . ." Consequently, many say if we play baseball on Sunday we are sinning. The fifth commandment is, "Honor thy father and mother . . ." Therefore, we say that if a boy or girl beats his or her mother or father he or she is a great sinner. The sixth commandment is, "Thou shalt not kill . . ." Accordingly, if someone goes and willfully kills another, he is classed as the chief of sinners. The seventh commandment is, "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Consequently, if some man takes up with another man's wife we say he is a sinner. The eighth commandment is, "Thou shalt not steal." So we say that if I steal your automobile I am a sinner. The ninth commandment is, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor . . ." Therefore, we think that those people who go about gossiping falsely are great sinners. And the tenth commandment is, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house . . ." If you have something, and I want it desperately, I covet it, and you say I am sinning. We think that we have to break one of those commandments order to sin.

But just a moment!!! Did you ever consider that you may sin simply by doing nothing? James says, "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin." We may sin, not by committing some great crime, but simply by doing nothing, leaving undone the things we know it is our duty to do. "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin."

Several stories told by Jesus and relatives to Jesus indicate that he taught the same idea: that we may sin by complacency, indifference, simply by doing nothing.

In Matthew 12:43-45 Jesus tells this story: "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he passes through waterless places seeking rest, but he finds none. Then he says, 'I will return to my house from which I came.' And when he is come he finds it empty, swept, and put in order. Then he goes and brings with him seven other spirits more evil than himself, and they enter and dwell there; and the last state of that man becomes worse than the first." Here Jesus is speaking in the terms of thought of his own day, in terms of unclean spirits. What is an unclean spirit? It may be a bad temper, or a mean animosity, or a tendency to steal, or the habit of drink, or any other besetting sin. When a man expels that evil from his life, if he does not put something good in its place, if he does nothing, he becomes seven times more bedeviled than at first. God cannot tolerate an empty life, the person who does nothing. "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin."

Furthermore, now, let us take a more familiar story, that of the last judgment in Matthew 25:31-46: the nations are gathered before Jesus, and he has separated the good from the bad, the sheep from the goats. The sheep are on the right hand and the goats are on the left hand. "Then he will say to those at his left hand, 'Depart from me, you cursed, into eternal fire prepared for the devil and his angels; for I was hungry and you gave me no food, I was thirsty, and you gave me no drink, I was a stranger and you did not welcome me, naked and you did not clothe me, sick and in prison and you did not visit me.' Then they also will answer, 'Lord, when did we see thee hungry or thirsty or a stranger or naked or sick or in prison, and did not minister to thee?' Then he will answer them, 'Truly, I say to you, as you did it not to one of the least of these, you did it not to me.' And they will go away into eternal punishment . . ." Those who go away into eternal punishment did not do any outrageous sin. The story does not tell us that they did any harm. They broke none of the ten commandments. They simply did nothing when they could have, when they knew it was right to minister to the needy. "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin."

In Luke 16:19-31 is the story of the rich man and Lazarus: "There was a rich man, who was clothed in purple and fine linen and who feasted sumptuously every day. And at his gate lay a poor man named Lazarus, full of sores, who desired to be fed with what fell from the rich man's table; moreover the dogs came and licked his sores. The poor man died and was carried by the angels to Abraham's bosom. The rich man also died and was buried; and in Hades, being in torment, he lifted up his eyes . . ." Jesus does not say that the rich man kicked Lazarus every time he came out of his house. The rich man is condemned because he did nothing—no harm, no good. "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin."

The most famous story that Jesus ever told implies the same idea. It is the story of the Good Samaritan "A man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and he fell among robbers, who stripped him and beat him, and departed, leaving him half-dead. Now by chance a priest was going down that road; and when he saw him he passed by on the other side. So likewise a Levite, when he came to the place and saw him, passed by on the other side." Then the Good Sa-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In a month our forty-four churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference with their ten thousand eight hundred fifty-eight members will be closing the work of the present conference year. What will the record be? What will the twenty-three ministers who serve these forty-four churches have to show for their year of pastoral service?

Last year these twenty-three preachers reported an average net gain per pastor of eight new members. Will we gain more, or less this year? The net gain for our conference a year ago was 193 new members. We have a month to see to it that that gain is bettered this year. Let us do it.

Last year these twenty-three ministers reported Missionary and Benevolent giving by the forty-four churches of fifty-three thousand eight hundred seven dollars ($53,807.00). Will they report more or less this year? There is yet time to round off the year in good fashion. But it will take both time and attention. What will we do about it? Will our churches be proud to follow our humble leadership? Yes, if it is really "leadership," and if it is humble enough, and sincere. Last year we gave nearly $5.00 per member per year for Missions and Benevolences. Let us see if we cannot round out a better figure for this year's report. Let every pastor do a bit of figuring for his field and see what the average Missionary and Benevolent giving is in his own churches. Is your church above or below the average? The Suffolk Church reported 1,473 members last year with a total Missionary and Benevolent giving of eight thousand one hundred forty-three dollars ($8,143.00).

The $5.00 per member for "others" per year is, comparatively speaking, good; but even so when we realize how needy the world is, and how urgent the command of the Christ is, it seems like plenty little. Has your church reached it? Those who have been greatly blessed in this year of earning and serving will add to their happiness by increasing their missionary and benevolent giving. Our college, our orphanage, our Mission Board, and all the enterprises of our denomination, as well as our local churches are greatly in need of liberal giving.

Will not all who read these lines resolve anew to see to it that his or her church reports a good and progressive year at the forthcoming conference? Will not each of our twenty-three pastors call the attention of their churches to the rounding out of a good year, and to the setting of stronger, nobler plans for the coming year. Let us make our Christian duty a joyous privilege—a divine and sacred trust between ourselves and our Lord.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

WORK CAMP IN SOUTHEAST MISSOURI.

Increasingly you have been hearing about work camps in magazines and in talks. Reader's Digest covered the subject in a recent issue. They actually do what the name implies, but the work they do puts faith into action, the kind Christ taught.

This summer I had the opportunity of participating in a work camp in Southeast Missouri sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee and the Division of Christian Education.

There is a very definite purpose in the work done and the reason for it being done. Eight college young people from different parts of the country made a decision to spend this summer in a constructive way which they felt would give a lift to those needing a helping hand. By such action our nation can be strengthened and the world can honestly look upon America as a land of freedom and equality.

If the social problems inflicting a nation are cured, then people will learn how to enjoy a full life and to become better citizens.

We worked in one of nine of the Delmo Housing Projects in which there are seventy families who exist mainly on the income cotton affords them. These projects were built in 1940 by Farm Security Administration to house over 500 homeless sharecropper families in this area. Until recently Dave Burgess from our Home Mission Board had been ministering to the people of the projects.

To help the project at Wyatt to become more community-minded the American Friends Service Committee decided that a community center should be built there as had been at two other projects. Our job was just that, building, painting, plumbing and wiring with able help from the people.

Not only did we do this but also our time was spent in organizing community projects such as sings, Scouts and recreation. Building a playground was also part of our work.

I feel sure that the people we lived, played and worked with were given encouragement by our presence and by the task we undertook to do for them. Such as this had been unimaginable by a people who have for so long suffered under the oppression of inequality.

For each of us the experience was one which shall greatly influence and broaden our outlook on the problems which confront us in Christian America that must be faced—NOW!

NO CAUSE FOR COMPLACENCY.

What boots it if less than one-half of one per cent of the people of this country are alcoholics? The ratio may be higher. It is a guess, predicated on some evidence. Suppose it is about right. Suppose there are a mere three or four hundred thousand of our fellows living in a veritable hell on earth? There may be ten times that many habitual heavy drinkers who are sliding down into the abyss. Is all this nothing to us? Has sympathetic concern fled to brutish beasts? Is our interest—if there be interest—only in the end result? Or is there concern for prevention of such catastrophe? Can we see? Can our eyes take in the conclusion, the awful conclusion of the whole matter, and also, the gay, non-tragic beginnings in the social glass? Are we complacent about tuberculosis? Do we look on the end of its course and pay little or no attention to its source? Do we look with commiserative equanimity on the inroads of cancer? Why, if we have eyes to see, do we allow ourselves as churchmen, as lovers of our kind, as keepers of our brothers—why do we allow ourselves to be lulled into unconcern by the siren songs of those who make and sell the deadly virus with which alcoholics become infected? Why smile indulgently when our lovely boys and girls lift that first glass to their innocent and unsuspecting lips? Many of them cannot learn to handle their liquor as a social accomplishment. Beware of that first glass! In it, potentially, is unspeakable trouble.—Bishop W. E. Hammaker, in an address at Chicago, January, 1947.

Religion is the love of the eternal and infinite; and no one who seeks after the knowledge of God as diligently as other men seek after wealth and honor, ever come away empty-handed.—Canon Brereton.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

WHY THE CHANGE?

Fifteen years ago no college was expanding; no college's rooming facilities were exhausted. All colleges were using every possible means to induce young people of college age to enroll for the regular college course or for special work. Scholarships, work jobs, and other financial considerations were offered. Faculty members were easy to find and not too difficult to employ. Some with Ph.D. degrees could be employed for from $1,200 up for nine months' service.

This is the same country. We are the same people. The colleges are the same institutions of higher learning, but conditions are vastly different. Most colleges have been filled to capacity for months. They have expanded their classroom and laboratory facilities and still they come. There are literally hundreds and thousands of high school graduates, G. I. and civilian, who will not be able to find college accommodations and privileges. This is a regrettable situation—one that seems impossible of solution at present. The situation is further complicated by an insufficient, available number of instructors. Many of the larger schools have been compelled to resort to the practice of using members of the present graduating classes or of the graduate schools as instructors.

There are various reasons for the radical changes in conditions relating to higher education. The population of the country is increasing annually. Under our compulsory system of education an increasingly larger percentage of our children go to public schools. There are more high school graduates each year. These are encouraged to complete their education. Consequently, an increasingly larger percentage of high school graduates apply for entrance in college. Our government has popularized education by making it plain to the boys when they entered the armed services of our country that a certain amount of educational training was necessary and proceeded to see that they received such training before going into combat or proceeded with the work assigned. Now that the war is over, the Government has again encouraged all honorably discharged veterans to complete their education in an accredited college and has provided the money for the expense of the same. Never in the history of mankind has the ex-soldier been treated so kindly and been provided for so generously as have the veterans of the American armed forces of World II. Then, too, conditions in general are more prosperous than ever, and the average family is able to provide a college education for its children.

These are some of the reasons for the change in conditions that have to do with the education of American youth and the end is not yet. At Elon College the demand for entrance is greater than it was a year ago, and the facts are that it will be greater next year than this and so on for the next five to ten years. The big question confronting the Board of Trustees and the alumni is what shall we do about it? In the writer's judgment, looking to the future and planning for years to come, we should provide first-class accommodations for a student body of 1,000 and do it as quickly as possible. This would mean considerable money but it would certainly be a good investment—one that would bear rich dividends in human character as well as in dollars and cents.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

The conference year 1946-47 is rapidly approaching its close. Many of our Sunday schools and churches have not only been thoughtful but generous to the College in its needs. Each church has been apportioned a definite amount for the financial support of the College. By far the greater number of our churches comply with conference apportionments in full. Some pay more than they have been apportioned and there are a few who do not meet conference requirements. The total amount apportioned is $12,500—a small amount, I am sure you will agree, for the church to contribute for the support of its college and yet we have not during any one year received the full apportionments. I trust that our churches will try to go "the second mile" in the support of their college. Let's make sure that each church raises its share and, if possible, makes an extra contribution to help atone for the churches that may fall behind.

FUNCTIONS OF RELIGIOUS BROADCASTING DEFINED.

"Religious broadcasting can become an important part of the conscience of the community," twenty-seven religious broadcasters from seventeen states and Canada were told by Dr. Ross Snyder, dean of the Religious Radio Workshop in session during August at Chicago University.

Dr. Snyder stressed that "religious broadcasting can address its message to the moral fatigue and the feeling that it does no good to struggle for a better world. Programs can fight for civic righteousness and highlight those persons in the community who are working constructively."

If the Church has acquired skills for the relief and therapy of people who acknowledge insecurity in their personal lives, then religious radio can and must communicate to them, he said, adding: "Thus, the over-arching world view taken by Christianity includes some interpretation of the long sweep of history, one's own personal destiny and meaning, what kind of God there is and how He works in the world, and how man may have life.

"In this way, religious broadcasting can help build wider sanctions for the good life, for radio is a meeting place of experiences of the community, with men of religious weight occupying some of the seats."

Emotional identification and a sense of belonging within a community were emphasized as needs existing among the general listening public. "To bring the people of a community together in righteousness and mutuality is an important service goal of religious broadcasting. This is using the medium of radio for true redemptive purposes.

"Thus, in his own community, the religious broadcaster is privileged to heal and to fight for and to amass such a warm, positive witness to the

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
Sunday, July 13, 1947.

Dear Friends:

The house is resounding now with the left-overs of the Sunday afternoon youth meeting. Some girls stayed behind to play Rook; some boys are playing around in the living room tinkering with the Dulcitone (a sort of harpsichord which the Storrs left here) and singing. Since our dining room is so big, it amply accomodates Dick and me at our desks and the girls around their Rook table (a round dining room table left us by the Storrs). Most of these same high and junior high kids come here every Monday, Wednesday and Friday morning for an English class; and a good many come Saturday morning for a choir practice. Often they stay or come by, to play here. In a big open-air building out front there is a makeshift pingpong table which they enjoy—our class is there, too. Around to the side, is a freshly leveled space which we plan to make into a tennis court. There is still enough lawn left for ball games and other things. The grounds and the huge porches enabled us to have a very successful picnic (35 attended) after last Sunday's meeting. Since we were at home, boiled water was available for the thirsty players, and there was a handy place to fix food. So we're getting more and more reconciled, almost enthusiastic about this huge "plantation" we've had to take over.

About that picnic: I was very anxious to see what kind of food would be forthcoming. They had planned and postponed the picnic twice; so this time it was all spur of the moment. Since Sunday is like every other day here, the food committee had no trouble planning and buying immediately what they wanted to fix. I fear our cook, Schwei Lin, bore the brunt of it; but he had a friend who helped him. Some boys went to the street (the usual expression for going out to buy) with our shopping basket and a box. Not long after, they were back; but all I saw was a small piece of fat pork dangling from a string from someone's finger.

After a good bit of playing, supper was announced. Our neighbors had run home for extra rice bowls which, added to our total collection of spoons—table, tea, soup and iced-tea—made up all the necessary equipment. On a small square table which had been carried to the porch were all the large receptacles which could be found, all filled with steaming rice. Some bean sprouts, onions, the dash of meat, and a lot of tiny dried shrimp had been added to this soft rice, making a distinctive one-dish meal. I say "distinctive" because of the flavor imparted by these small bug-like shrimp. They are not my favorites; but I downed a full bowl, while most of the others were making way with two or three. Each person was supplied a hard-boiled egg, too—in the shell, of course. After the after-meal games, we served each with a small sample of lemonade, just for the sake of an American picnic touch. The lemonade was made from that army artificial lemon powder; the G. I.'s call it battery acid. I wonder what our guests called it.

Most average Chinese homes have little stools, chair height, for chairs; We inherited a good supply of these from one of the schools which was here during the war. They are made of bamboo, of course, and so are very handy to move around from porch to living room to yard. They added one more touch of comfort for the picnickers.

Friday, July 4, the older young people met here. After the worship and discussion, we played "Ballad for Americans" for them. Our victrola arrangement is a far cry from an FM radio-phonograph; but most of the music is recognizable, and it's one more thing the folks enjoy.

We've just started a youth choir. It's made up from the two youth groups; the older ones practicing Thursday nights, the younger ones Saturday mornings. They sang much better this morning than they did last week at their first service. How I long for a piano to help them, or at least a good reed organ. The Dulcitone is falling to pieces fast; and at best, it was too weak for choral singing. We're glad to have it despite the clumps of blank notes which mar its tinkle, for we have our rehearsals right in our home, situated half-way between the two churches. Our choir alternates, as we ourselves do, between the two churches; one of them (Continued on page 10.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

THANK OFFERING THIS YEAR.

It seems to me that when we invest money in a home for our Convention Superintendent, we are expressing the utmost faith in our church and our cooperation with the Woman's Missionary Convention. Nothing makes our church any stronger than the unity and cooperation of many members, and when we seek to build up the internal functioning of our administrative offices, it is like lubricating and repairing a machine—it is in much better working order.

It is my privilege to be on the Thank Offering Committee this year, and that in itself makes me interested in our project for this year. However, as a minister's wife I have become a keen observer of church work, and I have noticed that wherever adequate provision is made for the living conditions of a pastor, the church work runs much more smoothly. We would have been absolutely without a place to live in Winston-Salem when we came two years ago, had there been no parsonage. We realized how lucky we were to have a home when numbers of people in the city couldn't even find a room. We were able to move in and start our work immediately, whereas it took the minister of the Evangelical and Reformed church here about six months to get a place where his family could live. A church expresses a high regard for its minister when it provides a suitable place to live. The Convention should certainly value the service of the Superintendent as much as a church does its minister.

The whole Southern Convention has launched the project of providing a home for the Superintendent, and we have expressed our willingness to help and our eagerness to have a part in this undertaking. Isn't this action typical of our women? We always want to have a part in new undertakings of our church, and we want to hold up our end of the work. The men have frequently said that if they want a thing done, they just call on the women. I am sure that this time the women won't let them down. We can make a sizeable gift to the Superintendent's home, and we will be proud of our work in years to come. If we make our Thank Offering this year as generous as we have before, the Convention will be encouraged to carry this project on to completion.

Let us begin at home and have a "home," so we may carry the gospel to homes throughout the world.

CAREY ANDES.

PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA.

Since we, of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, of First Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, are nearing the close of our year's work, we experienced mingled feelings of regret and gladness—regret that we have not been able to do and give more for our Lord, who has so wonderfully blessed us—and gladness that He continues to bless us, with the happy privilege of helping to send His gospel to all mankind.

During the year, we have been striving to reach the Standard of Excellence, and feel sure we will attain the goal. Early in the year, we had a public service, with installation of officers, by our pastor, and at another public service our pastor showed slides of "Three Coat Men," and of scenes in Africa. These were well attended. At the third Sunday evening service in November, we observed, with the assistance of our pastor, our Thank Offering Service, publicly, and received a fine collection for the Jacksons in Shaowu, China. The World Day of Prayer was observed by our members cooperating with other churches of the city, at the First Lutheran Church. Our group was invited by the Shelton Memorial Church, Portsmouth, to observe May Fellowship Day with them, and a good number attended, enjoying the occasion much. The study book, India at the Threshold, was studied and reviewed by Mrs. J. F. Morgan at the Shelton Memorial Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, in cooperation with the ladies of that church. The book, Portrait of a Pilgrim, was studied and then reviewed in a most inspiring manner by our new pastor, Rev. Stanley Carne, at a monthly meeting. Mrs. R. F. Edwards, Superintendent of Spiritual Life, gave us fine programs each month and taught the book, The Divine Fatherhood in a most helpful way. Rev. Mr. Carne reviewed the book at our July meeting, which was impressive to us all. We plan to send in a Life Membership for one of our charter members.

We sent a box to Elon Orphanage for Christmas. A large bag for relief work among the Greeks was recently sent, filled with shoes and clothing. We have helped in different ways for Friendly Service work. We added an increase to our roll of five new members and feel that we have had a very inspiring and profitable year thus far.

RUTH COLLINS,
President.

INGRAM, VIRGINIA.

We feel that we have had a fine year in our work here. Our members are interested in supporting the work in every way. We observed the thank offering program in November with a public service, received a fine offering. We had our World Day of Prayer program all planned, but a very deep snow which blocked our roads prevented us from getting to church, but we observed it in our homes. Our pastor, Rev. Clyde Fields, reviewed our Bible study at our church in April one evening after our annual fellowship supper. He gave us an outline for further study individually.

We met with the Presbyterian Church for a splendid review on India, as they were studying the same book we were.

One of our members, Mrs. F. C. Whelton, reviewed in a very fine way our home book. We had a nice delegation at our Spring Rally in Lynchburg, and we are looking forward to the fall conference in Burlington.

Our society sent two bags of good clothing for overseas relief.

We gave a Life Memorial for Mrs. Rowland, and we are giving three Life Memberships.

Three of our members attended the Convention in June, and a part of the School of Missions.

We believe we have met all requirements of the Standard of Excellence and hope to be among those on the Roll of Honor.

EVA A. ADAMS,
President.

PLEASANT RIDGE (R).

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Pleasant Ridge Church (R) finds this has been an interesting and enjoyable year in the work. We were fortunate in having Miss Meebold with us for a day or two last November. She told us many interesting things about her work in China, causing us to want to redouble our efforts has a small reed organ which still plays fairly well. The other has a bigger wheeze box the majority of whose notes you can slowly squeeze forth if you pump fast and hard and punch with determination. I comfort myself as I struggle, with the thought that maybe my fingers might gain strength if not skill.

Chinese names are one of our interesting little problems. Chinese family names are few; so that you always have many people with the same name who may be no relation. You have to learn a person's full name or you can't identify him—which just complicates the problem for us foreigners all the more. And in my contacts at the women's meetings it's harder still; for when I ask, "What's your name?" She tells me—her maiden name. Then I have to ask her husband's name. Through it all, the other women help her to say the names in Gwoyu (the national language); for in the native dialect the names are quite different. What they say for Gwoyu isn't always the Gwoyu we tried to learn at Yale either; and they may disagree how to say it!

That's just one tiny phase of the whole language problem. Every hymn we sing and every bit of Bible we read has to be prepared with hours of study; for these Chinese characters are an amazingly difficult system of writing. Of course, we can't prepare every scripture or responsive reading; but we are studying the books of the Bible one at a time. We've finished John and are well into Mark; so a few hundred characters are now beginning to stick in our minds. For the choir work, I have to Romanize (write the sounds of the characters with English letters) every thing we sing; and follow the music at the same time I follow the sheet of Romanized words. This feat is impossible when playing the accompaniments, so then I just "la" along with the tenor or alto or whoever needs the most help. There are some good singers here—five tenors and six basses is pretty good, don't you think? All they need is plenty of practice and experience; and I enjoy that.

Now it's almost time for the 7:00 (daylight saving time) news. The other night the reporter said the early morning papers were just coming out in New York. So when you folks are getting up in the morning we've already spent our day and are thinking about going to bed, or sitting around the gasoline lamp studying, reading, or writing. In fact I'd better get to studying right this minute. Good-bye.

Yours sincerely,
DOROTHY & DICK.

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

Shaowu, China,
April 13, 1947.

Dear Friends:

This has been another interesting week. A newsworthy item is the near-completion of the Jackson's house. A large crew of workers has been working on it like mad the last week or so. They have gotten all the walls cleaned and whitewashed, the downstairs woodwork painted, glass fitted in most of the downstairs windows, and screen doors and windows throughout. The whole place has been scrubbed clean. And now the refrigerator and some of their furniture has been moved over, and last night they slept over there for the first time. Formal moving day is to be tomorrow when the dining room table and kitchen equipment moves, and Mr. Chandler will also move over, with his stuff. After that they will eat over there, and I will probably eat with them, for awhile at least, as mealtime is the best time to talk over affairs that need to be discussed while Mr. Chandler is here. But I will be the sole owner and occupant of this wing of the hospital from now on. The others were very glad that this wing was fixed up and available for them to live in, but they are quite glad to get moved and get ready to settle down in their own home, unpack their things, etc.

Yesterday afternoon we took our weekly walk, and climbed the nearest hill right outside of town, visiting a Buddhist temple on the hillside half way up. The view of the city and the whole valley, both from the balcony of the temple and the hill, was superb. On top we met a whole party of primary school children on an outing with some of their teachers. They had been collecting flowers—huge red azaleas which were growing in profusion over the hillside, and made quite a gay picture. They speak better Mandarin than their elders, and we had a very interesting time talking with them. Dick had his camera along and showed them how it worked to their great delight. Altogether it was a very interesting afternoon.

Now for the hospital news. Yesterday Mr. Wei, the hospital business manager, returned from Foochow with another truckload of CNRRA supplies. They consisted of over sixty bags and boxes of medicines, blankets, mosquito netting, and all sorts of things. Two more truckloads are on their way by boat and will arrive during the next three weeks. But he tried this by truck from Nanping; and although he made it in only five days, he reports that the road is worse and more dangerous than ever. However, we also hear rumors that the National Government is sending in a crew to repair it and that it will be fixed up in the near future!

At the same time, we got word that hospital funds had finally arrived from Boston. We had been waiting for this money for over two months, and for the last two or three weeks the hospital was broke and all progress in fixing it up had come to a halt. Originally the repair work was financed by a cash grant from CNRRA, a small grant from the local church, and the trickle of earnings from the clinic. With that money, the roof had been repaired, the walls cleaned and whitewashed, the available glass put in the most important windows, the front yard cleaned up and landscaped, and about ten wooden Chinese beds had been built. Then we marked time—and the workmen meanwhile were busy fixing up the Jacksons' house. Now that the money is here, and more supplies, and our business manager is back, we can go ahead again, full blast. The jobs that need doing immediately include making more beds and cribs, making mattresses for all the beds, preparing my supply of old X-Ray film for use as a glass and putting it in all the remaining windows, putting in gauze screening in all the important windows, rebuilding the large stove in the basement and buying enough kitchen and eating equipment so that we can rehire our hospital cook and start the hospital kitchen, making nurses' uniforms, etc., building cupboards and shelves to store our huge stock of CNRRA supplies, improvising bedside tables, etc., etc. Then maybe the hospital board can meet and decide how big a scope the hospital can plan to open on, how many nurses, etc., we can hire. And then maybe we can open formally. That sure will be a great day; and the start that has been made this week by the arrival of the money and supplies has been very heartening.

FOR THE CHILDREN

JOY.

For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.—Matthew 16:25.

Paula could not deny that she had been crying. Her eyes were red, her cheeks swollen and her head ached. But who wouldn't cry? It seemed that all she ever did benefited someone else. It was help mother with the housework after school, because she was "such a big help." It was help her brother and sister with their lessons and try to study her own at the same time, because she was "so smart and so patient with the children." It was take care of the class records during study periods at schools, because she was "so neat and such an excellent writer." It was play the piano for Sunday school because she "played so well."

Well, she was tired of always being imposed up. She was tired of being the one who always had to do the work.

Every time she planned a free moment, something always happened. Like today. She had looked forward for weeks to attending the basketball game after school (the last one of the season, but the first one for her). Then mother called at school and left word for her to come right home. "Something unexpected had happened."

Well, it was unexpected, all right, Paula fretted. Who would have supposed Aunt Mary would fall and dislocate her hip the very day of the basketball game and the very day Miss Joy Neiling was to speak at the dinner given by the Bethany Class? Of course, somebody had to be home when Dale and Nora came from school. Somebody had to see that they changed from their school clothes to their play clothes. Somebody had to see that they both played out in the fresh air until dinner. Somebody had to get dinner ready by the time Dad came from the office. And, of course, that somebody was Paula.

The front doorbell rang. Well, let it ring! What did she care! Whoever it was could wait or else go away. It mattered not to her. The bell rang again. Go on and ring! Ring! Ring! all night and see if she cared! She stood still listening. It rang again. Then she stamped her way through the hall.

A very lovely, kind face smiled down at her.

"Is Mrs. Baily at home?" the visitor asked so sweetly that Paula's face grew crimson with inner shame.

"No, she isn't," she said awkwardly. "But she will be home in just a little while. Won't you come in?"

She led the way into the living room, and invited the visitor to be seated.

"I am quite sure Mother will be home soon," she continued. "Tonight is the dinner of the Bethany Class, and Mother is the class president. Perhaps you can wait for her."

Noticing Paula's tear-stained cheeks and reddened eyes, the visitor said gently:

"Thank you. I have plenty of time. I think I shall wait for your mother. I want to see her personally."

She smiled at Paula, who stood before her in an uncomfortable way. The she reached out her hand to Paula and said smilingly:

"Come. Sit here beside me, and tell me all about it. Even the most difficult problems seem lighter when we talk them over with someone who understands."

Paula's cheeks grew crimson again. The very fact that her expression revealed her unhappiness to a stranger embarrassed her. She hesitated, not knowing what to do. Then self-pity overwhelmed her again. Tears of self-sympathy began to flow down her cheeks. She let Miss Joy Neiling draw her to the couch and then sit close beside her.

Soon she had told Miss Neiling her whole story. How mistreated and imposed upon she was at home, at school, and even at church. Always doing something for others with never a moment for herself.

Miss Joy Neiling listened carefully and sympathetically. When Paula stopped to dry her eyes, she introduced herself. Paula's expression instantly changed. Miss Joy Neiling, the speaker for the Bethany Class dinner! Miss Joy Neiling, who had spent much of her life in the Tennessee mountains educating and Christianizing the mountaineers!

Miss Neiling noticed with a smile how bewildered Paula was.

"My train arrived earlier than I anticipated," she explained. "Since I had been corresponding with your mother, I came directly here, not knowing the exact location of the church or the time for dinner. How glad I am that I did come early," she continued, "for otherwise I would have missed seeing you." She smiled kindly at Paula.

"My father, you know, was a preacher and a missionary. The greater part of his life was spent establishing the very work I am trying to carry on among the mountaineers. He truly spent a life of service, and he planned for me to do the same."

Paul sat quietly, listening closely. "That is why he named me Joy,"

Miss Neiling explained. "He always told me my name meant first to serve Jesus, then others and then yourself."

"First Jesus. Then others. And then yourself," Paula repeated quietly.

"Yes," Miss Neiling assured her "And when you do, you will find you have little time to fret about yourself. The joy you will receive from serving Jesus and others before yourself will make up for any pleasures you forfeit or any time you sacrifice."

"Jesus. Others. Yourself," Paula repeated again. "The formula for personal joy."

She sat quietly for a moment as if turning it over in her mind. Then she smiled and squared her shoulders as she arose.

"Thank you, Miss Neiling," she said earnestly. "I, too, am glad you came early. I shall never forget this afternoon and the joy you have taught me."

"Yes, indeed. Coming to the library is just as much of a treat for Patty as going to the park or to a children's movie," Rose declared. "I'm glad she enjoys the library so much, because that is a pleasure I can

THE WISDOM OF HARMONIOUS LIVING.

LESSON XI—SEPTEMBER 14, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Prov. 15:1-6.

The Art of Living Together.

Unless we go to a desert place, or to an uninhabited island, we have to live with other people. There will be some folks who read these Notes who may live in lonely sections, but most of us live in towns and villages or on farms near other people, and our lives are all bound up in the bundle of life with other people. How important it is, then, that we learn how to live with others and to live harmoniously. Think of how many homes are civil wars because members of the family have never mastered the fine art of living together. Think of how many communities are undesirable places in which to live because people do not live together peaceably. And still more sobering is the fact that the modern world is so bound together by communication and commerce and other means that nations have got to learn how to live harmoniously or there is going to be a grand blowup that might mark the end of civilization. The Art of Living Together Harmoniously—that ought to be one of the required subjects in every school from cradle to the grave.

Wrong Patterns of Action.

"Envy not the man of violence, and choose none of his ways." Mr. Hoover of the F. B. I. would give hearty assent to those words of the wise men. How much of our juvenile delinquency is due to the fact that the younger generation is getting its ideals of character and action from "men of violence." The movies are to blame for some of it, but not all. But the ideal of many a young man is some "man of violence" and his pattern of action is the ways of those who go through life using violence to get what they want. The home, the school and the Church must give ideals of character and action, which the younger generation will accept for their own. Unless this is done, society will be a madhouse.

The Magic of a Soft Word.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger." How often a word spoken in a soft or gentle way, or the right word spoken at the right time, has been as oil poured on troubled waters. Let one of the parties in an argument tone down his voice and its effect is immediately seen. Let an outsider speak softly to those who are angry and it tends to cool things off. Happy is the man who can speak the soft word at the right time. How many fires he puts out and how many hurts he prevents, he will never know.

The Curse of Grievous Words.

"But grievous words stir up anger." One angry word brings on another angry word, and trouble results. It is a mistake to minimize the power of words. Like one match, a grievous word can start a large and disastrous fire. The brother of our Lord said that the tongue can "defile the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell." Strong language, but true and tragic.

The Lying Tongue.

"A man that beareth false witness against his neighbor is a maul, and a sword, and a sharp arrow." That is a striking combination. A maul—an instrument that beats things down by sheer force; a sword—an instrument that cuts and lacerates; an arrow—an instrument that pierces and thrusts deeply. All these are symbols of a tongue that speaks untruth against one's neighbor, a tongue that lies. Homes and hearts and lives are broken by false words and by evil gossip. There are those who would not think of taking a sword and killing another, who will kill his reputation by gossip.

Killing An Enemy.

The best way to kill an enemy is to be kind to him. Return evil for evil and you make and keep your enemy. But return good for evil and in most cases you turn your enemy from an enemy into a friend. This is the meaning, and the approved result of "if thine enemy hunger feed him, if he is thirsty, give him to drink, for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head." It has been done again and again, both in the case of individuals and nations. One of the surest ways to make the conquest of Japan secure is to treat them humanely and generously.

Growing By What It Feeds Upon.

"For lack of wood the fire goeth out, and where there is no whisperer contention ceaseth." I have seen that demonstrated. In a group, members of the faculty with whom my wife and I ate in Defiance College, was a woman whom some folks would have called "an old maid" but who was one of God's true gentlewomen. At times some bit of gossip about somebody would be brought to the table, and just about the time it would seem that it was going to furnish a juicy morsel for the folks at the table, this woman would say in so many words, and in one way or another, "Let's talk about something else" or "Let's not talk about folks like that" so she would diplomatically and tactfully change the conversation. And for want of wood the fire would go out. That woman was a Christian gentlewoman.

The Peacemakers.

Humanity will ultimately change its sense of values and its scale of values. The future belongs to the peacemakers, not the war-makers. Ulysses S. Grant was a great warrior, but he was never a greater man than when he refused the sword of Robert E. Lee and when he told Lee and his men to keep their mounts for they would need them for the spring plowing. He was a peace-maker. And one suspects that Douglas McArthur will be one of the world's great peacemakers.

Research teaches a man to admit he is wrong and to be proud of the fact that he does so, rather than try with all his energy to defend an unsound plan because he is afraid that admission of error is a confession of weakness when rather it is a sign of strength.

farm is a place to escape. Under more tolerable circumstances the farm may enjoy its pristine favor. The new era of productivity and enjoyment in farm life will be accompanied by a new era in the rural church. Its youthful leadership will be more easily retained. Healthier children will become its members. An expanding program of stewardship, with all its benefits, will be realized. The out-populating power of Christian stock will have greater opportunity to flourish. The sway of starvation and famine will be halted. "Who knoweth but that thou art come to the Kingdom for such a time as this?"

THE SIN OF DOING NOTHING.

maritan comes along and ministers to his need. Why does Jesus condemn this priest and Levite? Because they hurt the man? No, they did not touch or say anything harsh to the man. They passed by on the other side. They stand condemned because they did nothing. They did not do what they knew was right to do. "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, to him it is sin."

Not only may we sin by doing nothing, but we may sin by not doing enough. "And as he (Jesus) was setting out on his journey, a man ran up and knelt before him, and asked him, 'Good teacher, what must I do to inherit eternal life?' And Jesus said to him, 'Why do you call me good? No one is good but God alone. You know the commandments: Do not kill. Do not commit adultery. Do not steal. Do not bear false witness. Do not defraud. Honor your father and mother' And he said to him, 'Teacher, all these have I observed from my youth.' And Jesus looking upon him loved him, and said to him, 'You lack one thing; go, sell all that you have, and give it to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven; and come follow me.' At that saying his countenance fell, and he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions." Here was a man who claimed that he had kept the commandments, and who had wealth enough to minister to the needs of the world. He would not do enough. "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin."

Jesus meant the same thing when he said, "He that is not with me is against me," and again, "He that is not against us is for us."

The world in which we live demands that we, as individuals, do something positive, not that we just restrain from doing evil.

Many a "good Christian" is working against Christ, not by doing any harm, but by doing nothing. In our modern, impersonal world it is easy to sin by doing nothing. So many of us try to be Christian by trying to get rid of some evil in our life, and never think in positive terms of ministering to the needs of the world, of bettering human relations.

But, oh, how the world needs Good Samaritans, because in our world of hatred many men have gone down from Jerusalem to Jericho and have fallen among thieves, and we too often pass by on the other side. But can we always pass by on the other side? Do nothing, and the world goes to the hell of war, and with the world goes the nation, and with the nation goes the individual. "Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin."

You, too, too soon may go down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fall among thieves. Then you would realize what I am trying to say—"Whoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin."

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

to help spread the gospel in foreign fields.

The programs for the year have been very good, and we have especially enjoyed our study of India. Miss Betty Chicoine reviewed India at the Threshold recently for us, and our guests, the women of the Asheboro society. Our minister, Rev. W. T. Madren, gave our Bible study as a review. Sharing certain phases of our work with other societies has created a greater sense of oneness and increased our fellowship.

We have added new members to our roll, too. We have started a cradle roll in our church and have sixteen members.

Truly, we have found it is more blessed to give than to receive, as we have had our friendly service projects. Several boxes have been sent to Miss Angie Crew to be shared with her friends and ours in Japan. One such box was sent through Miss Meebold to China. Gifts were sent to India for the milk fund and a box of clothing to Elon Orphanage.

One of the most interesting things we've done was to "adopt" a teen-age girl at the orphanage. Sharing with her our gifts of love has meant much to us. We were also pleased to meet and know her when she visited us for a week recently. She was such a fine person and loved by the young and old who met her.

We feel we have been especially blessed this year in our work and are looking forward to an even greater year to come.

OAKLAND.

Our Woman's Auxiliary of Oakland Christian Church feels that we have had a pretty good year.

We have had very successful meetings with good programs and well planned devotionals. A new Circle of thirty members, named the Mammie Wood Circle, in honor of our beloved Mrs. Wood, has been added to our society this year.

We had our thank-offering program with good attendance and offering.

We derived a great amount of Christian fellowship through co-operating with other churches.

Our foreign study book, India at the Threshold, was reviewed by Mrs. John Fletcher and Mrs. William Harrell. We had Wesley Chapel Missionary Society as our guests.

We observed World Day of Prayer jointly with other churches and gave an offering.

Our society has given to Carroll County Mission, Franklinton Negro Institute, and gifts to Elon Orphanage, which is part of our friendly service.

We gave two Memorials for Mrs. R. B. Wood and Mrs. M. R. Pulley, two of our beloved members.

The Bible study, The Divine Fatherhood, was given monthly by our leader, Mrs. I. W. Johnson.

We have secured four new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, ten new subscriptions to The Missionary Herald, and two subscriptions to The Church Woman.

Our public meeting was held August 17 in our church auditorium, with Mrs. William Harrell, District Superintendent, as guest speaker. The cradle rolls, juniors and young people took part in the service.

We have met all of our requirements for the year, and with the help of our Heavenly Father want to continue to go forward in His work.

MRS. HARVEY SAUNDERS,
Secretary.

When you look at the world in a narrow way, how narrow it seems! When you look at it in a mean way, how mean it is! When you look at it selfishly, how selfish it is! But when you look at it in a broad, generous, friendly spirit, what wonderful people you find in it.—Selected.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The children at the Christian Orphanage have been having some real enjoyment lately. They are crazy about skating, both young and old. A man has built a building for skating between here and Burlington. It is a real nice plant and is run in a first-class manner. We have been letting our children, under the supervision of a matron, go one afternoon each week for two hours of skating. They get lots of fun out of it and enjoy it. Those who have been attending tell me that it is conducted in a first-class manner. Skating is a fine exercise.

We hope sometime that somebody of wealth will build us a gymnasium which we can use for basket ball and skating. It would be a splendid donation and a splendid asset to the orphanage plant.

Our next small job is a chicken house. We use a good many eggs and do not have chickens enough to supply our demand, and have to buy a good many on the high market. But if we had more chickens, the eggs would not be all profit by any means. Feed is selling at a high price, too, but we always could have eggs when needed. Children need eggs to eat, and they make real good food. We give them all the good pure sweet milk they can drink. Every child in the orphanage gained weight last year, and we had very little sickness in our group. We attribute our good health to regular hours to work, eat, sleep, and play.

The weather is still very dry and hot. There seems to be a section not but twenty or thirty miles wide that the rain has practically missed this year. Ground that was not broken last fall has been so hard and dry we have not been able to break it at any time this summer. We sowed 150 acres of land in lespedeza, and it has not grown but a very little this summer. We expected to make a bumper crop of hay. You can imagine how blue we are. We have lost two cuttings of alfalfa on account of the extreme dry weather. If we can have good seasons through September we will get one more cutting. A year like this comes once about every ten years. It certainly hits us hard when it does come.

We have carried out the instructions of the Board, and finished our repair work last week. We have been constantly at it all summer, and feel very much relieved that it is finished.

give her while she is with me during the week."

"Does Patty stay home with her mother each week-end?" I inquired.

"Yes," Rose answered, "Marcia, my daughter, and her husband both work in the city. They need to have someone take care of Patty during the week."

"How nice for both you and Patty that you are that someone!" I exclaimed.

Rose's face lighted as she replied, "Of course, it's a great joy to have Patty with me, but it isn't good for any child to have two mothers."

"I can see how that situation might present problems," I acknowledged, "but I'm sure you and your daughter can solve them."

"We endeavor to keep Patty's welfare uppermost in our minds," Rose told me. "It is natural for Marcia and John to wish to provide enjoyments for the child when she is with them, but they soon found out that it was not wise to carry this far enough to exclude themselves from the serious side of their little daughter's life.

"Neither did I want Patty's days with me to be just a humdrum routine," Rose continued. "We've answered the need for some sort of an outing by coming to the library once a week. I'm introducing my granddaughter to the books and pictures I've always loved—this provides a good time for us both.

"Instead of going on too-frequent excursions, Marcia and John now plan to have some quiet week ends at home with their daughter. We like to balance the fun and responsibility at each of Patty's homes."

"How do you solve the problems of behavior?" I inquired.

"A child who is in good health and is happily occupied doesn't present many behavior problems," Rose answered. "Naturally, there are times when some punishment is needed.

"Last Friday afternoon Patty was rude to a little neighbor—a girl! with whom she was playing. It was necessary to send her to her room for a while—she has a small room of her own at my house as well as at her parents' home. After Patty told me she was sorry she had spoken so unkindly to her little friend, I considered the incident closed. I did not tell Marcia, when she came for her daughter a few minutes later, that Patty had been a naughty girl. We feel that talking about a child's misdemeanors overemphasizes their importance, and besides Marcia and I have agreed not to discuss Patty's behavior in her presence.

"We are careful not to give conflicting directions," Rose continued. "If I tell Patty the day is too cool for her to wear her sunsuit, Marcia does not come and say, 'Of course it's warm enough for your sunsuit today, Patty.' However, I make an effort to assure myself whether or not she really needs more clothing than a sunsuit before I tell Patty.

"She never hears us arguing about what is best for her, because we think that such parental discussions detract from a child's sense of security. I leave as many decisions as possible to her mother. Marcia fills that role very acceptably except for the hours that she must be away from her child. I then take over with the thought of helping Patty to change as easily from mother to grandmother as if it were the usual thing for a child to do."

"Many mothers are working away from home nowadays, Rose," I told my friend. "I am glad you have shown me how part-time mothers can cooperate in guiding a child toward serene and happy living."

LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

the CNRRA supplies during the week and found out that they included a lot of most valuable and badly needed medicines and equipment. Among other things was enough mosquito netting for the whole hospital. But the most valuable prize was a box with eight army cots. That means that we now have eighteen beds to our credit, with more coming from Foochow.

Monday the Jacksons and Mr. Chandler moved over to their house, and I started taking my meals over there with them. Incidentally Mr. Chandler has been resting all week, recovering from a severe cold, he is almost well. Tuesday a big party arrived from Foochow. Dr. Yao was not in the party—he can't come up till the end of the month. But Mrs. Yao (known professionally as Dr. Hsu) arrived and with her brother, a dentist, and also a qualified laboratory technician, a treasurer, a tailor, and the tailor's apprentice. The tailor is only to be here temporarily till the mosquito nets are made and some nurses' and doctors' uniforms. After that, his apprentice will become the dentist's apprentice! But all these new arrivals have joined the staff of the hospital, so that now we have quite an imposing staff. The lab technician will work closely with me and will be invaluable. He can also draw, and I am going to have him make some public health posters.

Dr. Hsu is supposed to be a gynecologist, but has had special work in ophthalmology, and says she is willing to take all the work in the clinic that I don't want. Since the eye cases form the largest group that are puzzling me, I am quite happy to turn them over to her, and will also let her do the out-patient surgery, as well as the OB and Gyn. I will keep the medicine, pediatrics, and skin. She is a Foochow-trained girl—which means second-rate, German-run medical school—but she has since had good hospital work in Shanghai. She speaks no English, but is able to read German and Japanese. Her brother speaks a few words of English, and they are all able to read medicine labels and a few other words.

The Yaos are living in one of the Mission buildings across the street from the hospital, the one which has been earmarked as the superintendent's residence. The tailors and treasurer are temporarily living in the staff wing with me, in the rooms which the Jacksons and Mr. Chandler had vacated only the day before. Of course they also had to be fed; so the hospital cook was immediately rehired. I took advantage of this acceleration of plans to start eating again in the hospital, but compromised by taking suppers with the Jacksons till Mr. Chandler leaves so that I can continue to get in visits with him.

The hospital still isn't ready to open yet, because the repair work is proceeding at a snail's pace due to the shortage of carpenters; and we still only have the two part-time nurses. If I were running things, I would not want to hire such a big staff of accessories until the hospital was actually ready to open, and then would be inclined to expand cautiously, as the need and opportunity warranted. But I am definitely not running things, and am tickled to death that it is that way, and that the Chinese have the initiative to do their own planning. Besides, these people are invaluable and irreplaceable. The technician and dentist are both one of perhaps half a dozen of their specialty in all of Fukien; and without Dr. Yao's influence and efforts in our behalf we would never in the world have been able to get such personnel for years and years.

Have I neglected to comment on the weather and climate here? The flies are certainly abundant. Mosquitoes are just beginning to appear, and I slept under a net for the first time last night. There are also lots of other bugs of various kinds, including numbers of brilliantly colored butterflies. The tropical atmosphere is furnished by the presence of occasional trantulas crusing around the walls of the houses, which compare favorably in size with the ones we get in our bananas from Central America. But otherwise it is hard to realize that we are not in an ordinary temperate climate. The weather is rainy some days, but clear most of the time. It has gradually warmed up to the equivalent of Colorado in May or early June. Flowers are gorgeous everywhere, and the bird songs, especially in the mornings, are still like nothing I have heard anywhere. I should also mention six-inch lizards, and little toads, the size and jumping power of grasshoppers.

The Jacksons tell me that I should say more about the interesting patients I see in the clinic, and instructed me to be sure to tell what I told them about the man and his two wives. I did not suppose that men still practiced polygamy in modern China, but apparently there is no one to stop them if they choose to do so. This particular gentleman came in one day for a rather minor complaint; and although I was not able to do much for him, he evidently approved of the place as being safe for his family, for the next day his two wives both came in together. They were both middle-aged, and both recited exactly the same complaint of chronic cough, giving the same details of history as if they had rehearsed beforehand and made up a tale to give me. But when I examined them, one of them had an asthmatic bronchitis and the other one didn't. I gave the asthmatic a little iodide to see what it would do, and she was very happy because I had condescended to give her some of the Western magic medicine, and her companion, the senior wife, was wrapped in gloom because she had not found favor in my sight and had been denied the same. Yesterday the younger wife came in again, announcing that she was completely cured—and so she was—and all wreathed in smiles. I did not dare ask how the other one was!

This problem of the blind faith of the Chinese in Western medicine is not all comedy, however. As in America, some of it is stark tragedy. I don't mind so much when they poison themselves with their own native medicines, because most of them are fairly harmless. But when the introduction of Western civilization means that unqualified persons get and dispense powerful drugs, it is another matter. The patients in the clinic pay no attention to medical advice; I am just wasting my breath when I tell them anything. What they want most of all is an injection of something, but they will settle for pills, and are willing to pay almost anything for them. They have no conception of the fact that medicine might not be indicated for their ailment, or that it might also be poisonous, especially when taken on the "if a little is good, more must be better" principle. Best regards to all,

HOW I BECAME A CHRISTIAN

An Address at Whitby, Ontario, Canada

By COLONEL ROBERT ERNEST VAN GOETHEM

Chief Protestant Chaplain, Belgian and Colonial Forces

It is said that a fortune is made and lost in many families every four generation. One generation is very poor and works hard. The next becomes very wealth and the third becomes very lazy and careless and loses the family fortune. The fourth generation then starts over again. My great-grandfather was converted by a colporteur of the British Bible Society, and was an active Christian; my grandfather was a nominal Church member; my parents were free-thinkers; I am a Christian minister.

In my home no discussion of religion ever occurred. I was educated in a liberal school. All of my friends were liberals, and all were anti-Catholics. In 1916 I was taken prisoner by the Germans and was not liberated until in 1918. At that time my one consuming desire was to be free, and I was fast becoming wild and reckless in my living. For this reason, my father thought it would be well to send me to Canada to live the life of a farmer. He bought for me a large farm in Alberta. It was 160 acres of bush and called only for hard work. I spent most of my time in the town and in a little while lost all I had, including the farm. Then I went to Alaska hoping that in a new environment I would be able to make a new beginning, but I was still restless and went down the coast as far as Los Angeles. All the time I was vainly searching for something that would satisfy me. It never occurred to me, however, to search for it in the Church.

One evening, on the streets of Los Angeles, I ran into a group of young people who were conducting a Christian meeting. One invited me to come with them into the Church. I went and listened, but all that they said was as if they were speaking in a language which I did not understand. All the terms they used were strange to me. Even so, the spirit of God convicted me of sin. When the good man in charge of the meeting asked if anyone present wanted to believe in "Jesus as Saviour," I said, "Yes," for those words were a light to my soul. In an after-meeting he asked me if I wanted to pray. I replied that I did not know how. Then he taught me the prayer of the publican, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner." This became my prayer, and I went home knowing that something had changed me. I continued to go to the meetings, and I read the New Testament.

Later, I returned to my home in Belgium. No longer was I seeking a change of environment, for I had experienced a change of heart. God's Word continued to be life to me. During the war I was put in prison for preaching. A fellow prisoner said, "It is hell to be alone with oneself." I replied: "It is wonderful to be alone with God." Our communication had to be in secret through prison walls. I managed to lend him my Bible. This he read and when he was put to death, he said: "It is wonderful to be alone with God."

In this and in many ways I have learned: (1) that we must not rely on the experience of past generations; (2) that the Spirit of God applies the word of God to the human heart and makes it the word of life; (3) that the word of God is not bound.—Missions Public Relations Office.

NUMBER 36.

In Which Pew Are You?

In most churches there are quite a number of pews that look very much alike, but are really widely different.

There is first of all the Critical Pew. It watches the minister with eagle eye; even when he makes an impression on all the other pews our Critical Pew remains dumb. The choir knows it, and grows nervous. The singing is too light or too heavy. The janitor comes in for his share of attention, for the church is always too hot or too cold. The Critical Pew finds everything except blessing.

Then there is the Irregular Pew. Sometimes it is full, sometimes it is empty. On special occasions you may safely count upon its presence, but when a special missionary effort is to be made or funds raised for a new church home, you will make little mistake if you reckon upon that pew's tenants being elsewhere. The Irregular Pew enjoys very little blessing.

On the other side of the church is the Cordial Pew. It is radiant with sunshine, greets other pews with genuine cordiality, extends a handshake to any visitor, and listens with joy to the words of life. On the way out, the Cordial Pew fairly beams. "A most inspiring sermon!" The singing was fine. There is a good deal of blessing received by the occupants of the Cordial Pew.

But last there is the Prayerful Pew. It spends a moment or two with bowed head in silent prayer on entering. It comes to worship, and brings the spirit of worship along. It sings heartfully, hears the sermon prayerfully. When the minister rises to preach, he unconsciously turns toward the Prayerfully Pew. Then his heart grows warm, his spirit is afire, and his voice rings out in clarion notes of victory.

Which of these pews will you be found in as you come to worship in the Lord's house?—Selected.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Paul Vargo, a member of the Bethlehem (Disputanta) Church, has announced his decision to study for the Christian ministry.

The date for the meeting of the Board of Publication has been changed to September 15. The meeting will be held at Elon.

Rev. R. Chase Tappan, a ministerial student in his Junior year at Elon College, is pastor of the Carolina Church, near Burlington, N. C.

Dr. F. C. Lester, administered baptism August 31 to members recently uniting with Elk Spur and Rocky Ford Churches in Carroll County, Va.

After serving our churches in North Carolina and Ohio, the Rev. F. Ervin Hyde has recently assumed a pastorate at Cadillac, Michigan. His address is 418 Stimson St.

Rev. and Mrs. H. Allan Gleason, Jr., have completed their services in Carroll County and now make their home in Hartford, Conn., where Mr. Gleason is a member of the faculty of Hartford Seminary.

Miss Virginia Webber who served for a number of years as director of religious education in our Newport News Church is now Educational Director in First Church, Springfield, Mass. Her address is 109 Spring St.

Dr. Douglas Horton attended the International Congregational Council held recently in Bournemouth, England. Plans were made for a similar meeting to be held in the United States in the summer of 1949.

Mrs. O. H. Paris, of Greensboro, President of the Woman's Missionary Convention, and Superintendent Scott were speakers at the Valley Missionary Conference held at Antioch Church, near Harrisonburg, September 2.

The fifth Sunday meeting of Chapel Hill, Damascus, Morrisville, O'Kelly's Chapel and Martha's Chapel was held at Martha's Chapel on August 31. Dr. L. E. Smith, Superintendent Scott and Rev. Bernard V. Munger were the speakers. Rev. Martin L. Fogleman is pastor of Martha's Chapel and presided at the services held at 11:00 A. M. and 2:00 P. M.

Rev. Clyde L. Fields, ministerial student at Elon College, was guest speaker at special services at Damascus Church, near Chapel Hill the week of August 25-29. There were four professions of faith during the meetings and two united with the church.

The Rev. Edward James Vorba, whose "Statement of Personal Faith" appeared in our August 14 issue, will leave New York September 18 for a year of study at the University of Manchester in England. Mr. Vorba is a graduate cum laude of the Yale Divinity School, a member of the Mason City, Iowa, Church, and has served as Summer Assistant in that church the past two years.

MISS JENNIE JACOBS.

NURSE FROM SHAOWU AND FOOCHOW.

Helping to train Chinese Florence Nightingales to meet the tremendous need for nurses in China has been the main job of Miss Jennie Jacobs, R.N., Congregational medical missionary from Foochow, China, who has been speaking at Summer Conferences.

"The crowing of a king is of no more importance than the capping service at our school of nursing," declares Miss Jacobs who not only trains Chinese nurses at the Willis F. Pierce Memorial Hospital in Foochow, China, but is the head of Public Health work radiating from that institution. China is in great need of this particular service and prior to the Japanese invasion the Chinese Government was doing quite a bit to develop public health work.

When the Japanese armies took Foochow during World War II Miss Jacobs, along with other workers at the hospital, was interned for several months. She came through unharmed but the equipment in the hospital was removed by the invaders.

Miss Jacobs went out to China in 1924 under the American Board of Foreign Missions. She worked in Shaowu for about three years and then was transferred to the Willis F. Pierce Memorial Hospital in Foochow. It was at Shaowu that she first heard the midnight cry of "Save life! Save life!" as the suffering hammered at the door of the doctor's home.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

A LETTER TO THE CONVENTION SUPERINTENDENT.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
July 31, 1947.

Dr. W. T. Scott,
Elon College, N. C.

Dear Bill:

Your good letter of June 21 did a lot to pep us up. I'm delighted that the women of the Southern Convention have agreed to assist in the ministerial education of Shaowu young men in America. I've already told you that our greatest need is trained native leadership. The four ministers now at work are all past 50 and the average Chinese life expectancy is under 50, so new workers are imperative if the work is to go on. With their ready command of the language, with their natural understanding of the people and their problems, the consecrated native leader can accomplish ever so much more than a missionary could ever hope to do—and at far less cost to the Board.

The problem of ministerial education is a serious one. The two seminaries here (Foochow and Nanking) labor under difficulties. They both take boys directly out of high school and give them a degree in two years, so I fear the standards are not too high. Books and supplies are inadequate at this time and trained instructors scarce in religion, as in other fields.

For that reason, young men and women in all professions want to go to America to study. It has been a surprise to discover how many young men and women dream about the day when they can go to America to study. I've never seen anything like it. The government is sending students to study agriculture, engineering, medicine, economics, etc., and it seems to me our religious leaders should be given an equal opportunity if it is possible. We certainly want our ministers to get as good training in their field as those in other professions are getting. All of this enters in my recommendations that these young men come to the U. S.

Secondly, I believe the experience of being in our American churches, witnessing present day methods, actually taking part in a going program of a local church will be very helpful.

Thirdly, I feel that these young men will make one more link with the Southern Convention and should not only stimulate the interest of our people there in Missions, but should make a real contribution in mutual understanding between our two great peoples.

At present there are three young men whom the leaders of the Synod and myself consider eligible to come. They have all been approved by the Synod as "recommended to study Theology in America if the opportunity presents itself."

The first is Henry Yuan (Yuan Hung). Henry came to see me shortly after we arrived saying that he wished to study for the ministry and that a Chinese friend had promised to help him get a scholarship in Western Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh (Presbyterian). I told him that I would help him get to America and back (with the Garland Gray Fund). He has since secured a scholarship for $500, and already has his passport. Henry plans to leave here in November or December of this year. He is 33 years old and comes from a poor, but devout home. His father has been dead for many years. After graduating from F.C.U., he taught school and later was made manager of F. C. U. (Fukien Christian University, Foochow). He handles English well and makes a good appearance. Henry's girl friend is now in America studying under a government scholarship. I would suggest that he be given $150 a year for three years from the Southern Convention. I think Mr. Storrs will add $25 to that and I will give a like amount. That will make a total of $700 which should be enough, shouldn't it? We are waiting for a catalog to come which will enlighten us further on the costs there. If you can find a job for Henry in the Southern Convention during the two summers he is there, perhaps under S. S. S., that would be excellent for him.

Secondly, there is Timothy Chang (Chang Syan Gwang.) Timothy is without doubt one of the most attractive, and at the same time one of the finest Christian young men I have ever met. My plan is for him to go to Duke so he can be near the Southern Convention. He would be very much liked by you all, I am sure of that. He comes from one of the oldest Christian families in Shaowu. His mother for years was the principal (Chinese) of the Woman's School and a teacher in Lau De Girl's School.

Timothy graduated from F. C. U. in Agriculture Economics in 1946 with an outstanding record. He won the highest scholarship award offered by the University. The dean says of him: "Academically speaking, he was without question one of the best students in his class, maintaining an average of 83.495 throughout his college course. He is quiet, courteous and quite scientifically minded." During these past five months Timothy has been my language teacher and we have become the best of friends. He is of immeasurable help to me. Daily my admiration for him increases.

Timothy's only drawback is his English, but he is working on that now. He studied English for nine years in the public schools, but unfortunately, although his comprehension is good, he has difficulty expressing himself, and for that reason I am suggesting that he go to America in the fall of 1948. In the meantime I am helping him with his language.

Finally, there is another young man, Chiu Shen Bau (Chiu is his surname). I haven't met this young man but I have heard excellent reports of him. His father is a lay preacher here. Shen Bau has completed his work at F. C. U. and one year at Nanking Seminary. He plans to return this fall to finish. His very able helpmate is a senior at F. C. U. now. I haven't talked it over with him, but if possible I'd like to have him go to America in about three or four years for one year's study.

SPIRITUAL VITALITY

Emil Brunner emphasises the fact that the Early Church knew the unity of the word and deed. "In modern days," he goes on to say, "the Church has abandoned that unity which is the sign of Biblical revelation: the union of the word of God and the act of God. Her recovery of health will depend upon whether and how soon, she can rediscover this unity, not only in theory but also in reality. A Church that consists only of hearers, and not of disciples, makes no impression on the world. She can do justice to her commission only when she discovers the unity of the Logos and the Dynamis, or the word and act of God."

The Church, in one sense of the word, means you. You are not all of the Church. You are not the "whole cheese." But you are an essential part of the Church. You are not the lump, but you may be the leaven. Therefore, recover in your own individual life the unity of the word and the deed, the "Logos and the Dynamis." This is the way of spiritual health.

BETTER THAN A CONCENTRATION CAMP

The fourth international Cancer Research Congress has been meeting this month in St. Louis. Press reports indicate that delegates from 44 nations were present. The statement of the president, Dr. E. V. Cowdry, that "Victims of concentration camps, because of their near starvation diet, may have a better chance of escaping cancer" has caused widespread interest and speculation. Experiments with animals, he said, have produced strong evidence that an almost starvation diet increases resistance to the disease, now the second greatest killer in the United States. It is his opinion that young adults who suffered in concentration camps will show less than normal incidence of cancer.

The ancients knew the therapeutic value of fasting. They realized that physical as well as spiritual benefits attended its practice. Jesus taught the value of fasting by precept and example. The Bible is more scientific and modern than we sometimes suspect. The Biblical method is better than a concentration camp.

ADEQUATE DEVOTIONAL HABITS

Private devotions and preaching have suffered as a result of desultory meditation and study. There is great value in adhering to a conscious, adequate pattern. Only in this way is one able to approach thoroughness.

Carl Adam, a Roman Catholic writer, has suggested a pattern for the study of Christ which is applicable for private devotions and preaching: "Express each and every aspect of His teaching; bring the living, redeeming, ruling, judging Christ before our eyes according to all the dimensions of His historical manifestation." Think of the cumulative influence of an entire congregation assiduously bringing the "living, redeeming, ruling Christ before their eyes according to all the dimensions of His historical manifestation!" The results would be revolutionary and contagious. Try it consecutively in your own private devotions and the Holy Spirit may lead others to do likewise.

Many ministers find the use of the lectern an indispensable aid in studying Christ and presenting Him to their congregations in all the amazing "dimensions of His historical imagination."

THE COMPULSIONS OF EVANGELISM

In the parable of The Great Supper, as recorded by St. Luke, messengers were sent away from the big cities to the ruder and cruder villages, for these are suggested by "the highways and hedges"; and with a persuasiveness that could not be withstood they were to "constrain them to come in."

Think of the "highways and hedges" of our American civilization! The underprivileged as well as the privileged are a charge upon our evangelistic efforts. The outposts of our missionary program must be maintained with zeal and fidelity. New communities must be explored with dispatch. We dare not abandon either the new or the remote areas to the wiles of secularism. Wherever there are clusters of humanity we must seek to bring them into God's Kingdom that ultimately they may enjoy the banquet of eternal life.

How shall we "compel" them to come in? "Music hath charms." Have we dared to use our finest musical resources in the high service of evangelism? Attractive and adequate publicity has compelling power. Biblical and gospel preaching, visitation, intercessory prayer and the manifestation of the Holy Spirit all have compelling power. Our wholehearted devotion to the redemptive purposes of God would start a great migration toward the heavenly Kingdom. To organization, education and litigation, we must add the crowning effort of evangelization.

"WHAT THE ARTIST SAW"

"An artist was asked to paint a picture of a dying church. Did he set upon canvas a small, feeble congregation in a ruined building? Quite the reverse. He depicted a stately edifice, with a rich pulpit, organ and windows. But in the porch there was hung a small box, with the words above it, 'Collection for Foreign Missions.' And just where the contributions should have gone, the slit was blocked by a cobweb! That was the artist's conception of a dying church, and it was profoundly true."—The Baptist Observer.

A Trip to the Country

Chinese Friends Furnish an Unusual Outing

As told by RICHARD L. JACKSON, Shaowu, China

A little before 8:00 on Friday morning, August 15, Pastor Liao's cheery voice called out, "Are you ready, Jan Mushr (Pastor Jackson)? If we get an early start, it won't be so hot."

"As soon as I fill my canteen," I replied, "I'll be all set."

About 8:00 we started out—five of us—toward Fujyatswen. Besides Pastor Liao of the East Gate Church, there was Timothy Chang (who we hope will be coming to America next year to study for the ministry), and two old gentlemen both with the name of Lee, although they are no kin. These last two named are very distinguished looking old heads (to be called old is a term of respect and endearment in China), carrying their umbrellas and fanning as they went, and presenting an interesting picture which I couldn't resist snapping on my Kodak 35 (in color) so you all can see it later also.

We first went through Shaowu (for about a mile), and then crossed an ancient covered bridge over a small stream, and a pontoon bridge over the Min River. Turning west, we started back into the country. We hadn't gone very far before we heard two angry voices raised to fever pitch. On the side of a hill were two men, who, when they saw Pastor Liao, immediately called him to help settle their argument. It is an old custom in China whenever there is an argument, to call in a third party to mediate. He usually is able to think of some compromise acceptable to both.

The first man approached Pastor Liao saying his wife had just died and he was digging a grave for her in this hill when this fellow objected saying it was his private property and he had no right to bury his wife there. He continued that where he came from it was customary to dig a grave in any bill, whether publicly or privately owned. Pastor Liao explained to him that the Shaowu custom was different. A person could use any public hill he wanted for a grave, but not private property. This being settled, we went on.

After following along a stream for about five miles (with mountains on either side), and after passing numerous small villages, we came to our destination—Fujyatswen (lit. Fu family village). There was no church there but four of the ten families are Christians. They were expecting us.

Some tea was brought for us to drink and a basin of warm water for washing, both of which were welcome after the long, hot walk.

As was customary, some watermelon seeds were brought for us to eat, but as I have such difficulty eating them, they brought me some roasted peanuts. The interior of the Fu's house was very clean—even though it had a dirt floor. The doors were wide open to catch every faint breeze—so, of course, the chickens ran to and fro looking for something to eat.

Soon after we arrived, the villagers began to come in to see the visitors and especially the queer foreigner. They sat around and talked about everything under the sun—but all in the Shaowu dialect, so I could only understand a word now and then. They talked about how this vicinity had formerly been infested with bandits, but were glad that they were very few now. Pastor Liao said that seven years ago he would not have dared take me along that road.

Shortly, one of the men came in and said it was time to Dzwo libai (worship), so we went to another home (also named Fu). People began coming from all directions until there were from 40 to 50 in the room from the very old to the very young. An old goose, sitting on some eggs in one end of the room, could just see over the top of the basket, and seemed very interested in all that went on.

Our worship began with a hymn and scripture. Then old Mr. Lee made a talk on why it is better to worship God than Pusa (idols). He told how he had served the Lord these many years and how he had been blessed with a family including four sons and some fine grandchildren. Mr. Lee has a scanty white beard which he continually strokes as he is speaking. He is a dramatic and gifted speaker, and the eyes of everyone were glued on him as he spoke. After he finished, Timothy spoke on God's gift of spiritual grace. Following this, Pastor Liao took out some pictures and told them the story of Joseph and his brothers. As these simple gospel stories were told and the meaning of Christianity explained, the people listened eagerly, their hearts hungry for the good news. Finally the other Mr. Lee led in prayer, we sang another song and the service was concluded. Practically none of the people could read or write, so the singing was done mostly by those who had come from Shaowu. Altogether, the service had lasted about an hour and a half.

After the worship Pastor Liao announced that I would take a picture of the group, so everyone went outside to a small hill. Mothers hurried to put on their babies' best dress, while others made haste to change to their "best." We had to wait some time before all were assembled, as the older women with little bound feet must walk so very slowly. The majority had never had their pictures taken before and some were afraid as it is said that after one has had his picture taken, he must be sick. Most of them did pose, though, and I hope you will see the picture before too long.

We then went back into the home of the first Mr. Fu to relax before dinner. Into the house came people with all manner of sickness. Pastor Liao had a prayer for them. One man's leg had swelled up about twice its normal size. I surely wished I were a doctor. One man was missing an eye, another a hand, both lost the year before trying to kill a tiger on a nearby mountain. Another man had an awful sore on the under part of his leg just above the knee and it pained him so he couldn't straighten his leg out at all. Little children with heads covered with boils and sores reminded me how much needed to be done in teaching cleanliness and health habits. Pastor Liao told me later that the country people are kept in continual poverty by so much sickness. When I returned, I told Dr. Ed Riggs about it, and he wants to go with us the next time.

The dinner, in the second Mr. Fu's house, was typical of all Chinese dinners—very rich and most delicious. I am getting so I can handle my chopsticks pretty well, so I can keep up with the best of them.

After lunch and another short rest, we started back to Shaowu, arriving an hour and a half later, tired and thirsty—more tired than I had felt for many a day. The combination of the hot August sun and the stiff pace really took something out of me. On the way back we saw farmers cutting and threshing rice by hand—a method used in Jesus' own day.

Fujyatswen is one of the thousands of villages in North Fukien where the gospel message will never be preached unless we go out to take it to them. The warm welcome of the people, their interest and eagerness made me anxious to do more of this kind of work.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

People are lovely. They like to do things. They are at their best when they are kindest. There is a man in our church who has given away more than 149 dozen of astors. Is anyone sick? Flowers from my friend. Is a neighbor in doubt or anxiety? Flowers come to him from a good neighbor. Is he shut-in or old? There is his bouquet. The flowers are beautiful, the neighborly act is divine.

I am for people, and I also greatly like flowers. Who does not? "Flowers are God's thoughts of beauty taking form to gladden mortal gaze," so someone has said. William Wordsworth says: "To me the meanest flower that blows can give thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears." Another puts it: "Every rose is an autograph from the hand of God." Flowers are the dramatic language of love. In Palestine, as in all the rest of the world, God says it with flowers. Where arid Palestine is too dry for violets, cactus blooms in a riot of color, and where goats run at large the throne bush blossoms profusely. God and good people love flowers.

The people of the Suffolk Church seem to be especially fond of flowers. Every department room, and many classrooms are enriched summer, spring, winter and fall with beautiful flowers. The altar in the main sanctuary is always fragrant with the choicest of their offerings. It is hard to have a room untidy, drab, and confused when flowers adorn the center of vision. Like magic it fixes up the whole room. Scattered songbooks leave the top of the piano, and left-over Sunday school literature is left over no longer. Flowers show up the confusion and right it.

And where flowers are, we are better. That must be the reason God has planted so many everywhere. I tried to say in rhyme once like this:

Oh! lovely vase of roses,
Fragrant and sweet,
Ennobling thoughts you bring me
Pleasant to greet;
Your perfect beauty fills me
Like sunlight the day,
And every selfish feeling
Gently steals away!

Since God placed some three thousand five hundred differing species of flowers in the Holy Land, and lavishly places them in every nook and cranny everywhere, we should learn their language of silent, unselfish beauty, and be ourselves lovelier still. Every kind thought put into action, whether it be a word, a deed, or some simple little service that pops up in an unexpected place like the water-melons home-raised and fresh-ripe which keep appearing on my back porch, placed thereby an unknown friend, they help us to have faith in the instinctive kindness of our neighbors.

NURSE FROM SHAOWU AND FOOCHOW.

Miss Jacobs' China career has not been a very placid one. When she first went to Shaowu, which is 250 miles up the Min River, there were often bandits. During the period around 1936-38 there were political and military upheavals which broke the calm course of life in Foochow. Although Miss Jacobs returned to America for furlough before the worst bombings of Foochow by the Japanese early in the war, she lived nevertheless for months under the tension which existed in those coastal cities over which bombing planes flew at regular intervals.

Then back in China during the occupation of Foochow by the Japanese she got a first hand taste of war and internment.

Born in Iowa Miss Jacobs attended Northwestern Classical Academy and served with the American Red Cross during World War I. She received her nurse's training in the Presbyterian Hospital and holds a Public Health Nurse degree from the University of Louisville. Before going to China she did nursing in the Kentucky Mountains.

* * * *

To have Miss Jennie Jacobs in your church or in the Young People's Summer Conferences is a rare privilege. She spoke at the Valley Camp and at Camp Hanes for the young people from North Carolina and Eastern Virginia. She also attended the sick in both camps. The young people came to love her.

She has one of those unusual spirits. Nothing seems to upset her and one feels that she has the control of any situation.

She has a message for each of us. As she tells of her experiences, particularly during the internment by the Japanese, one wishes that he could do more for the peace of the world. Many felt the stirring of the Spirit of God within them to render a greater service by becoming missionaries at home and abroad. Many thanks to the American Board for giving us this privilege of having Miss Jacobs in our midst.

She is preparing to return to China this fall and our prayers will go with her.

ERSKINE MEMORIAL HOLDS GROUND-BREAKING CEREMONY.

Erskine Memorial (Congregational) Church at Tryon, N. C., held a ground breaking ceremony Sunday, August 24, after the morning service, conducted by Dr. John P. Jockinsen of St. Petersburg, Fla., who supplied the pulpit during Rev. Frank W. Murtfeldt's absence. Dr. Jockinsen supplied the pulpit four years ago when the young people started making the concrete blocks. Plans for the addition of an educational building and community house were begun by the late Dr. C. Arthur Lincoln as far back as 1940. His death and the war interrupted these plans, but the committee has continued to raise funds, adding over $9,000 last Easter.

The ground breaking ceremony was opened with prayer by Dr. Jockinsen. Nelson Jackkson, Jr., reviewed the history of their efforts. The chairmen of the various boards, committees and societies took part by each turning a shovelful of dirt. John L. Brown and Wofford Foster of the Good Fellowship group, representing the young parents, told of their interest in the project. Little Mary Emily Jackson, age three, representing little folks in the Sunday school, was the last to turn her little shovelful. The ceremony was closed by singing, "The Church's One Foundation." Preceding the ceremony Dr. Jockinsen preached on "The Task of the Modern Church." Rev. Frank W. Murtfeldt is pastor of the church.

"In Tennessee there is a plant which turns out bombs. Here we have a plant which turns out ministers of the Gospel. The two seem remote and unrelated. Actually, the issue of our time, perhaps the issue of all human time, is which of the two outputs will prevail."—John Foster Dulles, at the Inauguration of President H. P. News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

TRANSPLANTING RELIGION.*

Last Christmas Mrs. Smith and I went down to Lakeview, North Carolina. Lakeview is a little hotel out in the country by a beautiful lake. We went in the hope of finding a few days' rest. Lakeview is near Southern Pines. This is in the long leaf pine section of the state. Mrs. Smith is very fond of long leaf pine. She thinks that the long leaf pine is one of the most, if not the most, beautiful of all the trees that we have.

On the morning of the day that we were to leave to return to the College, we borrowed a spade, drove out into the country where there were scores and hundreds of these long leaf pine seedlings, spaded up a half dozen or more, wrapped them carefully, and brought them back to the College to set on the lawn about the house and the campus. All but one of these seedlings seem to be living in spite of the fact that they have been uprooted, transplanted, brought to a different climate, set in different soil, and an entirely different atmosphere.

We uprooted these plants with care, kept a bit of the native soil about their roots and handled them in every way as carefully as possible. We could do all these things for the plants, but there was one thing that we could not do, and that is to grow for them. They must do their own growing. We may plant, we may water, but they must grow.

The majority of you were reared in good, Christian homes where you were taught to pray your prayers, to read your Bibles, to go to Sunday school and church. You were taught to believe the Bible as the word of God and in the Church as God's gracious gift to a sinful world and to us. Now you are being uprooted, literally picked up and transplanted here on Elon College campus. Here you will find yourselves in

I. An Entirely Different Environment. At home and in your home community you knew everyone and everyone knew you. You were associated with your friends and neighbors, and the members of your family. Here you are simply one in a group, the most of whom were strangers yesterday. They are all young people about your age—fine, ambitious, courteous, considerate, friendly—but for the most part strangers to you. A marked contrast with the environment from which you came.

You also find yourselves in

II. An Entirely Different Atmosphere. Instead of that friendly, warm, affectionate, understanding atmosphere of the home, you are in this apparently, unfriendly, indifferent, cold, calculating, questioning, atmosphere of a college campus.

Not only do you find yourselves in a different environment and in a different atmosphere, but you find yourselves in

III. A Questioning Group, an entirely different approach to the Bible, the Church, and the whole question of religion. Things that you have believed and practiced will doubtless be questioned. You will not only be asked what you believe but why you believe what you believe. And if the Apostle Paul were present he would doubtless counsel you, "Be ready at all times to give a reason for the faith that is within you." In the classroom and in class and campus discussions some of the things that you have always believed in and taken for granted may be questioned. Not with the view of proving them false or of upsetting you or of changing your beliefs, but in the hope of helping you to assure your convictions and to ground yourself more seriously in your beliefs.

Now that you are here the big question confronting us and should concern you is

IV. Will You Live? I don't mean physically. You are not likely to die a natural death. You may be homesick and may feel that you are sick enough to die, but in all the history of this institution no student has ever died of homesickness. That should encourage you. But I do mean spiritually. We want you to continue to live your Christian life. A Christian experience is a very precious but a very delicate thing. It is an easy matter to grieve the Spirit and when He is grieved, He leaves and the one whom He leaves is in worse state than before. If you are to continue to live spiritually, you must bring along with you some of your "native soil," some of the things that have made you Christian and helped to keep you so: your spirit of prayer, your practice of Bible reading, your custom of public worship—these are essential to Christian living. You must not leave them off. You cannot cut the tap-roots of religion and hope to live spiritually. If you are to grow in grace and increase in power, it is necessary that you keep your life hidden with God in Christ.

Elon College is determined to do everything possible to administer to your Christian life and to see that you make intelligent progress in Christian living, but there are certain things it cannot do. It cannot live for you nor can it grow for you. These are the things that you must do yourself.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

In discussing the matter of the support of the Congregational Christian Colleges by the Church I find that the plan used by Elon College is unique; that is, no other college or conference has the plan of apportioning definite amounts to each church for the support of its regional institution of higher learning.

At the beginning of this plan for the support of Elon College very small amounts were apportioned. These amounts ranged from $1.50 to $10. No church was asked to give more than $10 in one year for the support of the College. The plan called the attention of every church in the Convention to the College, its needs and the local church's obligation to help meet these needs. This was a fine idea. It has been an educational plan as well as a plan to secure financial support for the College. The total amount apportioned to the churches for the College is $12,500. This has been the amount of the apportionments for many, many years. In spite of the increased financial strength of the Church and the increased financial needs of the College the Church has not yet seen fit to increase its apportionment for the support of its own college. By far the greater majority of our churches raise their apportionments in full. Some because of their loyalty and interest in the College contribute more than their apportionment. There are still some, however, that do not raise their apportionment. The College is just as anxious and willing to serve these churches as any. It is the college of the entire Church and it is happy to render universal service wherever and whenever possible. It is certainly to be hoped that the en-

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

4 Kung Te Chieh,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
August 12, 1947.

Dear Friends:

As you folks are preparing to swing into active fall programs, your thoughts and prayers may turn toward your work in Shaowu. So this letter will try to review for you a picture of our life here.

We are quite comfortably fixed in a big gray brick house built by former missionaries. It is in a huge compound across from the hospital. There are two empty school buildings, an orchard, and a few little old mud buildings including two air-raid shelters in this compound. There is a well quite some distance from the house; but now it is too dirty to use; so our gardener - water - carrier - general helper has to "tyau" his heavy wooden buckets of water a long way.

Typical of China is the carrier with his bamboo pole across his shoulders and heavy burdens swinging from both ends. It hurts to see small children, old men, and even women thus laboring, their legs bent with the weight. Our helper's work is not so bitter, for he has regular hours, regular pay, and time to do his own work, as well as a place to live and a huge garden. The men whose main job is carrying burdens hour after hour must age very quickly. When we walk out on one of the roads coming into Shaowu, we see the men who transport products from one place to another. They walk in groups for company and sometimes protection. Some will be carrying loads of rice; others, paper wrapped in big bundles with bamboo covering; others may be bringing china from neighboring Kiangsi Province. Though their life is hard and the need for education and sanitation appalling, still there is work, and there is food, and some people have some money. The rice crop this year looks good, too.

The other missionary with us here in Shaowu is Dr. Ed Riggs. (Our nurse, Frances Whitaker, will be here in a month or so, completing our four.) His days are crowded now with seeing patients who come to the hospital. The regular opening has been delayed so long he almost gets discouraged; but he has enough nurses now to enable him to take a few inpatients. Since the average life here is still quite primitive, the worst enemies of health are poor nutrition, filth, insects, and ignorance. We are fortunate in having a new drug, chloroquine, which when taken once weekly, can prevent malaria, one of the commonest diseases here. Soon we hope to have an X-ray, from UNRRA, to help fight another common enemy, tuberculosis.

We have a slide-projector and a Kodak 35 which can take slide-pictures; these we hope to use in making pictures of local conditions and in teaching health, sanitation, Christian home life, and so forth. We brought many slides from America; and already there have been several showings with the attending crowds too large for all to see and hear. The small showings in our home have been more successful. To make electricity for these, we have a portable Army generator. We also have another larger one which we shall give the hospital when the X-ray machine comes. I imagine we are as well equipped as any missionary in his first term; so generous were our friends when we left. By selling our furniture (given by family and friends when we were married) too, we were able to bring much more equipment. In fact, getting all our baggage and freight across the ocean and into China and up the river to Shaowu was no small task. The kerosene refrigerator was the hardest to manage; but how grand it is to have one now with vaccines and medicines that the hospital otherwise could not have. How fortunate we were in getting everything here intact, and in getting generous customs officials to see our things through—the Foochow missionaries, especially Leonard Christian and Guy Thelin can be thanked for that.

Another bit of good fortune we've had is in securing odds and ends of furniture which former missionaries had. Years ago, Shaowu had over twenty foreigners living and working here. The Communist troubles, then the depression in America, then the war in China all prevented this station from being rebuilt. During the war, several schools refueged here; but with the terrible outbreak of plague last fall, the last of those left. They were a boost to the community, (Continued on page 15.)

Final Report for Mission

Board Year $41,220.43

We are happy the fund for the Shaowu Mission has gone over the top for the Mission Board year. During the year we have raised $11,052.24. Added to this amount is a balance of $311.50 carried forward from last year, making a total received for Shaowu $11,363.74.

We are profoundly grateful to ministers, churches, women's missionary societies, and a host of individuals who have given liberally to this worthy cause. Let us make our plans now for liberal contributions to the Shaowu Mission for the Mission Board year beginning September 1, 1947, to raise $10,000 for the coming year.

Respectfully submitted,

WINSTON-SALEM STUDIES MISSIONARIES.

In our Woman's Association at Winston-Salem this year, we have particularly enjoyed becoming acquainted with some of our missionaries and mission fields.

Our interest was caught when the Jacksons stopped by our church on their tour of the Southern Convention and impressed us with their eagerness for the mission field of Shaowu. Then, when November came and we had our thank offering program about Shaowu, we were particularly anxious to have a good offering because we were interested in the Jacksons and their work.

When we had our study book on India, Rev. H. A. Gleason gave an excellent review for us, and made it all the more interesting because he had done special study on India preparing for his doctor's thesis. He had helped with the picture book on India for this year and had prepared interesting statistics and maps.

At the time that we brought our Friendly Service gifts for Franklin-ton Institute, we learned something about the work there being done by our Home Mission Board.

During the winter, we were delighted to have Miss Angie Crew at one of our meetings. She spoke to us about what she had done in Turkey, and told us of her plans for returning to Japan to teach in Kobe College. We have sent one box of food to her in Japan, and are planning to send another.

Recently, it was our privilege to hear Miss Jennie Jacobs in our Sunday morning church service. In a very interesting way, she told us about her work in China, in Shaowu, and about Japanese internment camps.

On the Sunday following Miss Jacobs, we were very glad to have Mr. Robert Avery, who was formerly a teacher in Turkey, and is now preparing, with his wife, Betty, to return to Turkey under the Mission Board of our church. They have been working in Carroll County this summer helping the Gleasons, and brought along with them a trio of girls to sing for us.

On one Sunday evening, Mr. J. W. Clay of this city told in a most interesting manner of his recent trip to Poland on a ship carrying horses and supplies to the Polish farmers. Mr. Clay was formerly a missionary in Brazil for the Methodist Church.

At each of our monthly meetings, we heard news of the missionaries and their work. We have a new officer in our society, the Mission Secretary, and she reports at each meeting interesting news about our mission fields.

We are very glad that we can learn about the work of our church, and it seems that the more we learn, the more interested we become.

ASHEBORO ENJOYS PUBLIC MEETINGS.

During the summer months the people of the Asheboro, N. C., church have been indebted to the women of the church for several fine meetings. On Father's Day the women had charge of the morning worship service. Mrs. E. P. Boroughs presided and led the devotional service, Mrs. Lester Pritchard led the morning prayer, and Mrs. Orva Brown and Mrs. F. C. Lester gave short talks in lieu of the regular sermon. On this occasion tributes were paid to Christian fathers, and Christian men without sons themselves who possess a fatherly spirit. Back of all this was our Father, God, who gives them inspiration.

The second public service we shared with the Pleasant Ridge (R) Church. Miss Elizabeth Chicoine spoke in the Asheboro Church at the Sunday morning service on July 20, and then went with a group from our church to Pleasant Ridge, where she presented a review of India at the Threshold.

On the afternoon of August 10, thirty-five from our church and five from Pleasant Ridge met at our parsonage for the review of our home mission study book, Portrait of a Pilgrim, by Mrs. Russell Powell of Greensboro. A very welcome guest was her cousin, Mrs. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., wife of the first pastor of our church. Following the review a picnic supper was enjoyed on the parsonage lawn.

Our Bible study book, The Divine Fatherhood, has been "taught" or "reviewed" for the church as a whole in three sermons by our pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester.

Thus the men and the young people have shared in the Bible study, and the home and foreign mission study books. We feel that our public programs have been of benefit to our whole church.

FRANKLIN AUXILIARY.

When glancing back over the past year and thinking of all the events which have taken place, we, the women of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church, feel it has been a year of progress toward bigger and better things in our work for the Kingdom of the Lord.

Our big step toward advancement was the uniting of the Woman's Missionary Society and the Ladies' Aid into one organization known as the Woman's Auxiliary.

On November 6, we had a Ladies' Night at the church, with a buffet supper. This marked the organization of the Woman's Auxiliary. The Auxiliary was divided into three circles, namely, the Berta Rowland, Annie Gay, and Dorothy Jackson. We have held monthly circle meetings and a joint meeting once a quarter at the church.

Our thank offering service last November with our offering going to Shaowu surpassed any we have ever had. Mrs. Robert Kimball was the speaker.

The mission study book, India at the Threshold, was reviewed by one of our younger members, Mrs. E. W. Councill, and Mrs. Everette R. Bryant, Jr., reviewed Portrait of a Pilgrim. Mrs. Councill and Mrs. Bryant were at their best.

EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will meet with the Waverly Church, Friday, October 3, at 10:00 o'clock. The women of the Waverly Church have graciously agreed to serve lunch at a nominal price, which we appreciate very much. Mrs. H. H. Monroe, returned Presbyterian Missionary from China, will bring one of the main addresses. Please be much in prayer for a great Missionary Conference in this time when the world needs so greatly the missionary message. Every Missionary Society is urged to have a delegation present, and to see to it that all work has been done to make a successful year.

President.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Dear Boys and Girls:

We still do not have an editor for your page. We hope that will not be long now, but in the meantime we will attempt to "pinch-hit" for you. It is "going back to school" time, and the following story which we have adapted seems to us quite appropriate.—Mg. Editor.

THE STORY ABOUT MARY'S LITTLE LAMB.

Would you not like to hear the true story of Mary and her lamb? Many people have heard the poem; but probably only a few know that there was a real Mary and a real lamb. There was.

More than a hundred and forty years ago, in 1806 to be exact, little Mary Sawyer was born in the small village of Sterling, 35 miles west of Boston.

When Mary was nine years old she went with her father out to the barn one bleak, cold March morning. Here they found a little lamb that had been born during the night. It was so cold that the lamb had been left by its mother and was almost ready to die. Mary took pity on the lamb and begged that she might take it to the house. Her father said that it would be of no use as the lamb could not live; but Mary insisted. She carried it to the house and held it in front of the fire. Her mother gave her some warm cloths to wrap it in and made some catnip tea for it to drink.

After a while the lamb seemed better, but Mary was still afraid it might die, so she sat up all night caring for it. But for her love and care the lamb would certainly have died, and you and I would never have heard of it. No wonder the lamb loved Mary.

Soon the lamb became stronger and began to grow, and almost before one could know it, Mary had a healthy, happy, playful lamb, that followed her wherever she went. She combed the wool on its forehead and tied bright ribbons around its neck. It was her own darling pet lamb.

One day, at the suggestion of her brother, Mary took the lamb to school with her. It lay quietly at her feet until she had to go to recite. Then up jumped the lamb, and clatter, clatter, clatter, it followed her. This was so funny that the children could not help but laugh, even the teacher laughed outright! And order was not restored until Mary had carried the lamb out to the woodshed and tied it up.

It chanced that a twelve-year-old lad named John Roulston was visiting the school that day, and he saw it all. The next day he was riding across the field on horseback. He saw Mary and handed her a slip of paper on which he had written three verses about her and her lamb. You know the world-famed poem:

Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went,
The lamb was sure to go.

It followed her to school one day,
Which was against the rule;
And made the children laugh and play
To see the lamb at school.

And so the teacher turned it out;
But still it lingered near
And watched patiently about Till Mary did appear.

Mary's mother knit her two pairs of beautiful white stockings from the lamb's wool. These she kept until she was 74 years old. The she allowed them to be unraveled, and the yarn to be cut into short lengths and tied to cards with her name written on them. They were sold for several hundred dollars, to help repair one of our own churches, Old South Church, in Boston.

When Mary grew up, she became a teacher. She was later married, her married name being Tyler. She gave 51 years of her life to institutional work. The latter part of her life was spent in a beautiful home at Somerville, Mass. She was nearly 84 years old when she died, and was buried in Mt. Auburn cemetery, Boston.

Some years later three more verses were added to the poem by Sarah Joseph Hale, a New England poet.

KEEPING HOME INTEREST HIGH.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Keeping the interest high in home occupations is something each home must consider.

Sometimes it is difficult for children to accept responsibility. They are apt to forget and we, perhaps, are apt to talk too much about it. Then it is that a bulletin board is helpful. Notes may be tacked thereon—open notes for all to read, and sealed notes individually addressed. On this board, also, directions may be given, suggestions made, and appreciation expressed. If you have not attempted this method of keeping the home interest high, try it, and note how alert the members of your family will soon be, and how eager each one will become to find his name on that board.

For a pleasant change, when the children do not eat well—are inclined to play with their food and to find fault with it, so that mealtimes are difficult—try serving individual trays to them. It makes really little extra work. Let them take their trays to the front porch, out under the arbor, or over on the stone wall. Doing this is "different;" the fun element comes in. The family are not together to comment, and the children enjoy the novelty of being alone. Everything seems to taste better. The tendency to complain, "I don't like that," is forgotten. Of course, at least once a day the family should be together. Occasionally, too, it is well to invite a little guest to join your children. In the winter the boys and girls can take their trays to their rooms or to the playroom. As time goes on separate meals will cease to be needed. The experiment will become a memory, but that it had its important place in the life of the home we shall see when we look back and take stock of what has been accomplished.

I heard one mother say to another, "My boy always wants to play at some other child's house. What shall I do about it?" The other mother replied, "Give him a room for himself, or if that's not possible spare at least a corner of a room and let it belong wholly to him. Teach him to keep it orderly, but let him have there anything he wishes—within reason. Let him hang up pictures of his own choosing—also such treasures as his father's college banners—and give him an old table which he may use as he likes." This was good advice. The spot assigned him would be his own and he would take interest in it. That boy would love to have a place for his collections—and if he is a normal boy he will have plenty of them. Further, if he may have a room, his friends will be glad to share it with him.

Young children have a short span of attention; they need change very often. Do you have Mother Goose records and Nursery Rhymes for your phonograph—also other records suitable to the ages of your children? The phonograph is an important part of the home. The beginnings of an appreciation of music can often be traced back to that instrument. In

"Youth at Work in the Church"

REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE, Editor.

AN OPEN LETTER OF THANKS.

Miss Elizabeth Chicoine Director,
Rev. W. J. Andes and

Mr. John S. Graves, Deans,
So. Convention Young People's Summer Conference Camps,
Camp Hanes, North Carolina.

Dear Betty, Bill and John:

You know, there is something several of us have been thinking about—so we decided to get together and put it down on paper. We are also sure—from the over-heard comments of others—that we speak for them when we say, "Thank you for such a swell Summer Conference at Camp Hanes!"

It seems that those early morning devotions, whether individual or group, got us "started off on the right foot" for each day.

We surely got a lot of those classes at the Senior Camp: Mr. Munger's class, "The Sermon On the Mount," was certainly inspiring and he brought many new ideas to us. As Mrs. Wisseman led our thoughts and discussion, we learned many new things and exchanged experiences in the course, "From Friendship To Marriage." We enjoyed and profited from Dr. Wisseman's personalized tour—"Forward Through the Ages With the Church." Then, at the Junior Camp, the theme, "Trails To God," was carried out in the classes and we found the trails with Mr. Munger's class, "The Sermon On the Mount;" with Dr. Hardeastle and "Learning From Paul" and "Through the Church" with Mr. Fields.

The general assembly periods each morning, when Miss Jennie Jacobs told us of China, gave us a first-hand picture of the situation in China, what our missionaries are doing and what we can do to help them.

The interest groups on worship, recreation, program planning, and understanding myself, gave us a fine sense of enjoyment and learning.

A time of inspiration to many of us was retreat, just before dinner each evening. There is something thrilling about standing at attention before the American Flag, the Christian Flag and the Y. M. C. A. Flag, Vespers brought us close to God, especially since we met out of doors by the quiet lake, almost surrounded by beautiful mountains. We liked the vesper ground among the pines and our services coming just as dusk was settling over this beautiful countryside.

When we came together, at the close of evening, we liked those camp fires—the stories told by Mr. Avery and the old and new songs led by Mrs. Avery.

We seem to be mentioning all of the more serious side of camp. Don't "get us wrong"—you know how much fun we had—three swim periods each day and also swimming lessons, boating, organized recreation in the afternoon with ping pong tournaments, softball games, basketball, horseshoes and learning new games such as archery, rifle practice, badminton, tennis, and volley ball. We also learned new handicrafts, the most popular, as you probably noticed, was working with craft strip, making bracelets, lanyards, etc. Oh, yes, we had plenty of fun all right!

And say, we haven't forgotten those grand evening programs—the folk games and singing, that magician that had all of us mystified, the treasure hunt, hiking, talent night and stunt night and that movie which stirred us so, "Seeds of Destiny."

We want to use one whole paragraph for each Communion Service:

The service for the Senior Camp, held on Sunday night at the recreation hall and directed by Rev. Homer Yearick, was a beautiful one. It seemed just right that, after the worship service, we should stand in a friendship circle as we partook of the Holy Emblems. As we went to our cabins, with the lighted tapers twinkling like fireflies over the campus and sang taps, a sense of calm and peace lay over the camp.

The Communion Service at the Junior Camp was one of the most inspiring in which we have ever had part. As we sat in vesper circle, facing a beautifully lighted cross, there were many fine statements made by the campers, telling how their lives had been enriched by their camp experiences. Then marching to the dining hall—singing "Jacob's Ladder"—observing the Lord's Supper around the tables which had been placed to form a cross—out on the campus again with our lighted tapers to form a friendship circle for the closing. This was truly the highlight of our camp experiences.

We thought the food was really good and we appreciate all the considerations shown us by Mr. & Mrs. Fleenor, directors of Camp Hanes, and all the staff boys and the cooks.

In addition to thanking you for the actual camp life, we want you to know that we realize and appreciate all the work that it took to make this ten-day camp possible—the months of planning, setting up schedules, getting the staff lined up and all the many details involved. Also, the constant watching to keep the camp running smoothly, taking care of the registrations and money and all the many other things that we never knew you did.

The grand cooperation of the staff with the campers meant a lot to us. It was mighty nice of Dr. Hardeastle to make the cross and candle sticks for use on the worship centers and then to present them to the camp for use in their programs.

So—we just wish to say, "Thanks-a-million!" for a wonderful camp. We will look forward to seeing you there next year.

In fellowship,
A GROUP OF YOUR CAMPERS.

GUIDANCE FROM GREAT PROVERBS.

LESSON XII—SEPTEMBER 21, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy (kindness) and to talk humbly with thy God.—Micah 6:8.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Prov. 16:1-8.

A String of Pearls.

Today's lesson background is a collection of verses from the book of Proverbs, a veritable string of pearls, each embodying a great truth put in plain and practical language. They add beauty and grace to every life which embodies and practices them.

A Lamp Unto Our Feet.

But they are more than ornamental; they are very practical and helpful. Here is the distilled wisdom of the ages, words that gird and undergird and guide those who seek to walk in the way of wisdom and of life.

Careful . . . Danger . . . Extreme Danger!!!!

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." The words might be applied, of course, to the physical heart. One ought to take care of it, to guard against overloading it, to refrain from abusing it. But the words have all the more meaning when applied to the inner life of man, to the heart in the sense of the thought and feeling center of life. One had better watch his heart, for out of it are the issues of life. And of destiny as well. The desires of the heart, how potent they are. The things that we harbor in our heart, how great issues are involved in them. This came forcibly to me the other morning as I was reading my devotions and came across these words of Jesus, "Who knew what was in man." Read them carefully and see what a dreadful and deadly place the human heart can be. "For from within, out of the heart of man, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness—all these evil things come from within and defile the man." Mark 7: 21, 22, 23. When one reads that he almost instinctively cries out, "Create within me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me,

"Keep thy heart with all diligence for out of it are the issue of life."

Abomination Unto God.

Using a figure of speech, the wise man says that there are six or seven things that are an abomination unto Jehovah, things that he loathes or hates. They are PRIDE—haughty eyes; LIES—a lying tongue; MURDER—hands that shed innocent blood; CLEVER WICKEDNESS—a heart that deviseth wicked purposes; ACTIVE WRONG-DOING—feet that are swift in running to mischief; PERJURY—a false witness that uttereth lies; and MISCHIEF MAKING—he that soweth discord among the brethren. And before we think of others who may be guilty of these things, let us search our own hearts to discover whether there may not be those things which have a tendency to make Jehovah sick.

The Foundation of Education.

"The fear of Jehovah is the beginning of wisdom, and the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding." This does not mean that we are to be afraid of Jehovah. It means rather reverent awe, a sense of His majesty and might, a feeling that all that we have comes from him. This is the beginning of true wisdom.

What Makes a Nation Great?

There are many things that make a nation great. It may have great natural resources, vast spaces covered with forests and fields and fruits; teeming cities, intelligent and resourceful citizens, great wealth and vast military power. But there is one thing without which a nation cannot be truly great. Long ago a wise man knew this. It is righteousness that exalts a nation. It is sin that is the worst thing that can be said about a people. To be small, to be unimportant, is not a disgrace. But for a nation, any nation, no matter however great or powerful, to perjure its word, to break its promises, to exploit other peoples, to do evil, is a reproach and a disgrace. Alas, for the infamy and the disgrace of Germany and Japan because of the sin of their leaders. Men, and not walls, said the Greeks, were the strength of the city.

The Power of Gentle Words.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath." We overlook the power of the gentle word. We think we get things by "talking turkey" by "telling people where to get off," by "reading the law" to folks, by "talking tough." But in the long run we get more and go farther by using soft words in the sense in which they are used here. How often a quarrel and perhaps a serious breach in family relationships or friendships have been averted by the ability of one of the parties involved to control the temper and the tongue and to speak the soft word.

Watch Your Step.

"Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." Pride is not sinful in itself. A man ought to have pride, to be proud in the right sense. But let not any man think more highly of himself than he ought to think. A proud man is like a fellow walking along a street across which stumbling blocks had been placed, and holding his head high as he walks along. History is full of instances in which both individuals and nations have fallen through pride and haughtiness, as well as naughtiness.

The Worth of a Good Name.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor than silver and gold." As was intimated in these Notes a few weeks ago everybody does not believe that, and many people do not make any bones about it. But a good name is priceless. A man ought to keep it with all diligence. He ought to covet it above material possessions.

The Uncertainty of Life.

"Thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." We do not even know what an hour may bring forth. It would be a grand thing in some ways if we did know. But it is much better that we do not know. The fact that we do not know is an appeal to faith and foresight as far as possible.

THE LOST FEAR OF GOD.

A Sermon

By REV. ROY D. COULTER, Timber Ridge Church.

"Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear."—
I Timothy 5:20.

A true vision of the living God is fading out of sight of a large majority of people in these times. In this over-ripe civilization, the spiritual sense grows dulled among people sleek with prosperity; while the ablest men we have expend their ardour in philanthropy or devote their intellect to a gnosis of natural laws. Our generation thinks of God as Nature grown benevolent, and we go on subduing Nature faster every day.

Nevertheless, the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. History and experience concur to vindicate Solomon's verdict. The earliest men we discover worshipped a Being or beings of whom they were afraid. Primitive religion may have expressed men's delight in the beauty of the world they saw. But it began in something deeper—in men's awe and dread of the unseen Power whom they felt to be their Owner and King. The religion of our Bible begins here. Its Patriarchs bowed down before the God who spoke to them in warnings and promises. They trembled and obeyed Him, as He called them and claimed them to be His own. The revelations given at the bush that burned and the mount that shook were such Moses himself said, "I do exceedingly fear and quake." And the whole purport of Hebrew Law is summed up in Deuteronomy: "All these words are written that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, the Lord thy God." A pious man in the Old Testament meant a man who feared God. That was the dominant note of his temper, the ruling motive in his life. The ideal of piety in the Book of Job may be imperfect, but it was assuredly neither weak nor ignoble. It remains at the foundation of Christian character, the beginning of the heavenly wisdom.

Our personal experience often begins where the patriarchs began. So soon as we reflect seriously, we wake up to the fear of the Lord. For to realize, even in faint degree, what God is like, smites the soul with instant awe. And this knowledge remains the beginning of our wisdom. The first thing needful for any human being must be to discover his proper place, to shrink before God's heart-piercing scrutiny, to quail at the light of His goodness. So true wisdom, and real repentance and lasting peace, generally begin in the fear of the Lord.

Now the close of our Bible does not contradict its commencement. The angel of the Apocalypse, flying in mid-heaven with the everlasting Gospel to proclaim to them that dwell on the earth, cried with a loud voice, "Fear God and give Him glory." Yet multitudes of modern Christians forget or deny that the fear of God has any place in the everlasting Gospel. They describe it as the mere shadow of ignorance, the survival of early superstition; they tell us that in an advanced spiritual experience we must leave it far behind. They say to us it is foolish to scare people into the church with hellfire and brimstone sermons. They declare that St. John makes it clear that perfect love casts out fear—because fear hath torment. Yes, the love of God does forbid to cringe and cower before Him. It expels fear in the base, pagan sense, the terror of a slave for his tyrant. The Christian does not shudder at mere omnipotence. But he bows his head and worships the unutterable holiness of the Father. To any imperfect creature there must always be something awful about perfect purity. And the Christian love of God is stifled, it cannot breathe, except in the air of humility and reverence and godly fear.

They love Thee little, if at all,
Who do not fear Thee much.

Because even to love your fellow-men properly, you must first respect them properly. And so to love God, you must have some just sense of His character, and of its difference from your own. You must share that adoring self-abasement which makes the angels hide their faces, and the white-robed multitude cast down their crowns as they cry, "Thou art worthy, and Thou alone."

And when St. Paul exhorts his disciples to "perfect holiness in the fear of God," he expresses the very genius of Christianity, which is nowhere so manifest as in the Person and words of Christ Himself.

For the figure who meets us in the Gospel page, so tremulous with tenderness, so radiant with compassion, has yet a terrible purity which quells and appals and subdues the very souls whom He charms and attaches. To depict our Lord as an incarnation of humanitarian sentiment is to caricature the Evangelists. He who came from the bosom of the Father made men certain that God is something more than infinite good-nature. It was the Lord's dearest friend who fell at His feet as dead. And the most tremendous sentences in the New Testament about sin, and its danger and its doom, fall from Jesus Himself. The figures and phrases of the strait gate and the narrow way, and the outer darkness, and the sheep and the goats, and the undying worm and the quenchless fire, were not invented by theological bigots. No, it is the Son of Man who says it.

And the same truth appears also in those Christian lives which have been the salt and light and leaven of their generation.

The prophets of Israel drew their whole strength from their vivid, personal sense of the living God. And so they laboured unceasingly to penetrate men's dull hearts with the conviction that ecclesiastical institutions were miserable holes in the rocks, which might hide God from them, but could not hide them from God, when He should arise to "shake terribly the earth." Nothing feebler than the same doctrine can avail to shatter men's reliance on priesthood and ritual today. And the Bible is brimming over with it.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

To those who do not know what a day may bring forth, even to those, there can be a serenity of spirit and a peace that passeth understanding, through faith in God and His unfailing providence and provision. And even though we do not know what a day may bring forth, we may and must make our plans large, for the future belongs to God.

Cowards Through Conscience.

"The wicked flee when no man pursueth." Thus does the wise man say that after all the evil man is ultimately and inevitably a coward. And I think it is Shakespeare who puts it thus: "Thus does conscience make cowards of us all." Evil doers often put up a brave front, but it is window dressing. At the long last they are afraid.

Sins of Omission.

We so often think of sin as something one does. It may be. But sin is also a matter of not doing something. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

On August 31, the orphanage held its annual Home-Coming Day. All the children who have been reared in the Christian Orphanage are invited to come back to their old home—the one that gave them love and care when they needed someone to care for them. They enjoy meeting those who were here with them years ago. They enjoy renewing old acquaintances and meeting and making new friends. Home-Coming Day is always held on Sunday before Labor Day. Since Labor Day is a holiday, it gives those who live some distance time to get back home and be ready for work on Tuesday morning. Quite a number came from quite a distance to be present. Some who were the first children to enter the orphanage were here. We had a beautiful day for the occasion, and all seemed happy and enjoyed the day. At one o'clock the matrons served a barbecue lunch with all the fixings, which they so carefully prepared. I think all enjoyed it very much. But the part the little children enjoyed most was a barrell of ice-cold lemonade.

The orphanage had a very pleasant visitor a few days ago—Everton Morris, one of the first boys to enter the orphanage forty years ago. He came back to see his old home. A number of the older boys and girls will remember Everton Morris.

One of the things the children in the orphanage enjoyed most was the annual picnic given by Mrs. W. W. Sellars one day last week. Mrs. Sellars is very interested in the orphanage children, and for a number of years has given them a picnic at her summer home at Moonlawn. She has a beautiful lake and a motor boat, and a large swimming pool. The children had lots of fun swimming in the pool and have learned how to do several stunts. The one that attracted my attention most was to take an innertube and fill it full of air, put it out on the water in front of the diving board, and dive through it. A number of the children could do it, too.

After an hour in the water they got out and dressed and made a bee line for the motor boat ride. Mrs. Sellars' son was the captain of the boat and Mr. Graves looked after the children to keep them from falling overboard. After the boat ride Mrs. Sellars had "hot dogs" with all the trimmings ready for them with a bottle of Pepsi-Cola. Oh! how they did enjoy that. Then she cut watermelons which all the children really enjoyed.

Mrs. Sellars knows how to give children an enjoyable afternoon of fun and play, and we know that every child enjoyed the outing to the fullest extent—even little "Jackie" who thought watermelon seeds were beans, and called on someone to get the beans out of his watermelon.

Mrs. Sellars, every child in the orphanage loves you and appreciates the many nice things you do for them. We hope you will live a long time and give the children a happy afternoon every year.

LETTER TO THE CONVENTION SUPERINTENDENT.

I plan to use the $1,500 Garland Gray gave us for travel money for these three men. If a scholarship can be secured in the Seminary, that will help, too. I hope you will look in at Duke and see what you can do on that score. Timothy will send in his application within the next two weeks.

Just one other thing. I'd especially like to have these men all do some kind of work for the money which is given them—perhaps in the summer. Between us, one of the most serious problems here has been the way in which financial aid has been given in the past. It's the W.P.A. story. Many Chinese become absolutely dependent on foreign financial help (without work) to such an extent that they lose individual initiative. They have expressed to me a willingness to work for help given them, so you'll find them anticipating doing some kind of work under your direction.

Bill, you don't know how much this will mean to our work here. It has been over twenty years since the present ministers graduated. They have done their work well, but new blood, new ideas and methods are needed. There are practically no books available for ministers to read to keep them on their toes. The older ministers are most cooperative and will, I'm sure welcome these new brothers. Together we can blaze new trails for Christ.

Last Sunday was Communion Sunday at East Gate Church. Dorothy's choir of about 25 young people sang "Lord, I Want to Be a Christian." Nine young adults were baptized and received into the church. It was an inspiring sight. Wish our Southern Convention people could have been here to see it.

There's one additional thing I want to mention. Several people have sent us things by mail and they're very welcome. If anyone asks you about sending more things to us, please tell them to value them at wholesale cost (about 60 per cent of retail). The tariff is quite high and there's additional postage charge from Shanghai so the cost to us mounts up quite high sometimes—often exceeding the purchase price in America, even though the sender thought all expenses were paid. (If anyone asks, we especially need pictures, paint, crayons, colored paper, games, etc. Perhaps some young people's group would like to give a basketball or volleyball. We have a good place to play but can't buy things like this at all.) We need Chinese Bibles awfully bad but they also are hard to get and very expensive.

We are in the best of health even though we're in the middle of the hot season. We think often of you. Your being behind us inspires us to do our utmost to fulfill your expectations for us. Please remember us to your family and to our friends when you see them. Please continue also to remember us in prayer. At the present moment we are concerned with a small group of people who broke away from the Church five or six years ago to form a sect. They are busy at work seeking to "convert" our church members and are causing no end of trouble. With so much work to do, with so many on the outside, it is most distressing to have the church of Christ divided. I spent most of last night wrestling with the problem but no clear plan has come.

Cordially,
RICHARD L. JACKSON.

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

though, despite crowded conditions. The furniture they left here, and that belonging to the missionaries of earlier days, has meant much to us. It is rough—some pieces broken—but it makes home for us, and a convenient one, too, with plenty of bookcases and two desks. Miss Leona Burr, whom many of you may soon be seeing has loaned many things to our home. Add to all this the luxury springs and mattress we brought from America, the one nice chair (overstuffed), the little set of bright dishes, and few pictures we brought, and you can see how utterly well-fixed we are.

For "plumbing" we have the aforementioned well, a huge water jar in the house and a hole in the kitchen and "bathroom" walls with a sort of pipe arrangement to carry water off into the ground. Luxury of luxuries, we have a white (except for scars and stains) bathtub, just like the old American standard ones. It was preserved from former times, by one of the loyal Chinese church members and given to us along with the other things kept for us by the people here. Of course, if it were not for our worker and his family, our water jars, wash pans, and tub would go empty.

Of course there is no heating plant; there never was. We brought a small wood-coal stove which we will use for the worst weather when we have to sit for long hours studying or the like. But for the most part, we will do as the Chinese do, wear all the clothes we can and find a place in the sun when it shines. There is not much freezing weather here, but the extreme dampness makes the cold quite uncomfortable. One of our first-time-in-China shocks was seeing the unheated Foochow hospital, the nurses' hands blue and stiff with cold despite all the stuffing under their uniforms.

As for cooking arrangements, the stove reminds me of something I saw in pictures from ancient Rome. It is a big solid mud and plaster thing with three holes on top for charcoal fires. There are holes in front, too, the three drafts for the three fires. Most of the time we use only one hole. We have a man who shops and cooks for us; but when he was away I found out how difficult is a charcoal fire and how dirty. I also realized how time consuming is boiling water for drinking and dish-washing, boiling milk when we get it, and distilling (if that's the correct word) the salt.

We do not like having so many servants, though often the work and wages and other things we provide are a real help to the people. But at present we see no other way, especially as we have to spend so much time in language study. Later, perhaps, when a school or the hospital can use this big property, we can find a small place and do more of our own work. Meanwhile the big house and grounds provide a fine place for all kinds of meetings and gatherings for study, worship, and recreation.

There is another mission in Shaowu—a Catholic group, a number of fathers and a few sisters, mostly from Germany. We enjoy visiting with them every now and then and talking English with them. When the conversation gets stuck, when they can't think of the English word, we resort to Chinese! But it's all very enjoyable. They are amazingly cheerful folk so long away from home, and knowing how hard it is for their people at home.

One of the men told of his capture by bandits back in the time of the Communist troubles here. What a narrow escape he had! Some wanted to kill him, thinking they could never get the ransom money. Right now there is an American priest, whom we visited en route here, in the hands of bandits. One report said he had been killed; but another said he is well. A messenger has contacted the bandits—they are way off in their mountain hideouts—so the fathers have hope of his safe return. We are quite safe in Shaowu proper; but the authorities have asked us not to go alone into the country. The aftermath of war and the terrible inflation have aggravated conditions here even though Fukien Province is fairly well off.

China is in great difficulty. The U. S. State Department may think the overall situation of China at present hopeless (according to Time magazine of July 21) and may prefer to concentrate on Japan and Europe; but Christians of America know they must try to give help to all who need it. Our Chinese friends, grateful for UNRRA and past help, hope America will not fail them or be too late with their help. As young Silas Chang (pronounced like John with a g on the end) reminded us the other day, "A doctor is of no help when the patient is dead."

Affectionately yours,

DOROTHY JACKSON.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

The Bible study, The Divine Fatherhood, was most capably done by our pastor, Rev. Robert M. Kimball.

Wish all you readers could have enjoyed this wonderful presentation with us.

We joined with the churches of the town and community for our World Day of Prayer service, which was held at Bethel Friends.

Representatives attended conference and spring district meeting.

Mrs. C. O. Byrd and Mrs. Kimball attended the School of Missions at Elon College during the week of June 16.

As we draw near the end of our Auxiliary year, we find we have had a very inspiring and profitable year.

MRS. CONWAY HOLLAND,
Secretary.

* * *

SUNBURY, N. C.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Congregational Christian Church of Sunbury are happy to report a year of splendid work together under the leadership of our president, Mrs. A. V. Hoffer.

We observed the World Day of Prayer with the other churches of our community. Our thank offering was taken at the meeting prepared for that occasion.

Our pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, reviewed The Divine Fatherhood.

We met with the Methodist ladies in the study of India at the Threshold. Portrait of a Pilgrim was taught by different members of our group.

We have enjoyed caring and planning for our adopted boy at the orphanage.

One of our members sent in quite a nice list of new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

We are planning a vesper service and picnic in this month.

During the year we have served two suppers from which we realized a nice sum to be used to carpet our church. We hope we have met all requirements and now that we are in our new church we plan to have more activities another year.

REPORTER.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

our home we are fond of Gilbert and Sullivan, and several of the little neighbors who visit us have come to like it, too. Children are apt to enjoy the music they constantly hear, so let us give them good music. I heard a little girl say once, "You can tell about people by their music, can't you, Mother?" Of course, Mother at the piano and all the family gathered around it goes far ahead of any phonograph!

"TEN RULES FOR CHRISTIAN LIVING"

What can I do in the world of today to follow the Master as truly and well as did the disciples of old?

- 1 READ THE BIBLE DAILY, if possible before the morning broadcasts and the newspaper have set the tone of my thoughts for the day. Read always with the question, What does this mean for me?

"Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light on my path."

- 2 PRAY EVERY MORNING AND NIGHT, asking that God's purposes may be fulfilled for the world, for the church, for others, and for myself—taking time to listen for God's guidance.

"Prayer is the life of God in the heart of man."

- 3 WORSHIP IN CHURCH EVERY SUNDAY. At times this will require early rising. When traveling or on week-end trips, this may mean attending an unfamiliar service. Neither work nor play is a valid excuse for omission of Sunday worship.

"Whoso offereth me thanks and praise, he honoureth me; and to him that ordereth his way aright, will I show the salvation of God."

- 4 RECEIVE COMMUNION REGULARLY, according to the monthly or other plan set for myself, including always Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost. Prepare with humble self-examination, and try to make a special thanksgiving and resolution.

"In Thine own service make us glad and free, And grant us nevermore to part with Thee."

- 5 WORK FOR SOMETHING HIGHER THAN PAY, or profit, no matter how humble or exalted my occupation. Rely upon personal fitness and integrity, in cooperation with others, rather than upon chance or unfair advantage.

"Religion cannot matter at all unless it matters supremely."

- 6 PLAY FAIRLY AND CLEANLY, for the benefit of all concerned, and without detriment to society or harm to any opponent. Let fun recreate my spirit and widen my friendships.

"The soul is dyed the color of its leisure hours."

- 7 VOLUNTEER FOR SERVICE in my parish and study to do effectively what I undertake. Whenever I move ask my minister for a letter of introduction or of transfer, that my habit of active participation in church life be not broken.

"There is power in the aggregate which the solitary cannot find."

- 8 INVITE TO CHURCH those whom I am alert to recognize as having no church home. Watch for needs which the Church can meet, every opportunity to bring another to share in our fellowship of worship and study and work.

"What we keep we lose, what we share we have."

- 9 SHARE MY INCOME SYSTEMATICALLY with my parish and with the world-wide program of my church. Study also and encourage the life and work of other communions, especially those moving toward Church Unity, and those supporting the World Council of Churches.

"My bounden duty is to follow Christ, . . . and to work and pray and give for the spread of his kingdom."

- 10 PRACTICE GOOD CITIZENSHIP, working with neighbors of every race and of all faiths or of none, for the common welfare, for the oppressed, and for the coming world federation of all the peoples upon earth. Be courageous to oppose evil, but always in faith and love.

"The characteristic demand of Christianity is for a new world."

Over Against the Treasury

Why I Tithe

By J. E. DILLARD

1. Because the Bible teaches it. (Lev. 27:30, Mal. 3:10, Luke 11:42, etc.) I have no right to accept the teachings of the Bible concerning salvation and claim the blessings of God and then reject the teachings concerning tithing and expect God to bless me.

2. I tithe because it is businesslike. It removes doubt and enables me to know whether or not I have given the Lord's work a reasonable part of my income.

3. I tithe because every person I know who has practiced tithing consistently for any length of time is pleased with it and says it brought a blessing.

4. I tithe because I know the needs of our church and denomination, and nothing less than this can begin to be my part in meeting these needs.

5. I tithe because God has promised a blessing to me in doing so, and I believe his word. I have tried it and know it to be true.

6. I tithe because it is a joy to feel that I am in partnership with the Lord, to have a part in the work of the Kingdom, and because it has proved a most satisfactory way of expressing my gratitude to God and to the church for the blessings I have received.

7. I tithe, and am glad to tithe, because I love Christ and long to see his cause extended in the earth. "The love of Christ constraineth us."

8. In tithing and making offerings, I find myself in direct succession to the patriarchs and saints of old. I thus measure up to a worthy standard which from the beginning of recorded history has received both divine and human approval.

9. I am happy to tithe because I thus set a definite and worthy example to my people and to all who may be influenced by my examples.

10. I do not stop with tithing. I tithe my salary before I set apart any of it for other purposes, and then I give free-will offerings as occasion demands and as I feel able.

I feel that no one is doing his duty unless he gives at least one-tenth of his income to the Lord's work as an expression of his stewardship and of his gratitude. I believe many of us ought to give more than the tithe, and as we give, we will prosper in spiritual and eternal things.—"The Evangel."

NEWS AND VIEWS

Rev. L. P. Rippy recently filled the pulpits of Bethel and Mt. Zion churches for the pastor, Rev. W. W. Snyder.

Zeb Trexler, the president of the International Lutheran Brotherhood of the United Lutheran Church, has been appointed associate secretary of stewardship for his denomination.

The Christian Endeavor Society of our South Norfolk Church won first prize on its scrapbook at the 53rd annual State Christian Endeavor Convention at Massanetta Springs, the week of August 25. It also won the second prize for outstanding work of the society for the year.

Paul D. Moody, son of the late Dwight L. Moody, famous evangelist, and from 1921 to 1942 president of Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vt., died on August 18 at the age of 68. After leaving Middlebury, Dr. Moody served as pastor of First Presbyterian Church, New York City.

Sunday, October 5, is World Wide Communion Sunday. Observe this day by receiving a special offering for the Congregational Christian Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction. The need was never greater. Literally thousands of our fellow men, women and children are dying of starvation and exposure.

Dr. Carl Herman Voss, extension secretary of the Church Peace Union and the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, is on a three-month trip to Europe, South Africa and the Near East. While on this trip he will visit leading churchmen of all faiths in the interest of the World Congress of Religion in Support of the United Nations, to be sponsored by the Church Peace Union in Boston late in October.

A STATEMENT FROM REV. G. D. HUNT.

Wadley, Alabama,
September 9, 1947.

Dear Brethren:

I am today 78 years of age, have been in the ministry nearly 60 years, and have served as pastor of almost all the Christian churches in our state, and quite a few in Georgia. I have been pastor and supply pastor of Beulah Christian Church, Truett, Alabama, for almost 53 years. I am retiring from the pastorate, with prayers on my "life" and a desire in my heart that God may still lead His Church into greater fields of service. Please say to the Brotherhood that I shall always be glad to hear from my Brethren. I am now located on the highway between Roanoke, Alabama, and Wadley.

I love Thy Church, O God,
Her walls before Thee stand—
Dear as the apple of Thine eye
And graven on Thy hand.

For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend,
To her my toils are given
Till toils and cares shall end.

God bless our dear old Church.

G. D. HUNT.

CONGRESSMEN POLLED FOR CHURCH RELATIONS.

Encouraging to religious leaders of all faiths is the fact that in a recent Newsweek poll of United States Congressmen only thirteen—less than three per cent—listed no church affiliation. Two did not answer the poll. Eleven preferred to be known merely as "Protestants." The following table shows how the Congressmen are divided, according to religious affiliation:

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS FOR OVERSEAS RELIEF BENEFIT.

Local church groups wanting to send more cash for overseas relief have a good answer in the beautiful Christmas card just printed by Church World Service, interdenominational overseas relief agency.

This card, printed on a fine grade material, depicts the angels and the Holy Family over the little church of Saint Nicholas in Oberndorf-Salzburg, Austria. In this church "Silent Night, Holy Night" was first sung on Christmas Eve, 1818. The card is beautifully colored and comes with an envelope of like quality.

Church World Service is selling these cards at cost to local church groups who want to re-sell them for the benefit of overseas relief funds. It is all the more appropriate when we realize that some of the proceeds from these cards will go to feed hungry followers of our Lord within a few miles of, or even within the very village where our most beloved Christmas carol was written and first sung.

Here's the plan:

1) Order cards from Promotion Department, Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland. Send money at rate of $5.00 per hundred. No C.O.D.'s.

2) Local church group sells them at 10c each or more. Low price is recommended for volume sales, but sellers fix own price.

3) Send "profits" to your Church Overseas Relief Fund or to Church

World Service, 37 East 36th Street, New York 16, New York.

If your church budget will not allow more money to be sent for overseas relief at this time, this card is the perfect answer to your desire to do more for war victims. Order cards today from New Windsor.

BERKLEY PASTOR RESIGNS.

The Rev. James G. Graham, pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk, has presented his resignation to become effective September 1.

Mr. Graham stated: "Some of you doubtless remember that we were delayed in coming to Norfolk last September. My left eye is blinded by a shell wound and at numerous times the old infection has flared up—endangering the sight of the good eye. The doctors have ordered no night driving or no reading at night. After serious thought we have decided to move back to Washington among our home folks and to take several months of treatment at Walter Reed Hospital. Therefore, I wish to present my resignation to the congregation and the Official Board, requesting that the duties of my pastorate be completed the first of September. We shall pray for the continual welfare and usefulness of this church in this community and we shall always feel thankful for the happy friendships we have made.

"This completes 33 years in active Christian work, and 25 years as a minister. Perhaps after rest, I may add to those numbers."

Mr. Graham's longest periods of service were eight years as Chaplain of the Mercersburg Academy, Mercersburg, Penna., and 14 years as minister of the Congregational Church in Westerly, Rhode Island. He served as secretary in the Y.M.C.A. in Albany, N. Y., and three years as minister of the Windham Congregational Church in Connecticut. During World War I, Mr. Graham served as First Lieutenant in the 110th Infantry and was seriously wounded while in command of an American sector during the second Battle of the Marne, July 14 and 15, 1918, and was held as a prisoner of war in Germany and Russia. Mr. Graham attended George Washington University and Harvard, and has the B. D. degree from Yale and the M.S.T. degree from Hartford Theological Seminary, and University of Cambridge. He was Commodore of the Westerly Yacht Club and the Watch Hill R. I. Yacht Club; is a member of the F.A.A.M., R.A.M., and Knights Templar; and was an active member of the Lion's Club for 14 years. While in Mercersburg, Mr. Graham served for six years as president of the Town Council; and while in Westerly served for 12 years as vice-chairman of the Red Cross chapter. He was first National Commander of the Disabled Emergency Officers of the World War, and has served as chaplain of the American Legion. Mrs. Graham attended George Washington University and the University of Wisconsin. Their son, Ensign William G. Graham, U.S.N., attended Phillips Andover, Yale University, and is a graduate of the U. S. Naval Academy. He is now stationed at U. S. Naval Headquarters in London, England.

Mr. and Mrs. Graham are moving to Washington where both were "born and raised."

WORK SUSPENDED ON RELIGIOUS CENSUS.

The Director of the Bureau of the Census, J. C. Capt, has written a letter to the officers of the Association of Statisticians of Religious Bodies saying that all work has now been suspended on the regular decennial census of religious bodies because of the lack of a specific appropriation therefor in the current fiscal year.

Capt also says that in response to the mailing of schedules, including a second request to delinquents, only 60 per cent of the pastors or clerks of local churches have filed the necessary information. The materials in hand are of no value for summaries he further indicates.

Since 1906, the Bureau of the Census has gathered statistical information about religious bodies at regular ten-year intervals. A congressman once remarked that this governmental service was in accord with one of the oldest functions of government, namely, the counting of the people. Most of the governments of the world gather information about the faiths of their people.

It is not accurate to say that the census of religious bodies was inevitably caught up and submerged by the economy wave. The same congress that denied some $400,000 for the census of religious bodies in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, also voted $4,000,000 in the new designated funds for a special census of manufacturers in the same year.

Congress appears in general to lack information about this old function of government which its predecessors had provided for. The basic laws under which the census of religious bodies has been taken were signed by Theodore Roosevelt and Herbert Hoover. Funds have previously been voted in the administrations of Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, Calvin Coolidge, and Franklin D. Roosevelt.—United Evangelical Action.

NOW!

Be happy now—there's only now,
Gone are the yesterdays,
Tomorrow never comes at all,
Now is the great always
In which to laugh and scatter cheer,
Living courageously,
The present time can be sublime
Now is eternity.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ORCHIDS TO MISS AMERICA.

Barbara Jo Walker, the new Miss America, made a startling testimony in her first interview. It sounds almost like preaching. Coming from someone else—especially from the parsonage or the Church (even from an editor)—it might be branded or dismissed as “old fogey.” But here it is: “I don’t care much for movies—very few people are successful at it and I don’t care to wait around Hollywood for years trying to be successful. I do not like to see women smoking. I do not think anyone can drink moderately. Our State is dry and some people take bottles with them when they go out and seem to want to finish them before they get home.”

Thank God for this volunteer testimony from a popular young American who has the moral courage to resist the smoking, drinking, pleasure-seeking stream of modern society.

One used to hear the statement, “He’s a handsome fellow; it’s a pity he drinks.” Now it might be said of so many young Americans: “She’s a pretty girl; it’s a pity she smokes—or/and drinks.”

It is refreshing to read that Miss America has “brains and beauty,” an excellent combination which should be an indispensable qualification for a Miss America.

Miss Walker admits that “Money is attractive to anyone,” but adheres to her original intention to work for a master’s degree and become a college instructor in French and English.

They may be few and far between, but one rejoices in these contemporary parallels to the experience of Daniel who “purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the King’s meat.”

THE STEWARDSHIP LIFE.

Too many people practice stewardship spasmodically—during Lent, or for tithing period of thirteen weeks. It is begun as a concession to reassure and as a questionable experiment. The prevalence of this parsimonious stewardship robs the Protestant Church of its birthright. Consequently the Church lacks resources to implement its glorious and redeeming faith. Its stewardship is reduced to the proverbial shoestring. Secular riders man the reins of civilization while the Church conducts an “all-out” drive to secure an inadequate budget. Competing departments of the Church must vie with each other in a desperate struggle for survival. Protestantism is penalized and the Kingdom tarries because only a fraction of their adherents are willing to put first things first. This is the sad plight of our Protestant Stewardship.

Jesus compared the children of light and the children of darkness. Glaring contrasts appear from time to time in our generation. A mysterious 84-year-old millionaire who once peddled penny fruits in the slums of Boston has presented to the Boston Public Library more than a million dollars to begin a three million dollar trust fund. This gift will be known as the John Deferrari Foundation to perpetuate the name of a poor man who ran a basket of fruit into millions of dollars, yet lived so modestly he is not known by his neighbors and has only General Delivery, Boston, as his address.

It is the stewardship life that counts. Thirteen weeks will not suffice. Life must be geared to a continuous program of comprehensive stewardship in order to make a vital contribution to the work of the Kingdom.

Begin with the children and young people. They may and need not become millionaires, but they should be faithful stewards throughout life’s entire span of earning, saving and spending. Weldon Crossland writes: “The growing minds of children provide the most fertile possible soil in which to plant the seeds of gospel giving. As they learn of the love of their heavenly Father, the life of the friendly Christ, and the goodness of their parents, their impressionable, plastic spirits can with the utmost ease be guided toward the offering of their lives and their gifts to Jesus Christ. The church school, the Church, and the home must unite in molding the sharing habits of youth. Realizing the strategic importance of the formative years of early childhood, the boards of education of all denominations are now providing a wealth of suggestive plans and projects which may be had on request.” Mr. Crossland rightly concludes that a notable Kingdom goal has been achieved when a young girl, or boy proudly says: “I am a Junior Steward! My Heavenly Father is my friend and partner. I will give my life to Jesus. I will give my money to help others.”

WILL CHURCH BOARDS PLEASE NOTE?

Officials of the Protestant Episcopal Church Pension Fund have found that the average salary of a clergyman of that faith is about $3,000, to which is added in the normal case a rectory the rent of which would be about $450 per annum. One-half of the active clergy receive less than $3,000; only a fourth have a salary of $4,000 or more.

Doubtless some relief has been afforded by alert churches during the recent upswing of the cost of living, but in a few instances has the salary of a minister been adjusted adequately. Always poorly paid, clergymen now are among the worst victims of heavy taxes, expensive food and a required high standard of personal giving and of decent apparel.

The first question on the agenda of the next meeting of many an official board well might be, “What is the maximum sum by which we can afford to increase our minister’s pay?”—Editorial, “Richmond News Leader.”

USING OUR TALENTS WELL.

A Sermon

By F. ERVIN HYDE.

"For unto everyone that hath, it shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."—Matthew 25:29.

This is one of the unchangeable laws of life. It was true in Jesus' day. It is true in our day. It has been true in all of the intervening years. Carlyle called this law of the talents the "Sinai Law of Life."

A ruler entrusted the affairs of his estate to three servants to care for them while he journeyed in a far country. One of the servants was a wizard at the business of making money. He had a Midas touch that quickly doubled his investment. His five talents quickly became ten. . . . A second servant did not possess the ability that the first man demonstrated. He only succeeded in doubling his investment through hard work and careful planning. Nevertheless he did double his talents. The third servant, judged by the standards of his day was not lazy—just careful—much too careful. To be on the safe side he buried his talent less some man should steal it from him or he should lose it. Then came the day when the wealthy land owner returned and demanded an accounting of the talents. Responsibility was measured in terms of profits. Two of the servants were commended for their faithfulness and promoted to larger tasks. But not so with the third man. He stands out in contrast as an unfaithful servant. His portrait is drawn with elaborate care. He is not shiftless or lazy. He is neither a knave nor a thief. He is not drunk or feeble-minded.

What, then, was the reason for his failure?

I.

Was it due to the fact that he was motivated by good intentions that were not backed up by action? Being uncertain as to whether he could make a profit or not, he went and buried his talent in the ground. He had good intentions of safeguarding that which was entrusted to him. But there are times when good intentions are not enough.

Mr. Chamberlain was motivated by the best of intentions when he flew to Munich and tried to avert war with Germany through a policy of appeasement. But Mr. Chamberlain lived long enough to see the country that he loved plunged into blood, sweat and tears in a heroic effort to preserve the sovereignty of the British Empire. Mr. Chamberlain learned the lesson too late that good intentions are never enough.

We in America can not be too critical of the British short sightedness because while our state department officials were talking about peace with the emissaries of Japan, her unprincipled leaders were staging an attack on Pearl Harbor. We, too, discovered to our sorrow that even though we were motivated by good intentions, that good intentions were not enough.

A month ago many folks hailed the action of the Security Council of the United Nations in securing a truce between the Dutch and the Indonesians as a great moral victory. At last we thought that the United Nations was functioning as we dreamed it would. The action was motivated by the best of intentions. . . . But it didn't work out the way we had hoped. . . . An AP reporter wired that "More men are dying now than when the war was officially on." Once more we discovered that good intentions are good but that they are not good enough.

In 1920 we Americans were caught by the spirit of high idealism. The War President had seen the first of the American dead brought to this country, and he said courageous and hopeful words: "It must not happen again." Youth leaders and churchmen took up the cry. The banner of Christian Pacifism became popular. We allowed our good intentions to claim our idealism but we did not allow it to control our actions. Certain policies of our government did not make for the peace of the world. While churchmen proclaimed an ideal. Americans were spending more on chewing gum than education. More on war than good government. In that year we Americans purchased only two books per person including text books, and seven out of every ten books borrowed from the public libraries were novels. Is there any wonder that our beautiful dream of a warless world faded. Good intentions are never enough!

Or look at America today. Do we not intend that America shall always remain the land of the free and the home of the brave? Of course, we do. There is a witch hunt on for the Communist but dare we ignore the other storm warnings that are up. Things are happening in these United States that are but the forerunners of Fascism—growing intolerance between Protestants and Catholics, increased crime in our cities and cities ruled by gangs, men in high places convicted for bribery, and huge military appropriations. If freedom fails in America it will not be because her citizens were not motivated by good intentions but because of an indifference that does nothing about these things.

Are we forgetting that one of the Apostles wrote, "He who knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin"?

Nor are we in the church free from censure. For nineteen hundred years we have proclaimed the doctrine of the brotherhood of man as one of the cardinal principles of our faith. But how can we proclaim this doctrine when our Christian brethren in many lands have neither a crust of bread nor a corner to sleep in?

Good intentions were not enough to save the one talent man, neither can they save either the individual or the nation, the church or the world.

II

In the second place, this one talent man failed because he lacked the courage to adventure. He shrank from risks although he must have known that nothing is gained without risks. So it is today. Our scientific discoveries in the field of medicine are due to the risks that human guinea pigs take. We are able to combat cold and turn the wheels of industry largely because of the risks that miners take to dig coal. We enjoy freedom in this land because soldiers have been willing to risk their lives in order to safeguard this heritage. The universe is a fruitful place for talents if we are willing to risk something. On the other hand if talents are neglected or misused they vanish away.

Laura Richards tells the story of the three men who went to the Keeper of the White Fire and asked him that he give to them something of his rare possession. "Alright," said the Keeper of the White Fire, "I will. Take it and use it." The first man was going through a dark valley where people were groping in the darkness and crying for light. Sensing the need, he said, "Let there be light." And he gave them his white fire. The second man was going through a cold and bleak and barren land. He heard the people crying for heat and

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There are several young men and women from the conferences of the Southern Convention in college and seminary preparing for full-time service in the church. They are members of our churches, and of our conferences. Our churches and our conferences should recognize them, and help them in every way possible. They are our hope of filling pulpits and other important positions in the church of tomorrow. We should be proud of them, and strive to make them proud of their churches and conferences.

Would it not be a good thing for our conferences to invite them to attend their respective sessions this fall, and give them some recognition at same? They should have it made known to them in some realistic way what they mean to us, and what they will mean to the church in all the years to come. Some of them are receiving aid from their conferences in the form of scholarships, and some in loans. They should meet the committees which have to do with these matters and understand both the spirit and mechanics of this aid. These young people should be encouraged in every way, and in many cases the aid to them should be increased.

Does the young fellow who has chosen the ministry as his calling know that he is supposed to present to the proper committee in his conference, perhaps several weeks before the annual session a recommendation from his local church and pastor? If he is from the Eastern Virginia Conference does he know that there is a fund established at Elon to help him pay his board and room? Does he know that beyond this there is a loan fund from which he may borrow by applying for it before the committee on ministerial education? Does he know how this sizeable fund was accumulated? How it is operated? And what the terms of repayment are?

It would seem that every ministerial student would like to attend at least one day of the annual conference session, and that it would be of some value to him to see something of the mechanics of his church, to read the printed minutes when published, and to find out just what it meant to be received into the fellowship of his conference. It is merely a suggestion, but I think it would be well for conference secretaries to invite all such young people to attend the sessions, and I think it would be good for the program committees to make some place for some sort of recognition of each young man, or woman who has chosen the work of the church as a life work. Our young people are ready to cooperate with the conferences and we who have been along the road should advise and counsel with them in a manner commensurate with the greatness of their life decision and the nobility of their calling.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

HOW I BECAME A CHRISTIAN.

I was brought up in a Confucian family. My father was a Confucian scholar. We were a large family of more than 30 members. All of us, parents, children, uncles, aunts and cousins, lived under one roof. My grandmother was the head of our family. At thirteen I entered a Methodist Mission School, the Anglo-Chinese College of Foochow. This provided my first contact with a foreigner, with the Bible and with the Church. All of these were often hostile to my thinking, and I became the leader of an opposition student group. It was before the establishment of the Republic of China, and all students in the school wore the then common Chinese queue, or long hair-braid—all except one who wore his hair short. This man was the president of the student Y. M. C. A. and leader of the Student Volunteer group. I was greatly attracted to him and we became roommates with the understanding that he would not talk to me about the Christian faith. This agreement he faithfully kept. About six months later, however, I decided to go with him and his group to conduct a street meeting. A Chinese man present at the meeting began to berate my friend for not wearing his hair long. He said the fact that he did not do so indicated that the Christian faith which he proclaimed was a foreign religion.

At that point I stepped forward and defended my friend, arguing that the custom of wearing the queue was itself foreign and had been imposed on the Chinese by the Manchus about three hundred years ago. Then I went on, almost without being aware of it, to defend Christianity. A missionary teacher, who was present, asked afterwards whether I meant what I said. That night I did not sleep and was quite miserable. I was brought to a consciousness of my own sin. In our room was a picture of Christ praying in Gethsemane—my roommate's picture. When the first rays of the morning sun entered the room, they touched that picture and illuminated it for me. I went over and knelt by my friend's bed before that picture, and something there and then happened to me. I told my friend that I had become a Christian. When I went outside, the whole universe seemed wonderfully different, more beautiful. It was a new world, and I was a new creature in it.

As time went on, I had my ups and downs. But God's word became a living, dynamic word to me. It was unlike the word of Confucius or Mencius. I became restless to declare it to my own family and went first to my grandmother and persuaded her to attend a Christian church. She became a Christian at 64. Then she, the oldest member of our family and I, the youngest, began to win the others. She worked from the top and I from the bottom. And now, not all, but the great majority of my family are Christians.

As regards the communication of God's word, based on the above experience four things seem to me to be deeply significant:

1. God has various ways of communicating His word.
2. A little incident in life may serve as a channel through which God speaks to man.
3. God's word fulfills the sayings of the Chinese sages: "It enriches, completes, and brings them back to life."
4. God's word had an expulsive power; it also grows and overflows one's life.

WEN YUEN CHEN.

NOTE: The above statement was made by Bishop Chen at the recent meeting at Whitby, Ontario, Canada. The Bishop is Dean of the School of Religion at Yenching University.

Science has brought forth this danger (the atom bomb), but the real problem is in the minds and hearts of men. We will not change the hearts of other men by mechanisms, but by changing our hearts and speaking bravely. . . . When we are clear in heart and mind—only then shall we find courage to surmount the fear which haunts the world.

—Albert Einstein.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN COLLEGE COUNCIL MEETS.

At the biennial meeting of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, June, 1944, the presidents of our colleges that were willing to be known as church-related colleges of the Congregational Christian Church met for counsel and reference. We asked for and were assigned a place on the General Council program for report. President Malcolm Dana, now of Olivet College, Michigan, was spokesman for the colleges. There were eight colleges in the group. In the fall of that year the presidents of these colleges met at Edin Seminary, St. Louis, Mo., for a three-day conference in which we determined the conditions for membership in the Council and set certain goals for our colleges.

The purpose of the college council is to be of mutual assistance and to relate the colleges vitally to the Church in its program of progress. We see the value of a church-related college, but we also see the value of a college-related church. All of our colleges were either founded by the Church or by some faithful member of the Church. In its early beginnings in this country, the Church felt keenly the need of the college as a training station for its leaders. That need is more acute today than at any time in its history. The college council hopes to awaken the Church to a new and a keener interest in the whole program of Christian higher education. The drift towards selfishness, materialism and paganism in this country can best be halted by Christian education—a more intelligent understanding of the issues involved.

The college council of our United Church met in call session September 8 and 9 at Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, on an invitation of Grinnell's president, Samuel N. Stevens. This was an interim meeting. The regular annual meeting will be held January 1948 at Cincinnati, Ohio. At Grinnell we were guests of the college and were entertained royally.

Steps were taken to broaden and enlarge our curriculums and to make our colleges of greater service to our Church. This is certainly the purpose of all our church-related colleges.

There are two things that we are striving for and they are: first, to acquaint every church of our denomination with our colleges, their achievements, needs and programs through College Day in the churches; and second, to inspire the churches to receive an offering for our colleges. The minimum goal for these voluntary offerings has been set at $1.00 per member. This minimum gift would not overtax anyone's ability and would in the total be a sum that would mean much to our colleges. Would there be anything wrong in giving the people of our churches a chance to make an offering for the general cause of Christian education.

President Stevens of Grinnell College gave us and our United Church through us an inspiring challenge in a most generous and cordial invitation. He has invited 1,000 people or more of the Congregational Christian Church to be the guests of Grinnell College in a three-day conference on Christian higher education. President Stevens stated that the sum of $15,000 had been made available for this conference, and he hoped that more than 1,000 representative people of our church would attend. These representatives are to be selected from all sections of the Church.

The invitation was accepted with due appreciation and the Division of Christian Education of our denomination was requested, through Dr. Harry Stock to sponsor the movement. The plan is to hold this meeting in June in advance of the meeting of the General Council at Oberlin.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

The College would like to express its appreciation to all Sunday schools and churches that have made contributions to the College through conference apportionments during the present conference year. There are some of our churches and Sunday schools that still wait until the end of the year to send their contributions to the College, but by far the greater majority are complying with the Convention's plans and are paying either monthly or quarterly which is of great help to the College.

I am happy to report that we are ahead of last year's totals for the College by $800 or more. I trust sincerely that this means that the College will receive its full apportionment of $12,500. Our report this week is much better than usual but after adding this the total amounts to less than half the apportionment, and we have only about a month to go. If your church or Sunday school has not sent its contribution, won't you please do so at once. Mail your offerings to the superintendent, W. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C.

MISS M. E. WOOLEY, EDUCATOR, PEACE WORKER, DIES, AGED 84.

Miss Mary E. Woolley, 84, retired president of Mount Holyoke College and internationally known worker for world peace died September 5 at Westport, N. Y.

Miss Woolley, who headed the Women's College at South Hadley, Mass., from 1900 to 1937, had been ill since September, 1944, when she suffered a cerebral hemorrhage.

Miss Woolley was chosen by President Hoover as a delegate to the International Disarmament Conference at Geneva in 1931, the first woman to be so named.

She also was the first woman to receive a bachelor's degree from Brown University, in 1894, and in 1936 became the first woman to be elected honorary moderator of the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches.

Her appointment to the presidency of Mount Holyoke when only thirty-eight surprised the educational world.

Magnificent moral ideals like democracy and brotherhood are impotent because we are trying to maintain them apart from the Christian faith that produced them.

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

Shaowu, China,
May 4, 1947.

Dear Friends:

In case any of you are picturing my going into June with my winter underwear still on and huddling over a fire, let me hasten to assure you that last week's relapse to winter was only temporary. When it finally decided to quit raining a couple of days ago, and the sun came out again, it warmed. Now is certainly the magic season of the year. Foliage is at its best; the birds are just too happy for anything; and the temperature is like the tourist folder's description of Hawaii. This is in the daytime. At night—oh boy! Last night, the three Changs and the three of us took a stroll under the light of the full moon, wandering along the river bank, past the delicately curved roofs of old temples silhouetted against the sky, through the public park with all the trees similarly silhouetted. At such a time the air is literally heavy with the perfume of the various flowers, and all the unpleasant sights and smells of the less attractive aspects of Chinese city life seen during daylight are obliterated. All I can say is that it is very good to be alive these days, and in a place like this!

Excuse this lapse into pseudo-poetic exuberance! The principal news this week was Mr. Chandler's departure Thursday morning for Foochow. He went by boat; and since the river is high now, the boatman hoped to get to Yangkou by night, which means that he could get launches the rest of the way, and if connections were good arrive in Foochow in three days' time. Needless to say, we were sorry to lose him but glad that he can get back to his wife who has not been well during his absence.

The first three days of the week, before he left, the big shots of the North Fukien Synod, Church of Christ in China, had their semi-annual meeting and made plans for revival and expansion of various church activities throughout the Synod. And yesterday the Hospital Board met and made similar plans for the future of the hospital. I must say that one of the chief characteristics of Shaowu-ites, at least these days, is enthusiasm. The people you see on the streets are so lethargic, and their buildings and land are so run down, that you would think the whole area was dead and would hardly expect to encounter such optimism and what amounts practically to euphoria for the future. The Hospital Board laid out plans for an elaborate canvass of the whole North Fukien area to raise a $100,000,000 endowment fund for the hospital. Both they and the Synod also expressed the desire and hope that branch hospitals could be started as soon as possible in the other cities of the area. In fact two of these places are already going ahead with plans to open or reopen medical work.

In view of all this, it is disheartening that the hospital itself, here, is still not yet open, mainly because Dr. Yao and the CNRRA beds have still not arrived. But the tempo of building repair and improvements has certainly been speeded up, and all the new crew are working their heads off, planning and developing various enterprises in connection with hospital and out-patient activities. My laboratory technician is proving himself very able and efficient, and is a fast and yet accurate worker, and full of enthusiasm for his job. With him here, I can easily see twice as many patients in a morning as I could before, and do a lot better job by them, as well as having more time myself in the afternoon for other things. Yesterday there were thirty-odd patients in the clinic. Dr. Hsu saw everything except Internal Medicine and Pediatrics, but even at that the majority of patients were mine. Everybody keeps insisting that there is a big future here in surgery, but I still think that medicine is the main need.

* * * *

May 11, 1947.

No mail this week and nothing happened. So there is nothing to report and I shall be reduced to writing the time—a slight variation from the usual theme of weather. I have already told about the vague idea of time which is prevalent in Shaowu. Most people don't have clocks anyway, and regulate their activities by the sun. There is nothing but confusion and trouble when they are confronted by western standards of time precision.

The ability of the Chinese to take troubles calmly is reflected in the trends I see in my clinic patients. Although the average Chinese is tense and nervous of movement, and doesn't know how to relax, and although I do see all the varieties of neurosis and psychosomatic and degenerative disease, I will have to admit that they are not nearly as common in proportion as in America. Although I see very few patients over fifty years old, it is certainly true that those I do see tend to show very little evidence of vascular disease. There is not much functional dyspepsia in the western sense—most of what I thought was that at first turns out to be due to roundworms. Other differences: although the teeth are dirty and often worn down to snags, there is very little evidence of caries, although gum infections and miscellaneous conditions keep our dentist reasonably busy. The nose, sinuses, throat and tonsils, etc., of both children and adults are remarkably free of infection, in contrast to the smoke-eaters of American cities. (However, bronchial and pulmonary diseases of all kinds, including asthmatic bronchitis or intrinsic asthma, is far more frequent than in America.) There is little allergy, and I have not yet seen a diabetic. There is practically no arthritis here, or rheumatic fever.

CONFERENCE AT BURLINGTON.

The North Carolina Woman's Conference will be held at Burlington Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., on Tuesday, October 7, beginning at 10:00 and closing at 3:30 P. M. Our guest speaker will be Mrs. John T. Fesperman of Kannapolis, president of the Evangelical and Reformed women of North Carolina. She will tell us something of their work.

THE THANK OFFERING.

"It Is a Good Thing To Give Thanks Unto the Lord."

As I have thought and planned for the Thank Offering this year there has been one verse of scripture which has kept echoing in my mind—"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord." Yes, it is indeed a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to remember the many gifts of His love. I like to give a special Thank Offering each year because it is a special offering. It is over and above the gifts I make each month. I am not required to make it. It is an extra gift I make as I think of God's extra goodness to me.

I like to give a special Thank Offering, too, because it goes for some special work. For several years now we have followed the plan of using the Thank Offering one year for a home project, the next year a foreign project. For the past two years, however, because of our keen interest in Shaowu, we have made this our project. This year is the year for a home project and the Woman's Convention voted to use it to help build a Convention parsonage. Your Thank Offering Committee feels that there is no project which will do more to undergird the entire program of our church.

The committee has set November 2 (or some nearby date) as the time for the public Thank Offering service. The goal is again $3,000, although many of us are hoping that our gifts will reach $4,000 the need for a Convention parsonage is so great and our reasons for being thankful are so manifold.

The suggested worship program for your Thank Offering service will be ready at the time of the fall conferences. We want this service to be a time of real thanksgiving. Could we make the month of October a month of prayer and preparation for our Thank Offering service? Do you think the women of your church would like to give thanks each day in October for some special gift of God's love? Would our service be more meaningful to all of us if we would come to it after a month of giving special thanks? Let us try it!!! The first week in October let us thank God for our missionaries—and let's name them over. Begin with the Jacksons, Miss Whitaker, Dr. Riggs. How thankful we are that such talented and consecrated young people can represent us in China. Then remember Angie Crew, the Moultons, the Muellers, the Christians, the Rindens—all those who have taken the message for us to many lands.

The second week, remember in thanksgiving the leaders of our work here in the U. S.—Mrs. McClintock, Ruth Seabury, Pattie Lee Coghill, Dr. Scott, Mrs. Paris—and all the others who work so faithfully for His sake. The third week give thanks for your local church—your ministers, your friends, your opportunity for service. And, finally, give thanks for your own home, your family, the love which surrounds you, the material things God has given you, the things of the spirit.

All during the month of October, all during the year, let us remember, "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord."

MRS. W. E. WISSEMAN, Ch'm'n,
Thank Offering Committee.

VIRGINIA VALLEY WOMEN MEET.

The twentieth annual session of the Virginia Valley Central Woman's Missionary Conference of the Congregational Christian Churches met at Antioch Church, near Harrisonburg, Virginia, September 2, 1947, at 10:30 A. M. The theme was "White Unto Harvest," based on the scripture, "Behold, I say unto you, lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest," John 4:35.

Mrs. Robert A. Whitten, Winchester, the president, called the meeting to order and presided during the day's session. Rev. S. E. Madren group had charge of the morning devotional service, and the Elkton group had charge of the afternoon devotional service.

Miss Verdie Showalter welcomed the people to Antioch, and Mrs. Edgar Nelson of Winchester responded.

The enrollment showed the following visitors present: Mrs. O. H. Paris, Greensboro, N. C., president of the Southern Convention women; Dr. W. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C., Superintendent of the Southern Convention; Rev. and Mrs. Clyde Koon, Winchester, Virginia, and Mrs. Bolton and Mrs. John Croushorn of St. Stephens Evangelical and Reformed Church, Harrisonburg, Va.

Four of the five District Superintendents gave reports showing that most of the Valley churches have active missionary societies.

FOR THE CHILDREN

BIRDS OF A FEATHER.

Linette, still sobbing hysterically, clung to Peter. Her chubby little arms were wound tightly about his neck and her curly head was resting on his shoulder.

Peter held his baby sister close to him. The dim light, coming from the tiny lamp on the little pink dresser in the baby's room, gave his pale face a ghastly look.

He patted Linette lovingly and softly told her not to cry. He would not leave her alone.

That is what he had promised Mother and Dad. "I will stay with her," Peter had said. "I will not leave her room until you get home. I can read in there just as easily as in my own room."

Linette was the pride of the whole household. Though she was almost a year and a half, Mother and Dad had never gone anywhere without her. Peter knew how anxious they both were to attend the class meeting that night, so he did all he could to persuade them to go. Besides, he was extremely fond of his baby sister. Nothing would please him more than to feel responsible for her and sit close to her little pink crib while she slept, guarding her from all harm.

He had remained close to her crib until he heard a shrill whistle coming from the back yard. He tip-toed out of the room and down the stairs. If only he could reach the back before Joe whistled again and woke up Linette.

"Joe!" he called in a hushed voice, as he stood on the back porch peering into the gathering twilight.

"Come along, Peter!" Joe shouted, coming up the garden walk followed by several other boys whom Peter recognized as schoolmates.

"We're going over the Carter's Hill and build a bonfire. Ted's mother gave us some potatoes to roast. Bob has some weiners. I have some bacon. We all have something, so bring some bread and come along."

"I can't go tonight," Peter told them a little mournfully. "Mother and Dad are not home, and I promised to take care of Linette."

"Bring her along," Bud suggested.

"Oh, no!" Peter exclaimed instantly. "Besides, she is sleeping."

"Well then, what is keeping you from coming with us?" Joe demanded. "Surely she doesn't need you when she is sleeping!"

"Sorry, boys, I can't go along tonight," Peter refused. He had never broken a promise made to his parents and certainly he would not begin by breaking one concerning Linette.

Joe grew impatient trying to coax Peter to change his mind.

"What's the matter with you?" he growled. "Are you turning into a sissy! It seems like you are always hanging around the house to take care of Linette or to play with her. She's just a baby, and a girl at that! You know what they say about birds of a feather!"

With that the boys stalked down the garden path led by Joe.

Peter watched them disappear. Of all the nights to go to Carter's Hill, the boys would choose this one. How he loved to sit near a bonfire and watch the hungry flames leap up, devouring the dry, crackling logs. He could almost smell the fire already. He blinked his eyes as if freeing them of smoke.

Maybe he could go and be with them for a little while. Just until the fire had a good start. After all, Linette was asleep. Nothing could harm her. He would not stay long. He glanced down the garden path. If he hurried, he could catch up with them.

Peter made a quick move toward the porch steps. Then he paused. An uncomfortable, guilty feeling seized him. Without another look down the garden path, Peter hurried into the house. A pressing silence seemed to be all about him. Almost like something holding his breath.

Luckily the soft, thick carpet quieted Peter's footsteps as he entered Linette's room. It would have been tragic had he made even the slightest sound.

Linette, awaking and finding herself alone, had climbed out of her crib. Peter had neglected to put up the side and fasten it. She toddled across the room toward the window. With the help of her little pink chair, your daughter, of yourself, of son, she crawled onto the broad, low window sill. She often sat there with Peter, for she liked to look out and watch the automobiles go by on the street below.

But Linette had never before crawled alone onto the window seat. She pressed close to the screen across the open window. Somehow the screen was not securely fastened and when Linette pressed against it with her chubby little body, it began to swing open on its hinges. When Peter entered the room she was leaning far over the window sill.

Peter crossed the room in three wide steps. With one sudden, quick jerk, he lifted Linette from the window seat and held her close to him. Then he crossed the room and sank wearily into a chair. Beads of perspiration stood on his forehead. His voice trembled as he spoke softly to the frightened Linette.

"I'll never leave you alone again," he whispered as Linette clung to him.

Finally, she stopped crying and fell asleep once more, nestled snugly in Peter's arms.

Very carefully Peter placed her in her little crib. He tucked the blankets around her lovingly. Then he raised the side of the crib and fastened it securely. He stood for a moment looking down at the little face, now relaxed in peaceful slumber.

"Birds of a feather," he thought. "What a lucky bird I am!"

A SMILE IN A LONELY ROOM.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A business friend of my husband's joined us as we sat in a hotel lobby the other night. The man had been ill, and he seemed to be homesick and depressed.

Then we began talking about his wife and children, and his face brightened. His whole personality changed; he became cheerful and alert.

When asked if he had pictures of his four-year-old Bobby and seven-year-old Gail, he answered in a voice fairly sparkling with pride. "I have one in my room. Shall I get it?"

We told him we should like to see it.

In a few minutes he returned bringing a photograph of two attractive bright-eyed youngsters. So sunny were their expressions, one half expected to hear childish laughter.

"That picture has been a smile in a lonely room!" he remarked when we had spoken admiringly of the young faces. "Shouldn't that cheer me when I'm away from home?"

By the time he left, every trace of the "blues" had disappeared. We felt sure that for him there would be a night of sound refreshing sleep.

I have thought since of the phrase—A smile in a lonely room.

Many men and women who are forced to spend much time away from Venereal-diseases, although I see all kinds (this week I saw my first "typical" hepar lobatum), are much less frequent per unit of population than in America. The two main scourges so far, besides bronchitis and pneumonia, are, as I indicated before, malaria and TB. The minor scourges—almost universal in incidence—are roundworms and scabies, and to a lesser trachoma and leg ulcers (possibly due to sluggish circulation or a mild form of beri-beri). I say "minor" but as I indicated last week, some of the round worms are not so minor, and the incidence of boils and abscess of the skin, from scratching their scabies, is awful. This week I saw a man in the last stages of Staph septicemia, complicating such an accident.

Another difference from medical practice in America comes from the relative youthfulness of the patients and their sublime faith in the miraculous healing powers of my medicines. In the west, a big proportion of out-patient conditions are chronic, and respond sluggishly, if at all, to treatment, because the patients are old and somewhat cynical and pessimistic about the efficacy of treatment. Here the old people have already died fast from something acute, so I do not tend to see the chronic conditions. And the younger ones tend to bounce right out of their acute condition, and I have seen some of the most surprisingly quick recoveries in patients that had no right to get well, considering the lack of facilities of out-patient and home-administered treatment. Needless to say, that makes the practice of medicine here much more emotionally satisfying than it is back home.

May 25, 1947.

Today marks the end of the third month that the clinic has been running—a quarter of a year! It is perhaps appropriate to look back a bit and take stock of what has been accomplished in that time. On the face of it, practically nothing has been achieved. The hospital is not yet open; not a single bit of public health education material has been prepared and I am doing almost no long-range worthwhile good in the clinic as it is now set up. Progress in the language has been discouragingly slow—I cannot understand any more of a sermon or business discussion than I could when I arrived. I will admit that I can now obtain a history and give simple instructions to the average Mandarin-speaking patient, unaided, and carry on ordinary social casual conversations, which I certainly could not do three months ago. And my nurse and one or two others, by dint of much patience and pounding away, and occasional use of the dictionary, can eventually make me understand almost anything they want to put over. But when I try to expound on some technical medical subject to them, such as is the natural thing to do for medical teaching of nurses, interns, etc., I usually find that I am stopped before I can even get started.

This language handicap has had one unexpected decided advantage. I came here with the idea of encouraging the Chinese to learn to take the initiative and run this project themselves, instead of having it spoon-fed to them or crammed down their throats by foreigners. But I also had a whole set of every definite ideas of how it should be done. If I had been eloquent in the language and still as ignorant of the characteristics of the Chinese mind and ways of thinking and doing things as I was, I would have made some pretty enormous mistakes—even worse than I have actually made. Actually, the language barrier has made it easy for my associates here to smile sweetly when I tried to put across an idea they did not approve of, and go on and do things their own way; and I have finally given up and quit trying to run things my way. Actually, of course, there are never any quarrels or hard feelings. These Chinese never disapprove of what you say to your face or tell you you are wrong. They just smile vaguely, and assure you they will get around to it tomorrow, but tomorrow never comes. Meanwhile they go ahead with their own program.

The language barrier has made this process much easier and more convenient, and it is surprising how often, afterwards, I have discovered that their ideas and methods have been better, or at least more suitable, than mine would have been. For instance, when I arrived here, I was full of enthusiasm for the idea of the hospital putting all available yard space into raising vegetables, so that the patients' diets could include a larger proportion of vitamins than the average Chinese budget allows. But when I expounded my idea to the Business Manager, he was busy supervising the landscaping of the front yard, with various fancy borders of flowers, rows of flowerpots, etc. I tried to make clear to him that I thought the landscaping and flowers could wait and it would be a good idea to get the vegetables planted first. But he didn't understand what I was driving at, and it was always the same story—the gardener was too busy today and would perhaps get around to it tomorrow. Finally, last week it came out—as a measure of my improvement in Chinese, he felt that he could attempt to explain his ideas on the subject: It seemed that you could always buy vegetables on the street, but there was no other place you could go to get flowers. He thought that in a Christian Hospital it would be nice to have enough flowers to provide little bouquets at every patient's bedside. It was just a thought, but he felt that the effect on the patients' morale would be enough to promote recovery as much as would my precious vitamins. And in these days of psychosomatic medicine, who am I to say that he is wrong!

Another more important matter: I was all full of ideas about having a Chinese superintendent, and a Hospital Board to govern policy, which should be made up of all the important and influential civic leaders of Shaowu; and I knew how many nurses and doctors and business people there should be on the staff, and what qualifications they should possess and with what devotion to duty they should perform their tasks, etc.—although I didn't have the slightest idea where I would get such personnel. But lacking the language, I was unable to expound my ideas to the people of the community, so I just let things drift. And gradually a Hospital Board materialized, and a staff collected. They were all outstanding leaders, and well trained, and able and enthusiastic workers. But if I had realized at the outset how many of them were related to Dr. Yao, or connected or allied in some way with the Yao family—and especially if I had known at first that Dr. Yao himself is superintendent of the hospital, and managing all its affairs from his CNRRA office in Foochow—I would have considered such nepotism and political finagling as absolutely intolerable. But now I am beginning to realize that in Chinese society, nepotism isn't just matter of one family greedily feeding from the public trough without regard to morals or higher ideals, as it is apt to be in the American political scene. In China the only loyalty and allegiance is to the family, and it is true that there are no ideals apart from what is to be the best interest of the family.

But if the Shaowu Christian Hospital develops into a Yao family enterprise, it means not only that the WORTHY OBJECTIVES FOR LIFE.

LESSON XIII—SEPTEMBER 28, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Fear God and and keep his commandments.—Ecclesiastes 12:13.

LESSON: Ecclesiastes.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ecclesiastes 5:1-7.

Interesting But Not Inspiring Literature.

It is one thing to say that the Bible is inspired; it is another thing to say that it is all inspiring. The book of Ecclesiastes is a case in point. It is an exceedingly interesting book, but it is not a particularly inspiring book. In fact some of it is depressing in spirit, and quite pessimistic in outlook. The man who wrote it had on his dark glasses, and he never got them off until at the end of the book.

A Valuable Piece of Literature.

In spite of the fact that Ecclesiastes is pessimistic and somewhat depressing, it is a valuable book. It belongs in the Scriptures. It has a message. For it shows the pessimism born of life without uplift and outreach, with life conceived apart from, and lived independently of God. It recounts the stages through which the man passed in his quest for a satisfying philosophy of life, and the considered wisdom that the conclusion of the whole matter was to fear God, and to keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. It should be kept in mind that this is an Old Testament book, that the man who wrote it did not live in a world into which Jesus Christ had brought life and immortality to light through His gospel. It shows how life may lack luster and meaning apart from Jesus Christ, and apart from the large pattern of immortality.

Wanted—A Satisfying Philosophy of Life.

The writer of Ecclesiastes—tradition attributes the book to Solomon—feels the emptiness of life as he starts his quest for a satisfying philosophy. "Vanity of vanities" he sighs and there is a plaintive and poignant note in his cry. He turns first to wisdom, practical wisdom as a source of satisfaction. And he studies it against the background of folly, thinking that thereby he will be the better able to find satisfaction. But wisdom in itself is not the answer to the hunger of his heart.

Then he turns to pleasure or enjoyment. It was not immoral pleasure which he sought—it was enjoyment sought in building for his own pleasure beautiful buildings, and in surrounding himself with lavish luxury, servants, singers, etc., all the things that great wealth could buy. And like many another man then and now, he found that pleasure and opulent ease brought him, even as wisdom, only pain and disappointment—apart from God.

Once again he turns to labor and money-making, and once again he is baffled and disappointed. He finds that all is vanity trying to win any real profit and abiding satisfaction through the acquisition of money—apart from God.

There is a hint that he turns next and last to fame. He does not elaborate on this. But he does realize and comment upon the emptiness of praise and writes at great length on the related values of wisdom and folly. Apart from God wisdom is impossible.

Round and Round She Goes—Without Meaning.

The "preacher"—for so the writer dubs himself—lives in a closed universe. There is nothing new under the sun. What has been, is, and always will be. "All things come alike to all" he says. In some senses he goes so far as to say, a man is no better than a beast. Life is a treadmill, a meaningless tale, if not told by an idiot at least without much meaning and apparently without any goal. Death seems to be the end of all. Life is a sort of merry-go-round. Men are like squirrels in a revolving cage. Life has little dignity, worth, direction or meaning. "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity" he cries.

But It Does Have Meaning.

All is vanity of vanities, apart from God. But as he comes to the close of his book which corresponds to the close of his search for a satisfying philosophy, he finds that there are "values of values" too. God enters the picture. He gives meaning and worth to life. He has the answer to the hunger of the human heart. The "Preacher" does not go as far as Biah who in reply to the question "What doth Jehovah require of thee?" replied "to do justly and love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God." But he does say that the "whole duty of man is to fear God, and keep his commandments." God is the focal point of life. God alone gives meaning to life. God alone satisfies life at its deepest.

In the Days of Youth.

But it is not enough to get God into life at the close of a life. God is to be remembered in the days of youth—"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth." Youth is the time of building, the time when life is plastic, the time when idealism is highest, the time when altruism flourishes, the time when habits and ideals and attitudes and character are being formed and given fixity of character. Therefore one ought to remember God in the days of youth. It is safest, it is wisest, it is fairest.

It all has point for the modern church. There was a time when churches put a great deal of their emphasis upon saving the lost, of getting older folks saved. The emphasis still needs to be placed on seeking and saving the lost. There are all too many in every community who are not only out of the church but out of Christ. And we ought to seek them and bring them to Christ who can save them. But we must be preventative. Get children and young people while they are young. Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Train them up in the way they should go and help them to grow up in, and not away from Christ. There is no more challenging issues before the church today than the evangelization of those who are in the days of youth.

Nobody expects a machine to turn out a first-class product when parts are broken or worn by much friction. Can we expect first-class citizens to come from homes that are broken or where parents fail to do their job?

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

Yao family benefits from the arrangement in a material way, but that the Yao family is challenged to put forward their best efforts to make a success of the venture, for the honor of the Yao family name. It happens that the Yao family and connections contain a great many men and women of exceptional ability and influence; and since this a family affair, these people are willing to strain every nerve, and go to no end of trouble for the good of the institution. Family honor and pride require it. And no group of Shaowu-ites without this sort of family ties would be willing, just on the basis of their love for Shaowu, to work together as harmoniously and efficiently for the Cause. Furthermore, the other people of Shaowu do not seem to resent it; the Yao family is a distinguished clan of their community, and a Yao enterprise that succeeds and benefits the community as well as the Yaos brings credit and glory to the whole city of Shaowu. And because the family is now widespread, and not limited to Shaowu, both the Board and the Staff can draw talent from other cities of the region, and even from such distant points as Foochow and Chungking. All this would have seemed incomprehensible to me when I first arrived; but if I had been fluent in the language and had tried to block it, I am sure that the hospital would have been much worse for it.

Speaking of the Chinese conception of the family (and incidentally I have come to believe that the Chinese unity and solidarity of the family as an institution gives them an immense advantage over the West, with its rapid crumbling of what little remains of the family as a social influence)—speaking of the Chinese family and the difference it makes in one's point of view, the following is of interest: Last week I asked my nurse whether there was any chance of her husband, now a pediatrician teaching in the Provincial Medical School in Foochow, coming to Shawou and working here. She seemed surprised at the idea that we might want him and assured me that he would be glad to come. I told her that I did not know how much we would be able to pay him, and suggested that he might not be satisfied with the sum. But she assured me that the salary made no difference; he had always wanted to work in a Christian institution rather than a secular, no matter what the salary. "And besides, his mother is very anxious to have him come back to his home here in Shaowu to practice." It seems that his ancestral home is here; his mother lives here, as well as his wife, and a whole flock of female in-laws and children, but no men-folk. His father is a professor in Fukien Christian University in Foochow, and he himself is working in Foochow. But his mother is here, running the family home, and she thinks it would be nice to have a man around in the family. My point is that it never occurred to my nurse to mention her own feelings in the matter. She is not supposed to have any feelings relative to her husband. Actually her own home is up in North China, and she is just as much a stranger here as she is in Foochow. But I guess she did not marry her husband—she married his family; and the fact that her husband is not at home makes no difference—she must live and raise her family in the old family home. But I could not help but feel that she also felt, deep down in the bottom of her heart, that it might be a very good idea if her husband could get a job in this hospital, so that she, as well as her mother-in-law, might have a man around the house!

This same family feeling might explain Dr. Yao's interest in Shaowu. He has not been here for twenty years. All his brothers and sisters except one have also moved away. Even his mother is with him in Foochow. I am sure that he has lived in big cities long enough, and has become enough westernized in his habits and tastes, that he could never again be happy to live permanently in this small, out-of-the-way place. But he feels instinctively that Shaowu is his ancestral home and belongs to him, so he willingly spares no effort—and even sends his wife and children up here alone, although they have never seen the place before and have no emotional attachments here—so that the interests of this hospital might be furthered.

All these things about the Chinese I am slowly learning. I am also learning something of what the medical problems are here, and how the patients react to treatment with Western medicine. I have already mentioned their blind faith in Western drugs, and their firmly fixed idea that they can and will invariably recover if they can only hit upon the right medicine or combination. (And yet, when death is inevitable, they are more apt to accept it more calmly than westerners; they suddenly switch from concern over last-minute emergency measures to treat or forestall the end, to absorption over the problems of the best place to die, and seeing that the proper measures of respect are taken beforehand, such as the purchase and presentation of the coffin, etc., to ensure a peaceful and auspicious journey to the Other Side.)

Pardon the long-windedness of this effusion. I will try to be briefer in the future. I only want to say that Dick Jackson preached this morning for the first time. I don't know how he made out, because I left him to his own devices and went to the other church to hear Timothy Chang preach his first sermon. He is the boy, now a teacher in the provincial high school, who is acting as Dick's language teacher, and for whom Dick is going to try to get a scholarship in America next year to study in an American theological seminary. If today's performance is any indication he should be well worth the investment, because for the first attempt of an amateur he certainly did an excellent, well-polished job.

Best regards, home carry pictures of their families with them.

One young father confided, "You'd be surprised to know how often my little one's picture has said to me, 'Don't do it, Dad!' when a crowd of the boys have wanted me to spend an evening in a way which I well knew would be unprofitable for me."

"The picture I carry acts as a stabilizer on me, too," another "Dad" agreed, overhearing the conversation. "Mine is a miniature of my beautiful wife and clear-eyed three-year-old. It is better than a restraining hand on my arm. The temptation to be a 'good fellow' isn't half as enticing as the desire to be a good husband and father to the lovely faces looking at me so trustingly."

Family likenesses are reminders that there is "no place like home" and no other group in the world like the home folks. If you have merely put off having photographs taken of isn't today a good time to fulfill this intention?

And—may I advise?—don't economize too much when you buy the frame. There should be that hint of "nothing's too good for Father!" Don't buy the first frame you see. Look for one you think he would want—one that "looks like him," not one you particularly fancy. Most men prefer bright-colored monogrammed leather frames for traveling.

That smile-in-a-lonely-room gift!—no other will be so much appreciated.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Today, September 12, is a beautiful clear day—warm and comfortable. It is so inviting on the outside that it makes it hard for us to stay indoors. But we are so busy with work that we have to make ourselves contented and stick to the office work.

Our busy season is now beginning. We are getting material together for our Thanksgiving campaign. We begin several months ahead to do this as we have to have it ready when the time comes to mail it. For instance, we have an envelope to address to each Sunday school superintendent and more than twenty thousand small Thanksgiving envelopes addressed to the superintendents for their needs in their churches. Then they are stamped and placed in boxes until near the first of November when they will be mailed. This job takes time.

Then we write a letter to more than two hundred Sunday school superintendents in regard to the Thanksgiving offering in their church. Also, a letter is written to each pastor of our churches, asking their co-operation in the special Thanksgiving offering in their churches.

But the biggest job of all is writing hundreds of letters to friends outside of our denomination appealing for contributions to help us in taking care of our large family of little children. The largest group runs in ages from three to ten years of age. Last year we raised more money from the outside of our church than we received from our church people. So far this year we have received much more from friends outside than we have from our churches and Sunday schools.

We have calls practically every day to take children, many of them from broken homes where one or the other parent has deserted and left the little children to suffer. This broken home business is getting to be alarming. So many broken homes with mothers left with a group of little children, and the father gone for parts unknown.

Sometime ago I had a Superior Court judge come to see me about taking two little motherless boys. Their mother had died recently, and the father put them off on his old widowed mother, and he deserted the children and went to the State of Texas. I said to the judge: "We have a law in North Carolina to punish fathers for non support of their families." His reply was: "I can issue a warrant for his arrest, send to Texas and bring him back, and put him on the road for a specified time, but the law makes no provision where-by you can get anything from him. You would be no better off." That is true. Something will have to be worked out in the future to meet this growing condition.

Superintendent.

warmth. He said, "Let there be warmth," and he gave them his white fire. But the third man looked at his white fire and thought what a rare jewel it was. He said, "I will hide this white fire within my bosom lest some man take it from me and I lose such a rare jewel." And he hid his precious gift. Then came the day when the Keeper of the White Fire asked the three men what they had done with their White Fire. The first told the story of sharing his white light with the people who cried for the light. "That is good," said the Keeper of the White Fire, "thy light shall shine forever." The second man told of hearing people crying for warmth and heat and that he had shared his white fire with them. "That is good," said the Keeper of the White Fire, "your fire shall also burn forever." The third man confessed that he regarded the white fire as a rare jewel, and he had hidden it in his bosom lest some man should steal it from him. The Keeper of the White Fire was angry and he commanded his servants to take the White Fire from this unworthy servant and divide it between the other two, but alas when they tore the man's garments from him, there was nothing left but whiten ashes and black char.

Think you that this is fiction? It happens in real life. It was not that Judas did not possess any talents that he failed. It was because he was afraid of the costly adventure of following Jesus in what must have seemed to Judas as unnecessary risks. Benedict Arnold was a great general in his own right. But his talents turned to whitened ashes when he was unwilling to stake his future upon the cause of his country. When Darwin was young he was so busy with his scientific discoveries that he had no time either for music or poetry. Then later when he had leisure to enjoy these things he had lost his interests in them.

Hiding talents in the good earth will not save them . . . but the universe is a fruitful place for them. Two can become four; five can become ten; and would it not seem logical that one could become two?

III.

In the third place, I think that the one talent man failed because he allowed fear to dominate his life.

He was afraid of himself.—He was so fearful of doing the wrong thing that he did nothing at all. He underestimated his value in the divine scheme of things. Often this is our weakness. We underestimate the power of our influence. We think that one voice cannot make much difference in the presence of evil so we keep quiet. We are apt to think that one vote can not do much good in the field of politics, so we neglect the duty of a good citizen. There are times when it is inconvenient to go to church and we say that one person more or less, will not make any great difference yet that accounts for the difference between empty pews and a great congregation.

*There is waiting a work where only your hand can avail,
And if you falter, a chord of music will fail.*

He was afraid of his age.—He did not trust anyone, not even himself. Had he shared his fears with his two talent neighbor, they might have been able to pool their resources and through hard work and careful planning made a substantial profit. Had he consulted his five talent neighbor he might have learned the art of getting rich quickly. But he did not trust himself and he trusted his neighbors less. He thought the safest place for a treasure was to bury it in the ground.

He was afraid of his master.—He knew his master's reputation for knavery and shady dealings. He knew that he was a cold and austere man, reaping where he had not sown and gathering where he had not strewn. But he overlooked one thing. He forgot that his master demanded a return for his investment.

This one talent man failed because of his fears. Do we ever allow fear to rob us of our victories?

Listen again to the Sinai Law of Life: "To him that hath, it shall be given; but from him that hath not, it shall be taken away, even that which he hath."

Dr. Fosdick concludes a sermon on Power with these words:

"You have power, what are going to do with it? More people ruin their lives with power than weakness. Be sure of that! More people ruin their generation with power than with weakness. Be sure of that! As for being Christian never think of Christianity primarily as a medicine for the weak. It is more than that. To be Christian is to take in your hands the love ethic and go out into a pagan world and live by it, believe in it, adventure on it and sacrifice for it until it becomes victorious in the institutions of mankind."

Well, your talents are power . . . whether you are a one talent man, or a two talent man or a five talent man. The church offers you a laboratory where you can use your talents in the name of Christ for the glory of God and for the sake of your fellowmen. May God preserve us from fear and give us courage to use our talents faithfully and well.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

Mrs. John Croushorn brought greetings from the Women's Guild of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

Miss Betty Sheetz, Winchester, sang a solo.

Dr. W. T. Scott gave the address of the morning. Dr. Scott's address challenged the entire audience to go forward for the cause of missions.

In the afternoon, the Winchester Young People led the devotional service. Mrs. S. E. Madren led a brief memorial service in memory of Mrs. G. H. Veazey.

Mrs. O. H. Paris presented the program of the work of the Southern Convention women.

The reports of the Conference Superintendents showed progress, with the treasurer's report showing the largest amount ever to be raised in one year by the Valley women.

Mrs. O. H. Paris installed the new officers for the year which are as follows: President—Miss Verdie Shwalter, Route 44, Harrisonburg, Va.; Vice-President—Mrs. R. A. Whitten, 12 W. Clifford St., Winchester, Va.; Secretary—Mrs. Clyde R. Miller, Route 4, Box 290, Harrisonburg, Va.; Treasurer—Mrs. Noah F. Painter, Route 3, Luray, Va.; Supt. Women's Work—Mrs. S. E. Madren, Elkton, Va.; Supt. Young People—Mrs. J. E. Bryant, Route 1, Harrisonburg, Va.; Supt. Juniors—Mrs. Grover Daugherty, Winchester, Va.; Supt. Cradle Roll—Mrs. Carrol Monger, Shenandoah, Va.; Supt. Interdenominational Cooperation—Mrs. A. W. Andes, Route 4, Harrisonburg, Va.; Supt. Spiritual Life—Mrs. Mary Davis, Linville, Va.; Supt. NEWS FROM THE SOCIETIES.

FLINT HILL.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Flint Hill Congregational Christian Church, Randolph County, had one very outstanding meeting during the year.

The pastor and members of the Women's Missionary Society of Poplar Ridge Friends Church met with us for the July meeting.

Miss Elizabeth Chicoine of Elon College, a field worker in the Southern Convention, was guest speaker. She gave a very interesting report on the foreign study book, India at the Threshold. She also told something of her work in the Convention.

After the meeting the visitors and members enjoyed a picnic supper in the grove back of the church.

MRS. J. W. FARLOW, Ch'm'n,

HIGHLIGHTS FROM ASHEVILLE.

We started our year with reports of our first delegates ever to attend the annual North Carolina Women's Missionary Conference held at our Raleigh Church, and a consecration and rededication service for new officers and members.

On November 21, a Harvest Home Festival was held in the recreation room of the church, for the whole church family. Mr. Fred Dodd spoke on the 100th anniversary of the A. M. A. and Mrs. A. C. Todd spoke on our responsibility in Shaowu, China. An offering of $38.00 was received for Shaowu. Following the dinner items of food and clothing made by the women were auctioned at the Sales Booth and the proceeds added to our treasury.

Our annual Christmas Party in the form of a luncheon at the home of our president featured the Christmas Story in Scripture and song. Each member brought a useful but inexpensive gift. These, attractively wrapped, were heaped about the center piece of the dining table and exchanged at the close of the luncheon.

Our members thought that our Mission Study books for this year were exceptionally well written. The review of Buell Gallagher's book, Portrait of a Pilgrim, by Mrs. Todd, at our February meeting, was followed by a wholesome discussion in which every member participated; India At the Threshold was passed among the members and read before our March meeting, in preparation for Miss Coghill's visit with us. Pattie Lee Coghill represented us by speaking to the entire church membership at the morning service on Palm Sunday. She gave us the highlights of her visit to India, Palestine, England, and Denmark. Her message made an indelible impression on all who heard it.

In May, we were fortunate to have Dr. Mildred I. Morgan, Family Life Coordinator for Asheville, and a member of our church here, speak on Thy Neighbor and Thy Family. Her talk was followed by questions from the group which she very ably answered.

Our year ended with an unexpected treat. The Rev. Annie R. Campbell came through our city enroute to New York City and a year's work in our churches in England. She kindly gave us of her limited time, attended our September meeting and told us some most interesting experiences of her past work among our rural southern churches, migrant work in Florida, and her anticipations of her future year's work in England under our Congregational Christian Service Committee.

Outstanding in community service for the year have been the purchasing of materials and making ether stockings for the operating room at our Asheville Negro Hospital and white summer robes for our own choir.

Mrs. J. Carl Headlee, who has served as our able president for the past two years, turned over her task to Mrs. L. C. Merchant, our newly elected president. The group also voted to send a delegate to our Annual Missionary Conference, meeting this year at Burlington, N. C.

By DEAN CHARLES R. BROWN

The right mood for giving is one of high and glad privilege. The Lord blesses the cheerful giver. "When the burnt offerings began, the song of the Lord began also with trumpets." The people of Israel gave of their best to the God they served, and they clothed the self-denial they practiced with the radiant joy they felt in doing the will of the Most High. Their gifts came with a burst of music.

Giving had best be proportionate and systematic. The man of method has the wind and the tide with him. He wins out over the man who works by rule of thumb, or who intrusts valued interests to passing moods and impulses. It is significant that the two most methodical organizations on earth—the Standard Oil Company and the Roman Catholic Church—are both "going concerns."

The old scriptural rule of giving a tenth of one's income to the work of religion and charity has stood the test of experience. The early Hebrews were blessed in heart and soul, in basket and in store by their practice of tithing. The Mormon Church, whatever limitations may attach to some of its convictions, has been able by its system of tithes to send forth an army of missionaries into all parts of the world, and to care for the needy with an admirable thoroughness. Let there be some definite percentage which mind and conscience can approve! Let people give as they live! If they are compelled to live sparingly, there can be no reproach when they give sparingly. Where they live bountifully, let them also give bountifully. When a man spends, or saves for investment, nine dollars, let him see to it that at least one dollar is given to interests quite outside the field of his own comfort.

The Christian world has never as yet had the moral courage to test the readiness of Him, Who has all the resources of earth and sky under His direction, to meet systematic giving with blessings bountiful beyond all our anticipations. Here in the closing words of the Old Testament the Lord flings down a kind of challenge! "Bring all your tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in my house! Prove me now, saith the Lord of Hosts, and see if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out such a blessing that there shall not be room to receive it."

How the treasures of the Christian Church would be filled with the sinews of war for a more effective campaign against the forces of sin and want, did all professing Christians begin to practice tithing! How the needs of our missionary societies, at home and abroad, would be met, their arms lengthened and strengthened for a mightier service, by this adequate support. How the noble army of aged ministers who have been giving their lives to the service of Christ on very meager salaries and with no comfortable Carnegie pensions awaiting them, could be maintained in decency and self-respect until God calls them home! And how the heart of the Master Himself, Who said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," would rejoice in witnessing the advance of a more generous service to the hungry and the sick, the orphaned and the imprisoned, as an acceptable service rendered to Him.

If the Christian people of this one land, rich in its resources and prosperous beyond all the other lands of the earth, could be moved to give a tenth to the Lord, it would seem at once as if all our benevolent activities had been harnessed to some Niagara of power. There would come a new thrill of life along the whole line of religious effort, and presently we would see the kingdom of God on earth coming with power and great glory.

Statement of Faith

(Widely Used by Pilgrim Fellowship Groups)

Believing that we as students have been brought to a watershed of history by the release of nuclear energy,

Believing that the initial use of this energy reveals the inevitable result of secular leadership and power,

Believing that our own heritage, stressing freedom disciplined by fellowship, has heightened relevance to this new age, and,

Believing that now, as always, the Word of God provides life's only guide and power, we affirm our faith:

- I. We believe in God as Creator and Sustainer of the universe, as as loving Father who forgives and redeems men, as infinite Spirit who guides and inspires men in the search for fuller revelation of truth.
- II. We believe that Jesus Christ is the supreme revelation of God's saving power for man, of the working of divine love and will as an operative force in the lives of men, and of the possibility of man's response to his love.
- III. We affirm our belief in the primary importance of the Bible as being a record of man's progressive discovery of God, and the well spring of our personal Christian faith, from which much more light is yet to break forth. The Bible is the key to that awakened Christian conscience, and its understanding of the Spirit of Christ, which is our supreme authority for Christian living.
- IV. We believe in the Christian Church Universal, and, knowing that the present generation of youth does not realize the significance of the Church in history and in our current life, and that we fail in carrying out our responsibility to God, we penitently commit ourselves to the Christian Church as the living organism through which the Spirit of God works in building His Kingdom.
- V. We believe that the Kingdom of God is a present reality. In it are united all earnest seekers after the abundant life revealed in Jesus Christ, the Lord of our lives and of all human history. The ultimate goals of this Kingdom are not yet realized. Praying the prayer, "Thy Kingdom come," we look to Jesus for its pattern, process, and the power to establish it.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Dean D. J. Bowden of Elon College was the guest preacher at our Richmond Church last Sunday.

Congratulations to Rev. Mark Andes and Miss Catherine Cooper who were married on August 17.

Dr. John G. Truitt is assisting the Rev. H. E. Crutchfield in revival services at Sunbury this week.

Dr. F. C. Lester is attending the 138th annual meeting of the American Board in session this week at Burlington, Vt.

Revival services are in progress this week at Antioch (E. Va.). Rev. C. Shannon Morgan has the assistance of Rev. R. E. Brittle.

Dr. Stanley U. North attended an Executive Committee meeting at Franklinton Center and spoke at the United Church in Raleigh last week.

Dr. Oscar E. Maurer, former Moderator of the General Council, will begin his services as the ad interim minister of First Church in St. Petersburg, the first of October.

Dr. W. E. Wisseman was the guest preacher for the revival services held recently at Holy Neck. The pastor, the Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, reports that 32 members have been received during the conference year.

Sunday will be a red letter day in our Hopewell Church. The Rev. D. D. Nash and church officials will burn the mortgage on the church, and the Rev. O. D. Poythress will begin a series of revival services in the evening.

The motion picture, "Seeds of Destiny," was shown at the Rosemont Church on September 14. As a result of this showing, the church received $25 and collected six bags of clothing for overseas relief. The Rev. H. G. Council, Jr., reports that 30 additional bags have been requested.

The First Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk (Berkley) will celebrate its Centennial Anniversary Sunday, October 5 at 3:30 P. M. This church was founded by the Rev. Stephen S. Barrett on October 6, 1847. All former pastors, members and the many friends of the church are invited to attend.

Antioch Church (E. N. C.) held a Home-Coming Day on August 30. This gathering was followed by revival services. The Rev. E. M. Powell, a former minister, preached, and a choir from Henderson, N. C., brought special music. The services were well attended and fifteen members added to the church.

REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL, D. D.

HARRELL ELECTED PRESIDENT OF NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the Congregational Christian Church of Durham, N. C., was elected president of the North Carolina Council of Churches on Wednesday of this week. The Council is meeting in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Dr. Harrell is a former president of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches. He is a graduate of Elon College and is a member of its Board of Trustees. He has served for many years as secretary of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. Dr. Harrell was a chaplain in the first World War and shortly after his discharge from the service, became pastor of the church at Durham. In length of service his ministry there is probably the record for the entire Convention, with the possible exception of that of the late Dr. W. W. Staley at Suffolk, Virginia.

at 316 Parkview Drive has been purchased for the erection of a new personage. This is the first unit of an Improvement and Expansion Program. The Sunday morning services during September are being broadcast over Station WFNS. Rev. W. M. Stevens gives a Church News Program over the same station Saturday at 9:00 A. M. Rev. Allen Hurdle, a member of the church, enters Yale Divinity School this fall. Miss Helen Cobb will enter the Hartford School of Religious Education.

The Rev. James B. Allan has been called by the First Congregational Christian Church, Lynchburg, to be their minister. Mr. Allan was called from the First Congregational Church of Tampa, Fla., September 1, 1947. He is a graduate of Kalamazoo College, Kalamazoo, Mich., and Chicago Theological Seminary. During the war, he served as an Army Chaplain with the 26th Infantry Division for 26 months. Mrs. Allan, too, formerly served with the WAVES in the capacity as a Yeoman for 23 months. She is enrolled as a student in Randolph-Macon College for Women this coming semester. Mr. Allan served as pastor of the Union Congregational Church, Green River, Wyoming, prior to entering the service. He is a native of Waterbury, Conn., where he was active in the Second Congregational Church.

COUNCIL GETS GIFT FOR CHURCH MOVIES.

A substantial gift to help establish a department of visual aids for the promotion and distribution of religious films and slides has been presented to the World Council of Christian Education by Mrs. Clifford S. Heinz of Pittsburgh, according to Dr. Forest Knapp, general secretary. The amount was not announced.

Mrs. Heinz, for many years a vice-president of the former World's Sunday School Association, predecessor of the council, is a daughter-in-law of the late H. J. Heinz, founder of the H. J. Heinz Company. She returned recently from a meeting of the council in Birmingham, England.

The new department of the council will require full time officials in New York, London and Geneva. The expenses of the project in London were underwritten by J. Arthur Rank, British film producer, Dr. Knapp said. Mr. Rank is chairman of the Committee on Visual Aids of the World Council of Christian Education.

Southern Convention Office

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

SOMETHING FOR THE LAYMEN TO DO.

The Southern Convention at its last session appointed the following persons on the Committee on Men's Work: A. H. McIver, Harry W. Lee, Roy A. Larrick, Cyrus Shoffner and George D. Colclough. The Committee has been impressed by the desire expressed from many quarters that the men of the Convention ought to be better organized and engaged in more concerted action through the Church. We have taken our task seriously. On April 26, 1947, the Committee met for a planning session in Burlington, North Carolina, outlined some objectives and set up some plans for the coming months. The writer was chosen Chairman of the Committee on Laymen's Work of the Southern Convention, and Mr. Harry W. Lee of Portsmouth, Va., was made Secretary. In connection with the Burlington meeting we had a Layman's Rally at the Alamance Hotel, Burlington, when we had approximately 75 men in attendance. The event was so successful that we believe other such rallies over the Convention territory will be of great assistance in stimulating our men to greater action. Therefore, we have arranged a series of Laymen's Rallies for the week of October 5, and we earnestly solicit the help of interested laymen and pastors to help promote them. (It would help a great deal if the wives of our laymen would help promote attendance of the men at these rallies.)

We have arranged the Convention into districts and plan to have rallies at the following places and on the following dates:

Sunday, October 5, 11:00 A. M.—At the Congregational Christian Church, Winchester, Va.

3:00 P. M.—At the Newport Christian Church, near Shenandoah, Va.

8:00 P. M.—At the Linville Christian Church, Linville, Va.

Monday, October 6, 8:00 P. M.—For Eastern Virginia Laymen at Suffolk Christian Church.

Tuesday, October 7, 8:00 P. M.—At Congregational Christian Church, Henderson, N. C., for laymen in that area.

Wednesday, October 8, 7:00 P. M.—(Supper Meeting) Congregational Christian Church, Sanford, N. C. (Men to attend this meeting should send supper reservation to Rev. C. C. Dollar, 6 Third St., Sanford, by October 6.)

Thursday, October 9, 7:00 P. M.—(Supper Meeting) Asheboro, N. C. Meeting is to be held at school cafeteria, Fayetteville Street, Asheboro, and reservations sent to Dr.

F. C. Lester, 840 So. Sunset Drive, Asheboro, N. C., not later than October 6.

Announcements of the rallies have been sent to the Superintendents of Sunday Schools and other key laymen in the various churches, with suggestions as to which rally men of your church should attend. However, if you should find it more convenient to attend one of the rallies not suggested in the letter to your church, please feel free to do so. (In the case of the Sanford and Asheboro rallies—which are to be supper meetings, please be certain to send to the pastor the number of men of your church who will wish supper. This is quite important!)

We wish to give a cordial invitation to pastors to attend these rallies. We wish to have our pastors with us.

The guest speaker for the rallies will be Mr. Walter A. Graham, Executive Director of the National Laymen's Fellowship of Congregational Christian Churches. Mr. Graham was present at the April Rally held at Burlington and delighted the men with his significant address and his wise counsel.

Laymen—let us awake to our opportunity to get busy! Our church needs us. We need the church. Support the rallies by your attendance and by bringing another man with you.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK

Protestant churches of the United States and Canada are called upon to show their unity in the job of Christian teaching by observing Religious Education Week from September 28 through October 5.

Next to Christmas and Holy Week, Religious Education Week is the most widely celebrated church week in America. It is being observed this year for the seventeenth consecutive time. The theme is "Faith Is the Victory—Spiritual Bases for One World."

"Religious Education Week is to develop in the church, in the home, and in the community an increasing consciousness of the importance of providing every child and all youth with what is rightfully theirs, namely, moral and religious training," Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of International Council of Religious Education, states. "We must teach for Christian living. We must arouse our people to a deeper concern for moral and spiritual needs. To this end, let us demonstrate our unity in the task of teaching the demands of the Christian life."

PRESIDENTIAL ENDORSEMENT

President Harry S. Truman endorsed Religious Education Week in a letter to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, sponsor of the observance.

"I am happy to note the splendid theme selected for the seventeenth annual observance of Religious Education Week," the Chief Executive wrote. "'Faith is the Victory' seems peculiarly fitting at this hour in human history."

The President declared that perhaps never before has there been as much need as today for teaching young people that "spiritual growth is the goal of all history."

Continued moral development is possible through instruction in the doctrines of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, Mr. Truman affirmed. "This is the faith we live by, and nothing can break that faith," he said.

IMPERATIVES OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Apropos to the observance of Christian Education Week, we turn to a report of the Second National Workshop for Directors of Christian Education held at Lake Forest College in Illinois. Dr. Wilfred E. Powell, professor of religious education at Phillips University, gave four addresses on the general theme of "Protestant Christian Education for Today's World."

Pointing out that "we are all conscious of the fact that time runs out," the educator said that "Christian education will see itself as a part of the whole. It moves with the whole church. It cannot be neutral. It shares the conviction that these are momentous times for the presentation and the application of the Christian gospel to a needy world."

Five imperatives of Christian education today, according to Dr. Powell are (1) to teach the Bible so that individuals and groups can use it intelligently as a guide to life; (2) to develop individual Christian faith "as a matter of personal conviction and personal devotion rather than as a stereotyped institutional loyalty;" (3) to see that "worship becomes an act of personal approach to God which involves the whole personality;" (4) to help laymen develop "into a Christian force in church and community;" and (5) to strengthen cooperative Protestantism and develop the ecumenical mind.

WEEKLIES CARRY S. S. LESSON

Establishing of a new service to Protestant churches and to communities throughout the United States and Canada has been inaugurated by the International Council of Religious Education.

Having begun September 21, 1,600 weekly newspapers in 38 states and several provinces of Canada are carrying a special treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson Outlines slanted to the lay reader. It is expected that another 1,000 weeklies will be added within a year.

These lesson treatments are written by Dr. Louie D. Newton, president of the Southern Baptist Convention and pastor of the Druid Hills church, Atlanta, Ga. Many years of experience as newspaper reporter, editor and columnist combined with his religious background gives Dr. Newton an excellent basis for his interpretation of the lessons.

Nearly one hundred denominations and groups prepare their regular Uniform Lesson materials on these topics. The newspaper treatment will therefore be helpful to those millions of superintendents, teachers and adult pupils, as well as many "unchurched readers" attracted to the column by the special format used and by Dr. Newton's life situation approach to the lesson each week.

HARVEST HOME FESTIVALS

A call to Protestant churches throughout the nation to set aside definite periods during the late summer and fall for the observance of "harvest festivals," was issued by the Committee on Town and Country of the Home Missions Council of North America. Certain churches, said the call, including the Reformed, Lutheran, Mennonite, Moravian and Brethren, celebrate harvest days, but in many others the practice has been all but abandoned, or the emphasis has shifted to Thanksgiving Day.

"This unfortunate trend," continued the call, "has produced a nation of town and country churches in whose worship the references to seed-time and harvest are peculiarly lacking. No worship can, without losing vitality, remove itself from the ordinary pursuits of men. It is especially in connection with agriculture, where mystery and providence are so evident, that this needs to be kept in mind."

What Is Your Evangelistic "Potential"?

By HARRY C. MUNRO*

"You shall receive power" said Jesus to the first generation of Christian teachers.

And what power they did receive! That power might have controlled the atom, and bid it serve rather than destroy mankind. That power is latent today in the lives of two million Sunday school teachers across America.

Is there some process of "spiritual fission" by which that vast potential could be released and harnessed to the task of redeeming our fear-possessed, befuddled, lost generation? Yes, it is a part of the Christian faith that there is, in the lives of Christians, an evangelistic "potential" equal to the task of evangelizing even this generation.

But what is evangelistic potential, besides being a high sounding new phrase? Is it something we can explore and estimate and direct? What is your evangelistic potential?

These searching questions are the first ones confronted by every church and every Christian worker entering into the National Christian Teaching Mission. An evening of self-study engages every organization and every worker in exploring the answer to the general question, by looking at the answers to some thirty-five questions which are its component parts.

Questions Deal With Five Factors.

The questions are asked in terms of organizations—the fellowship, service, study groups of the church. But of course they actually search out the attitudes and practices of the leaders. So the questions are put both organizationally and personally. Beyond mere statistical data and program emphases, the questions deal with five principal factors which are directly related to evangelistic potential. This article in no sense forms the basis of such a self-study as constitutes the first of the four projects in the Teaching Mission. However, a look at the five factors will interpret what we mean by evangelistic potential.

First, what do we mean by evangelism? As interpreted in the Teaching Mission, it means two processes, each of which depends upon the other. First, it consists in discovering persons for whose spiritual welfare a given church or group is responsible and throwing Christian fellowship around them until they become a part of that group. Second, it means exerting such an influence upon them through that fellowship, that they are moved along into a saving experience of Jesus Christ and vital membership in the church itself. In every fellowship, service, and study group the church has vast potential for carrying out these processes. Any group in the church which is not carrying out both of those processes represents unused capacity or inoperative evangelistic potential. The self-study project in the Teaching Mission is a means of revealing this unused potential.

Concern for Persons Is First Factor.

The first factor in evangelistic potential is concern for persons. It is possible for a class or club or even a church to be more concerned for its own institutional strength and welfare than for persons. It may seek persons more because they can serve it than because it longs to save them. Or a successful leader may regard persons actually as means to further his own success and self-esteem, more than as objects of his love and self-giving. Statistical goals in evangelism may be necessary but they are dangerous.

On the other hand, the Shepherd Heart is concerned for the individual, not the "lost" in general, but the particular lost individual, be it a coin, or a sheep, or boy. For that reason Christian leadership is very much a matter of personal friendship. The Christian teacher's evangelistic concern gets him wrapped up, not in the class, but in the persons in the class. Each is important, not just as one more to count, but chiefly because he is so different from the others and so is valued for his own peculiar worth. No two are alike. No two are to be treated quite alike. Hence the small intimate class, the friendly person-to-person relationship, the deep personal concern reflect the evangelistic potential of the Sunday school. It has its own pattern. There is no reason for imitating any other kind of school.

Must Seek Persons.

The second factor in evangelistic potential is another expression of concern for persons—for those not yet within the Christian fellowship—seeking, fellowshiping, and holding persons. The Shepherd Heart is never so so preoccupied with the ninety and nine as to forget the one who is lost.

The class or department which has a carefully prepared, frequently revised, and constantly used "responsibility list" of persons whom it is definitely seeking to bring within its fellowship, is using its evangelistic potential in this respect.

But recruiting new members must never become merely a device for filling the places left vacant by those who have dropped out. In fact a person cannot be "dropped" from a responsibility list, except to be re-assigned to some other responsibility list. Christian concern does not just casually withdraw itself.

Home-Church Relationships Emphasized.

Home-Church relationships are vital in evangelistic effectiveness. The best church school cannot take over the whole job of Christian teaching. It can supplement the influence of the Christian home. It can make up in part to the children of spiritually delinquent homes what they inevitably miss. It can offer help to every home in doing its task better. But Christian nurture is in its very nature a shared task of home and church.

The church's evangelistic potential consists in part, therefore, of the working partnership which it succeeds in establishing with all families represented in its membership and responsibility list. This is a discouraging and slow moving process. Parents so willingly abdicate in favor of the church. It seems so much more simple just to take over, asking of the home only that it facilitate the church's program. Yet to retreat to that position is to leave largely unused one of the greatest of all sources of evangelistic potential, that of the adequately functioning Christian family. This is the next great frontier in Christian education.

Worship and Churchmanship Provided For.

Experience of worship and churchmanship, beginning early enough and with compelling attractiveness, constitute another rich source of evangelistic potential. For one reason or another a yawning gap tends frequently to develop between Sunday school and church. Many persons, with a seemingly satisfactory Sunday school experience, never get over that gap into full vital participating church membership. The way in which the worship experiences of children are provided, and specific, carefully planned experiences of church participation, are unused potential in many churches to bridge that gap.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A hatful of wasps fell fighting into my face this morning while I was picking scuppernongs and fixed their painful shafts five times about my eyes and nose. So now some six hours later I am peeping at this type-writer from greatly swollen eyes. Several of those little fighters returned home disappointed, but five of them returned from their flight with the happy words, "Mission fulfilled." I am willing to give the others credit for putting up a good fight, for I did some fast blowing and snorting, flinging my face, slapping with my free hand, and getting out from there. I say with my "free hand" because I was holding on to the cereal box of luscious grapes for dear life.

Little things in life count. When I was but a child I learned a rhyme from my verse-loving mother, which said:

Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean
And the pleasant land.

And more and more I have come to learn that the little acts of kindness and thoughtfulness add up to great usefulness in living a life.

Some of the goings on around here—the meeting of the Mission Board bringing into Suffolk several of the leading men and women of our Convention. It was a pleasure to see them and to sit in on some of the sessions of the Mission Board. Monday of this week will be the first fall meeting of the ministers of this conference. The Rev. Robert M. Kimball, pastor of the Franklin Church, will preside for the first time. On October 3 the Woman's Conference will meet with the Waverly Church, Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor. The Waverly Church will do a good job of being host. Let us pray that the women will have an inspiring and harmonious session.

On October 6 the men of this conference are invited to attend a laymen's meeting in the Suffolk Church, and I am hoping that we may have several hundred men present. What an inspiring sight it would be, and how much the men of our conference can do for their churches and the conference if they set their hearts upon it. On October 6 the Young People's Missionary Conference will meet at eight in the evening in the Suffolk Church and will be addressed by a Virginia youth just returned from Oslo. And all our churches are holding their annual conferences in preparation for our forthcoming session of the Eastern Virginia Conference which will meet in this church October 29 and 30.

Will not everyone who reads these lines breathe a prayer that the Spirit of Christ may lead us in all our work, that we may see the opportunities which lie before us, and that we may seek a depth of consecration that will cause us to undertake great things for God?

NEWS FROM NEWPORT NEWS.

Eight young people from the First Church at Newport News attended Summer Camps for Young People this summer, five of them teen-age boys who went with me to the Valley Young People's Senior Camp, and three of them young women who went to the Senior Camp at Camp Hanes. In both cases they had a grand time and are enthusiastic about going back next year. They told the "home folks" about it in Sunday School last Sunday morning when they had charge of the morning service of worship. The following program, with slight changes made necessary on account of unavoidable circumstances, was presented in an interesting and inspiring way:

Introductory Remarks—Rev. H. S. Hardecastle.

Call to Worship.

Hymn No. 59—"Now In the Days of Youth."

Scripture: Matthew 17:1-9—Frank Cannon, Jr.

Trumpet Solo: "Follow the Gleam"—Holland Taylor.

Prayer—Robert Whitley.

"Things I Liked Best At the Valley Young People's Camp"—Franklin Foster.

Echoes from Camp Hanes:

Our Classes and Worship Services—Merle Padgett.

Our Recreation and Good Times—Audrey Duling.

Sunday at Camp Hanes—Virginia Barnes.

Hymn No. 62: "We Are Climbing Jacob's Ladder."

Benediction.

Meditation: "We Are Climbing Jacob's Ladder"—Frank Cannon and

Holland Taylor, piano and trumpet duet (softly).

* * * *

Our church has a series of "Covered Dish Suppers" and Family Night Programs through the Church Year, and they are enjoyable, informative and inspiring. An attempt is made to provide variety in the programs. And although the emphasis is upon fun and fellowship as well as good food, the religious tone is always given to the evening in one way or another.

The first of the Family Night Programs was given last Wednesday evening, September 17. An unusually large number of people was present for the bountiful and delicious supper. After the tables were cleared there was a period of group singing in which the audience took part heartily. Then a special service was held in connection with the presentation and dedication of a Plaque in honor of Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, D. D., for his leadership in the erection of the splendid Educational Building. Quite a number of people who were not able to be present for the supper were present for this service. The program was in charge of Mr. C. E. Heath, teacher of the Jesse H. Dollar Class which sponsored the occasion and provided the plaque. After the singing of a hymn, the president of the class, Mr. Carson Coats, read the Scripture Lesson, and the writer led in prayer. Then Mr. Heath in simple and sincere language paid a tribute to Dr. Dollar and as he finished the beautiful bronze plaque was unveiled. Dr. Dollar then responded with appropriate words, blending both the lighter and the serious elements in a happy combination. Mrs. Dollar was also given recognition and also responded in gracious words. Dr. Dollar pronounced the benediction. It was a service long to be remembered by all those present.

The plaque read as follows:

IN GRATITUDE TO
Jesse H. Dollar, D. D.
Pastor 1936-46
His Vision and Efforts Were Largely Responsible for The Erection of This Building
Which Has Been Dedicated To Christian Education and Fellowship
J. H. D. Class 1947

The plaque has been installed in a conspicuous place in the hall of the Educational Building, opposite the Chapel.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

OUR CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN COLLEGES IN THE SOUTHEAST.

The problems of Christian higher education in the Southeast were carefully considered in a joint meeting of representatives of the Division of Christian Education of the denomination, colleges, and the superintendents. Dr. Harry T. Stock, general secretary, Dr. Wm. T. Scott, superintendent, Rev. Rev. David Shepherd, superintendent, President A. R. VanCleave of Piedmont College, and President Smith of Elon College were in attendance. President Paul F. Bechtold of Southern Union College was absent. Dr. Thomas Anderson, pastor of Central Church, Atlanta, Georgia, was present and assisted greatly in the discussion.

President A. R. VanCleave, Rev. David Shepherd and Dr. Wm. T. Scott were asked to serve as a continuing committee and call the group together when in its judgment an additional meeting should be held.

The above named colleges have succeeded in interesting the Division of Christian Education of the denomination in their problems. These colleges have many problems, but the one great problem now is the lack of money with which to operate their respective programs. To ascertain the worth of these colleges to their denomination and to their several communities an important survey of facilities and possible sources of support was authorized and made under the auspices of the Division of Christian Education. This report was presented to these colleges and the Division of Christian Education for study and appraisal.

The Division of Christian Education has submitted its report to the colleges included. The report carries a rather extensive preamble and certain recommendations in the interest of each institution. That part of the preamble and resolutions concerning Elon College are given below. These resolutions will be presented to the Board of Trustees of the College at its February meeting.

ELON COLLEGE.

Elon is owned and operated by the Southern Convention. Its board, though self-perpetuating, elects members nominated by the Convention. This is the sole instance of a Congregational Christian college actually in the possession of a group of churches. It is not a national agency which controls Elon, but the regional administrative body.

Elon has made good history. It gained a national reputation some years ago for its service in training college students for religious education leadership in the churches. It hopes to be able to do this again in the near future. The college, however, built more rapidly than it could afford to do and has gone through a difficult financial period. Under the aggressive leadership of its present president, Elon is making a good financial recovery. There is no danger that Elon will die. There are enough young people in its area to assure a steady enrollment. It has much better equipment than our other southeastern colleges. But it must raise a million dollars to establish itself firmly upon a high academic basis. Any donor may feel confident that this college will live.

Elon is situated in . . . one of the prosperous sections of America. This is an instance in which the established policy of the denomination can be maintained; the college should seek and receive its major financial support, as it receives most of its students, from its own larger community.

To the extent that money is available nationally, the Board of Home Missions is justified in including Elon in its list of aided colleges. . . .

Having studied the report of the surveyors, the Division of Christian Education is interested in building up the present position of Elon College to greater strength. Elon has the possibility of becoming one of our great colleges. Since the survey was made to help both the college and the denomination to formulate future policies and practices, the Division of Christian Education recommends to Elon College and to its sponsoring body, the Southern Convention, that a cooperative study be made along the lines suggested below. These are areas in which all colleges need to make self-studies, particularly those institutions which seek the aid of Christians and Christian churches. The recommendations are made specifically with reference to Elon because of its potential influence in the region in which it is located.

We recommend:

1. That the curriculum and educational process be studied so that Elon shall surely provide the best education for its students, an education which receives the highest rating from accrediting agencies, and which prepares its graduates for maximum leadership in church and society. The patterns of liberal arts education are changing. Many of the strongest colleges have engaged their faculties in a complete re-study of purpose, program, and process. It is almost necessary for any college that hopes to serve the future as well as the present to undertake such a study. In the case of Elon, it would seem wise that both faculty and church representatives should share in this extended and detailed study.

2. That the college re-examine and evaluate its program of religion and religious education. This would include an investigation of such matters as these: the curricular offerings in the field of religion, the worship and counseling program, the ways in which creative and prophetic religion may permeate the entire life of the campus, the kind of specialized religious education offerings which should be provided within the curriculum, the possibility of college-church cooperation in providing laboratory experience for students interested in religious education, and the possibility of an extension service through which the college might carry on a significant program of adult education. It would be advantageous to enlist the help of a

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

The check from the Convention Office for the College this week is not too optimistic. A total of $77.16 is contributed by eight different Sunday schools and churches of the Convention. At this late date, the College has received less than half its apportionments. It would seem to be easier for the churches and certainly more helpful to the College if conference apportionments could be paid weekly, monthly, or quarterly, rather than annually. The plan of the Convention is for the Sunday schools of the Convention and churches, if they wish, to make contributions at the end of each quarter or on each fifth Sunday. This is a desirable plan and if universal cooperation could be secured, the purpose of the Convention which is the support of the College, would be achieved. The College is confidently expecting to receive its full apportionment this year and it is hoped that every individual church will contribute its entire apportionment.

The College appreciates greatly support of the churches and proposes in return to give valuable service.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The annual meeting of the women in our North Carolina churches will be held at the Burlington Christian Church on Tuesday, October 7. The session will begin at 10:00 and close at 3:30 in the afternoon.

The Burlington women, under the leadership of Mrs. Trollinger, have made very careful plans in preparation for entertaining the Conference. A picnic-style luncheon, for which each person will pay 50c, is being planned.

The guest speaker for our Conference will be Mrs. John T. Fesperman of Kannapolis, president of the North Carolina women in the Evangelical and Reformed Church. We will be interested to learn about their women's societies, since it is possible that our denomination will merge with the Evangelical and Reformed group.

In order to do an effective job in your local church you need to know the plans for the year and how to put those plans into effect. The bulk of our Conference program will consist in just that. We hope every church will be represented.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

CYPRESS CHAPEL.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Cypress Chapel Congregational Christian Church has had a very good year in 1947 under the leadership of our president, Mrs. G. C. Mann.

We observed the World Day of Prayer with Liberty Spring and Bethlehem Churches meeting with us. We had a good crowd and a grand program with each society taking part. We had a good thank offering. Mrs. Grady Brown reviewed our Bible study, Divine Fatherhood, very beautifully.

We met with the Bethlehem ladies to hear Mr. James MacLemore, Jr., review our study book, India at the Threshold, which he did lovely and I think everyone enjoyed it.

Portrait of a Pilgrim was taught by Mrs. Roy Brinkley, a member of our society.

We have tried to give to all the things that come up during the year—our society gave a Memorial for Mrs. Rowland; we have come up to the Standard of Excellence with all our society; we had our Public Program with the Agnes Brittle Circle taking part; we gave to Religious Education for school. We are very thankful for the year's work.

ISLE OF WIGHT MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

As we held the last meeting of our fiscal year, and surveyed our work of the past twelve months, we felt that God had blessed us bountifully, and that although we were a small society, that we had accomplished much.

We sent a thank offering of $54.30 to Shaowu, a gift of money to India, and an Easter offering of $10.00 to the Christian Orphanage.

We sent in one Memorial for Mrs. Raleigh Whitley, one of our beloved members who passed on this year.

Our Foreign Mission book was reviewed by Rev. Mr. Ammons of Zuni. Our Home Mission book was reviewed by one of our own members, Miss Grace Darden.

Besides our usual activities, our society has assumed a large responsibility in raising money for the Building Fund of our church. This year we have raised over $150.00, and we are glad to report that much needed repairs are to be started right away.

We are also proud to report that a Young People's group of 16 members has been organized in the past year and has gotten off to a good start.

UNION (N. C.)

As president of the Woman's Missionary Society at Union, I feel that great interest and enthusiasm has been shown in all three of the circles, namely: "Angie Crew," "Laura Ward," and "The Jacksons."

I'm sure that all requirements of the Standard of Excellence will be completed by September 15.

If I were making a list of outstanding events of the year's work, I probably would head my list with the "Cradle Roll Party." At this time, the mothers of the Junior Church School were invited as guests to meet with the mothers and babies of the Cradle Roll department. They had as their speaker Mrs. E. L. Hughes, Jr., a member of our society. She based her talk on notes taken from a lecture given by Mrs. Virginia Sloan Swain, State Extension Specialist in Family Life. Using as her subject, "Understanding Our Families," Mrs. Hughes brought out these important points: What kind of a mother are you? Children reflect their home life. Building companionship in the family. Her message was very fitting and truly inspirational.

MRS. L. L. HOOPER,
President.

OAK GROVE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

We, of the Missionary Society of Oak Grove Congregational Church are very happy to report a year of splendid work together.

At the beginning of each meeting, our spiritual life leader, Mrs. Elsie Eason, has been in charge of a fine devotional service. In keeping with our theme, "The Lord Thy God—and Thy Neighbor," we have had well planned programs given by different members of our group, which has been a great help to us in carrying on our work.

We held our thank offering service for which the offering went to our workers at Shaowu, China. Also, we have given a contribution to Franklin Institute, the Carroll County Mission, the needy in our community, Red Cross, and other drives sponsored in Gates County.

Our mission study books were given by our pastor and four of our women in the group, being very impressive.

Even though we have lost three of our members to our sister church, Sunbury Congregational, we have also gained new ones which are equally as good as workers in the Kingdom.

We have met all requirements of the Standard of Excellence, and are hoping to be among those on the Honor Roll.

Our August meeting was held on the lawn of Mrs. O. B. Jones, where our mission study book was reviewed, India at the Threshold, after which a vesper service was held, and weiner roast followed. The Young People's group were our guests.

We covet your prayers that even though we are small number, our society may continue to grow in favor with both God and man.

SPRING HILL SOCIETY.

The missionary society of Spring Hill Christian Church has had a very good year.

SPECIAL OFFERING FOR WAR VICTIMS ON WORLD WIDE COMMUNION SUNDAY, OCTOBER 5.

The Southern Convention's Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction has issued an appeal this week to all church of our fellowship to take a special offering for CWVR on World Wide Communion Sunday, on October 5. Churches that do not have services on this date are urged to take the offering on the Sunday nearest October 5. Contributions may be sent to the Southern Convention Office, designated for CWVR, or directly to the CWVR office, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

There are urgent reasons for this request. The first is a matter of pride. So far this year only 33 per cent of our churches have given anything to CWVR. The total amount given through July of this year is only $1,882.89, or less than one-third of the amount of $7,000 accepted as the goal for 1947. If we are to attain this goal within the four months that remain of the calendar year each of our churches must give something, and those already giving must give more. Your committee does not believe that our people will turn a deaf ear to the cries of those who suffer unimagined misery. It is a matter of honor that we reach our goal.

In the second place the giving for the entire denomination is $232,000 under what it was a year ago, and the denominational goal of a million and a half dollars is half million more than it was last year.

In the third place the need is far greater now than at any time since the war's end. Secretary of State George C. Marshall has recently warned that if Congress does not provide immediate relief there will be complete collapse and disintegration in Europe before the so-called Marshall plan can be put into operation next spring.

Rev. Frederick B. Eutsler, the Southern Convention Chairman has just returned from a meeting of the State CWVR Chairmen in Chicago. He heard reports from a deputation of our own ministers who made an extended visit to Europe this summer.

Members of the deputation were: Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer of Washington, D. C.; Dr. Alfred W. Swan, of Madison, Wisconsin; Rev. R. Wilbur Simmons, of Corvallis, Oregon; Rev. Emerson G. Hangen, of Meriden, Connecticut, accompanied by Mrs. Hawly T. Willson, Executive Secretary of the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction. The deputation found suffering and desolation which defies description. They came away haunted by the hunger, destitution, and what they beheld. They also report a pathetic gratitude for the little (when measured against the total need) that CWVR has done which made them ashamed that out of our relative abundance we have given so meagerly. They are agreed that conditions are worse than they have ever been and that the outlook for the coming winter is bleak and grim. Crop failure due to drought, shattered industries as yet unrehabilitated; labor shortages; a lack of dollar credits to purchase essential supplies and materials from the United States with which to rebuild devastated cities and factories—these and a whole vicious circle of reasons have caused the situation to worsen. They reiterated again and again that if we are to keep our souls as Christians we cannot turn a deaf ear to the cries of desperation of our stricken brethren, and that we must do far more than we have ever done before.

Your committee hopes that every church in our Southern Convention will take this special offering on or near World Wide Communion Sunday. It is aware that many of our churches take an offering on communion Sundays for superannuated ministers. In no sense does it wish to supersede this worthy cause. The Committee urges you to take this offering, and then take another for CWVR, believing that our retired servants of Christ would be first to desire that we give liberally to those whose suffering is so much greater.

There are approximately 33,000 church members in our Convention. If each of these gave only one dollar to CWVR it would be much nearer our real share in this great work than the $7,000 which thus far we have not raised. Remember that we cannot give too much, and, to quote Dr. Alfred W. Swan: "Never did so little do so much."

The Convention Office will be glad to furnish your church with literature, offering envelopes, or any other supplies you may need.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

We have a very small group, but we have tried to get big things for the Kingdom.

We observed the World Day of Prayer as a public meeting and invited other churches to participate and worship with us. We had another public meeting in November when we gave an offering to Shaowu.

For our book reviews on the two mission study books, three churches combined and had a day of fellowship with covered dish luncheon. Mrs. Carrol Beale of Wakefield did a splendid job of making India very real to us. She presented The Portrait of a Pilgrim very ably also. Our pastor gave a fine interpretation of the Divine Fatherhood.

We have sent boxes to Franklinton Institute and also to the Jacksons in China.

We are very happy to present Miss Adell Matthews with a Life Membership.

We hope to become more missionary minded and carry out our Saviour's command to carry the Gospel to all the world.

MRS. J. E. McCauley,
Publicity Chairman.

FOR THE CHILDREN

THE POT OF IVY.

"Why, Ellen," Miss Shaffer began in a surprised tone as the girl entered the classroom empty-handed. "You haven't forgotten today is the flower show, have you?"

"No, Miss Shaffer," Ellen said quietly, pausing beside her teacher's desk.

"Well, then, where is your pot of ivy?" Miss Shaffer asked in her kind way, leaning across the desk as if wanting to be sure Ellen's hands were empty.

"I—I—I'm not going to enter it in the flower show, Miss Shaffer," she said as she lowered her eyes.

"You're not going to enter it in the flower show?" Miss Shaffer repeated as if she doubted what she heard. "Why, Ellen, what has happened?"

"I—I—I gave it away," Ellen said simply, tracing the outline of Miss Shaffer's desk with her fingers.

"You gave it away? Why, Ellen, only yesterday the girls were telling me how lovely it was, and how carefully you have nursed it from the little slip you bought last year at our June flower sale. When did you give it away? Last night?"

"Yes, Miss Shaffer. I—I—" But fortunately, Made Curtis arrived at that moment with a message for Miss Shaffer from one of the other teachers, so Ellen thankfully hurried down the aisle to her seat.

This annual flower show was one of the main events of the school. Each year all the children received a slip of a flower in June. All during the summer they cared for it and nursed it. Late the following September, when school was again in session, a flower show was held and prizes awarded to the boys and girls displaying the best flowers.

All during the long vacation, Ellen had nursed the little slip of ivy. Mother had bought her a lovely little oval-shaped flowerpot. It was made of shining orange china, just the right color to show off the perfectly shaped green leaves which grew so profusely under Ellen's loving care.

Then, just a week ago Aunt Nell had come to visit them. When she was packing in order to continue on her way to California, Ellen had given her the precious flower. She had even placed it in the back of Aunt Nell's roomy car.

At first, Ellen thought she could not give up this treasure. Not with the flower show so close at hand. But Aunt Nell was always so wonderfully kind to them. And when Mother was ill, Aunt Nell hired a registered nurse for her and paid the doctor's bill, too. So, when the time came for Aunt Nell to leave after a brief visit of only three days, Ellen voluntarily gave her dearest treasure to her dearest aunt.

"I want you to know how much I love you," she had said in her quiet way. "It's the very best thing I own. I want you to have it." She had smiled as she said it, for she meant every word. It was not until later, when she was walking to school empty-handed that big tears blurred her brown eyes. She brushed them away hurriedly. She would not cry, she told herself, for that would mean that she was sorry she had given the pot of ivy to Aunt Nell. And she was not sorry. She wanted Aunt Nell to have the very best treasure she possessed, for she loved Aunt Nell so dearly.

Late that afternoon the children assembled in the auditorium to view the flowers on exhibition. Ellen slowly passed from one table to another, hardly noticing any of the flowers on display. She paused and glanced up and down the long tables. Yes, without a doubt, her ivy was by far lovelier than any of the others. Then a feeling of pride made her raise her head and stand erect. Certainly hers was the loveliest! That was why she was so proud that Aunt Nell now owned it.

Just then a bell sounded and all the children took their seats. The principal announced from the platform that the prizes would now be awarded.

"The first prize goes to a girl who well deserves it," he continued in his clear tone. "Will Ellen Mitchell please come forward?"

A faint murmur came from one section of the large auditorium where Ellen's class was seated. Slowly Ellen rose to her feet. Gracious! What a terrible mistake! Why, she hadn't even entered a flower! Then Mr. Jones lifted from the table on the platform an oval-shaped orange pot of ivy. He held it high for everyone to see.

It was all like a dream to Ellen. She found herself leaving the platform with the prize in one hand and her pot of ivy in the other. The next thing she was aware of was Aunt Nell's smiling face watching her from the corridor. Hurriedly she left the auditorium unnoticed, for everyone was intent on the next winner being announced.

"This morning I saw so many children carrying flowers to school as I drove down the road," Aunt Nell explained as they stood alone in the deserted hall, "that finally I stopped and asked a little girl who was carrying a pot of ivy. She told me all about the flower show. When I told her I thought her flower was lovely enough for first prize, she shook her head and said, 'O, you ought to see Ellen Mitchell's ivy! She has it planted in an orange bowl! It's beautiful!'"

"So you came back just to let me have it for the flower show?" Ellen asked, with wide-open eyes.

Aunt Nell shook her head and laughed. "I also wanted to ask your mother and father something very important." She was watching Ellen with twinkling eyes. "I wanted to know if a certain little lady could spend her Christmas vacation with me in New York. I'll be stopping by again on my way back home just about Christmas time. You see," Aunt Nell continued looking at Ellen lovingly, "I, too, have some ivy I would like for someone to transplant for me. And strange as it may seem, I want my ivy transplanted in an orange, oval-shaped bowl!"—The Magic Ring and Other Stories by Standard Publishing Company.

READY FOR KINDERGARTEN?

By M. LOUISE C. HASTING.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"I'm not sure that Susan will like kindergarten," said Grandma, who is also mother as a result of separated parents. "She is pretty well satisfied to be at home with me."

"Oh, she will love it," I responded. "She will react happily to everything."

"Well, I am not at all sure."

"Don't you want her to go to kindergarten?" I asked quickly.

"Yes, if she likes it," was the reply, given rather wistfully.

There was plenty to say in answer to that. Should I have said it, or was it better to let the grandmother work out her own problem? Everyone has some sort of influence on other people. Our words, our acts, even our unconscious reactions—whether one is

"Youth at Work in the Church"

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA RALLY.

The Pilgrim Fellowship Rally of the Western North Carolina Conference will be held Sunday afternoon, September 28, at Liberty Christian Church in Liberty, North Carolina.

The program begins at 5:00 P. M., with a very important business session. At this time new officers will be elected and the work for the new year planned for our Pilgrim Fellowship.

A picnic supper will be enjoyed by the group at 6:00 P. M. We hope everyone will bring their lunch and stay for the evening program.

At 7:00 P. M., the Pleasant Ridge Young People will present a pageant: "Life's Cross Road." The pageant will last approximately 45 minutes. It is our wish that everyone who possibly can will plan to stay for the entire meeting.

Every person who is interested in the Pilgrim Fellowship and all Pilgrim Fellowship members are urged to attend this meeting.

We are looking forward to seeing you at our rally.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE TO MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Young People's Missionary Conference will meet at the Suffolk Christian Church Tuesday, October 7, at 8:00 P. M. The guest speaker will be Robert E. Houff, president of United Christian Youth Council of Virginia. He has just returned from Europe where he attended the World Youth Conference in Oslo, Norway. The subject of his address will be "The Oslo World Youth Conference." All of the young people in Eastern Virginia are urged to attend this meeting.

MRS. JAMES C. LYNCH.

THE CAMP HANES CONFERENCE.

We would like to give you some of the important facts about our Summer Conference at Camp Hanes, August 12-22. We think the Conference was very successful. Look at the figures and statistics listed below—add them to the reports, those appearing in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the oral ones—we believe you will agree with us about the success and benefit of the Camps.

The following churches were represented at the Senior Camp: Asheboro, Burlington, Carolina, Chapel Hill, Damascus, Durham, Elon College, Flint Hill, Greensboro (First), Happy Home, Pfafftown, Pleasant Grove, Seagrove, Shallow Ford, Winston-Salem, all in North Carolina; and Barrett's Bethlehem, Burton's Grove, Carroll County Churches, Cypress Chapel, Holy Neck, Liberty Spring, Newport News, Rosemont and Suffolk, in Virginia. There was a total, including staff members and campers, of 88 at the Senior Camp.

The general theme, "Jesus Christ Is Lord," was carried out in all parts of our camp life. The classes and instructors were as follows: "The Sermon On the Mount," Rev. Bernard Munger; "From Friendship to Marriage," Mrs. W. E. Wisseman; and "Forward Through the Ages With the Church," Dr. W. E. Wisseman.

Dr. H. S. Harcastle conducted the vesper services, along the general theme, which were very impressive and inspiring.

We received much benefit from the workshops led by Mr. John Graves, Mrs. Robert Avery and Rev. W. J. Andes.

The Communion Service, directed by Rev. Homer Yearick, pastor of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, Winston-Salem, N. S., climaxed our camp life.

You probably have heard, and will be hearing, much about the great enjoyment derived from camp.

At the Junior Camp, we had campers from these churches: Berea, Bethel, Bethlehem, Burlington, Chapel Hill, Elk Spur, Elon College, Elkton, Franklin, Graham, Greensboro (First), Haw River, Ingram, Liberty Spring, Pfafftown, Pleasant Ridge, Rocky Ford, Sanford, Shallow Ford, Smithwood, Wake Chapel, Windsor, Winston-Salem. These representatives plus the staff members made a total of 81.

Following the theme: "Trails To God" the classes taught were: "The Sermon On the Mount," Rev. Bernard Munger; "Learning From Paul," Dr. H. S. Harcastle; and "Through the Church," Mr. Clyde Fields.

The vesper services were led by Rev. W. J. Andes, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, and Rev. S. E. Madren.

The afternoon workshops, under the direction of Mrs. Robert Avery, Rev. Andes and Mr. John Graves, were of great help and pleasure to the campers.

The highlight of our camp experiences came during the Communion Service led by Dr. W. T. Scott. This was one of the most beautiful and stirring services we have ever taken part in.

We had one representative who has not been mentioned. She is Miss Jennie Jacobs, our guest missionary from China. During our camp period and through the general assemblies, when Miss Jacobs told us of China, we all came to love her very much. We will be thinking of her as she goes back to China this winter.

Other points of interest at both Camps were: The camp newspaper, The Quizzer, containing contributions of the campers and about the campers and published by Mr. and Mrs. Avery; campfire programs led by Mr. and Mrs. Avery; Morning Devotions; and Retreat.

Our thanks, too, to Mrs. Sam Pruitt of Winston-Salem, who led those wonderful evening programs of folk games and songs.

Of course, we could go on for pages telling of all the grand and exciting experiences we had together. Since space does not permit, we will leave this to the campers. Also, you will be hearing more about Summer Conference from Betty Chicoine as she visits your churches. She will have available, for showing, pictures and slides of activities and scenes taken at Camp Hanes and, I am sure, will be pleased to tell in detail of all the many opportunities offered there. Ask her about these.

A great deal of credit is due to Betty Chicoine, Director; Rev. W. J. Andes, Dean of the Senior Camp and Mr. John Graves, Dean of the Junior Camp, for the gratifying outcome of our Summer Conference this year. Thanks to their tireless efforts, the camps were very successful and will be long remembered by all who attended.

To the campers—we will be looking forward to seeing you at camp next summer. Tell your friends about it and ask them to come.

THE BETTER REVELATION.

LESSON I—OCTOBER 5, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Jesus saith . . . he that hath seen me hath seen the Father.—John 14:9.

LESSON: Hebrews 1-2; 8:6-13; Matthew 3:16-17; John 14:5-11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 40:1-8.
God Having of Old Time Spoken . . . A Revealed Religion.

Christianity is a revealed religion. In essence it has been given. Nature did not reveal it. Man did not discover it. God revealed it. To be sure men used their minds and God used the minds which He had given to man. Men thought God's thoughts after Him. But of old time God spoke unto the fathers by those who were His chosen mouthpieces—unto the prophets, i. e., those who spoke for God. Consciously or unconsciously they emphasized the fact that they were speaking for God. "Thus saith the Lord" again and again introduces their message. God speaks through Nature but Christianity is not a natural religion. That may sound trite but it is tremendously important.

God Spoke In Various Ways.

"God hath spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners or ways." He was not, and is not, tied down to one way. Sometimes he spoke to his servants by revelation; sometimes it was by dream; sometimes it was by events or experiences; sometimes it was through history; sometimes it was by the Spirit direct. There was variety in the times and in the ways in which He spoke.

God Spoke Through His Son, Jesus Christ.

"God hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in His Son." Jesus was the Word. Jesus also spoke the word of God. Jesus himself said that the things He spoke, He spoke not of himself; it was the Father speaking through Him. When we read the words of Jesus we read the words of God himself. That is one of the significant things about Jesus. His words come with all the more authority because of that fact.

God In the Flesh.

"Who is the very image of his substance." No man hath seen God at any time, said Jesus. But men did see God in Jesus Christ. It pleased God that in Jesus Christ all the fullness of the Godhead should dwell bodily. The Word was made flesh. Jesus was Emmanuel or "God with us." We cannot know all about God, but in Jesus Christ we can see God. The story is told of a young mother who showed the picture of her husband away from home overseas again and again to her little son, who had never seen his father. When the father finally came home and walked into the room where his wife and baby boy awaited him, the youngster looked from the picture to the father and then his little face lighted up as he said, "Daddy, daddy!" Thus have men seen in Jesus Christ the glory of God.

A Better Revelation.

The title of the lesson sums it all up—Jesus Christ was the better revelation. Here the ideal and the life was drawn out in living letters. Here the covenant was not one of law but of love. Here religion became not forms and ceremonies, but personal relationship with God through Christ. The letter to the Hebrews was written to show that Christianity was a better revelation than Judaism, that Christ was the Supreme High Priest, that He was the final revelation of God. Not in the sense that God had no further word for His people. But that there could be no further revelation because Christ was the full and final revelation of God.

Magnifying the Lord Jesus Christ.

The letter to the Hebrews is an antidote against the tendency, or the deliberate effort on the part of some, to minimize Christ, to tone Him down, to deny His Divinity and His Deity. It magnifies Christ. And it is only when Christianity has magnified Christ, only when He has been given the preeminence that the Church has had vitality and growth. We need to magnify Christ and to exalt His name. The writer of these Notes recently conducted a series of vesper services in one of our Summer Camps built around the theme Jesus Christ Is Lord, and in studying the New Testament afresh he was impressed by the emphasis which the Early Church put on Christ's exalted position. For them He was more than a good man or a great man or even an example; for them He was the Son of the Living God, and God had given Him a name which is above every name . . . and made Him King of kings and Lord of lords.

Drifting Away From These Things.

Very few people deliberately renounce Christianity. They simply neglect it and drift away from it. Therein lies the danger and the tragedy of the thing. The writer of Hebrews sounds the same warning that Jesus was always sounding, even though he put it in different words when he said "lest haply we drift away from them." Drifting, simply drifting—ah, there's the danger. A man might be sitting comfortably in a boat on the Niagara River, blissfully fishing or idly paddling along, and when it is too late he might discover to his horror that he was caught helplessly in the current that leads to the falls. A soul needs to be on its guard, lest it neglect so great salvation.

The Certainty of Doom.

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?" The writer asks the question, but he does not answer it, because there is no answer to it. One wishes he could explain away the many references to the certainty of doom that ultimately faces the wrong-doer or the procrastinator. To be sure we must make allowance for some of the literal language used to depict the fate of the lost. But making all allowance for this, there stands that sobering fact, emphasized again and again by Jesus himself, of the penalty of wrong doing and impenitence.

The Way, the Truth, and the Life.

These words would be blasphemy on the lips of any other man. On the lips of Christ, they are the seal of His Deity.

"A great deal of the Bible," writes Bernard Shaw, "is much more alive than this morning's paper."

MODERN MAN SEEKING HIS TRUE BASE.

A Sermon

By REV. W. MILLARD STEVENS.

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; . . ."—Genesis 1:26.

If you would see modern man as he struggles in the midst of the present crisis, seeking to find his true base so that he might find a solution for his uncertainties as he seeks to conduct his business or carry on his work, or his troubles as he tries to fashion his government, or his inner frustration as he seeks to live his life as a Christian—if you would like to see modern man in his present plight, go with me to an imaginary baseball game. A decision game is being played by the home team and our chief rival for the league championship. The stands are filled to overflowing with enthusiastic yet tense fans. The results of this game will determine the championship. The score is tied. It is the last half of the ninth inning and the home team is at bat. One of our players has managed to reach third base. The opposing pitcher is bearing down and the situation is becoming desperate. The man on third needs to get home so that his run may be scored and the game won. He is watching and waiting for his chance. He must be cautious, yet he must be alert. Suddenly he sees his chance and breaks for home, and just as suddenly as if it came out of nowhere the ball appears in the catcher's mit and the baserunner turns to run back to his base, but the catcher tosses the ball to the third baseman and the struggle is on. The baserunner, with victory or defeat at stake, is in a trap between third base and home plate. In order to avoid being put out, the base runner must find some way of getting back to his base safely.

Look at that base runner closely for he is modern man in a trap between the third baseman of western materialism on one side and the catcher, communism, on the other. Both of these are his bitter foes and both are ready and eager to tag him out and eager to tag him out and send him to the bench defeated. The present struggle of modern man is to find his way back to his true base in God. These two foes are on the same enemy team and they are bound by contract of their very nature to that team, and they will never be placed on the team of humanity in God.

We have these words from Genesis: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness . . ." Thus was set forth from the beginning the fact that man created by God was created in the image and likeness of God. Paul adds to this for our understanding of the Christian man which is fashioned after this when he writes to the Ephesians, "ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness;" and then later James writes concerning "men which are made after the similitude of God." The Biblical conception of man is everywhere present in this vein of truth. Man is made by God and in the image and likeness of God. Man's true base of operations, then, is in God and his destiny and home are in the spiritual rather than the material. His longings and his aspirations are to true freedom in God and not to servitude to physical ideology as made real in the state, race or class.

If this be true, modern man is certainly off base and is in a desperate struggle to get back before it is too late and he is tagged out. The mental struggle of the philosophers of history was to find a way to that base for man, ideology of every way and action which exalted or exalts a race or a class as the Missianic hope of the society is such an attempt. But they have failed because there is no true way to individual or social redemption in a class or a race Messianic hope which excludes or otherwise ignores other races or classes. Such systems blind the eyes to God, for in them there is no place for God. Neither Marx nor Hitler had a place for God because their thoughts had no place to offer God. Communism and national socialism are enemies of man—man created in the image of God—and are seeking to block man's quest for freedom in God.

On the same team with these is our western materialism, aggressive and persistent player with many cunning ways of deceiving us and leading us into an inescapable trap and involving us in many struggles which will try our own souls. Such ideals hold that the chief end of life is not harmony of soul in Christian achievement and the contribution of life to free, Christ-like civilization, not the thankful sharing of our wealth in the Kingdom of God through the church and other institutions of life giving force, nor is it to know God and enjoy him forever, but it is to accumulate things to keep as the determining forces of life. The chief values of life, materialism holds, are not in the human heart and soul, but in the pocket, the bank, or the security vault. The failure of civilization, materialism holds, is the result of fate, or circumstances, and not of human failure. So what can you do about it? Why worry? Your destiny is in things, material things, so get all you can and hold them and you will rule the world.

Here is an enemy to man, and he is playing on the same team with communism and national socialism. He is the third baseman, trying to tag man out as man seeks to get back to the base where he belongs. Modern man is in a trap between these two players of the enemy team as he struggles to victory.

This struggle of modern man is evidenced in many ways and in many things. The uncertain world order which shows civilization hanging by a bare thread of hope for peace and harmony among nations is only intensified by the struggle of nations with their economic and political orders, with inflation and hunger walking the same streets and travelling the same roads. Modern man is faced with a dilemma that tries the very soul of our civilization. All the international complications of our day are a demonstration and example of the struggle of modern man.

But these are not the total nor the greatest of modern man's problems. The greatest part of this struggle is man's own personal problems in relation to his own business, his job, his harmony of soul and peace of mind. In the final analysis, on the solution of our own personal problems rests the solution to the problems of the world.

The personal problems of modern man are demonstrated in his own blind struggle for certainty, his longing for economic security and his struggle to garner all the material possessions which he can without respect to the needs of others. As one might put it, "Modern man has made his belly his God" and in so doing he has moved from his true base of operation and motivation which is in God himself. This struggle of modern man is also demonstrated in the mental and spiritual frustration within his mind and soul which disintegrates personality and produces a generation of neurotics whose actions

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

When a little child comes into a home the parents assume a great responsibility. The child is to be cared for through sickness and health. It is to be reared, trained and educated in order that it may take the High Road in life and do good. We wonder if some parents realize the responsibility they have assumed when a little child comes into the home and their family life. It should add joy and happiness to the family. But does it, in many cases?

When a little child comes to live at the Christian Orphanage, the management assumes the same responsibility in the care and training of the child as a family does. It is not so much what the child is when it comes, but what it will be when it goes out from us. They are wards of the church, and the church has a right to expect the children reared in the Christian Orphanage to make good; at least, in most cases. But the church must take into consideration that the orphanage takes children from all kinds of homes and environments, all kinds of training, and some without training at all.

We well remember some years ago one of our churches insisted that we take five little girls from one family. Their mother was dead. The father worked in a mill at night, and the children played on the streets of that city. They were beautiful little girls and very intelligent. We took them in. In a few days the matron, who had charge of the building in which the children lived, came to the office and said to the writer: "You will have to do something with the little girls whom you took in, as they use awful language, the worst I have ever heard." The writer went to the building and called all five of the little girls in the living room and had a heart-to-heart talk with them. I plainly told them that we did not allow children to use profane language and they would have to stop using it. I remember during our conversation with them we asked them where they learned to use this language, and they said, "From the little negro children we played with." The habit was so deeply instilled in them that it took some time to get them broken of the habit.

Children are easily led. They take up habits quickly. We live with these children here daily, and we try to live before them so we would not be ashamed for them to follow, and we realize that they will follow us.

I read a story some years ago about a father and his little boy. It impressed me very much and we have often thought of it through life. It seemed that the little boy's father was a drunkard, but he loved his little boy. One night the ground was covered with snow and the father started to the barroom for more whiskey. When he had got some distance from his home he heard someone behind him. He stopped and looked back, and there was his precious little boy. Before he could speak the little boy looked up into his face and said, "Daddy, I am following in your footsteps." And so he was. It is necessary for all of us to be careful. We do not know when we are influencing some one.

SUN'S PULPIT.

are determined by the state of their ulcers and the noon stock reports.

Our materialistic conceptions drive us to think like giants in matters of business but to act like spiritual midgets in matters of religion and social welfare, and to think like mental midgets in planning for our church and the extension of the Kingdom of God. We accept and enjoy the blessings of God but never stop to express true thanksgiving by an adequate Christian stewardship. We can see the world starve while we lavish in plenty without pains of conscience. One of the most disturbing symptoms of all is the fact that so many of us are disturbed by the growth and spread of the communistic philosophy, which has its base in materialism and denies the spiritual, yet we decry communism and at the same time allow our own thoughts and actions to be determined by that same materialism.

Yes, modern man is home sick, he is off base, like our imaginary ball player he is in a trap between third base and home plate. Must he be tagged out and the game lost for Christianity in our own lives. Must the pennant of supremacy in the league of the world be given to the opposing team of materialism and communism and the teammates of enslavement and tyranny. No! A thousand times no! Man can get back to his true spiritual base. He can overcome the cunningness of life's enemies. He can win the game and the championship for Christian ideals.

The question which Jesus put to his disciples can be real to us here, "What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" What will it profit modern man if he gains millions and there is no Christian civilization for him to rear his children in. What will it profit modern Americans if we eat our "fill" and grow fat, but a starving world rises out of its hunger to revolt and destroy us? What will it profit you if you are a good businessman, but lose your ultimate security because you have not been a good Christian?

It is the ninth inning and modern man, with the winning run, is caught off base and about to be tagged out. If the game is to be won, modern man must get back to his true base in God. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness . . . and He made man and breathed into him the breath of life and man became a living soul."

People will sit up and take notice of you if you will sit up and take notice of what makes them sit up and take notice.

COUNCIL GETS GIFT FOR CHURCH MOVIES.

The funds provided by Mrs. Heinz will be used at the visual aids office here, Dr. Knapp said.

"We are extremely grateful to Mrs. Heinz for making this new and vital work possible," he said. "It will enable us to facilitate the distribution and use of Protestant films to countries all over the globe that are in need of them."

Motion pictures and slides will be used by the new department. Mr. Rank, pioneer in producing religious motion pictures, is building a special studio in England in which to produce them.

Plans are being made for the new department to evaluate impartially all pictures as produced and to make ratings available to Christian churches throughout the world.

Dr. Knapp also announced plans to add a department on youth work to the World Council to cooperate in this field with the World Council of Churches. A department of children's work also will be established.

WHAT IS YOUR EVANGELISTIC "POTENTIAL"?

Definite personal commitment to Christ as Savior and Lord is the goal and climax of the many lesser tributary decisions with which Christian teaching is always dealing. They tell the story of an elegant new Post Office building, costing millions of dollars, being dedicated in an Eastern city. But when people looked around for a place to mail a letter, none could be found. A program of Christian teaching, however, elaborate, which does not climax in all-out personal commitments in equally futile. Christian education must not be so pre-occupied with the antecedents and consequences of Christian commitment as to miss the real point. The long range and the immediate preparation for this experience, and the skill and thoroughness with which it is conditioned, constitute part of the high potential of evangelism.

Self-examination in these respects will enable the Christian leader and the class or group to answer the question, "What is my evangelistic potential? How much of it is operative?"

The wise carry their knowledge as they do their watches, not for display, but for their own use.

NEWS FROM ELON COLLEGE.

few students in certain parts of this study.

3. That the college, especially during the period of large veteran enrollment, constantly try to discover effective means of guaranteeing an experience of democratic campus life on a Christian level. Few campuses, if any, have the sure answers to the problems that arise. New issues emerge during this period when mature students share the campus with those just graduated from high school. The atmosphere of a Christian campus should be that of cooperative and responsible freedom. There should be a continuous and satisfying experience of democratic social living. The church, the administration, the faculty, and Christian students should help to develop Christian motives and controls which are effective within the framework of a free and responsible society. The problem of relationship is involved, the balance of freedom and responsibility and control is not easy to maintain. In a church-sponsored college like Elon, such relationships as the following need frequent examination: convention and college, board and administration, administration and faculty, faculty and student, students and students.

4. That the college, and its sponsoring Convention, consider their function of leadership in the social life of the area. Elon is located in a state which is winning a nationwide reputation for intelligent, progressive leadership, leadership which is seeking wise ways of community living. Within a few miles of this college are institutions widely recognized for prophetic vision and social wisdom. Most of the leadership of even the more conservative denominations in North Carolina is making the church a powerful instrument by which society achieves greater social health. Surely our denomination and its college should be pioneers in sound, unemotional reconstruction, in discovering ways of relieving social tensions, and in making significant contributions toward a kind of community and national life which is truly democratic and Christian.

Indeed, the best way by which our church-related colleges can win and hold the interest of our Congregational Christian churches is to be able to report the ways by which they are steadily improving the quality of their education, are contributing to the religious life of students and churches, are demonstrating that the Christian spirit permeates the whole life of the campus, and are taking an intelligent lead in influencing the social life of the larger communities which they serve.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

aware of this or not—are influences. What then will be the attitude of Susan and others, who have been subjected to negative influences, when they go to kindergarten?

I met Tommy—an active boy always eager to help his mother with her cleaning, her baking, her housework. "Let me help, Mother," was his constant plea.

But his mother, unfortunately, found Tommy in her way. She preferred to do her work by herself. Uninterrupted, she finished it much more quickly, and so had time for the many other things that she enjoyed.

"Go and play with your toys, and stop hindering me!" she would say. "No, I don't want you fussing around while I'm baking. 'I'll give you one of the cookies when they're done. Now, run along! I'll be glad when you go to kindergarten.'" And when it was time to send him to kindergarten, she said to herself and to everybody else, "What a relief!"

What reason has either Susan or Tommy to expect to enjoy being in kindergarten? Fortunately, Tommy will soon learn from experience that the kindergarten gives him the opportunities he has always wanted; and if Susan's grandmother does not talk too doubtfully about the kindergarten before Susan, during the days the child is getting acquainted with it, Susan, too, will be delightfully happy there.

There are certain preparations that mothers should make before sending their children to kindergarten—besides creating the interest in it and the longing to go there. Boys and girls should be given a clear understanding of traffic lights, should be taught the proper use and care of their handkerchiefs, and should know how to put on, fasten up, and take off their outer garments.

This reminds me of Sally, a little friend of mine. Sally could manage not only her coat and hat but her rubbers and leggings perfectly, and she enjoyed the responsibility, too. However, her aunt, with whom she spent much time, loved to do things for her, and it never occurred to the dear lady that Sally needed the practice of doing things for herself. I often watched the getting-ready procedure, and one day I remarked, "Well, Sally, can't you put on your coat and leggings? It is a long time since you were a baby."

"Of course I can put them on," she said—and she did.

But her aunt felt unhappy about it—felt that something had been taken away from her—something that was very precious. Unconsciously she showed what she felt. I was sorry for her. Yet how much more reason she would have had to be unhappy had she realized that her attitude, if continued indefinitely, would have been in danger of seriously handicapping her beloved little niece!

PARENTS RESPONSIBLE FOR RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By HARVEY S. FIRESTONE, JR.

President, The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

We Americans are ardent believers in education. However, to many parents, education means only the preparation of their children for material life. All too few fathers and mothers realize that their boys and girls must also be prepared for spiritual life in this world as well as for life in the world to come. Religious education of the young is as much the responsibility of parenthood as cultural education of their children.

Juvenile delinquency has become a major problem in the United States. As we look for causes, we must view with grave concern the fact that there are seventeen million young people in this country who are spiritually illiterate, who have no church connections and who receive little, if any, home instruction in religion. Religious Education Week, sponsored by the International Council of Religious Education, will serve to focus the attention of parents on the spiritual welfare of their children.

SEES ALL WE HAVE HAD AND ARE AS DEBT TO GOD

By ROBERT P. PATTERSON

Former Secretary of War

As humanity continues to gain a more complete knowledge of the physical universe, the small world in which we live becomes to the average man increasingly confusing and disconcerting. A great deal of our present economic and social problems stem directly from this tremendous physical progress, sometimes accomplished at an apparent loss of some of our spiritual and moral development. What better guide can we have through our complex difficulties than an unwavering faith in God.

It is easy for Americans to contemplate our great industrial strength, our magnificent institution of democratic government, and conclude that all these things are man made. We must cherish belief in the divine origin of our moral strength if we are to maintain our leadership in the world. We must see that all of what we are or ever will be is a debt we owe to God.

Through the tireless work of our churches, and organizations such as the International Council of Religious Education, America's citizens must be re-inspired with a spiritual faith and moral integrity.

NATIONAL LIFE DEPENDS ON CHAR- ACTER OF THE PEOPLE

By HAROLD E. STASSEN

Pres., Internat'l Council of Religious Education
Former Governor, State of Minnesota

My recent contacts with my own nation and Europe reinforce my lifelong conviction that the foundations of strong and wholesome national life are laid in the character of the people. That conviction to me is bound up inevitably with a second: that only through an effective program of religious education in homes and churches of all faiths can character equal to this high demand be produced, and such spiritual teaching must be grounded in a growing faith in God and devotion to His will.

I am, therefore, glad to support the program and plan for Religious Education Week this year. I make a special plea that this observance be carried out in the only places where it can accomplish the high purposes for which it is planned; and these are wherever our churches touch growing life—in the pulpit and in pastoral contacts, through the classes of our church schools, by means of youth groups, on the printed page, and in the daily experiences of home life. May this week be but the starting point for a vast increase in our efforts at these points during the coming year.

BIBLE FURNISHES RULES FOR HUMAN CONDUCT

By J. EDGAR HOOVER

Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation

Principles of religion teach a child to live decently and to be humble in the sight of God. A continuation of this training in adult life strengthens parents in the guidance of their children and provides moral benefits of matchless quality.

Crime is demoralizing and degrading in every respect. Parents who violate the laws of the land destroy the hopes and ambitions of their children, and the waywardness of youth is a disappointing tragedy to fathers and mothers who have affectionately planned for the futures of their offspring.

The plain and simple lessons of the Bible contain the essential rules which should govern human conduct. We must unceasingly strive to reduce the curse of crime, and Religious Education Week reminds us of the great need for increasing every effort to supply the spiritual requirements of our nation.

Our Communion Prayer

For World-wide Communion Sunday

Behold us, Lord, people of every race and clime gathered about thy table to share again in the gracious benefits of thy redeeming love. In penitence and faith we await thy pardoning grace. In love and trust we pray for our unity in the fellowship and service of thy dear Name.

Pour out, we beseech thee, O Lord, thy Spirit upon thy Church, that to all its members may come new visions new life, new fellowship with Christ, its Living Head. Send us out, if thou wilt, and through us send out many another to work for the extension of thy Kingdom throughout the world. Open our hearts that we may receive thy power; open our eyes that we may see Christ with hands outstretched to bless. Do with us what thou wilt and as thou wilt. So shall the earth be filled with the knowledge of thyself as the waters cover the sea. And to thee be the glory and praise, now and forevermore. Amen.

CONVOCATION ON THE CHURCH IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

The fourth annual National Convocation on the Church in Town and Country will be held in Rochester, N. Y., November 4-6, 1947. For the first time, said an announcement by Dr. Benson Y. Landis, a number of Canadian rural churches will participate in the gathering which each year brings together more than 1,000 rural clergymen, religious educators, rural community leaders and government officials.

The Convocation is sponsored by the Committee on Town and Country of the Home Missions Council of North America, the Federal Council of Church, and the International Council of Religious Education. Dr. Landis is secretary of the Committee.

Speakers scheduled to address the three-day Convocation include Dr. Edmund de S. Brunner of Teachers College, Columbia University, New York; Dr. William E. Mather, Pennsylvania State College; Dr. Evelyn R. Hodgson, State Teachers College, Oneonta, N. Y.; the Hon. Brooks Hays, member of the House of Representatives from Arkansas; John H. Reisner, executive secretary, Agricultural Missions, Inc., New York; and Dr. Harry Richardson, director of training program for the Negro rural ministry, Tuskegee Institute, Alabama.

LAYMAN'S SUNDAY TO BE OBSERVED.

The sixth annual observance of Laymen's Sunday will be held throughout the nation on October 19. The purpose of the special observance is to encourage men to "try Christianity in the field of labor-management relations, in emphasizing religion in education, and in the realm of home, community, national and international relations."

Last year, 30,000 men shared in Laymen's Sunday services in 5,000 churches throughout forty-four States and Canada. The reports made by these thousands of men—farmers, doctors, lawyers, truck drivers, machinists, scientists, teachers, business men—indicate the growing feeling of responsibility on the part of laymen to live daily by the principles the church teaches them.

A TRIBUTE TO THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE AND SUPER-INTENDENT JOHNSTON.

It was a clear cold day on December 1, 1916, when Mr. Charles D. Johnston took up his work as Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage. Though the day was clear the prospects for the Orphanage looked dark. There were forty children to be fed, clothed and cared for. The children were poorly clothed, had the worst sort of inferiority complex and longed for the day when they could leave the institution. The Orphanage was $7,000.00 in debt and had no credit. When Mr. Johnston arrived at the Orphanage and began to think of the first meal to be served he found only three pounds of fat meat, only one and one-half bushels of peas (bug eaten) and a 12-pound sack of flour.

There was only one building, known as the Christian Orphanage Building, an old barn, old grainery, and one other old building. The Orphanage owned two horses and no farm machinery, three cows from which they received from two to three gallons of milk a day. The Orphanage property was hemmed in by other people's property. The income did not exceed $5,000.00 a year. One of the first things Mr. Johnston did was to borrow money, pay the debts and re-establish the credit of the Orphanage. The past forty years of labor and orphanage. The orphanage is free of debt, balances its budget every year and maintains a comfortable working balance, and the orphanage is highly respected in the association of orphanages in North Carolina.

The boys and girls who have been reared in the orphanage are useful citizens in many occupations and professions. (Continued on page 15.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

WORLD WIDE COMMUNION.

By Rev. Robert J. Hodgen, Silberville, Mass.

One God our Father we adore
For Christ has shown the way.
"Remember me," we hear His voice
O watch and work and pray.

Lord, teach us how to span the world
By brotherhood's strong claim
Of love and justice, harmony;
And break greed's heavy chain.

Of nobleness and sympathy,
With purity of heart,
Kindness and virtue we implore
Shall be the Nation's chart.

As we go forth heeding Thy call
To make the nations one
In spirit, Thou our Leader, guide;
Rule in our hearts alone.

Accept the melody of hymns,
Thanksgiving, prayers and praise
As souls today in Christlike lives
Their world communion raise.
Amen.

devotion on the part of Mr. Johnston and his associates have born fruit. Today there are an average of 80 children in the institution throughout the year, six matrons, three orphanage buildings for the children, a modern grade A dairy barn, fifty head of cattle, a new meat house, grainery, potato house, corn crib, machine shed, two horses and all kinds of modern farm machinery, 275 acres of land in good state of cultivation. The excellent herd of cows furnish twenty gallons of milk a day for the children, and a large surplus which is sold to a dairy to help finance the institution. The children are well clothed and happy. They regard the orphanage as their home, as indicated by the annual homecoming when many of the boys and girls return.

The increase in income from churches and individuals to approximately $45,000 a year is indicative of the growing appreciation of the quality of service rendered by the

WORLD WIDE COMMUNION SUNDAY

October fifth is World Wide Communion Sunday. As the earth turns on its orbit, at each hour of the twentyfour, there will be some group of Christians at the Lord's Table. They will do this in remembrance of a time when thirteen men met together in an upper room for communion with their Lord—their last communion together.

Eleven men left that room to preach a gospel that must have seemed as strange and harsh and magnificent then as it does now. "Ye shall love one another as I have loved you," was Christ's message to them.

Today, faced with the ruins and chasms of this human world, Christians can only draw together again, sit down together and try to recapture the unity of that early communion.

This is the last World Wide Communion before the World Assembly of Churches to be held in Holland in 1948. Christians will see the spirit of the World Wide Communion fellowship given body and substance as the representatives of churches throughout the world sit down together to take counsel on "Man's Disorder and God's Design."

Christians may well pray for those who will be entrusted to represent them—that they may draw their vision from the simplicity, the unity, and the mystery of the Lord's Supper; that they will draw their humility and courage from the knowledge that "I am among you as one who serveth."

AGRICULTURAL MISSIONS

A plea to the churches of America to send at least 1,000 highly-trained "missionary specialists" into Asia and the Orient during the next ten years, has been voiced by John H. Reisner, executive secretary of Agricultural Missions, Inc. Mr. Reisner has completed a seven-month air tour through Burma, India, China, Japan, Korea and the Philippines. His survey was made at the request of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

Addressing a luncheon in his honor sponsored by the board of directors of Agricultural Missions in New York, Mr. Reisner called upon American Christians to "mobilize their great ideals and resources to help rehabilitate village life in the Asiatic countries."

"Already," he declared, "Communism is pressing its claims on the rural people in all these countries and is making promises which neither it, nor anyone else, can possibly fulfill.

"If we believe that democracy provides a better way of life it will have to be demonstrated, and demonstrated in the immediate future," he said. "Democracy is the political expression of the teachings of Christianity, an ideal based on religious ideas."

Mr. Reisner proposed that teams of missionaries and native Christians trained in agriculture, home economics, public health, and religious education be sent to rural communities to study the problems of village people, to work out answers to their problems of everyday living, and to train village men and women and youth to help themselves.

Asserting that the war merely intensified "age-old" problems of poverty, disease, illiteracy, bad housing, malnutrition and other social and economic disabilities in the Asiatic nations, Mr. Reisner expressed the belief that "a satisfactory agriculture and a satisfying rural life for the villages of Asia depends finally on their being built on ethical, moral and religious foundations."

"The weakness of much rural reconstruction work," he added, "is that it deals only with material things. In any program of rural reconstruction it is quite as necessary to provide ideals which people live by as it is to provide material things which they live with."

Mr. Reisner was former dean of the College of Agriculture and Forestry at the University of Nanking, China. Agricultural Missions, Inc., is an independent, non-denominational organization which trains missionaries in the techniques of scientific agriculture.

MULTI-WORLD COMMUNION

Much is being said and written about the annihilation of distance. Nevertheless, distance remains and the globe trotters are few and far between. The majority of people settle down to one church and one community where parochialism rather than ecumenicity is the order of the day.

There are worlds of communities, cultural, ethnic and religious groups in our modern civilization. Ecumenicity is relative. Each can help in some measure piece together the crazy quilt of society. Ecumenicity develops by the way of countless introductions, it advances through interminable friendships, it proceeds by the sharing of creative religious experiences, it grows from the grass roots as well as being extended by the secretariat.

The church press is an effective agent of the ecumenical movement. Its report of the religious news, its parade of personalities, its wide and frequent circulation bridge endless chasms and create fellowship across state and national boundaries.

The Rev. Robert J. Hodgen offers this interesting testimony in a letter to the editor: "I have been a reader of your excellent paper for four years and enjoy it very much. It gives me a more understanding view of our united work. I wish that more of our New Englanders were readers of your weekly paper."

There is comfort in the realization that "The Christian Sun" does promote and actualize the communion of saints. It goes into many little worlds to report the achievements of other worlds. The Kingdom of God is made meaningful. And that which it has done for more than a century is prophetic of that which it may do in the future.

Hugarian Protestantism

By DR. DOUGLAS HORTON, Chairman
American Committee for World Council of Churches

American Christians may well be gravely concerned about the state of the Protestant churches in Hungary. Have trip-hammer events since the end of the war jolted Hungarian Protestantism out of those patterns of church activity which no longer are relevant to the national life? Can the churches find new patterns that will make Christianity an effective and forward-looking force among the Hungarian people?

The American Committee for the World Council of Churches has what I believe is good evidence that there is a growing realization in Hungarian church circles that changes in the church's point of view must be made—and made fast. In the past, the identification of Hungarian Protestantism with the landholding and professional groups has narrowed the field of Christian evangelism and made it possible for the Marxist parties to win large numbers of people to a secular religion. This is not a tragedy to be met with despair or a show of force; this is a challenge which the Hungarian churches must meet with a solemn reaffirmation of their Christian faith.

Many Hungarian Protestant leaders are also well aware of the great dangers in the state financial support of the Protestant school system since the end of the war. Prior to the war, schools and churches were supported in part by the income from large holdings of land. When the war ended, a long overdue radical land reform took place. This reform was undertaken with such speed, however, that the churches, for centuries relying on a steady financial support from the land, had neither the organization nor the time to establish other means of support. At the present time, some Protestant churches are bending every effort, through the stimulation of lay interest and an increased evangelical program, to support the spiritual and education activities of the church through voluntary contributions from individuals. Until that pattern is well established, the churches face a very grave emergency which only a just compensation for lost lands, paid by the national government, can fulfill.

Although many Hungarian Protestants are working toward a church organization which is financially independent of the state, they are well aware of their responsibilities, as Christians, for the insistent reiteration of those moral principles upon which national and international policies must rest. In a recent report, Bishop Ladislaus Ravasz, the Presiding Bishop of the Reformed Church in Hungary, stated: "It is not the duty of the church to interfere in issues of momentary political affairs, yet she must boldly and unreservedly defend the great ethical and political assets based on the principals of freedom, of human dignity, of elementary (individual as well as communal) human rights."

The Reformed and the Lutheran Churches, representing the largest Protestant groups in Hungary, with about 20 per cent of the total population, are cooperating with the smaller Protestant denominations—Baptist, Methodist, and Unitarian—and also with the Eastern Orthodox churches, in facing the problems of physical survival. Not only have the churches been seriously affected by the almost universal destruction which followed the German occupation of Hungary and the Russian counter occupation of 1945, but the subsequent inflation and scarcity of goods have left Hungarian churches bitterly impoverished. Shipments of clothes, shoes, and food from American Christians through Church World Service have helped these churches in the task of taking an effective role in national life.

There is good evidence to believe that Hungarian Protestants have faith that as citizens of a nation in which converge the three main types of Christianity, Roman Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, and Protestant, they may be able to play a providential role in the emerging international order. Hence Hungarian church leaders are looking forward with ecumenical interest to the first World Assembly of Churches to be held in Holland in 1948, feeling strongly that their new patterns of church activity in Hungary will be a unique contribution to ecumenical social action.

Messengers of Light

A Dialogue Concerning Some of the More Common Church Symbols

By FERRIS E. REYNOLDS, Ph.D.

Professor of Religion, Elon College, N. C.

Curia*—O Eulibios, venerable keeper of the keys to the treasure chests of centuries past, my mind is filled with questions!

†Eulibios—What are thy questions, fair one? I am thy servant. "Knock and it shall be opened unto you."

Curia—I would like to know this? What is the idea of those figures that I have observed in church windows, upon altar fixtures, and in other prominent church furnishings? Are they just ornaments or do they have a more worthy vocation?

Eulibios—Worthy vocation! Ah, thou hast spoken like the Queen of the South who rivaled Solomon in wisdom. Indeed, those are more than designs and figures; they are "Messengers of Light."

Curia—Thanks, my time-honored friend. It is all perfectly clear to me now, except for one thing. I do not know what you mean by "Messengers of Light."

Eulibios—Pardon me, fair one. I must be more specific. That is a poetic expression which I like to use in place of the less personal word, symbol. But, if you must be precise, a Messenger of Light is simply a symbol.

Curia—Now, my worthy shepherd of yesterday's wisdom, if you will explain to me what you mean by a symbol, I may be able to hush the curiosity in me regarding those fancy church decorations.

Eulibios—Pray, be thou not so impatient, my dear. Curiosity is a fair garment, and I must say that it becomes you; only, do not soil it with needless haste-making.

Curia—If you must lecture upon virtue, I will be on my way. If not, please answer my question directly. What is a symbol?

Eulibios—A thousand pardons, my lady! I did not mean to lecture. Allow me to proceed with your estimable question.

Curia—Then, go ahead, by all means.

Eulibios—Our word, symbol, comes from two Greek words which mean "to place together." In a symbol two things are placed together in thought and experience until they become grimly associated.

Curia—Two things like love and springtime?

Eulibios—Yes, that is the idea. But in a symbol, usually one of the things is a tangible object and the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Five men. Let us pray for them. Let us help them. It may be that the efforts those five men put forth will start a movement amongst the laymen of our Convention that will be very significant. What five men? Why, the five men appointed at the Waverly session of the Southern Convention to head up the Men's Work Committee of our Convention. They are: George D. Colclough, chairman; A. H. McIver, Roy A. Larrick, Cyrus Shoffner, and Harry W. Lee, secretary. I happen to know those men, everyone of them, and I believe our Convention can be greatly profited by having just such men in places of leadership amongst us.

Many of the readers of these lines know George Colclough—the chairman of this laymen's committee. Long connected with Elon, and now secretary of the very progressive Burlington, North Carolina, Chamber of Commerce, treasurer of our Convention and interested in the church. A. H. McIver is an official in the Eastern North Carolina Conference, helps to do the work of that conference, a fine business man, and ready to do his part for the church. Everybody in the Valley of Virginia Conference knows Roy A. Larrick as their conference president and an outstanding Christian layman. Cyrus Shoffner is a leading layman in Church; an official in the Western North Carolina Conference, a member of the North Carolina Council of Churches, treasurer of his conference, and a layman of which the church can be proud. Harry W. Lee is a member of our Portsmouth, Virginia, Church, one of the few laymen to ever hold the presidency of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and is greatly respected in both his home city and his conference. They are five business men. They make a success of their own lives and work and if the Convention, conferences, and churches will help them with this laymen's movement they will help lead us into success with it.

Let us pastors in all our conferences boost the series of laymen's meetings which they are planning. Let us get our men to attend the one held near them—Eastern Virginia, in Suffolk Church, Monday, October 6, at 8:00 o'clock. We ministers are very anxious to have our laymen with us in the work of the church, both in the local church and in the conference.

Let us show them our interest in these meetings, and do what we can to see that they are well publicized and attended. Our laymen are busy men, these are times that test our souls, and they will help if we make it plain to them that we need them, want them, and will listen to them when we have them! They will look at the church and its work from differing angles perhaps see certain aspects of it in a different way from the way we see it, but experience proves that they have a way of inspiring their fellows and achieving their goals when they set heart and head to them.

Let me appeal to the laymen of our conferences to show their fellow-laymen—the five above-mentioned men—that they will hear them, and cooperate with them in building a stronger church and a nobler fellowship.

CURRENT NEEDS OVERSEAS.

Extreme Needs Prevail Despite Two Years of "Peace."—Events have proved that just two years of "peace" are not enough for nations to recover from five and six years of destruction. It takes more time to restore cities bombed to rubble, factories reduced to scrap, farms mined and eroded, seed, livestock, human beings, and equipment all destroyed—than it does to tear down these essentials of civilization. To resettle millions uprooted from their homes, to reunite separated families, to restore shrunk bodies, to give back some measure of hope, security, and confidence involves tremendous physical and spiritual generosity from those of us still in a position to give.

America is just becoming aware that half the world's people have too little to eat and that many of these are constantly just short of starvation. Last winter, the hardest in a generation in Europe, was followed by floods in the spring, and drought all summer. Again, Western Europe will have a short crop of grain and potatoes and this deficit must be made up by imports from America. Even England has had to restore wartime food measures. In Germany, Austria, Poland, Italy, Greece, Japan, India, China and several other nations hit by the war, the daily calorie level, especially in the cities, will be less than one half of that enjoyed by Americans.

Food rations are at a minimum. In German cities the average level is less than 1,500 calories daily; Americans eat 3,300 calories daily. With the average wage earner in the above named countries getting less than $2.00 per day, he cannot buy $2.00 a pound butter. Rice production in the far east has been far less than expected this year and the price of rice in Oriental countries is again too high for the average family to get even a minimum for health. Starvation, perennially present in China, is worse than in past years.

UNRRA stopped in June, 1947. With all its faults, it meant the difference between life and death for millions. Private agencies, such as Church World Service, are needed more than ever to fill the gaps left by governmental relief.

Fuel Shortages.—The Ruhr Valley, chief coal producing field of Europe, is running at about 50 per cent production capacity due to lack of food, proper work clothing, and feeling of insecurity among the workers. Lack of food is the chief reason for the low worker output, however. Without enough coal the factories cannot run or homes be heated. People who are eternally cold and hungry simply cannot do a decent day's work.

Clothing Needs Acute.—It is in supplying clothing, bedding, shoes, and household necessities that Americans can do the most personally for overseas victims. For seven years now, textile production in Europe has been very short with factories destroyed and cotton imports shut off. Millions escaped in bombing raids with only a single clothing outfit and no changes. Underwear quickly disintegrates where soap is lacking. Shoes, doubled in price by American price changes cost $50 a pair in Warsaw, with the worker making less than $2 per day. Such necessities as baby diapers, socks, wool blankets, cloth for bandages, and other goods considered essential in a family are simply not to be had for most European families.

Children will go without shoes in northern Europe again this winter. Our cotton feed bags will again be worth several dollars. Needles, thread, darning materials—all these essentials will be lacking for housewives who must mend clothing ad nauseum. One great need is for hot water bottles for people to carry to bed in icy homes. Another is for flannel night gowns for the aged who have too little food, fuel, and clothing to keep them warm.

Other Supplies.—Other necessities

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

ELON COLLEGE—AN OPPORTUNITY FOR OUR CHURCHES.

The campus of Elon College has never been more beautiful than now. The physical equipment has been greatly improved during the summer months. West Dormitory and Ladies Hall have been redecorated and carpets added for the halls and stairways and in the social rooms. The other buildings have been thoroughly cleaned and are in the process of being redecorated. It is inspiring to see the beginning of the building program provided for through the Expansion Program for Elon College. The power house is now under construction and the site designated for the new gymnasium. Other buildings are sorely needed and the members of our churches should rally to the support of the Expansion Program through liberal contributions. The $100,000 Staley-Atkinson-Newman Fund Foundation for Christian Education has not yet been raised in full but the college is endeavoring to increase its services to our churches through its Department of Religion. The college has a group of splendid ministerial students and students preparing for Christian Education work this year, and the faculty in the Department of Religion would be a credit to any college. Never before in the history of our nation has there been a greater need for moral and spiritual direction. The need for full time Christian workers is acute and no investment we could make would be wiser than an investment in Christian Education in institutions like ours at Elon College.

The student body is the largest in the history of the college and there is an excellent spirit among the students. The faculty is of high caliber and this year bids fair to be one of the best years in the history of our institution.

The apportionment contributions and special gifts which the members of our churches and the friends of Elon College are making or may make will pay great dividends in the years ahead. An intelligent and vital faith is essential for the needs of our day, and the support of Elon College will enable Christians to discharge their obligations to their country, their world, and their God.

President L. E. Smith is giving himself unsparingly at Elon College as a servant of the churches. He needs our prayers, counsel, and generous contributions that the cause of Christian Education at Elon College may help meet the needs of our world in its present uncertain and disturbing plight.

Our Convention has committed itself to raise a minimum of $12,500 on apportionment for Elon College annually. Until the last year or two they have not come near paying the apportionment in full. Let us pay the apportionment in full this year and send an extra amount. Remember Elon College in your prayers and include her in a special financial contribution.

WM. T. SCOTT.

AN IMMEDIATE EMERGENCY.

The last days of September are bringing unseasonable weather. An early frost is forecasted. Already we are having to provide heat for college buildings.

The present heating equipment was installed in 1904-05. The boilers were second-hand then. Originally they were intended to heat East Dormitory, the administration building, and West Dormitory only. Later North Dormitory was added, making a total of four buildings. At present the old heating plant is providing heat for ten buildings on the campus and five off the campus. This equipment has served efficiently and long. State authorities have ordered a reduction in steam pressure. This will make it difficult to keep the dormitories and classrooms warm. We must provide new equipment as quickly as possible.

The new building is to be completed by the last of this month. The boilers are to be set and the stokers installed. Contract to erect a brick smoke stack has been let to Consolidated Chimney Company of New York, and is to be completed the early part of November. Contract for boiler room equipment and heat distribution system has not been awarded. All bids now pending seem to be excessively high. We hope to get the entire heating plant completed and ready for use as near the first of the year as possible.

The purpose of this article is not simply to acquaint the constituency of the College with existing conditions and progress toward providing adequate heating facilities for the College but to make the blunt statement that the College does not have the money necessary to pay for this equipment. Under present banking loans it is impossible to borrow the necessary funds from a bank. The only course left to us is to provide the necessary funds for this emergency. It is an emergency! It is an immediate emergency!

My dear friend, as you read this article, won't you feel that it is not only a duty but a privilege to help provide comfort for the students who have come to Elon College for their education? This undertaking cannot be postponed. It isn't a question of whether it is a good time to build or a bad time to build. It isn't a question to be argued in any way. It is simply a job that must be done and done as quickly as possible.

Contracts already let total $64,360. The low bid on plant equipment and heat distribution system is $72,400. This contract has not been let. This is a total of $136,760. The architect's figures make the cost of the project $148,000, plus the architect's fees. Every effort is being made to reduce this figure. We have in hand a total of $45,000 toward this project, leaving approximately $100,000 to be secured. Shortly this information will be conveyed to churches in the Convention and individuals with the earnest request that they all come to the rescue of the College in this time of need. We have made such a good record in past years that we cannot afford to have it spoiled now. We should be reminded that prior to 1931, it was necessary to raise by subscription a total of $50,000 each year for current demands at the College. Since that date not one dollar contributed has gone for current accounts at the College other than that contributed through conference apportionments. All other gifts have gone to pay debts and increase endowments. We now face the necessity of raising this money, not for operating expenses, but for capital improvements. I know that the friends of Elon College will be glad to contribute to help meet this emergency.

NO OFFERINGS THIS WEEK.

The only money that the Church is asked to contribute for the current expenses of Elon College is that given through conference apportionments. The amount apportioned by the Convention for this purpose has not been increased in a quarter of a century.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MISSION BOARD.

The Mission Board of the Southern Convention held its annual meeting in the Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Virginia, September 17-18, 1947, with all but one member of the board present.

Reports indicate that the past year has been one of the most successful years of the Mission Board. The churches have responded generously to the financial needs of the Board. The Treasurer's Report revealed $41,555.33 raised in 1946-47 as compared with $36,928.43 in 1945-46. We were especially gratified that $11,363.74 was raised for the Shaowu Mission. The Board paid high tribute to our loyal women of the Convention who contributed generously to Shaowu and to other missionary causes, their contributions being $14,514.32. The sum of $14,932.55 was received for home mission work to assist thirty of our churches within the Southern Convention and to contribute a share to the work of our National Board of Home Missions which serves in 48 States. The sum of $25,934.83 was contributed for foreign missions through the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, serving a world constituency of forty-three million people, including the two million people in the Shaowu Mission for whom we are responsible through our missionaries, Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, Miss Frances Whitaker and Dr. Edward Riggs.

Special mention was made of our Reidsville Church which is now supporting Rev. and Mrs. Robert C. H. Mueller in India and Miss Harriet Summerville in Africa. The Reidsville Church during the past year contributed $3,012 for these projects and in addition to this made their usual contribution to the foreign mission apportionment. The interest of this church in missions is an example of what could happen in many of our churches in the Convention.

Though the year 1946-47 was one of the best years in the history of the Mission Board, the Board adopted one of its most courageous budgets for 1947-48. The sum of $65,000 was adopted as the budget for the coming year which means that we shall have to raise approximately $18,000 more this year than during the past year. The Board feels that the churches of the Convention would come to the support of this budget if they could know that in so doing they would help the board continue appropriations to our developing churches within the Convention, to establish a new work in a most promising field in one of our rapidly growing cities, and to discharge its obligations to our new church in Asheboro and Bay View.

Asheboro is preparing to begin immediately on construction of their new building and the work in that growing city will help to strengthen the 20 rural churches within a distance of 15 miles of Asheboro. The Bay View church is preparing its plans for construction of its new building.

The members of the Board paid high tribute to the devoted labors of the late Col. J. E. West and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, two leading figures in the mission program of the Convention. These devoted leaders passed to their heavenly reward during the past year.

The Mission Board earnestly solicits the liberal contributions and prayers of the constituency of the Southern Convention that our courage may be matched with devotion and generous contributions.

CURRENT NEEDS OVERSEAS.

are equally short. Silverware is so short that in some orphanages one spoon must serve for three children. Such simple necessities as frying pans, coffee pots, sauce pans, hammers, etc., are entirely lacking in thousands of homes overseas. Candles, medical supplies, vitamins, toys for children—all these are beyond the reach of the average person.

Housing.—In Warsaw, every building in the city was either damaged or destroyed. The central part of Dresden is completely demolished; so are countless other cities. Village after village throughout Europe was completely razed.

Reconstruction Needs.—Farm equipment, livestock, seeds, and tools of all kinds are needed. In some sections of Poland 75 per cent of the farm animals are gone. The 300,000 head of cows and horses sent to Europe by UNRRA has replaced less than three per cent of the livestock killed or driven off during the war.

Mental and Spiritual Needs.—Even worse than the shortage of physical necessities is the breakdown of morale and morals in the face of need. People who have been driven, beaten, bombed, and oppressed, need love and feeling that somebody cares. This need is equal to or greater than the craving for bread. Morals, which depend so much on an adequate supply of food, clothing and shelter, have dropped in the absence of these necessities. With a package of cigarettes commanding a greater price than a woman's body, morals are hard to maintain.

The rebuilding of organized spiritual life—the churches—is a tremendous task. As the chief agency for spiritual revitalization the physical properties and personnel of the churches must be given every possible means of rehabilitation.

Send your contributions to the Congregational Christian Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction. Your gifts should be sent to The Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., designed for "C.W.V.R." and they will be forwarded promptly. Many churches of the Southern Convention will observe World-Wide Communion on Sunday, October 5, and will receive a special offering for CWVR. We may best remember our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, by ministering to hungry, sick, lonely people, for whom he died (just as he died for us). "In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

OUR THANK OFFERING FOR 1947.

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord." In these or other similar words there runs through the Bible the place of the thankful or grateful spirit in human hearts and human life. And this thankful spirit is not to be confined to one day or even one season—it is to be a permanent quality of the heart. Furthermore, it is not to be merely a matter of words but of deeds. Thanksgiving is to find expression in thanksgiving. Appreciation is to find expression in action.

But there are advantages in special seasons of thanksgiving, and in special forms of thanksgiving. Thanksgiving Day, for instance, has the advantage of crystallizing the spirit of gratitude and appreciation, and of quickening the impulse to translate thanksgiving into thanksgiving. Thus it is that the Women's societies of the Southern Convention usually have a Thanksgiving or Thank Offering Program in connection with the Thanksgiving Season. And quite properly they blend profession with performance, they seek to express the spirit of thanksgiving by making a Thank Offering for some democratically accepted object or project. Sometimes it is for what we would call "home missions" and sometimes it is for what we would call "foreign missions." And as usual, the women have always responded in a gracious way and in a generous spirit. These offerings have always made substantial contributions to the progress of the Kingdom.

Let this year be no exception! The project or object of this year's Thank Offering is the Fund for the Superintendent's home which is being planned by authoritative Convention action through its Executive Board. It was a decision democratically arrived at. It should enlist the support of the churches and the conferences of the Convention. It is a needed project and merits support. Let us offer the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and let us also bring an offering as we come into His courts, an offering that shall go toward that which will be a symbol of the unity and the strength and the spirit of our Southern Convention.

NEW FROM THE SOCIETIES.

NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, Va., has come to the close of a very successful year.

At the evening service on November 17th the auxiliary had charge of the worship service, at which time we held our Thank Offering service. The offering amounted to $100.00. In August, we sent an additional $50.00 to Shaowu Mission in China.

All circles of the organization have worked hard. One circle donated an electric refrigerator to the church kitchen, while another donated brass candle holders to the parlor. This same circle had a beautiful oil painting framed also for the parlor. The oil was done by one of our young church members.

Each circle had some friendly service project. They included: Carroll County work, money and clothing for Elon Orphanage, milk fund in India, clothing for needy, and sewing garments for the needy people of Europe.

Two members of our organization were lost by death this year. One left the city. We now have 118 on roll. This is double the amount we had on roll three years ago when our president, Mrs. C. L. Pope, went into office.

All conferences were attended and all apportionments were paid required to make us an honor society. Five members attended the School of Missions held at Elon College June 16-20.

The most outstanding event of the year was the celebration of our Ninth Anniversary. Seventy-four persons attended the banquet held in honor of the occasion on February 10th.

We took part in the World Day of Prayer and World Community Day held jointly with other churches of the city.

We keep at the church a box so our members can deposit used clothing to be sent to those in need overseas.

Our church parlor has been completely furnished now and we have paid off all debts for it in full.

Dr. Hardeastle taught our home mission book, Portrait of a Pilgrim on January 30th. Mrs. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk taught our foreign book, India at the Threshold, on March 12.

Dr. Hardeastle taught the book, Divine Fatherhood, at our June meeting.

The Auxiliary had the pleasure of entertaining the C. M. A. Conference held at our church on December 3, and also those who attended the general conference in October.

At our next meeting, the last of the year, an installation service will be held for officers of the coming year.

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. HURLEY J. SKINNER,
Secretary.

BURLINGTON.

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Church of Burlington have had a full program of local and world mission work this year.

Our church was hostess on World Community Day, November 1, 1946, to the Council of Church Women of Burlington. We joined with the other members of the Council in entertaining the public school teachers at a picnic and with the other churches paid the salary of a colored Bible teacher in the colored public schools.

We have had Bible study every fourth Monday from January on, with Rev. M. W. Stevens, our pastor, as teacher. The auxiliary re-furnished our pastor's study and the Sunday school nursery. We observed World Day of Prayer with other churches in the community. Our chairman of the Cradle Roll Department arranged a christening service in the church on May 11, 1947. The auxiliary presented a life membership to Mrs. W. W. Sellars in recognition of her devoted service as our president for the last two years. Two memorials also were given this year: one in memory of Mrs. J. N. Malone and one for Mrs. W. H. Carroll.

The Burlington Auxiliary had fourteen members present for the state conference in Raleigh on October 1, 1946, and will be hostess to the conference in 1947. We were hostess this year to the Young People's Rally on February 15 and 16. There were nine of our members present for the Spring Rally at Reidsville.

Our women gave 120 new books to the Elon College Orphanage and had their library brought up to date by our city librarian and our Friendly Service Chairman. We also sent the orphanage boys and girls dresses and suits for Easter and gave $65.00 to the orphanage as a friendly service gift.

At one meeting an interesting program was given by Mrs. D. R. Fonville on our mission at Sahowu, China and our thank offering for Shaowu was $200.00. We packed and sent

FOR THE CHILDREN

A NEW DECLARATION.

A "Declaration of the Rights of the Child," which enlarges and expands on the Declaration of Geneva, made in 1923, was proposed for America by H. Claude Hardy, Vice-President of the Save the Children Federation, speaking in Knoxville, Tennessee, on September 17, at the Sixteenth Annual Field Conference of the Area Directors of the Save the Children Federation, national child service organization which is carrying on an expanding program in disadvantage areas of rural America.

Dr. Hardy, former Superintendent of Schools at White Plains, N. Y., said that the Declaration of Geneva—hitherto accepted as a basis for the work of the International Union for Child Welfare of which the Save the Children Federation is a member—was good as far as it went, but that America with its vast resources could work toward something more comprehensive, in the hope that sometime the concept would be extended to all the children of the world.

Here is the "Declaration of the Rights of the Child" that Dr. Hardy proposed:

1. The child is entitled to a happy childhood, free from unwarranted fears and anxieties.
2. The child is entitled to the affection, interest, encouragement, and sympathetic understanding of his parents, elders, teachers and friends.
3. The child is entitled to a maximum of good health and must be provided with essentials thereto.
4. The child is entitled to the opportunity to obtain as much education as he is capable of receiving.
5. The child is entitled to receive by precept and example adequate training in democratic living.
6. The child is entitled to experiences that afford him the greatest satisfactions of life that come from knowing the difference between right and wrong, truth and error; from work well done; and worthy achievement.
7. The child is entitled to receive a concept of freedom that includes duties as well as privileges and to training within his capabilities which will enable him to become a productive member of society.
8. The child is entitled to have the opportunity to learn and to practice the principles of democracy in all human relationships, and to realize that he is a citizen of one world with all the implications connected therewith, and that we are all members of one family.

Dr. Hardy added:

"One needs only to look at the schools and their programs in some of the sub-marginal areas of America and at some of the children in our city slums, to see how far we are falling short of this ideal. But if we are to save the world for democracy we must strive toward it. It cannot be reiterated too often that those whom we are educating today will determine the destiny of America tomorrow. It is for us to say whether we are going to place that destiny in the hands of a people who are, on the whole, well-adjusted and happy, or whether our future will be influenced, perhaps controlled, by a sizeable group of malcontents, who are dangerous because they are denied the advantages and the training which our country has within its power to give."

HOME OR HOTEL.

By J. C. BAKER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"We're running a juvenile's hotel, Ruth, not a home," Bill Sr. remarked, watching their children dash off after dinner.

"Ann went to a meeting," Ruth stacked the unwashed plates. "Linda had to practice yells, and Billy had to—"

"Why did they have to?" Bill put the silver on a tray. "That judge, speaking over the radio last night, said juvenile delinquency would almost disappear if parents kept their children at home more."

"But our children would never—" Ruth began confidently.

"All parents say that beforehand. But granting ours won't get into trouble, I'm just vain enough," he grinned, "to think they're missing something by not knowing me—and you—better."

"We're missing the enjoyment of them, too. But how—" she pondered.

"We'll find a way!" Bill declared. "Several, maybe."

He and Ruth made out a time schedule for each of the children.

The schedules listed everything: time to be spent at meals, in grooming, at school, music practice. "They should have two or three hours daily to do things with us," Bill figured. "And time for homework, if needed—and for washing the dishes."

"But at night they've committee meetings or—"

"Extracurricular activities are fine, but need they take so much time?"

"Let's find out," Ruth said.

So the father and mother talked with adult leaders of the children's various activities. They showed the crowded schedules, explaining that, except at mealtimes, they seldom saw their children.

"You're right," most of the leaders assured them. "The home can scarcely build character if the children are away too much."

"Chorus practice would require only an hour if the students were prompt," the music teacher said. "More meetings could be held after school," said a class sponsor. "Such meetings would please us better and save an evening for you," added another leader.

Youth activities having been re-organized to conserve time, the parents asked Ann, Linda, and Billy to make their own schedules. This having been done, as all were finishing the dishes after a delicious dinner it was gently pointed out to the children that the schedules they had prepared left inadequate time for music practice, sleep, and visiting with parents.

"How do we visit with our parents?" asked Ann warily.

"Play games," answered her father. "Help me set up this table-tennis equipment."

"Or read together," added her mother.

Ann shrugged. "Just by ourselves?"

"We'll have your friends in to sing quite often," Mother promised.

Billy now had time for his stamps hobby—Linda enjoyed helping him. Ann remained politely aloof until they began reading plays—library-style. "Let me take the lead!" she exclaimed. "Maybe it'll help me to get a part in the junior play."

Mother always put on a pretty dress for a home "party." Father wore a gay tie. Often the girls decorated the dinner table, serving the ice cream later in the evening. Current-events contests, riddles, puzzles were joked over. Backyard picnics with young guests were frequent.

"It's revolutionized your schedules considerably, and mine, too," Bill chuckled after two months of the new arrangement.

"They needed it," Ruth Added.

Book Reviews

SEEDS OF REDEMPTION. By Bernard E. Meland. The Macmillan Co. $2.50.

The reviewer read this book in one gulp and then, with red pencil in hand, returned for a more leisurely perusal of its 162 thought-provoking pages. The whole book should be underscored in red ink.

The author envisages our cultural predicament as the product of our feverish search for power and ease. "The cultural ideal that has risen like a towering spire over this American scene is the acquisition of power" (page 7). Science and industry have supported each other. Schools and churches have allowed themselves to become adjuncts of industry, appropriating its cultural ends, adopting its methods, and rejoicing in its visible prosperity. This has been at the expense of the sensitive life, the kind of life that is capable of distinguishing between "better and worse, beauty and ugliness, significance and the evils of mediocrity, justice and injustice, human good and human degradation" (page 9).

Although our cultural day is far spent, Dr. Meland believes there is hope for its redemption. God is still at work in his world. We must develop an awareness of ourselves in the religious sense. The religious perspective is unique in that it compels man to take account of his "creatural relations with whatever in the living process creates and sustains his being" (page 27).

He refers to the scholars who have been concerned with giving empiricism a metaphysical interpretation. Initiated by Henri Bergson in his doctrine of the elan vital, it has been advanced by S. Alexander, G. Lloyd Morgan, Jan Smuts, Alfred North Whitehead, Henry Nelson Wieman and others. It is evident that the author has been greatly influenced by the thinking of Whitehead and Wieman, but his work is no mere reproduction. He has mastered their ideas and arrived at his own conclusions. Adopting the organismic concept of the life-process, Meland defines God as the "sensitive nature within nature," working as a redemptive agency in what would otherwise be chaotic activity.

The fundamental event of this age, the event to which all others are secondary, is the shaping of a world community. "This concept of world community," he writes, "is a culmination of a tendency in our life which has been occurring throughout the generation of people now living. . . . That tendency in our life has been a gathering on the side of organism as over against what we might call atomism" (page 119). Dr. Meland fears that our easy talk of Onê World may result in a harmful veneer of universalism. "I am looking for the style makers to come out with fall suits for men revealing an interbreeding between the breeches of the Roman Cossack and the drab tunics of the Tasmanian shepherd" (page 127). If the church wishes to contribute to this growth of community it must do more than send its ambassadors of faith abroad, talk up the ecumenical mind, and organize a World Council of Churches. It must devote itself to the more subtle and exacting task of nurturing the growth of "a way of living, within local communities, that is continuous with the wide world, and creative of its spiritual culture" (page 132).

This is an immensely important book. The minister will discover in it seed for many vital sermons. The author has included one of his own poems: "God In the Morning." This alone would be worth the price of the book.

CHRIST IN DRAMA. By Fred Eastman. The Macmillan Co. New York. $2.50.

The fly leaf describes this little book as being "A study of the influence of Christ on the drama of England and America. The Shafer Lectures of Northwestern University, 1946." Dr. Eastman, author of many plays, is the distinguished professor of Biography and Drama at Chicago Theological Seminary.

He begins with the miracle plays of old England, the significant development that led to the foundation of the great Elizabethan theatre. Here, he examines the "Influence of Christ in Shakespeare's Plays." Dr. Eastman examines the principal characters, their manners and actions, and loyalties; the author's spiritual insight—is his life harmonious with that of the Master?—and the total effect of the play upon the audience. And so, beginning with Shakespeare, who had no theological axes to grind, but a profound "interest in the human soul as a battleground of good and evil and of conflicting loyalties," the author continues with contemporary British and American drama, and concludes with drama in the Church.

One of the refreshing incidents related concerns the author's family. He promised his young sons that they could enact any Biblical story they chose, and to his chagrin, the boys picked Adam and Eve. The ancient tale was re-enacted to the immense pleasure of the children. This diversion was chosen by the family as a substitute for the movies after the children informed their parents that they preferred the excitement of the movies to a family altar. Many parents and children would delight in the Dramatic Family Altar.

Church and radio drama are discussed and suggestions given for new and better plays to be presented by church or church school groups. An appendix gives an excellent list of the major dramatists of the Western World with notations of those whose plays are recommended for reading and presentation by church people.

Once the church and the stage were the same. Today, for the most part, the pulpit and the boards are miles apart. If they are re-united, as they should be, it will be largely through the work of such men as Fred Eastman. J. J. H.

CHRIST THE MINISTER OF BETTER THINGS.

LESSON II—OCTOBER 12, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: He is able to save unto the uttermost them that draw near unto God through him. Hebrews 7:25.

LESSON: Hebrews 3:1-8:5; 9-10; Mathew 4:1-11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Philippians 2:1-11.

Jesus Christ the Son of God.

"Having then a great high priest, who hath passed through the heavens. Jesus the Son of God . . ." As was stated in last week's lesson the writer of Hebrews was emphasizing the supremacy of Jesus Christ, emphasizing the superiority of the New Covenant over the Old Covenant. The words quoted above simply reemphasize that thought. The Jewish dispensation had a high priest, Jesus referred to as "a great high priest." The Japs believed in various stages of heavens. The writer of Hebrews states that our "great high priest" had "passed through the heavens"—he had entered into the very presence of God himself in the heavens of heavens. For this writer, Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the Living God.

A Sympathetic and Strong Saviour.

"For we have not an high priest that cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but one that hath been tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." Even if Christ had dwelt apart from the world and the life of men, He would still be a grand and glorious Saviour. But the thing that makes him all the more grand and glorious is the fact that he took upon himself the likeness of man, that he dwelt among men, that he was tempted in all points like men. He has put himself in our place, he knows what it is to be tempted, he knows just how we feel, and he is able to help us all the better because of that fact. In his case, however, sin never conquered him. Therefore he can help us to conquer temptation.

Humbly, But Boldly to the Throne of Grace.

"Let us draw near with boldness unto the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy, and my find grace to help us in time of need." No man ought to be brash in the presence of God. He will not be bold in the wrong sense of that word. He will be humble before God. But he can come boldly in the sense that he can come confidently and trustfully because he has been invited and because he knows he will be accepted through the grace of Christ. He is to come, both to obtain mercy for sins already committed, and grace to help in time of trouble. We would have more victories and fewer defeats if we came to Christ seeking his help in advance, rather than waiting to ask his forgiveness for the past.

A High Priest Forever.

The high priests in Israel held limited tenure of office, even though they held it for life. Their priestly office passed from one to another as one after another the high priests died. But Christ is an Eternal High Priest. He liveth evermore to make intercession for saints.

The Great High Priest's Atoning Work.

The high priest ministered day by day, offering sacrifice, which really never could take away sins. Furthermore they were themselves sinful. But Christ our Great High Priest, himself without spot or sin, offered himself once and for all for the sins of his people, and is now set down on the right hand of God. I speak of a mystery, a mystery which some of the greatest minds in Christian history have not been able to explain clearly. But Christian thought at its highest and best has felt that the central fact was simply and sufficiently stated in the phrase, "who loved us and gave himself for us" or "he died for our sins according to the Scriptures," and such similar statements of the atoning work of Christ.

Holding Fast Our Confession.

"Let us hold fast the confession of our hope, that it waver not." "Let us hold fast our confession." Thus does the writer warn against wavering and waywardness. Many people, young and old, make a good confession of faith in Christ. But alas, they do not hold fast their confession. Like Demas, they love this present world. Like the seed that fell among the thorns, the better things are choked out. There are all too many people today who are taking too lightly their church vows or covenants. We need a revival of renewed loyalty to Christ and his church.

Provokers.

In one way, Christians are to live at peace with one another and to be centers of good will. But in another sense they are to be provokers. But provokers, callers out, of love and good works. There is to be a spirit in them, and an enthusiasm about them that will stimulate others to love one another and to do good works.

Not Forsaking the Assembling of Themselves Together.

Private worship and devotion should have a larger place in the daily life of a Christian. Man cannot live by bread alone. But there is also a need for public or corporate worship. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together." Like mercy, the habit of going to church and to public worship, is twice blessed. It helps the one who goes, and it helps the church and the cause of Christ. It is a splendid way to bear one's witness to his faith in God and his respect for God's day. My heart was warmed twice in succession as I rode on the bus on my way to church last Sunday. As I got on the bus I saw a teen-age boy, almost a young man, with his Sunday school quarterly on his lap, unabashed and unashamed. He was bearing his witness to his loyalty to Christ. On this day when that young man or older boy could have done a hundred other things and gone a hundred other places, he had chosen to go to his Sunday school. I thanked God and took courage.

And a little later, a gentleman got on the bus and sat down besides me. He had a Bible under his arm and I asked him if he were a Sunday school teacher. He replied that he was not a teacher, but that he was a member of a Men's Bible Class and that he liked to carry his Bible so that he could follow the exposition of the lesson. It warmed my heart to see that man, quietly and unashamedly bearing his witness to the place that God's day and God's word had in his life. Far too many people, good people, even Christians are all too careless about their attendance at services of worship.

other an abstract idea or quality. The apple blossom might be regarded as a symbol of the delicacy of spring, but there are so many different objects associated with spring that no one of them is able to gather unto itself any considerable symbolic value. Love affords a better illustration. For most of us, love has been associated with a band of gold, called a wedding ring. You "get" what I mean?

Curia—Now you are talking my language. Please go on.

Eulibios—As I was saying, love and the wedding ring have become so firmly associated in our minds that the physical object has become a symbol of the more illusive reality that we call love.

Curia—O, I see now. A symbol is a kind of sign—a sign language, so to speak.

Eulibios—Yes, that is right.

Curia—Then we have other symbols besides those found in churches?

Eulibios—Certainly. Did you never see the three balls hanging over a pawn shop door, or the red and white column marking the place where the barber plys his trade?

Curia—So, these are symbols? I had never thought of them in that way. Why, there are symbols in all the different departments of life, are there not?

Eulibios—There are indeed. And they are not much different in essence from those you have seen in churches, except that the Christian symbols stand for the loftiest realities and experiences that mankind has ever had. Because religion lives upon the threshold of eternity, its symbols inspire the mind to reach out into the hinterlands of Infinity.

Curia—Tell me, then, about the symbols that are commonly found in our churches. What do those oblong figures used in church windows mean? They look like little fish following each other.

Eulibios—Those are fish, my friend. From the very early days of the Christian Church, the fish was associated with the ministry of Jesus. You remember that the first disciples were fishermen?

Curia—Yes, but how did that fact give rise to the symbolic fish?

Eulibios—No one seems to know exactly, but there are several possible explanations. For one thing, Jesus promised His disciples that He would make them "fishers of men." Then, too, the Greek word for fish is ikthus. If you take the first Greek letter of each word in the Christian affirmation "Jesus Christ, God's Son, the Savior," you have the word ikthus.

Curia—Ingenious, my sagacious patriarch, but how about the figure of the three circles, each intercepting the other; what does that mean?

Eulibios—The circle stands for eternity. The reason for this is not difficult to trace. There is no end of the line that makes a circle. The circle is complete in and of itself. Do you follow the logic of this?

Curia—Yes, but why put three of them together? Can you multiply eternity by three?

Eulibios—The three circles together denote the three Persons in the infinite Trinity.

Curia—Tell me about those artistic little diagrams that look like a college insignia. One sees them on Bible markers and altar cloths.

Eulibios—Those are called Christograms, or simply Christian monograms. There are two classic ones. The XP is the older one. It is made from the first two Greek letters of the name Christos, and has been widely used by Christians since the earliest days. The figure gained universal popularity from the exploits of Constantine, the first Roman emperor to sponsor the Christian faith. According to popular legend, this ambitious military and political leader was inspired by a vision shared with his soldiers in which a mighty sign appeared in the heavens, the sign XP, and under it were the words, "In This Sign Conquer." This ancient figure has represented Christian faith for centuries. The IHS monogram developed much later. It is derived from a contracted form of the Greek word for Jesus (Ihsous) consisting of the first two and last letters. At first a contraction sign was inserted between the H and S, but that was soon dropped, and the monogram, as we usually see it, resulted. Centuries later, when Latin became the prevailing language of Christians, the letters of the insignia were latinized, and interpreted by the words "Iesus Hominum Salvator"—"Jesus the Saviour of Men." The significant thing is that the IHS is an ancient Christian monogram that gathers unto itself all the significance of Jesus for us men and our salvation.

Curia—They are very attractive. I am glad to know more about them. What is the story behind those flame-like designs and palm branches that are used in church windows? Are they just ornamental, or do they, too, have symbolic meaning?

Eulibios—The flaming fire stands for the work of the Holy Spirit. It suggests the idea of cleansing and purifying. In most representations, the higher the flames reach, the brighter they become, because the impurities have been removed in the process of the Holy Spirit's ministry. In the very early days of the Christian Church, the palm branch was used to mark the graves of the faithful who had been cut down by persecution. In the catacombs of Rome, many of these nameless resting places have been identified by the sign of the palm branch. It was a kind of picture language that expressed the faith of the Christians that their beloved dead would share in the Triumph of Christ. In church windows these palm branches are often pictured against a deep purple background which signifies the attainment of triumph through suffering.

Curia—Then colors, too, have symbolic meaning?

Eulibios—Yes, Purple symbolizes suffering.

Red stands for love, fire, and religious fervor.

Blue is a symbol of Heaven and the truth from Heaven.

Green represents spiritual growth and the hope of eternal life.

White conveys the idea of joy, purity, and light.

Curia—Are there other symbols of the Christian faith, my worthy friend?

Eulibios—Yes, there are many more, but these are perhaps the most common ones. I hope you now understand what I meant by the expression "Messengers of Light."

Curia—I think I do. You like that expression, do you not?

Eulibios—I do, indeed. It seems to say what I feel about the noble symbols of Christian faith. They are not just objects and figures. They are persons with words like the angels of Heaven—for those who have ears to hear.

Curia—You have been very kind and patient. I must not keep you longer from your beloved scrolls and parchments. But, promise me two things.

Eulibios—Name them, daughter of the new day.

Curia—Promise me you will accept my sincere thanks, and that you will hear my questions again soon.

Eulibios—I do, sweet one, and I will. Chair, nun.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

On September 24 we had almost a five-inch rain fall. This was the first real season we have had since April. The Orphanage has been in a dry streak all summer. We have had a little rain occasionally that would lay the dust for a day or two, but not enough to do much good. Our vegetable crop has almost been a failure on account of the extreme dry and hot weather. Our corn crop was cut in half, and everything else on the farm. We have no control over the weather. But we are thankful that we have at least had this splendid rain. It will be a great blessing to us all.

The Conference year will soon close and the several conferences will convene to see what has been accomplished during the year. We hope the churches will go to conference this year with conference apportionments paid in full, and will be on the "Banner Church" list. There is not much excuse now for churches not paying conference apportionments in full. All the institutions of the church need money. I know the Christian Orphanage needs money. We have done so much repair work on our buildings this year, and it has cost a lot of money. But I know that you wanted them kept in first-class condition, and they are now in first-class condition. But our bank account has greatly reduced. We want to make quite an effort this Thanksgiving to replenish it.

Then, too, winter is almost here. Just think of the shoes we will have to buy and the prices we will have to pay; and the winter clothes for girls and boys; coats and wraps and so many other things that go to make children comfortable for the winter. We know you would criticize if you knew a child went barefoot in the cold or shivered in the cold from the want of warm and comfortable clothing. But remember, it takes money to buy these things and we are looking to you to furnish it. We have no other source. If we had large endowments like a number of the other orphanages have to draw from, we would not have to live from hand to mouth. But we do not have that blessing and have to depend on the churches for continued support.

We want to appeal to all the churches, Sunday schools, and individuals to make your offerings liberal this year. We take it for granted that you have learned, too, that everything is sky high, and it takes more to feed and clothe children than it did several years ago. If you have been reading the orphanage reports in THE CHRISTIAN SUN from week to week, you will notice that the churches and Sunday schools have only sent us the sum of $8,248.68 to feed, clothe, and educate nearly one hundred children. We notice in Charity and Children this week, the Baptist Orphanage paper, that their income from church and Sunday schools alone have reached the sum of $222,813.24. They have seven hundred children.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

Since contributions for every other board and institution of the Convention have increased materially, it would seem to be a privilege for the churches to raise this entire amount. Perhaps, you will be surprised to know that we have not yet reached the half-way mark and there are but five more weeks before the conference meets in annual session. A request will be made of the Convention during its approaching session to change the College year so as to run currently with the calendar year. On this plan the church will have an opportunity to know the total amount contributed and to make an effort to raise the entire sum apportioned, which at present is $12,5000. This institution does not belong to itself; it belongs to the church. It cannot support itself; it is dependent upon the church. It is most appreciative of support by the church.

The total amount contributed remains the same as last week.

LIBERTY (VANCE).

The J. O. Atkinson Woman's Missionary Society of Liberty (Vance) Church comes to the close of the year's work with thankfulness for the part that the society has had in helping to carry His message to all parts of the world, and at the same time regretting that we have not been able to do more in carrying on His Kingdom's work.

We have had a very inspiring and profitable year under the leadership of our efficient president, Mrs. B. M. Newman, who will continue to serve as president during the coming year. The other officers were also re-elected.

We have met all the requirements for the year, thus reaching the Standard of Excellence.

The programs for the year have been very interesting and helpful. The Thank Offering program was held as a public service, with an offering of $50.00. We observed the World Day of Prayer service and the offering was $21.60. The Study Book, Portrait of a Pilgrim, was reviewed in a most interesting and inspiring manner by Miss Elizabeth Davis, a retired Deaconess of the Methodist Church. The book, India at the Threshold, was also reviewed in a most interesting way by our pastor, Rev. T. Fred Wright. Mrs. H. F. Mitchell, Superintendent of Spiritual Life, reviewed our Bible study, The Divine Fatherhood, in a most interesting manner.

We have helped in different ways for Friendly Service Work, sending $15.00 to the India work, $10.00 to the Carroll County work and a box to the Franklinton Institute.

We have gained several new members during the year, also new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN and to the Missionary Herald.

We have sent in a Life Membership for one of our members.

As we go into the work of the new year, may God give us courage to go forward in His work.

MARGARET ALSTON,
Corresponding Sec'y.

In Memoriam

SMITH.

On February 9, 1947, Robert R. Smith, of Hine's Chapel Congregational Christian Church, passed from this earth.

In the passing of "Uncle Bob," as he was affectionately called by those who knew him, we lost a kind and devoted friend, a good neighbor and one that stood for what he believed was right.

Until ill health overcame him he was regular in his attendance at church, and began talking about the work of the Master as soon as he came on the church grounds. When he led in prayer it was a benediction to those who listened, and he always prayed on his knees; now therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we shall always remember his faithful service as a deacon in the church.

2. That we extend to his family our deepest sympathy and pray God's richest blessings upon them in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, a copy to the family, and a copy be placed upon the church records.

Respectfully submitted,
Mr. MONROE MARTIN,
Mr. H. S. LOWE,
Mrs. R. W. ISELEY,
Committee.

HANBURY.

In loving memory of my dear husband, Cary Edward Hanbury. Sleep on, my darling, I devotedly loved you so, but our God and Father knew best, so he took you home in heaven to rest.

God called my sweetheart to his heavenly home September 17, 1945. Many lonely hours have I spent, for we were so happy together. Dearest loved one, how I miss you, but I know it was God's will to take you home to heaven, on that bright and golden shore with Jesus forevermore. There is no night there. All is forever bright and cheerful in that beautiful mansion, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Dearest loved one, how I miss you. How I miss your smiling face. Some day, I will meet you in that land of love and peace. You are gone but not forgotten. Never will your memory fade. Loving thoughts will ever linger around the grave where you are laid.

Dearest loved one, you have left me for that heavenly world so fair, safe in the arms of Jesus, you are free from toil and care. Heaven now retaineth my treasure, earth the lovely casket keepeth, and the sunbeams love to linger where my loved one now is laid. When I leave this world of care, I'll find any missing loved one in the Father's mansion fair.

His devoted wife,
IDA T. HANBURY.

FITCH. 1882-1947.

After almost sixty-five years of honest and devoted living, David J. Fitch has been called of God to enter into that house "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Like the Master, "Uncle Dave" was a carpenter who used his hands with skill to build those things needful for the joy of his fellow man. He was an honest and faithful workman, always fair in his dealings with others.

He was a loyal and devoted member of The First Christian Church and of the Loyal Men's Bible Class. He was always concerned that his church go forward in meeting her opportunities. To that end he gave generously of his time, his abilities, and of his substance to his church. This building was his pride and joy, because it bore the marks of his labor. Mixed with the mortar of its walls is the sweat of his brow and in its beauty and usefulness are the marks of his skill.

We the members of the Loyal men's Bible Class, wish to express our gratitude to Almighty God for the privilege of sharing "Uncle Dave's" friendship and love and to recognize our great debt to him. We are better men, because we have known him. We seek the grace of God, that we, too, may live with such high devotion and courage the Christian life. We extend to the family of "Uncle Dave" our sincere sympathy and pray that the sustaining presence of God may be real to them.

We request that a copy of this Memoriam be placed in the records of the Loyal Men's Bible Class, a copy sent to the family, and a copy to "The Christian Sun."

BRITISH CONGREGATIONALIST VISITS AMERICA.

Ernest D. Jeffs of London, England, who is supervising the restoration and reconstruction of bombed churches for the Congregational Union of England and Wales, reached New York September 16 and made his first public appearance at a luncheon in his honor at the Parkside Hotel, New York City, Thursday noon, September 18. The luncheon was under the auspices of the Church building Department of the Congregational Christian Board of Home Missions, William Kincaid Newman, Secretary, 287 Fourth Avenue. Mr. Jeffs spoke on the problems of reconstructing English churches. While in America, Mr. Jeffs will visit other cities including Boston, Chicago, Indianapolis and Washington, to study American church architecture, building materials and construction methods.

Coming to America to study the arrangements, structure and design of American churches, Mr. Jeffs also brings the dramatic story of his experiences during the war. He has been concerned with the first-aid repairs of well over 150 churches in London representing all denominations. He was in London during all the "blitzes" and often was near the spot where the bombs fell, with a crew of men to patch up the damage if possible.

Mr. Jeffs is a lay preacher of the Congregational churches, an active worker among youth and was choir master in several London churches. He is a member of the London Congregational Union Council.

fessions. One young man is a partner in a furniture store in a North Carolina town and one a contractor, and a number of other boys hold prominent positions in their chosen professions. The girls have for the most part entered secretarial and nursing professions, though the large majority of them are homemakers.

During the past few months the Orphanage had done an extensive job of repairing the buildings, painting and redecorating. The physical equipment of the institution today is a credit to our churches which owns and directs its affairs.

While the income of the Orphanage has increased considerably over the years, living expenses have increased proportionately and in order for the Orphanage to do the sort of work needed for our present day more funds are needed.

I wish to pay my personal tribute to Mr. Johnston as not only having been a wise business manager of the affairs of the Orphanage, but he has been a fatherly counselor to the boys and girls, and through his fidelity and steadfast Christian life has been a source of inspiration to them. It is a joy to see the affection the boys and girls have for Mr. Johnston.

The Christian Orphanage is worthy of support of the members of our churches and we are gratified that those outside our church have seen the quality of the work and have given substantially to its support. Last year our churches gave approximately $21,000 and outside about $24,000. If you would like to make a gift to the character and development of worthy boys and girls you may rest assured that in making a contribution to the Orphanage that your gift will be gratefully received and wisely expended.

The Growing Significance of World Communion Day

By JESSE M. BADER, Executive Secretary
Department of Evangelism

One of the most significant days in the annual calendar of the churches is World Communion Day, the first Sunday in October. This year the date is October the fifth. The non-Roman churches of the world began the observing of this day together in 1940. Among the objectives of the day is to secure the presence of every member of each local congregation at the Lord's Table.

It is at the Lord's Table that Christians have their deepest and holiest emotions. It is there that high resolves are made and new dedications of life are experienced. One church in Kansas City has observed World Communion Day for eight consecutive years. Each year the attendance has been equal to that of its Easter church attendance, because the minister has selected 70 men each year to make a visitation of the entire membership. He has met with them one evening during the last week of September. They have been instructed, teamed and given their list of names upon which to call. On the last Sunday morning in September, at the conclusion of the worship service, and just before the benediction, the minister asks these 70 men to come forward and stand before the chancel. Here, before the congregation, these visitors are dedicated in prayer for their afternoon task. What this church has done, many others can do and with the same results.

After a summer slump and following vacation days, the minister and other leaders in the church are anxious to have the autumn's work start on a high spiritual plan with all the pews filled. If carefully prepared for, World Communion Day will do both.

Union communion services are not contemplated on World Communion Day. The plan calls for each Congregation to seek to have every one of its own members at its own Communion Table. No member should be overlooked. Those who are aged or ill should have the Holy Communion taken to them.

The followship about the Lord's Table on October fifth will be world-wide. Christians will begin the day first out in New Zealand. From then on, there will not be an hour during the 24 when vast numbers of Christians in the various time zones of the world will not be at the Holy Communion Table to do as Christ commanded when He said, "This do in remembrance of me."

The Communion Services across the world will be conducted in many languages. Many different races will sit down or kneel before the Lord's Table. Different orders of service will be followed in different congregations but all will be remembering the same Lord.

World Communion Day will have significant value, as Christians of all the many denominations have a sense of their oneness in Christ and a realization of their fellowship in Him, as they come before His Table to partake of the bread and drink of the cup. Here, they meet Him and here they experience a glorious fellowship with one another.

Sharing the Good News

By ARTHUR JOHN

Pastor, United Church of South India

Christ's coming to earth was a dream come true; it was God brought to the door of man's heart. Some one has called it, "God taking short steps that man could keep up with Him." Eternal truth broke out in the vernacular of humanity and God became colloquial. Young and old could grip the hand of Christ and feel the nearness of God. They could watch the teardrops on his cheeks and understand his deep sympathy. Jesus bridged the great gulf between heaven and earth and brought meaning to our existence.

That is why we feel we have a unique gospel to preach—the good news of the Heavenly Being brought nearer the earth, of the Divine Being made human, of the Transcending Being made near to us. When we have an experience of Christ it transforms our whole life and we are obsessed by it. Our hearts are so full of it that we cannot help but pass it on to other people. And that is evangelism. It is not only sad experiences that you "get off your chest." If your experience of Christ has been real and overpowering you are bound to express the joy of it, and to do it naturally and automatically.

To be evangelists, therefore, we first need to experience this great obsession of Christ ourselves. In India we have men coming to our doors to sell soap, but if we ask them, we find that they have never used the soap themselves. Let us never try to preach without having experienced His transforming power ourselves. Once we feel Christ in our lives, the occasion for testimony finds its own way.

Years ago a friend, a student, was asked at a camp to tell how he became a Christian. He started to tell how he gave his heart to Christ but he was so obsessed with the whole experience that words failed him; he stood silent for a long time, tears in his eyes, and then, after a struggle, he brought out just one word, "Jesus," and sat down. No one ever made a deeper impression on me than that young man.

Once I accompanied a Swedish missionary on an evangelistic tour in our part of India. I wondered whether the village people were getting anything out of it when I heard the scholarly language he was using. He struggled to pass on to them something of his own experience of Jesus as the Way, the Truth and the Life. I mingled with the people later to see what they got out of it. I found them all saying, "This man has been with God; he has something in his heart to pass on."

Let us first be sure that we have a transforming experience of Christ to pass on. Then we shall be so filled with it that we shall be compelled to pass our knowledge of Him on. The real Christian cannot help sharing the good news.

NEWS AND VIEWS

There will be an all-day home-coming at New Elam Christian Church on the third Sunday in October. Everyone is invited to attend including all the former pastors. Dinner will be served as usual.

Our attention has been called to the fact that neither the late Dr. W. W. Staley nor Dr. S. C. Harrel hold the record for length of active service in a pastorate of the Southern Convention. Dr. I. W. Johnson, the dean of Eastern Virginia ministers, has served the Oakland Christian Church for forty-nine years. It is our sincere hope that he will not only round out his half-century of service there but will be spared to serve for many, many more years.

EASTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference meets at Turner's Chapel, near Sanford, N. C., October 21-22. We desire to provide for the comforts and entertainment of all delegates and visitors. Those desiring overnight accommodations, please notify Mrs. R. L. Ross, Route 5, Sanford, N. C., at once.

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK, CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL.

Folding chairs had to be carried into the vestibule of the First Congregation Christian Church in Berkley on Sunday afternoon to accommodate the overflow crowd of members, former members and friends who came to celebrate the centennial anniversary of the church.

Highlights in the history of the church, which is the oldest worshipping house on the Southside, were reviewed by W. J. Thomas, a deacon and former secretary for some 25 years. The church had its beginning on October 6, 1847, when the Rev. Stephen S. Barrett organized what was then known as the Jerusalem Church at Ferry Point.

Principal speaker at the ceremonies was Dr. John G. Truitt, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church.

Supt. W. T. Scott brought special greetings to the congregation.

Other greetings and messages of congraulation were extended by several visiting ministers, including Dr. N. G. Newman, Rev. J. F. Morgan, Rev. B. L. Rhodes, of the Berkley Avenue Baptist Church.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

BOARD OF EDITORS.

Editor.....Robert Lee House
Managing Editor.....J. T. Kernodle
Associate Editors—D. J. Bowden, S. C. Harrell, F. C. Lester, H. S. Smith, Peter Young.

THE PROPOSED MERGER BETWEEN THE EVANGELICAL REFORMED AND CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

In the next two or three issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN there will be printed articles pertaining to the proposed merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church. The purpose of these articles is to acquaint our people with the issues involved and the proposal. THE CHRISTIAN SUN will carry a list of the Evangelical and Reformed Churches within the area covered by the Southern Convention together with statistical information.

A joint committee appointed four years ago by the two denominations has worked constantly to arrive at a basis upon which the two communions might unite. Several editions of the Basis of Union have been prepared, studied and modified. The final Basis of Union was adopted by the joint committee January 22, 1947.

The Executive Committee of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches met with the representatives of conference groups of the Congregational Christian Churches, voted to send the Basis of Union in its final form to the Conferences (Convention), Associations (Conferences), and local churches for study and vote.

Because the Southern Convention and its Conferences are organized somewhat differently from the State Conferences and Associations of the General Council, it seemed to the Executive Board of the Convention that the logical procedure on the matter of registering approval or disapproval on the merger within the Southern Convention should be by Conference and by the Convention, and by the local churches where desired. It has been suggested that churches desiring to register their votes might do so before the Conferences met and therefore instruct local church delegates to register the church vote in the respective Conference Session. Copies of the Basis of Union have gone to each pastor and church.

The following resolution has been suggested by the General Council for vote:

1. "Resolved that this (local church, conference, convention) hereby register its decision upon the proposal to unite the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian Churches into the United Church of Christ, in accordance with the Basis of Union dated January 22, 1947, by the following vote: (approval, or disapproval).

2. "Resolved that in the event of the consummation of the union this (local church, conference, or convention) hereby undertakes to continue the same relationship with the United Church of Christ that it now holds with the fellowship of Congregational Christian Churches (approval, or disapproval)."

It is hoped that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will study the Basis of Union. It is our purpose to raise certain questions of principles involved in the merger and to explain them in the coming issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

BASIS OF UNION

of the

Congregational Christian Churches
and the

Evangelical and Reformed Church
*Adopted by the Joint Committee
22 January 1947*

PREAMBLE

We, the regularly constituted representatives of the Congregational Christian Churches and of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, moved by the conviction that we are united in spirit and purpose and are in agreement on the substance of the Christian faith and the essential character of the Christian life;

Affirming our devotion to one God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our membership in the holy catholic Church, which is greater than any single church and than all the churches together;

Believing that denominations exist not for themselves but as parts of that Church, within which each denomination is to live and labor and, if need be, die; and

Confronting the divisions and hostilities of our world, and hearing with a deepened sense of responsibility by the prayer of our Lord "that they all may be one";

Do now declare ourselves to be one body, and do set forth the following articles of agreement as the basis of our life, fellowship, witness, and proclamation of the Gospel to all nations.

I. NAME

The name of the Church formed by this union shall be UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST.*

This name expresses a fact: it stands for the accomplished union of two church bodies each of which has arisen from a similar union of two church bodies.† It also expresses a hope: that in time soon to come, by further union between this Church and other bodies, there shall arise a more inclusive United Church.

II. FAITH

The faith which unites us and to which we bear witness is that faith in God which the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments set forth, which the ancient Church expressed in the ecumenical creeds, to which our own spiritual fathers gave utterance in the evangelical confessions of the Reformation, and which we are in duty bound to express in the words of our time as God Himself gives us light. In all our expressions of that faith we seek to preserve unity of heart and spirit with those who have gone before us as well as those who now labor with us.

In token of that faith we unite in the following confession‡, as embodying those things most surely believed and taught among us:

We believe in God the Father Almighty, Creator and Sustainer of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ, His Son, our Lord and Saviour, who for us and our salvation lived and died and rose again and lives for evermore; and in the Holy spirit, who takes of the things of Christ and shows them to us, renewing, comforting, and inspiring the souls of men.

We acknowledge one holy catholic Church, the innumerable company of those who, in every age and nation, are united by the Holy Spirit to God in Christ, are one body in Christ,

*If the name "United Church of Christ" seems presumptuous, it should be remembered that any good general name must seem so, since it would apply equally well to other groups. A name, however, quickly becomes a mere means of classification, and it is hoped that the world will soon come to know that the Churches uniting under this name do not pretend to be more than they actually are.

†See the brief history appended to this Basis of Union.

‡This confession expresses the content and meaning of the faith held generally by the members of the two uniting communions. It is not to be considered a substitute for any confession of faith which may be used in any congregation today. Like the ampler statement called for in Article IV, Section F, it is designed to be a testimony, and not a test, of faith.

ASSETS or LIABILITIES

Americans drank more liquor and smoked more cigarettes in 1946 than during the previous year, it is disclosed by a survey of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The liquor companies reported net profits after income taxes of $148,389,000 or 7.0 per cent of sales in 1946 compared to $64,699,000 or 3.6 per cent of 1945 sales. This was the largest jump in net profits reported by any of the major industries included in the survey.

Those who judge progress by the cash register will applaud this announcement. Others will view it with misgivings, yea with shame. Our Western Dives goes on heedlessly smoking and drinking at his banquet, while Lazarus begs for crumbs. The legs upon which Christian America must stand are being reduced and weakened. Said the Master: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

CHILDREN'S PAGE

Since the resignation of Mrs. Todd, our Children's Page has been without an editor. Repeated efforts have been made to secure a successor to Mrs. Todd. Those who were invited expressed interest and appreciation, but felt that they did not have the time which this assignment would require. We are still looking for someone with the proper qualifications, but in the meanwhile material for the page must be prepared. Mrs. House has consented to accept this responsibility on an "ad interim" or "pinch hitting" basis. She, too, has many responsibilities in home and church, and would like to caution her readers at the outset not to expect too much of her.

VIRGINIA FORESTS

Many of our people should be interested in the announcement that Virginia Forests, Inc., will meet at the Hotel John Marshall, Richmond, October 24. The subject for discussion at the session will be "How To Improve the Forest Situation in Virginia." Dr. F. S. Korstian, dean of the School of Forestry at Duke University, will be the principal speaker. Among the objectives of the organization are the following points: "To develop a unified forestry program for Virginia, strengthen existing State forestry agencies, obtain industry and landowner cooperation, publicize the value of our forests, secure better cutting practices, enact supporting legislature, prevent wild forest fires, improve game resources, reforest idle acres and educate our youth."

The association through its publications, has pointed out that "Landowners, tempted by high stumpage prices, are apt to permit their timber to be cut to such an extent that future crops will be jeopardized. Existing forestry agencies, especially the State Forest Service, should be strengthened materially, if they are to cope successfully with the problems that confront them."

We salute this organization on the eve of its significant meeting and wish it success in the attainment of its worthy objectives.

UNITED MISSIONS

A total of $32,829,804 was expended for overseas mission work during the fiscal year 1946 by 100 Protestant mission boards and agencies in the United States and Canada, it was reported by Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, general secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. Dr. Fairfield presented his report at a meeting of the Committee of Reference and Counsel, executive body of the Foreign Missions Conference.

More than half of the total—$19,754,976—was sent to foreign fields by mission boards representing the following seven denominations, the report disclosed: General Conference of Seventh-Day Adventists, $4,570,096; Southern Baptist Convention, $4,498,413; Methodist Church, $3,858,553; Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., $3,334,934; Assemblies of God, $1,351,318; Protestant Episcopal Church, $1,204,144; and the Congregational Christian Church, $937,518.

The 100 missions boards and agencies supplying information for the report are all affiliated with the Foreign Missions Conference and represent 66 Protestant denominations. Foreign mission interests of a number of churches are represented by more than one agency, it was stated.

RADIO MINISTRY

A call for the establishment of a Protestant Radio Commission to help the churches of America develop and administer a "unified religious radio ministry," has been issued. Release of the call was authorized at a special meeting of 50 top-ranking church council executives and denominational leaders held in Bronxville, New York.

Major functions of the proposed Commission, according to the call, will be to encourage a wider and more adequate use of religious radio; to represent the Protestant churches in maintaining Christian standards of public decency and good taste in commercial programs; to develop intelligent radio listening on the part of church people; to represent Protestantism in inter-faith broadcasts; to provide professional radio services and consultation for state and local councils of churches; to further cordial relations with the radio industry; and to represent the Protestant church before the Federal Communications Commission.

One of the first projects of the proposed Commission, the call stated, will be to institute a "broadly envisaged and carefully formulated research study of the field of religious radio and the church's relation thereto."

A RELIGION OF POWER.*

A Sermon

By REV. W. OWEN, D. D., Pastor,
First Congregational Church,
Hyde Park, Massachusetts.

TEXT: "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world.—
I John 4:4.

Within each human life there is a potential greater than the possibilities of the atomic bomb. This is due to the fact that we are not mechanical devices nor forces that we are persons made in the image of God, and therefore have the capacity of relationship with God.

Religion is not essentially a creed nor a ritual, but a relationship. When the human spirit and the divine unite in mystic union, the resources of God become the resources of man.

We have greater power than any mechanical or chemical force, because we have within us, in this spiritual fellowship, the Creator and Sustainer of the Universe, and the Creator is greater than the creation. It was for the re-establishment of this relationship, marred by sin, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world to Himself.

Two things are necessary for the realization of this power. First: Discipline. Second: Appropriation.

By discipline I mean self-discipline, about which most of us know very little. Multitudes of people are willing to be regimented if they can avoid the responsibility and effort of disciplining themselves, but the way of power is the way of self-discipline. "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Luke 9:23.) "For narrow is the gate and straitened the way, that leadeth unto life, and few are they that find it." (Matthew 7:14.)

This is the paradox of Christianity, for self-denial in life's lower ranges brings freedom in its higher phases. Self-discipline for a noble purpose releases life's energies in a higher sphere, where satisfactions are keener, relationships dearer; where the view broadens, beauty unfolds, and one is in rapport with the universe and with the ongoing purpose of the Creator.

Wilfred Grenfell left friends and fortune in England for lonely Labrador; Albert Schweitzer left fame and wealth for the desolate and disease-ridden tribes of Africa; Mary Reed shared the loneliness of the lepers in the mountains of Northern India. But they all achieved abundance of life and even fame, that could come only through the cross of Christ.

A Japanese youth in my congregation has pledged $5.00 per week to the Church. He recently asked me whether he should tithe before or after deducting his withholding tax, social security and insurance. If all Christian people would act upon the same principle, the Church would not only solve its financial problems, but would ride out on a wave of spiritual power that would stir the local communities and ripple out to our farthest mission fields.

One of the tragedies of our mission work today is the shock that sincere converts receive when they see the luxury, self-indulgence and worldliness of American Christians, with whom they come into contact.

The mystics were people who tried, by discipline, to realize a unity with God. Some think that they were rather useless sentimentalists but that is very far from the truth.

St. Augustine, the mystic, was far from "an idle contemplative." He was an active administrator and bishop, a prolific writer, a vital and powerful preacher and a participant in the great religious problems of the day. Time would fail me to speak of St. Francis Assisi, St. Bernard of Clairvaux, Jan Ruysbroeck, St. Theresa, Meister Eckhart, Hildegard and a host of others, whose disciplined lives brought them the presence of God, and sent them out into the world to rebuke evil in high places, to administer great institutions, to preach, to write and to inspire others to purity of life and sacrificial work for humanity.

One outstanding American mystic is Rufus Jones, now retired from Haverford College. In all American life it would be hard to find a person more conscious of God, yet more active for social betterment than this founder of the American Friends Service Committee.

By self-discipline they opened the windows of heaven, saw visions, and realized a divine energy that gave them a more than human power for service. They were able to do so much because, through discipline, they experienced God and God is dynamic.

The second thing for the realization of power is appropriation. It is claiming God. Jesus called it Faith. Faith is a mystery. It seems a strange, vague, psychological, spiritual, elusive experience, and yet we know that it works. It releases power.

The divine power within us may be undiscovered and unused, as electrically, radio, and atomic energy were, unless we recognize and appropriate this power by faith. God is with you and in you. You may not be able to demonstrate it by logic, or mathematics, but you can prove it by recognizing, trusting and using it.

Most people wait for things to happen, for conditions to change, for success to come, for health to improve. Faith claims and puts to use the power that changes things. Faith is the vital element in prayer.

Faith is an adventure. It is based on evidence, but not proof. It grasps the hand of God in the dark. The vital word in the 23rd Psalm is the word with. "Thou are with me." God is with you and in you, but awaits your recognition, your faith, your trust, your appropriation of Him before He guides and energizes your life. Faith is giving substance to things hoped for. It is mentally, emotionally and actively recognizing that God is with you and in you.

Think not the faith by which the just shall live

Is a dead creed, a map correct of heaven,
Far less a feeling, fond and fugitive,
A thoughtless gift, withdrawn as soon as given,

It is an affirmation and an act
That bids eternal truth be present fact.

In the 11th chapter of Hebrews is a long list of those who have recognized, appropriated and used this Divine Power, including Abraham, Moses, Gideon, Elijah. St. Paul fulfilled his vast ministry by the recognition and appropriation of this Divine Power in his life.

Fifty-eight years ago Charles Fillmore was a financial and physical wreck, hopeless to his physician. Now at ninety-four he is still head of the Unity Enterprise with a million dollar industrial plant, because he recognized his unity with God.

Most of us who have come to some realization of spiritual power are at best very imperfect examples of its possibilities. Yet we have seen and felt and realized enough to point the direction for greater achievement. We know that as we have been able to adjust our lives to the will of God, to

THE LOCAL CHURCH.

In a denomination with the congregational form of government, the local church is autonomous. It decides who is eligible for membership and the conditions on which an individual is received into its membership. It elects its own officers, calls its pastor, and has the right to close its doors against its pastor when in the church judgment conditions warrant such action. But when the local church affiliates itself with other local churches in the formation of what is known as a conference, the local church in such an organization surrenders certain phases of its autonomy. The local churches have associated themselves together for mutual assistance and have a united program in the work of the church and for the furtherance of the gospel of Christ.

In the case of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches the local church, through the local conferences and under the guidance of the Convention, is associated with its sister churches in the matter of founding, building, and supporting necessary boards and institutions. The church that assumes only the responsibility for its local program, taking no responsibility for the larger programs of conference and Convention is derelict of its duty and should examine itself to see what has blurred its vision and hindered its services.

The Southern Convention along with other boards and other institutions founded Elon College as its institution of higher learning. The Convention has reasons to be proud of its adventure into the field of Christian higher education and of Elon College as it institution. Elon College has a campus and instructional facilities that brook no apology. Living conditions are not in line with living conditions on the campuses of our better colleges. At present Elon College is facing a serious and immediate emergency. The heating plant that has served so well and so long has about come to the end of its usefulness. Desperate efforts are now being made to erect a building and install new equipment that will provide sufficient heat for the comfort of the college and its students. Considering existing conditions efforts are fairly successful. Building operations are exceeding funds with which to pay. Bills totaling $70,260 are submitted for payment. A total of $45,000 is in hand for this purpose. Twenty-five thousand dollars is needed at once. Another $70,000 will be due and payable within ninety days. An appeal is made to the churches if they will please to pay their voluntary apportionments on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation as quickly as possible. Necessary amounts to insure membership in the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and full accreditation of the college were borrowed from undesignated funds. In this emergency I am sure that every church in our Convention will be glad to raise the amount asked for and send same to the college immediately. Attached hereto is a list of the churches of the Convention with amounts asked for, amounts paid, and balances due. Should any church object to its contribution being used to repay the amount borrowed from undesignated funds, its contribution will be promptly added to the endowment.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It was a really great conference session. Every seat in the Waverly Church was taken, and every vacant space was filled with extra chairs. What a large congregation of women it was! Outstanding were the three reports of the three district superintendents. They showed that the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference is well organized, and that they take their mission seriously, and with a spirit of genuine consecration and devotion. I was an onlooker as were other pastors of the Conference, and several laymen. To me it was a great inspiration. Every pastor present there today can go back to his field assured that those women are at work for a better church and a happier, healthier world.

Their total offerings this year amounted to $510.90 more than those of last. They raised this year $8,480.26. With their balance in bank their grand total was $8,700.74. Nearly all the churches of the conference have Woman's Missionary Societies—37 churches according to the treasurer's printed report. In 27 churches there are Young People's Societies. In 24 churches there are Junior Societies. And in 27 churches there are Cradle Rolls. Counting 43 churches in the conference it would seem that they need six new women's societies; 16 new young people's societies; 19 new junior societies; and 16 cradle rolls. Judging from the excellent reports of the district superintendents I feel that they will change that count before next conference. We, of Eastern Virginia, feel that ours is a compact, well organized, and active conference, whether it comes to our regular church conference, our Woman's Conference, or our Young People's Conferences, but we are not going to think that we are anywhere near perfection, rather we shall set to work in all departments of our conference in plan, in prayer, and consecration to do an increasingly bigger, and finer work.

I have been trying to keep "names and faces" out of this article but I cannot refrain from telling you that the president of the Woman's Convention delighted the women with her visit and gracious greetings. Several other guests gladdened the session by their participation. Others made well prepared speeches and reports, and the day was one of good success.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Shaowu Mission,
Fukien, China,
Sept. 18, 1947.

Dear Friends:

Dick has been in Foochow now for two weeks, conferring with the leaders there on all manner of things: the hospital, Han Mei Primary School finances, etc. He has gone to meet Frances Whitaker—if she was ever able to get a boat from Hong Kong to Foochow. With him went a hospital business manager to meet Frances, yes; but also escort that UNRRA X-ray machine up here. Everyone is excited at the prospect and every mailman or messenger we greet with the question in our hearts, "Are they coming?"

When Dick's birthday telegram came, there were several discreet callers afterward inquiring if that was an announcement of his arrival; they wanted to meet him. The next day the telegraph man came around again—this time he brought only a correction sheet with these English words midst all the Chinese: ERROR—birthday CORRECTION—firthday! I do appreciate their conscientiousness at the same time that I laugh at such a natural blunder—perhaps even due to my husband's poor handwriting!

The school for nurses opened this week—there are six very young girls enrolled. Every morning we have an 8:00 o'clock English class, since English is required by the government. Oh, but it's hard for them! Don't know what we will do with words like "tachycardia." Though these student nurses are a hopeful sign for the hospital's future, there are still serious problems of hospital administration and finance which we hope will be improved by Dick's conferences in Foochow.

Pastor Huang just came by to see about helping the little boy who lives in South Gate Church with his school expenses; you remember he had to stop school for lack of money. We also discussed the plans for World Communion Day, October 5; and I showed him the program which just came for World Day of Prayer—

February 13, 1948. I was surely glad to have this material come so early. Those two days we shall feel closer to you, even closer than in regular Sunday services, knowing some of your prayers will be directed toward the Shaowu work.

Much educational work has been done here in the past. Our problem now is to decide what to revive or plan anew with the present limited resources. There is Han Mei Primary School for example, still trying to carry on; but what a pathetic institution it now is. With no money for repairs, the building is more of a crumbling tenement than a school house. With no money for a principal's salary the man serving without pay can't be criticized for his shortcomings—or failures; and the poorly paid teachers can't be held too responsible when even the brighter Han Mei graduates fail to pass entrance exams for junior high school. Here we feel is a real need. When Shaowu has hardly half her children in primary school anyway, we ought to keep up what little is being done.

But then comes word of two hundred or so children who passed exams for junior high, and there is no room for them. And the alumnae of Lo Te Girls School are pressing for that to be reopened. However, back of every suggested project is the crying need for money.

It is disheartening to discuss problem after problem with leaders here and have everyone fall back on the lack of money. Part of our job, of course is to stimulate and help the people use what resources they have. Another is to create a sense of stewardship among the Christians and other leaders here, especially those with some means, to help the church work.

But when we see the hospital folk pulunging ahead to have a nurses' school with three yellowed English texts for the six students, no textbooks for the anatomy course (Ed is teaching that) and many other things to handicap them; when we see Sunday Schools carrying on with no materials, we realize there are people here who will not refuse to work because there is nothing to work with.

We take heart. And when we think of you in the Southern Convention working to earn money for Shaowu, urging others to join you in sharing, digging down again and again in your own pockets, we take heart.

The fields are white with harvest; the laborers are few. But we will all the more increase our own labors.

Sincerely yours,

DOROTHY JACKSON.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

THE THANK OFFERING FOR 1947.

The Woman's Missionary Convention is engaged in a program of Home and Foreign work and giving its support proportionately as the needs are presented. Funds are raised by dues and other means, each society striving, as a part of its conference, to reach the goal or asking of the Convention. It is always with a degree of pride that a society can report its apportionment "paid in full."

And yet, it is in that "over and above" that we find the greater joy, that freewill gift known as the "Thank Offering." Taken each year around the Thanksgiving season, it represents our "thank you" to God for His many gifts to us.

Through the years, the Convention has chosen with care the objects of its Thank Offering. There was the need in the foreign field of Foochow Union High School; then a home project, our own Elon College; back to China for two years in the Shaowu work. This year, the women are turning their attention to the need at home again and voted to help the Southern Convention build a home for its Superintendent.

This recommendation came to the Convention after careful thought on the part of the committee, I am sure. The following are, I think, a few of the many good reasons for its presentation:

1. Any project that aids in the advancement of the work of the Kingdom on the home field is a Home Mission project. The erection of a home for the Superintendent could certainly be thus considered.

2. The Superintendent is a valuable servant of the Woman's Convention and it would seem that the women might gladly share with the Convention the responsibility of providing his home.

3. The Superintendent must have a home. He should not have to know the uncertainty of living in a rented house, since there is always the matter of repairs, the possibility of a change of owners, and the inconvenience of finding another place to live.

4. From the standpoint of economy it would seem wise to build rather than continually pay rent on a home owned by another. Money thus saved might well be directed into more useful channels.

5. The building of a Convention Superintendent's home would certainly represent an investment in the present and for the future.

6. This would represent again the united efforts of many individuals of one fellowship. With each doing his share the result could be a building of which we as a Convention might be justly proud.

Our Woman's Convention voted to back this project. May we give it our support with the enthusiasm that has heretofore characterized the women of the Southern Convention.

NEWS FROM THE SOCIETIES.

WAVERLY.

We of the Waverly Women's Missionary Society are happy to report a year of successful work under the leadership of our president, Mrs. F. E. Knoeller. Our Thank Offering service last November was one of the best attended we have ever had. We also received the largest offering.

We joined the other churches of the town in our World Day of Prayer service, which was well attended.

We also had representatives at our Women's Conference and Spring District meeting. The Bible study, The Divine Fatherhood, was reviewed by our pastor, Mr. J. E. McCuley.

We also held an all-day meeting at our church in May with the ladies from Spring Hill and Centerville, with luncheon. Mrs. Carrol Beale of Wakefield reviewed our mission study books. We also gave a cradle roll party at the church with the mothers of children in attendance.

NEWPORT NEWS YOUNG PEOPLE.

With the coming of the first of October, comes the end of another year of youth activities for the young people of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, Va. The past year has not distinguished itself from others by any spectacular event, but has been a very successful year from the standpoint of many things.

One of the highlights during the past year was Youth Week, which we observed the first week in February. It was carefully planned and the various committees did a good job. Everything went off as planned—something scheduled for every night in the week—beginning with the Quiet Hour conducted as a candle light service in the Chapel on Monday night, and ending with the Youth Banquet on Friday evening.

Our summer outings on Sunday afternoons were another highlight. Each Sunday, beginning in June and continuing through August, the Christian Endeavor Society met at the church and went from there in cars to various points of scenic interest around the Peninsula. We would enjoy recreation during the afternoon, then have a picnic supper and close with Vesper Services. These Vesper Services are always one of our high points of inspiration.

Our society has had representatives at all the Pilgrim Fellowship and Missionary Conferences during the past year. We also had one delegate to attend the International Convention of Christian Endeavor held at San Francisco, California, July 8-13.

MEBANE.

The ladies of the local missionary society are doing an excellent job in presenting the cause of missions to the public. Each fourth Sunday an interesting lesson and a study of missions is held. Each church member has the opportunity to participate in these programs, whereas such participation often entails individual preparation of assignments.

In the interest of the children of the church, the missionary society sponsored a weekly story and music hour during the summer months. The children became acquainted with Bible stories, folk stories, and many interesting children activities.

SHALLOW FORD SOCIETY.

One of the most interesting programs of the Shallow Ford Missionary Society was the lowering of the Service flag. The church was decorated in our National colors. Invitations had been sent to all the service men a week or more before the date for the service.

Upon arrival the boys were met and asked to sit in a group. This was very inspiring to see such a group of fine, young men who had gone out from our community to serve our country and help bring peace to the

FOR THE CHILDREN

Dear Boys and Girls:

I shall be writing for you for awhile. I have been teaching boys and girls in Sunday school for a long time. I began at my home church in Newport News and then I taught at First Church in Portsmouth. Now I teach a class of third-year Primary boys and girls in our Richmond Church. There are some children in my family, too, a boy and a smaller girl.

It is good to know that so many of you read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, at least the Children's Page. I have been reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN since I was five years old and I never thought that some day I would be the wife of the editor.

Last Sunday was World Communion Day. Did some of you go to Communion service? I know that the smaller boys and girls usually aren't members, but maybe the older ones are. It is very fine to think of Christian people around our world taking this Holy Sacrament on the same day. In the Congregational Christian Church of which we are a part, we have the sacraments of baptism and communion. These are services that many of you have seen. Other denominations have the sacraments of marriage and ordination.

Have any of you read the delightful new book called Ya, Ya by Ana Dor? A few of the stories appeared in last month's Mayflower which the Pilgrim Press publishes. These are stories about a brownie and all the fun and troubles that he had. You may read all the stories in the book which is published by Abingdon-Cokesbury Press. The little brownie had as much mischief in his little bones as some boys and girls that I know. And he really got into more trouble! Once he rode up a curtain shade, and another time he found an alarm clock. Do read the adventures of this brownie who wanted to know the meaning of "Ya, Ya." I read some of the stories aloud to my class in Sunday school. We usually don't have "just for fun" stories, but these we couldn't resist. I said some of the stories were in the Mayflower. That is a weekly magazine for Primary boys and girls; there are others for Juniors and Intermediates. If you don't get a paper like this, why don't you ask your teacher about it?

Here are some verses of Scripture for you to look for in the Bible, or to have someone read to you: Deuteronomy 6:5, 18; Psalms 33:5; 104:13-14; 92:1; Mark 4:28, 29. Some of these are about obedience, others about harvest and one is not about either, what does it say?

Please write to me and send news to use on this page. Tell me if you have read interesting stories, seen unusual things or made something different.

Very best wishes,
JUNE JOY HOUSE.

WHEN IN DOUBT—INVESTIGATE.

By THEODORA BROWNFIELD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Paul Bender was just five, and like the "bigger boys" he was now going to school. He came home each day, thrilled to tell what happened and what he had done in kindergarten.

At lunch one day, he spoke of spending time in the cloakroom. His father looked surprised, and his mother asked, "Why was that, Paul?"

"Oh, only one other boy—Donald—and I stay out in the cloakroom," he answered, continuing to eat his lunch.

"Where are the other pupils?" his father asked.

"Oh, they stay in the schoolroom with the teacher. Just we two stay out there."

Now, in the days when Paul's parents went to school, being sent to the cloakroom was a sign of disgrace. Pupils obliged to remain there usually had misbehaved in some way, perhaps caused some disorder in the classroom.

So Mr. Bender said, "What did you do, Son, to deserve the cloakroom?"

"Nothing." Paul continued to eat his pudding placidly. "Nothing, Daddy," he repeated. "Just Donald and I go out in the cloakroom and stay."

"When do you go out there?" Mrs. Bender questioned.

Oh, every morning, just about in the middle," was the rather vague reply. "We just get good and rested," he finished, apparently quite pleased.

His father looked doubtful. "Paul," he began, "what have you been doing? You might as well tell us if you have been naughty."

Paul had always been truthful. In fact, it was one of his strongest points that when he had done anything wrong he would always admit. But this time he looked at his father and repeated, "I just get a chance to go out there and stay for a little while."

"I don't think it looks very well," his father commented. "I shouldn't want to stay in the cloakroom if all the other children stayed in the classroom."

Mrs. Bender smiled as she noticed a gleam of disagreement in Paul's eyes. She said nothing, however, but she decided to stop to see the teacher when she called for Paul some noon-time. This she did two days later.

The teacher spoke highly of Paul. Then his mother remarked casually, "He tells me he's been staying in the cloakroom."

"Yes, he and Donald. You see all the pupils take a rest in mid-morning; they have cots and lie down. I'd noticed that both Paul and Donald relaxed unusually well, so I'd had their cots put in the cloakroom; and often they've fallen soundly asleep."

"That's the explanation!" Paul's mother broke in. "We have been wondering—and doubting Paul."

Yes, he came to me yesterday and pleaded to stay in the classroom," the teacher said. "He told me he didn't want to stay out there any more."

Teacher and parent exchanged significant glances. Both realized that the wrongdoing had been on the parents' side this time. The boy had been innocent of any misbehavior, but both his father and mother had doubted him.

"We shall explain to Paul and ask him to excuse us," said his mother repentantly.

"That will help," said his teacher. "But remember Paul is very young. May I suggest that you make the explanation brief and the apology very simple?—as you would had accidentally knocked down the blockhouse he was building."

"Thank you," said Mrs. Bender. And that is what they did.

GUILFORD-FORSYTH CHURCHES MEET.

The meeting of the Guilford and Forsyth County Churches will be held in the Belew Creek Church in Belew Creek October 12. The meeting will start at 4:00 and end at 7:30. Bring your own lunch as usual.

An interesting program has been planned. The topic is: "Winter In Review, Summer In Preview."

Let's have a good attendance and have a good Christian fellowship together.

BASIS OF UNION

and have communion with Him and with one another.

We acknowledge as part of this universal fellowship all throughout the world who profess this faith in Jesus Christ and follow Him as Lord and Saviour.

We hold the Church to be established for calling men to repentance and faith, for the public worship of God, for the confession of His name by word and deed, for the administration of the sacraments, for witnessing to the saving grace of God in Christ, for the upbuilding of the saints, and for the universal propagation of the Gospel; and in the power of the love of God in Christ we labor for the progress of knowledge, the promotion of justice, the reign of peace, and the realization of human brotherhood.

Depending, as did our fathers, upon the continued guidance of the Holy Spirit to lead us into all truth, we work and pray for the consummation of the Kingdom of God; and we look with faith for the triumph of righteousness and for the life everlasting.

III. PRACTICE

A. The basic unit of organization of the United Church of Christ is the Congregation; that is, the local church.

B. The Congregations, through their ministers and through delegates electer from their members, may organize Associations for fellowship, mutual encouragement, inspiration, and such other functions as may be desired.

C. The Congregations, through their ministers and through delegates elected from their membership, constitute Conferences for fellowship, counsel, and cooperation in all matters of common concern. The Conferences exist to make cooperation effective (a) among their Congregations and (b) between their Congregations and the General Synod, the Boards, commissions, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Church.

D. The Conferences, through delegates elected by them from the membership and ministers of the Congregations located within their respective bounds, constitute the General Synod.

E. Officers, Boards, councils, commissions, committees, departments, agencies, and instrumentalities are responsible to the bodies that elect them.

F. The government of the United Church is exercised through Congregations, Associations, Conferences, and the General Synod in such wise that the autonomy of each is respected in its own sphere, each having its own rights and responsibilities. This Basis of Union defines those rights and responsibilities in principle and the constitution which will be drafted after the consummation of the union shall further define them but shall in no wise abridge the rights now enjoyed by Congregations.

G. Individual communicants have the right of appeal, complaint, or reference to their Congregations, Associations, Conferences, and ultimately to the General Synod. Ministers, Congregations, Associations, and Conferences have similar rights of appeal, complaint, or reference. Decisions rendered in consequence of such appeals, complaints, or references, are advisory, not mandatory.

H. Each Congregation, Association, and Conference has the right of retaining or adopting its own charter, constitution, by-laws, and other regulations which it deems essential and proper to its own welfare. This right includes the holding and operation of its own property.

I. The freedom of worship and of education at present enjoyed by the Congregations of the negotiating communions will be preserved in the United Church. Other freedoms at present enjoyed are not hereby abridged.

J. Men and women enjoy the same rights and privileges in the United Church. It is recommended that at least one third of the members of the national administrative bodies be women.

K. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are the recognized sacraments of the Church.

IV. FUNCTIONS OF THE GENERAL SYNOD

A. The General Synod shall initiate action for the preparation of a constitution of the United Church. This constitution shall be based upon the principles set forth in this Basis of Union. When prepared, it shall be submitted to the General Synod; and the General Synod shall declare it in force when it shall be ratified by not less than two thirds of the former Congregational Christian Churches voting, and by not less than two thirds of the former Evangelical and Reformed Synods.

B. The General Synod shall elect its officers and assign them their duties.

C. The General Synod, directly or through an executive committee, commissions, and other committees, shall carry on the general work of the Church which is now conducted by the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches and the General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church; and through the instrumentality of Boards, commissions, and other organizations as needed, shall meet the responsibilities of the Church for foreign missions, home missions, education, publication, the ministry and ministerial relief, evangelism, stewardship, social action, and institutional benevolence.

D. The General Synod shall have power to receive overtures and petitions; to give counsel in regard to cases referred to it; and to maintain correspondence with other communions.

E. The General Synod shall promote the reorganization of Conferences, Associations, and Synods into Conferences and Associations which shall be constituted on a territorial basis and enjoy a status similar to that of the former Conferences, Associations, and Synods. This reorganization shall be effected by the Conferences, Associations, and Synods concerned, with the counsel and confirmation of the General Synod.

F. If and when the Basis of Union is regularly adopted, the General Synod shall appoint a commission composed of an equal number of representatives of the two uniting communions to prepare a statement of faith based in principle upon Article II of this document, which shall be submitted for approval to the General Synod, Conferences, Associations, and Congregations. This statement shall be regarded as a testimony, and not as a test, of faith.

G. The General Synod shall meet in regular sessions, determine their time, place, frequency, and program, and provide for extraordinary sessions as may be necessary.

H. The executive committee of the General Synod shall be called the Executive Council. Its functions shall correspond to those of the present Executive Committee of the Congregational Christian General Council and of the present General Council of the Evangelical and Reformed General Synod. While it shall not be charged with the administration of the Boards and other agencies and instrumentalities of the communion, it shall be its duty to consider their work, to prevent duplication of activities, to effect all possible economies of administration, to correlate the work of the several organizations, including their publicity and promotional activities, so as to secure the maximum of efficiency with the minimum of expense. It shall have the right to examine the annual budgets

THE CREATIVE POWER OF FAITH.

LESSON III—OCTOBER 19, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen.—Hebrews 11:1.

LESSON: Hebrews 11-13. Genesis 12:1-9.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 5:1-8.

Beyond Reason To Faith.

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Or as another interprets it, "assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen." Or again, "the confidence that our hopes will be realized and the conviction of the reality of the unseen world." It does not go contrary to reason, but often it goes beyond reason. Faith often begins where reason ends. But it is not irrational, and it is not simply wishful thinking. It is grounded in reality and based upon convictions that are sound. Let not science poke fun at religion because it frankly has a large element of faith in it. Science itself is based on faith. Science itself could not carry on its investigations or do its work without faith.

Faith is not blind credulity. And faith in the sense in which it is used by the writer of Hebrews does not mean a mere creed, or an intellectual formula. It is not so much a matter of the head as of the heart, although as has been said it does not ban the use of the head. It believes in truth but it also practices trust. It is the core of reality on which life ultimately must rest.

The Necessity of Faith.

"Without faith it is impossible to please God; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." The idea of God Himself is a heroic act of faith. One would hardly come to Him unless he believed that God was. When a man begins to think about God, or to seek to do business with God, he must believe that God is, that he is dealing with reality, that it is not simply a matter of hocus-pocus, or the working of a diseased imagination.

And if a man is to have any satisfactory experience of God he must believe not only that God is, that God exists, that God is real, but that He is a rewarder of those who diligently, persistently, earnestly seek

Him. He must believe that something really can happen when he comes to God in the proper way. No half-hearted faith will do and no half-hearted effort will do. God is Reality, and God is realizable, if there is such a word. When a man starts out in search of God he is not going down a dead-end street or up a blind alley. He has a right to expect something to happen if he seeks earnestly and persistently.

A Grand Venture of Faith.

"Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things that do appear." Perhaps the grandest venture of faith is faith in the existence of God. From that basic faith, man moved on in another grand adventure in faith—the faith that the worlds were created by God. Here again the religious man does not have to apologize to the scientific man. The difference between them, that is between the irreligious scientist and the religious man, is largely a matter of names or to be a little more high-brown, of terminology. The religious man says that back of the worlds we see there was God's wisdom and creative power and goodness. The scientist simply refers to it all as First Cause, or some such impersonal force or power. This universe is a marvelous and mysterious thing. But on every hand there are evidences of order and organization and the increase of goodness. The simplest and the only finally satisfactory explanation for it all is that "in the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth." It goes beyond reason, but it is very reasonable.

Faith's Hall of Fame.

The eleventh chapter of Hebrews is a kind of "Hall of Fame," a "Westminster Abbey" of the heroes of faith. Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, David, all have a niche or plaque in this Hall of Fame. And there are lesser names there also—Gideon, Barak, Jephthah, Samuel, and the prophets. One walks with quiet step and thoughtful and awed spirit as he looks at these plaques, and reads the citations thereon. They were men of varied temperaments and gifts but they had one thing in common—they were men of faith. They believed that there was more to the world and to life than could be experienced through the five senses. They walked by faith and not by sight.

The Faith of Unorthodox Believers.

There are some strange names on the the plaques, too. Rahab is there, and she was a heathen harlot. Samson is there and he is a sorry sample of manhood in its moral and spiritual qualities. But there they are with the others. Their names there remind us that often there is vital faith even in unorthodox believers, even in those whose lives may be shabby and sordid. Indeed as the poet wrote there is often more faith in honest doubt than in some man-made creeds. Faith is often found in the most unexpected places and in the most unexpected persons.

Unnamed Heroes of Faith.

There was not room in the Hall of Fame for all the heroes of faith. In despair the writer of Hebrews asks: "And what shall I say more? for the time would fail me to tell of . . ." To tell of those unnumbered and unnamed heroes of faith, men and women, yes and young people, who also belonged there. They were a grand and gallant company. The world was not worthy of them. They died not having received the promise but they kept their faith. There are men and women today, leaders who have great faith. But there are unnamed and unknown heroes of the faith, God's gallant people, doing the commonplace tasks of life, carrying burdens heavy and grievous to be borne, enduring privation and suffering, sticking by their tasks, often unnoticed and unappreciated, a great host which no man can number whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life.

Life's Cheering Section.

"Therefore seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith." We do not play the game before an empty grandstand or bleachers. There are those who care, and care tremendously, watching us, encouraging us, wishing us well, praying for us. And at the end of the course is the One who is the source and the end of our faith. The race is not to the swift. We cannot always mount up with wings like eagles, nor can we run and not become weary, but with Him we can walk and not faint, and at the end of the race there is a crown of righteousness for those who endure unto the end.

whole world. These had been backed by our prayers, letters, and gifts! One fine young man from our community paid the supreme sacrifice.

Our pastor, Rev. Walter W. Hall, made a splendid address and welcomed the boys back to our church and community. A response was given by Boyd Tickett. The stars had been removed from the flag and attached to strips of satin ribbon to form book marks. These were presented to the boys. Patriotic songs were used during the program.

At the close of the program every one present was invited to the church basement, where a picnic lunch had been spread which was enjoyed by all.

WINDSOR.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Windsor Church feels that we have had a good year. We close our year's work with feelings of regret and gladness—regret that we have not done more for the spreading of the Gospel—and gladness that we have been blessed with health and strength to carry on His great work.

We joined with the other churches in our town in observing World Community Day. We also had a Thank Offering service in November. On February 21, we joined with the other churches on this charge in observing World Day of Prayer.

We have secured eight subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

We sent our offering to Carroll County to help with their vacation Bible School.

The Antioch society invited us to join them in hearing Mr. Ammons of the Presbyterian Church review the foreign book.

We have thoroughly enjoyed the book, The Divine Fatherhood, taught by Mrs. J. M. Rabey.

The Missionary Aid, a circle of our society, has been very active this year and has added several new members.

We hope to meet all the requirements for the year, and with the help of our Heavenly Father want to continue to go forward in His work.

MRS. ALLEN BEALE,
President.

RADIO MINISTRY.

Emphasizing that for the first time in history the church has in radio "a God-given instrument whereby the Gospel of Christ may be brought to all men," the call declared: "In this day of crisis and opportunity, the church must speak with a united voice. A divided and competing Christianity cannot bring a united world. Earnest-minded Christians in all the Protestant denominations are calling for a concerted program of witness to the Lordship of Christ."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our Pleasant Hill Sunday School picnicked here Saturday, September 27. This was one of the largest groups that has visited us this season, one hundred and fifty strong. We were happy to have them come, and many of them had never visited the orphanage before. We were delighted to show them over the buildings, barn, dairy herd, and the hogs. They were well pleased with what they saw and paid us many compliments. After they had visited all the buildings, etc., they said it was time for a picnic dinner. They began to open the trucks of their cars and take out baskets of chicken, pies, cakes, and everything good to eat. They loaded the table until it began to sway between the beams. We were really uneasy for fear the table would give way. It has been a long time since we saw a table so heavily laden with good things to eat. The entire orphanage was invited to have a part, and oh! how they enjoyed it. After everyone had eaten there was enough left for another meal. Mr. Fogleman, who was an inmate here twenty years ago, set the children up to ice cream. He had a very busy time dipping out the cream and putting it in cones as fast as the children ate it.

We all had a good time together, and I hope the good people from our Pleasant Hill Church enjoyed their visit as much as the orphanage group enjoyed having them. We hope they will visit us again sometime.

We are always glad to have people visit us. We feel we have one of the nicest small orphanage plants there is in North Carolina.

The little cold spell we are having during the last days of September and the first of October has made the children begin to call for shoes. But when it turns warm they will want to take them off just as badly.

It is natural for a child to want a new pair of shoes. The writer remembers well how happy he was when father went to the store in the fall of the year and bought shoes for the family. The first pair of shoes we remember when we were small had a brass band around the toe. We also remember how happy we were to get them. The little boys and girls here get better shoes now, and they are always delighted to get new shoes.

We were in a store a few days ago looking at shoes and getting prices. They are out of sight in price for a good solid leather shoe. It does not pay to buy a cheap shoe, because when they get wet they come to pieces. We can see our small bank account melt away when we begin to buy fall shoes and clothing. We hope you will make your offerings large to help us meet this expense.

of the several national organizations and have access to their books and records. It shall make report of its actions to the General Synod at each stated meeting of that body and present to that Synod such recommendations as it may deem wise for the furtherance of the efficiency and economical administration of the several organizations. It shall study the relative needs of these organization, including the Conferences, and recommend the apportionment percentages for the distribution of benevolent contributions.

I. For the interim between the effecting of the union and the adoption of the constitution, the membership of the Executive Council shall be twenty-four, with equal representation of the uniting communions.

J. This Executive Council shall have a budget under its control, with income for it derived from the present sources of revenue of the General Council of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Executive Committee of the General Council of Churches. It shall carry out faithfully all obligations of both of these bodies and conserve as separate funds all funds of both bodies until otherwise provided.

K. There shall be a central receiving treasury for all funds contributed to the General Synod and all the national agencies and instrumentalities. Each Conference will decided whether its Congregations shall be encouraged to send their moneys for these organizations direct to the central treasury or through the Conference treasurers.

L. No attempt will be made to set up a detailed plan for the solicitation, collection, and disbursement of missionary, benevolent, and administrative funds before the union is effected, but the General Synod shall be requested at its first meeting to appoint a special committee adequately representing all interests to deal with these matters and to report at a later date. In any plan it is understood:

1. That all property rights and trust funds shall be scrupulously protected as provided in Article IX, Sections A and C, of the Basis of Union.
2. That an adequate budgetary system will be established which will be voluntary in character on the part of the Congregations, Associations, Conferences, and Synods but in which due emphasis will be placed on the moral responsibility of all to support the general work of the Church.

M. Pending the report of the committee to be appointed by the General Synod and until new policies are adopted, present practices in apportion allocations, per capita assignments, and kindred matters shall be maintained.

N. The choice of location of headquarters for the United Church of Christ shall be left until after the union is effected.

recognize and to apply the Divine intelligence and power within us to life's daily tasks and problems, life has become more successful, problems have found their solution and, with all our imperfections, we know that we have found the secret of abundant life.

You, Charles, and Gertrude Heuser, are taking your disciplined lives to the islands of the distant seas in order to build there in the lives of eager and needy people the richness and power of Jesus Christ. There will no doubt be days of loneliness and temptation to discouragement. But you may go with a sense of infinite power. You are not only working together with God, but God Himself is in you and working through you. You are working with every law that God has made to govern the universe, and you cannot be defeated. You are more than conquerors because you have within you the Source of all wisdom and all energy.

Your work may be hindered by the selfish and evil influence of others or by circumstances beyond your control. Your success may be postponed, but no one can stop the process to which you devote your lives, and every unselfish act will count.

You will find a rich fellowship with some of the best personalities in the world, and your own lives may be challenged by some of your converts who have not yet learned to rationalize the Sermon on the Mount.

You are putting your lives into a great process. It is not so much what we achieve ourselves, as how well we fit into God's onmoving purpose. A quiet woman in my parish recently died at ninety-two. She lived abstemiously and righteously, tithing her small income, teaching the young, serving the community and fitting quietly into God's plan. Alexander the Great made a name for himself in history, but he left bloodshed and confusion in his wake. I doubt if he fitted into God's process as well or as effectively as did this gentle and sacrificial soul.

You go with a sense of mission. As you accept the cross of Christ, lose your lives for His sake, and as you appropriate God's presence, you will go having within you the Source of all wisdom and power, and your lives will fit invincibly into the progress of Christ's Kingdom. "Greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world." I congratulate you and bid you God-speed.

Weekday Religious Education in Virginia

Virginia youth is being given its rightful religious inheritance through weekday religious education promoted by the churches in the Old Dominion where more than 60,000 children will enroll in religious education classes this fall in 51 counties of the Commonwealth.

Since the first classes were started in 1929 with 1,411 pupils taught religious education by two teachers in four counties of the State, the program has grown by leaps and bounds until today—less than two decades later—more than half of Virginia's counties will offer in their public schools such training to the youth. Financed by local church councils and churches and approved by the local school boards in the political subdivisions of Virginia, weekday religious education will reach out to more than 60,000 boys and girls taught by 101 trained instructors. The cost of the undertaking has risen from $3,600 in 1930 to an estimated $150,000 to be expended for the current program. But the values of religious education offered to youth of every day of the school session cannot be appraised in terms of the cost of the program.

Last year—for the school term of 1946-47—weekday religious education was offered in 47 counties of the State where 90 trained teachers taught 60,118 pupils. The program cost $132,450. The significant fact is that the total enrollment represents 95 per cent of all pupils who were given an opportunity to enroll in Bible studies.

This year new councils of churches have been organized in Blacksburg, Roanoke and Nelson counties. One of their projects is the promotion of religious education.

Surveys have disclosed significant results of weekday religious education program offered in the schools of the Old Dominion.

Of the 60,118 pupils enrolled last term in religious education, approximately 25,000 were not attending any Sunday School. In one county Bible study was offered to 1,038 children—and 1,033 enrolled. It was found that 640, or 62 per cent, of these children were not attending Sunday Schools. Classes in religious education appear to be one of the most effective means of reaching the masses to plant the Truth of God's Word in their minds.

Furthermore, community and church leaders, educators and civic leaders attest to the fact that the weekday religious education program in Virginia has increased adult and child interest in Sunday School attendance. They find that youth grows in the Biblical knowledge and the training helps them to make adjustments in life.

The promotion of the religious education programs in local communities of the State has been a cooperative Christian movement whose influence for good cannot be measured in terms of statistics. For children and community leaders denominational lines become incidental and immaterial. The dissemination of Christian teaching becomes paramount.

For the current school session a new text book will be available. It is "A Nation Under God," a series of eighty lessons on the Old Testament, written by Elizabeth Longwell, who is the supervisor of weekday religious education for the Virginia Council of Churches. Texts for grades four and five have been completely revised and enlarged. These books are provided free for all weekday religious education programs. Another text approved by the Virginia State Board of Education, is "The Bible In Our American Life" by Vernon McCasland of the University of Virginia.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME XCIX.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1947.

NUMBER 41.

Edinburgh Affirmation of Unity

WE ARE ONE IN FAITH in our Lord Jesus Christ, the incarnate Word of God. We are one in allegiance to Him as Head of the Church, and as King of Kings and Lord of Lords. We are one in acknowledging that this allegiance takes precedence of any other allegiance that may make claims upon us.

This unity does not consist in the agreement of our minds or the consent of our wills. It is founded in Jesus Christ Himself, Who lived and died and rose again to bring us to the Father, and Who through the Holy Spirit dwells in His Church. We are one because we are all the objects of the love and grace of God, and called by Him to witness in all the world to His glorious gospel.

Our unity is of heart and spirit. We are divided in the outward forms of our life in Christ, because we understand differently His will for His Church. We believe, however, that a deeper understanding will lead us towards a united apprehension of the truth as it is in Jesus.

We humbly acknowledge that our divisions are contrary to the will of Christ, and we pray God in His mercy to shorten the days of our separation and to guide us by His Spirit into fulness of unity.

We are thankful that during recent years we have been drawn together; prejudices have been overcome, misunderstandings removed, and real, if limited, progress has been made towards our goal of a common mind.

We believe that every sincere attempt to cooperate in the concerns of the Kingdom of God draws the severed communions together in increased mutual understanding and good-will. We call upon our fellow Christians of all communions to practice such cooperation; to consider patiently occasions of disunion that they may be overcome; to be ready to learn from those who differ from them; to seek to remove these obstacles to the furtherance of the gospel in the non-Christian world which arise from our divisions; and constantly to pray for that unity which we believe to be our Lord's will for His Church.

We desire also to declare to all men everywhere our assurance that Christ is the one hope of unity for the world in the face of the distractions and dissensions of this present time. We know that our witness is weakened by our divisions. Yet we are one in Christ and in the fellowship of his Spirit. We pray that everywhere, in a world divided and perplexed, men may turn to Jesus Christ our Lord, Who makes us one in spite of our divisions; that He may bind in one those who by many worldly claims are set at variance; and that the world may at last find peace and unity in Him; to Whom be glory for ever.—International Convention of Disciples of Christ.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Has your church paid in full its Conference Apportionment for 1946-1947?

Rev. James G. Graham is now living at 5240 Reno Road, N.W., Washington 15, D. C.

Sunday school attendance at the Bay View Congregational Christian Church has been constantly on the increase. On Sunday, October 5, the enrollment was 120 and there were 120 in attendance.

Rev. B. J. Earp has accepted a call to the First Congregational Christian Church, High Point, N. C., and will begin his work there November 1. The High Point Church has recently purchased a parsonage.

Churches are urged to send their contributions for Overseas Relief. Contributions for the Congregational Christian Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction (C. W. V. R.) should be sent to The Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. Clothing for Overseas Relief should be sent to Church World Service, New Windsor, Maryland.

More than 500 men attended the Laymen's Rallies held in the Convention during the past week. Mr. George D. Colclough, chairman of the committee on men's work of the Southern Convention, with Mr. Walter A. Graham, Pembroke, Kentucky, director of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches and Superintendent Scott attended the meetings held as follows: Winchester, Newport, and Linville Churches in the Valley Conference; Suffolk, Henderson, Sanford, and Asheboro, North Carolina.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE NOTICE.

We shall provide over-night homes for all who wish it for the coming session, October 29-30, of the Eastern Virginia Conference; and for all who drop us a card saying: "I wish to spend the night in Suffolk during the coming conference session," we shall, with the same graciousness but with more ease, provide the required hospitality. Thank you!

Pastor.

A WEEK IN DURHAM.

Dr. Stanley Harrell invited me to assist him in a week of evangelistic effort at Durham, N. C., from September 27 to October 4. It was truly a great meeting. Seldom have I seen a church so deeply and universally stirred. One dares not quote statistics lest he be misleading. God was in it and had His way.

From the opening service to the close, there was a continuous response. The fine people received the gospel with great and intelligent enthusiasm. The pastor and people cooperated finely. The Doctors Boone and their families dispensed a refined and gracious hospitality. I was charmed with the people and their sincerity was obvious. It was a great meeting. Evangelism is the way to life for the individual and for the church.

REV. R. A. WHITTEN OBSERVES TWELFTH ANNIVERSARY.

The Rev. Robert A. Whitten observed his twelfth anniversary the first Sunday in October as pastor of the Congregational Christian Church in Winchester, Va.

During the past eleven years the church has shown a steady growth, the membership now numbers more than 300, an increase of about fifty per cent; a large indebtedness has been paid off, new property purchased and paid for and plans recently approved for the building of a new parsonage and church office on W. Clifford Street, adjacent to the church.

The parsonage will be of brick construction with all modern conveniences and will cost approximately $15,000. On the building committee are Clayton Pugh, chairman; E. W. Cather, Roy Larrick, L. H. Hook, Percy Sheetz, Howard Carper, Albert Spaid, H. F. Nelson, Mrs. H. F. Nelson, Mrs. Albert Clark, Mrs. Clayton Pugh and J. C. Shanholtz.

VIRGINIA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES HAS NEW STAFF MEMBER.

The Virginia Council of Churches announces the appointment of Miss Evelyn Langford, Pulaski, Virginia as Assistant Supervisor of Weekday Religious Education. This appointment was authorized at the Annual Meeting of the Council in January, 1947, and Miss Langford entered upon her work on September 1.

Miss Langford studied religious education at the Gordon College of Theology in Boston. She pursued graduate training in the field of religion at New York University, from which institution she holds the degree of Master of Arts. Her home is at Portland, Maine, and she has taught in Virginia Weekday Church Schools since 1936. Miss Langford will give particular attention to assisting and supervising teachers in Southwest Virginia but she will be available for service in other parts of the State as need and occasion may arise.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE PROPOSED MERGER BETWEEN THE EVANGELICAL REFORMED AND CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

The proposed merger between the Congregational Christian and the Evangelical and Reformed denomination was discussed at a joint meeting of the ministers of the two communions Tuesday, October 14, in the First Evangelical Church, High Point North Carolina.

The convocation opened at 10:00 A. M. on Tuesday and adjourned at 2:30 P. M. with lunch at the church. The program included a Devotional Service by Rev. William J. Andes, Minister of the Congregational Christian Church, Winston-Salem, North Carolina; five-minute resume of the two communions by Rev. W. C. Lyerly, Secretary of the Southern Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and Rev. W. E. Wissemann, President of the Southern Convention of the Congregational Christian Churches; resume of the organizational set-up of the two communions by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Secretary of the North Carolina and Virginia Congregational Christian Conference and Rev. L. A. Carpenter, Conover, N. C., President of the Southern Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church; resume of the issues involved in the proposed merger by Rev. Millard Stevens, Burlington, N. C., Minister of First Congregational Christian Church and Rev. H. A. Fesperman, Burlington, N. C., Minister of the First Evangelical and Reformed Church.

The committee in charge of the meeting was Rev. John C. Peeler, Minister of St. Marks Evangelical and Reformed Church, Burlington, North Carolina and Rev. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of Congregational Christian Churches, Elon College, North Carolina. In the State of North Carolina there are 125 Congregational Christian Churches with 20,000 members and 62 Evangelical and Reformed Churches with 13,000 members. Elon College and the Christian Orphanage located in North Carolina are maintained by the Congregational Christian Churches, while Catawba College, Salisbury, North Carolina and Nazareth Orphan's Home and Foreign Mission programs.

The Evangelical and Reformed

Churches of North Carolina are affiliated with the Southern Synod and the General Synod of Evangelical and Reformed Churches while the North Carolina Congregational Christian Churches are affiliated with the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches and the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches. The Basis of Union of the proposed merger between the two denominations into the United Church of Christ will be discussed in the High Point meeting preparatory to the vote in the local churches, Conferences, and Convention of the Congregational Christian and by the Southern Synod. The merger if consummated in 1948 will unite the two denominations into the United Church of Christ with a combined membership of 1,700,000.

RURAL STRATEGY

The Holston Methodist Conference in Tennessee has voted far-reaching developments in order to attract a higher type of minister to care for rural churches. Stipulations included a strong urge, amounting almost to a demand for a minimum salary of $2,200, parsonage and modern conveniences; and all churches of the charge be within one county, or in a natural, homogeneous grouping. On recommendation of the town and country committee, the conference also voted to develop a church-improvement program, authorizing an architect and landscape gardener to devise a brochure for remodeling and beautifying churches.

This kind of realistic grappling with the problems of rural church should be the order of the day. We must get far beyond the stage of mere lip service. It takes more than Memorial Day and the annual revival meeting to save the rural church. A more inclusive strategy is required. More conferences should follow and build on the Holston precedent.

VIRGINIA GENTLEMAN

Robert Michum, star in RKO-Radio's "Rachel," has announced his desire to settle on a farm near Front Royal in the Shenandoah Valley. "Great Country," he testifies. "I'm going to be a farmer, a gentleman farmer. It's crawling with gentlemen in Virginia. The farm won't take any money. Any fool can make a farm break even. IT'S being a gentleman farmer that takes the dough. Horses and fox hunting and drinking. Virginia gentlemen are the world's hardest drinkers. Oh, it's a great place for gentlemen, Virginia. Who knows, it may even make a gentleman out of me."

Virginia can get along very well without this type of "gentleman." Numerous advertisements have popularized and romanticized this distorted conception of a Virginia farmer. During these tragic days when hunger stalks the earth, only a spiritual imbecile could conceive of farming as a luxury and the drinking of expensive liquors as the distinguishing marks of a gentleman.

FOREGLEAMS OF CHURCH UNION

Six denominations have already accepted an invitation to participate in "a plenary conference to consider the immediate possibilities of closer unity." The idea of such a conference originated in the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches held in Grinnell, Iowa, in May 1946. An overture to the Federal Council of Churches requesting that body to extend the invitation was there adopted by a unanimous vote. Two months later the International Convention of Disciples of Christ joined in the overture. The request was received by the Federal Council at its biennial meeting in Seattle, Washington, last December, and its executive committee was authorized to send the invitation to all its twenty-five constituent denominations. For reply, each denomination had to await the meeting of its general convention or judicatory. Some of these were to meet this year, while others will not be held until 1948.

Replies have now been received from fourteen denominations. Six of these acceptances. Three are interim expressions of favorable interest pending later action by their representative convocations. One—that of the Protestant Episcopal Church—offers to appoint two "observers" at such a conference. One—that of United Church of Canada—assumed that the proposal referred only to the churches of the United States, but volunteered its good will in consultation. Only three churches declined to participate—the Church of the Brethren, the Presbyterian Church, U. S. (South), and the United Lutheran Church.

I

An examination of these replies strongly indicates that the plenary conference will be held. No informed person expected that all would accept, but it was hoped that when the invitation had gone the rounds of the general convocations held during 1947 and 1948, there would be a sufficient number of acceptances, including a sufficient number from the larger denominations, to assure the holding of the plenary conference. This hope now has every promise of being realized. The six denominations that have so promptly accepted indicate a deep concern for some significant drawing together of the Protestant forces in America.

The invitation was both limited and unlimited. It was limited to those "denominations which already accord one another mutual recognition of ministers and sacraments." It was unlimited in that it left each denomination to decide for itself whether it desired to participate. The mutual recognition of "ministries" means the acceptance of a minister's ordination in each denomination as valid in the others. The recognition of one another's "sacraments" means the acceptance of the essential validity of one another's administration of baptism and the Lord's Supper. There may be some question with respect to the meaning of the latter, particularly in the case of baptism. But such denominations as the Baptists and Disciples have no reason to assume in advance that their practice of immersion cannot, in a conference earnestly seeking "closer unity," be reconciled with the terms of the invitation.

The six denominations that have decided to participate are the Congregational Christian, the Presbyterian, U. S. A., the Evangelical and Reformed, the Moravian, the Disciples and the United Presbyterian. Here is more than a nucleus for a successful conference. But at least three others give signs of promise that they also will join. The Methodist General Conference will not be held until next spring. The Council of Bishops, however, responded with a letter expressing "deep and appreciative interest" and advising the Federal Council that the subject would have a large place in the Bishops' Address to the General Conference. There is every reason to believe that this church, the largest in American Protestantism, will give a ringing affirmative answer to the proposal. The Reformed Church and the Northern Baptists have appointed appropriate committees to take the matter under advisement and report at their respective general meetings next year.

II

There are other bodies affiliated with the Federal Council which may yet be heard from affirmatively. But if the three bodies mentioned above, which have only postponed action until an official reply can be made, respond affirmatively, the conference will represent nearly 16,000,000 American Protestants. Such a representation will invest the plenary conference with profound significance. Starting with so broad a basis of agreement and fellowship, and such microscopic disagreements, the prospects of successful achievement is brighter, as well as far more comprehensive, than any previous effort for "closer unity" that American Protestantism has undertaken.

It is impossible to set bounds to the prospect which this undertaking opens up to the eyes of Christian faith. How timidly or how boldly the denominations will allow their representatives to act—in preparation or in the plenary conference itself—remains, of course, to be seen. But it seems clear that the "closer unity" to be sought is something more organic than the federation of autonomous denominations. Federation we already have, and it has brought the churches together in a fellowship of cooperative activity, hard to envisage a generation ago. But the question raised by the invitation and its acceptance is whether this cooperative fellowship has not now brought a large group of churches to the place where they are able to give outward and visible expression to the mutuality which they recognize is one another.

A suggestive statement of the motive that inspires the undertaking is given in the preamble of the invitation as originally formulated by the Congregationalists. This preamble declares the belief (1) that the unity which actually exists among the churches is deeper and more inclusive than has been expressed in any organized form; (2) that there is a "holy impatience" in the hearts of great numbers of Christian people for a church competent to bear a more convincing witness to a world threatened with annihilation for want of community; and (3) that there is today among Christians a new readiness to be obedient to the will of Christ.

III

But in this proposed conference on "closer unity" now in prospect, the debatable questions of theology and ecclesiology are reduced to a minimum in which the differences are hardly distinguishable. The real issue here is not in faith and order, but in the will to unity. But if the will is not present in the participants their sectarian intransigence cannot be obscured in the dust of prolonged debates on doctrinal questions of faith and order. In a conference which begins with these questions virtually settled, hesitation and inaction can hardly be clothed in the garments of "conscientious conviction." If, however, the will to unity is present, every practical obstacle can be surmounted and the beginnings of an ecumenical expression of the living church of Christ can emerge. Such a church, achieved by the will to unity, in obedience to the will of Christ, will be a uniting, as well as a united, church, and its example will profoundly influence the whole of Protestantism.—Editorial in The Christian Century.

Pro and Con

By REV. F. ERVIN HYDE.

The Executive Committee of the Congregational and Christian Churches in session at Columbus, Ohio, on April 30 voted by an overwhelming majority to submit the Basis of Union of the Congregational and Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church to the local churches for study and action. Conversations between these two denominations have been carried on over a period of five years. The first edition of the Basis of Union appeared in 1943. Since then it has been revised a number of times and the final revision is being sent to the churches for study and action. If the local churches, associations, and conferences approve the merger by seventy-five per cent vote, the first steps will probably be taken by the General Council in June of 1948 to complete the union of the two groups. Every local church is urged to vote on this matter prior to April 1948 and preferably at its Annual Meeting.

The proposed name for the new denomination is UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST. Its membership would be made up of all members and ministers who make up the two denominations at the time of the merger. The national body would be known as the General Synod of the United Church.

Advocates of the plan of union see in the merger of the two groups the fulfillment of an ideal. They think that it will be one step nearer to a United Protestantism. They think that it will inspire other groups to advance the cause of Christian Unity, and help to answer our Lord's Prayer that "they might all be one." It will enlarge our sphere of influence and broaden our world outlook. It will give us churches and mission stations in areas where we are either weak or do not exist. It will give to our churches agencies of service in a needy world. It will give to the united church a stronger voice in speaking of social issues and to champion causes of common interest. On the local level it may cut operating costs and do away with overlapping of churches. It may strengthen weak churches and give them a stronger ministry. Some argue that the United Church can be a success because both denominations are the results of former unions.

However there are others, who while not opposed to organic union, question the wisdom of this action at the present time. They do not feel that the proposed plan of union is a sufficient document upon which to vote to unite. The groups differ in both cultural heritage and church polity. Evangelical and Reformed Churches have a heritage that emphasizes continental theology and adhere to a presbyterian system of church government. Congregational Christian Churches, while approving the Kansas City Confession of Faith, give to each church the right to draw up its own covenant. They are tolerant of both conservative and liberal viewpoints. Always they have recognized the autonomy of the local church. The E and R Church puts the emphasis

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Four meetings may be reporter in this letter. Sunday afternoon, October 5, 1947, I attended the 114th anniversary of the founding of the First Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk, and had the honor of preaching the centennial sermon as a former pastor of the church. Two other former pastors, the Revs. J. F. Morgan, and J. E. McCauley, were present and had parts on the program, as well as Superintendent W. T. Scott, who presided and had preached for the church at their morning service. The sanctuary and adjoining Sunday school rooms were filled with members, former members, and friends. It was a fitting service and well planned under the direction of a committee headed by Mrs. J. Monroe Harris.

The following night at 8:00 nearly two hundred laymen from some thirty churches met in the Suffolk Church under the direction and leadership of the Convention's committee on men's work, Geo. D. Colclough, chairman, who presided at the meeting. It was indeed an inspiring sight to see those men gathered together on behalf of the church and the work men can do for it. The opening prayer was made by Harry W. Lee of Portsmouth, and the closing prayer was made by Shirley T. Holland of Windsor. Supt. W. T. Scott was present and shared in the program. The church organ was played by a layman, David Brown Harrell of Suffolk, and the special music was a solo by a layman, J. E. Baines, Jr., of Suffolk. The principal address was made by Walter A. Graham, executive director of the National Laymen's Fellowship of Congregational Christian Churches. The laymen are going to further organize and develop their work.

Tuesday night at 8:00 in the Suffolk Church more than two hundred young people attended their annual Missionary Conference, had a lovely service of worship led by the Dendron young people, a great presentation of the World Conference of Youth at Oslo, Norway, by a young man who was there, Robert Houff, and a record of enthusiastic work done during the past year. Their gifts amounted to $991.07.

And Wednesday night at 8:00 the Suffolk Church held its annual conference when twenty-three organizations of the church and Sunday school made reports, which reports showed more than $19,000 paid into the regular channels of the church and handled by the church treasurer, with enough raised in the auxiliaries of the church to bring the total to approximately $30,000. The records showed the reception of thirty-eight new members, bringing the present membership up to 1,479.

These four meetings exemplify the fact that lay leadership is still evident in the church. The first three of these meetings were under the direction and planning of lay leadership, and the work of the latter was done by laymen and laywomen in the main.

PRO AND CON.

upon the singular indicating a centralized authority vested in the synods of their church; Congregationalism has put the emphasis upon the association of free churches. The Basis of Union suggests a point of departure from Congregational polity when it suggests in Article VI, Section C when it states "The new communion will appeal to all congregations not to call or dismiss their ministers, and to all ministers not to respond to a call or resign, until the Association or Conference shall have given its approval." The second notable point of departure is the yielding of the right of the Synod of elective representatives to amend the constitution of the United Church. Will the synod have the authority to impose upon the local church things that it wishes done? The Basis of Union is not clear on this issue. Now is the time when these issues ought to be settled . . . not a some future date when it is too late to correct the mistake.

And another objection to the proposed merger is that we feel that there should not be any distinction between the pension paid to a minister of the E and R Church and that paid to a Congregational minister. Under the Unit plan we will have met our debt of honor to our Congregational pensioners under the original plan of annuities. But it would take approximately 30 years for the United Church to meet its obligation to the aged ministers. To do so the proposal is that we take the first half-million dollars of benevolences for 30 years to meet this obligation.

Another objection to the Basis of Union is that it provides for equal representation at the first General Synod of the United Church. This means that 435,000 Congregationalists would have no representative at a synod that might draft the constitution that would be binding upon their churches.

Another fallacy to be recognized with is suggested by Dr. Oscar Maurer who reminds us that there are those who have the "idea that the merger will not make any difference to us . . . they think that we will go on our way, much as now; and the E and R brothers in theirs: only we will be united in one body and under one name." But to think that the United Church will make no difference in our polity or our practices is not to discern the signs of the times. Study the proposed plans of union and here and there you get something of a trend towards administrative centralization. Yet Congregationalism has always emphasized decentralization.

Some of us have the fear that instead of achieving one United Church, that we will merely bring a new denomination into existence. Those who argue that we can make a go of church union on the basis that we have already tried it and made it work, overlook two facts. First, they forget that the Congregational and Christian Church had a common polity and cultural background. So did the E and R Churches. Even then these groups did not iron out all the differences. Now we propose to unite two "diverse streams of Protestantism, which have spoken different languages, looked at life from different angles and organized themselves in different ways.

Let us not be in a hurry to surrender our freedom simply to uphold an ideal. We also have a heritage to maintain for ourselves and our children. Christian Freedom is of equal importance with church unity. We have channels through which we can cooperate with other denominations for the furtherance of the work of the Kingdom of God. Why should we rush into organic unity simply to get a big church?

Dr. James English, Superintendent of our churches in Connecticut, reminds us that:

"Freedom is not an idle word.

Our spiritual ancestors lived and died for this principle because it meant more to them than anything else except the truth of Christian faith itself. . . . The world needs what we have to give. It needs it desperately. We have

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

ELON COLLEGE FREE OF DEBT.

In conference with certain Elon College citizens one afternoon last week, one persons seemed amazed that Elon College was free of debt. He had heard that Elon's debts had been paid, but he concluded that these reports could not be trusted and were not expected to be taken for the truth. After he had been reassured that there were no debts against the College he still seemed to be skeptical. The College has been in debt so greatly and so long that it is difficult to realize that its books are in balance, but they are completely.

There are many unforgettable dates on the Elon College calendar—its authorization by the Church, its founding, its opening for the first students who came to its campus, and so forth. But there is certainly one date that we shall never forget—the date of the payment of the last dollar of indebtedness against the College. The transaction took place in the offices of the Virginia Trust Company in Richmond, Virginia, on January 26, 1943, at eleven o'clock in the morning. The final check was for $100,000 and this left in the bank to the credit of the College an accumulated interest on endowment securities held by the bank amounting to more than $7,000. From that day to this there has not been a moment that the College could not have paid every penny that it owed with a comfortable balance in the treasury.

This achievement was made possible by the faithful and generous co-operation of the Church, the alumni, and friends of the College. In the Southern Convention, that part of the Christian Church that founded Elon College and has supported it through the years, there is a membership of more than 32,000. The College has an alumni that exceeds 10,000 in number. And, in addition, a great host of friends. With the loyal cooperation of these three great forces encouraging and inspirational achievements were bound to happen, and they did, and they are still happening. We have at present the best faculty, the largest student body, the finest spirit, the most inspiring atmosphere, and the greatest interest on the part of the college alumni that we have had in the past sixteen years and the end is not yet—we are just beginning. A new and a brighter day is dawning for Elon College. A program of improvements and developments is already on the college and church calendars. When this program is realized, it will put Elon College far out in front in the field of Christian higher education.

Of course, it will take money, large sums of money, to put this comprehensive and inclusive program into effect, but already the number of Elon College's friends and contributors is increasing, and the number will continue to increase until the realization of its highest hopes is an actual reality.

The Expansion Program for the College now beginning with the erection of the heating plant will call for large sums of money. We have reached the day when the College is compelled to improve its present facilities and add new ones. All kinds of repairs and new construction are tremendously expensive. The new heating plant constitutes the first in a series of critical emergencies. We do not have a dining room. We are operating the kitchen on a temporary basis and if we expect to continue in favor with students and patrons, we shall be compelled to provide better living conditions. We are in the twilight of excessive demands. If the College is to hold its present position in the field of higher education and extend its influence, large sums of money will be required. The constituency of the College has done such a fine thing in clearing it of its debts it now has the opportunity to build its institution into the kind of institution required for these modern days and provide the funds necessary for improvements and see to it that the College is kept out of debt. One look at our past history will convince us that debts against Elon College are disastrous. It is entirely possible to provide the necessary funds for necessary improvements and my heart somehow tells me that we will.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There are but a very few more weeks before 1946-47 conference year comes to a close. The colleges has received about fifty per cent of its apportionments. We are confident that the entire amount will be paid and are encouraged that we shall receive from the conference treasurers on the occasion of the meeting of the conference, the remainder of the college's apportionments. If your church has not raised its entire apportionment for the college, won't you please see that this is done prior to the annual conference session.

When you need encouragement something usually comes along to give you a lift. The total amount received for the past two weeks is $512.27. The college greatly appreciates the support of the Sunday schools and churches during the current year.

a pattern for organized religion in this day and generation that appears to be an excellent pattern. It is evangelical in spirit, practical in application to the problems of today, and above all free. The doors of our churches swing wide and there is room at the Lord's table for men of security and love for him."

We have a heritage to maintain . . . if we can do it by uniting with another denomination let us by all means do it. But if such a union means the surrender of the ideals that made Congregationalism great, let us be willing to yield our ideal of organic unity rather than our freedom as a local church.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

NORTH CAROLINA WOMEN MEET.

The North Carolina Conference of the Woman's Missionary Convention held its annual session on Tuesday, October 7, at the Burlington Church, with the meeting opening at 10:00 A. M., and closing at 3:30 P. M. An unusually large crowd of about 300 attended the session, and included about twenty-five ministers and their wives. Mrs. F. C. Lester, President of the North Carolina Woman's Conference, presided.

Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Field Director for the Southern Convention, led the opening worship service, followed by introductions by the host pastor, Rev. W. M. Stevens. The visitors included Rev. R. A. Whitten and Mrs. A. W. Andes of the Valley, and Mrs. John Fesperman and Mrs. Coble of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Committees appointed for the day were: Nominations: Mrs. J. D. Strader, Mrs. Mattie Parker, and Mrs. L. L. Hooper; Recommendations: Mrs. S. E. Foster, Miss Susie Allen, Mrs. G. D. Ellington; Place: Miss Frankye Marshall; Findings: Mrs. W. J. Andes and the other District Superintendents.

Presentation of our Thank Offering for the year was made by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, who announced the goal for North Carolina as $3,000. Mrs. R. M. Cline presented the Life Memberships and Memorials, followed by Mrs. B. M. Newman presenting the Friendly Service Gifts and Mrs. W. T. Scott presenting the literature.

The address of the day was given by Mrs. John T. Fesperman, Knapolis, president of the Southern Synod Woman's Guild of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Mrs. Fesperman gave a summary of the work of the Woman's Guild, giving as their motto: "A place for every woman and every woman in her place." She stated that there are 350,000 women in 2,800 Woman's Guilds, and explained the functions of the nine departments in the Woman's Guild: Educational, Christian Citizenship, Social Service, Spiritual Life, Stewardship, Missionary, Thank Offering, Girls' Guild, and Membership. Mrs. Fesperman stated that the winning of the world for Christ is the task of the universal church, and we are on the front lines in the hope for church unity.

The morning session was closed with a Memorial Service conducted by Mrs. R. M. Cline in memory of all deceased members. During this service special recognition was given Mrs. C. H. Rowland, the first Woman's Convention President. A book containing Life Memorial Certificates from churches and members of the Southern Convention in honor of Mrs. Rowland was presented to her two daughters, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman and Mrs. M. T. Garren.

During the lunch hour very lovely and appropriate music was furnished by members of the Burlington Church, while the delegates partook of the delicious lunch.

During the afternoon session, reports were given by Department Superintendents: Cradle Roll—Mrs. K. D. Register; Children—Mrs. W. E. Wisseman; Young People—Mrs. J. D. Strader. Following these, workshops were conducted, with the group dividing up to attend different ones. Worship was conducted by Mrs. W. W. Hall; Program Planning—Mrs. W. T. Scott; Family Life—Mrs. D. M. Estes; Visual Aids by Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, and Interdenominational Cooperation by Mrs. B. W. Fields.

A very appealing report was given on "Open Doors for Relief and Reconstruction" by Rev. Frederick B. Eutsler, representative for the Convention on the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction. Mr. Eutsler stated that on our goal of $7,000 for this year, we have raised only $2,100 and he urgently appealed to the group to help raise much needed help for this work. He made two requests of those present:

(1) Each local church who has not already done so, should take a special offering for C. W. V. R.

(2) Each local woman's group is asked to take an offering for C. W. V. R. before the end of the year.

Also, he urged us to write the Convention Office for milk bottle stickers to use in raising funds for children's milk.

Dr. F. C. Lester reported on his recent trip to New England and the meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

During the business session, reports from committees were heard. The place committee stated that an invitation had been extended to the Conference to meet in Asheboro next year and this invitation was accepted. The resolutions Committee, among other things, recommended that the Conference accept the resolutions as voted on by the Women's Convention at its last session in June, and also that the goal for next year for North Carolina be raised to $12,500. This report was adopted.

New officers for the year elected were: President, Mrs. F. C. Lester; Vice President, Mrs. R. M. Cline; Secretary, Mrs. W. W. Tate; Treasurer, Miss Susie D. Allen; Young People's Superintendent, Miss Nellie Mae Holt; Children, Mrs. D. M. Estes; Cradle Roll, Mrs. Kenneth Register. The session was closed with an installation service for the new officers led by Mrs. O. H. Paris, Woman's Convention President.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

ANTIOCH.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Antioch Christian Church finds this has been an interesting and enjoyable year's work together.

During the year, we have been striving to reach the Standard of Excellence, and feel sure we have attained that goal.

Our Bible study, The Divine Fatherhood, was given monthly by our leader, Mrs. J. H. Godwin. We observed the Thank Offering program in November, and the World Day of Prayer with other churches.

The study book, India at the Threshold, was reviewed by Rev. Ammons of the Zuni Presbyterian Church with the Windsor and Mt. Carmel women as our guests.

We have sent a contribution to the India project of Friendly Service.

We are confident that as we close this year's work we will have accomplished much good for the church, ourselves, and the Kingdom.

BETHEL.

As the Bethel Woman's Missionary Society is coming to the close of another year, we feel that it has been very successful.

To begin our new year with all new officers, we had a very impressive candlelight installation service.

In November a Thank Offering program was given and a good offering received.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Are the leaves falling where you are? I can look out the window while I sit writing to you and see red and yellow maple leaves, brown sycamore and brownish green elm leaves. The wind is blowing them in crazy little patterns and they look like bright-colored snow.

It smells good in the fall and we like to walk in the leaves, kicking them right and left, until we stub our toe on a hidden rock, and then the hurt forgotten, we began pushing them around again.

Sooner or later all these piles have to be swept or raked. Do you help your mother and father do this? When we raked ours yesterday, we found a few violets hidden under them. Not the bright purple, pleasant smelling ones of spring, but pale and without any smell. We found mosses and best of all, a tiny little holly tree. It was so little that it looked like a sprig to be worn on a coat lapel.

In our Sunday school room we have a large table on which we place treasures that we find. Now we have leaves, the darkish red gum leaves are the prettiest; sycamore burs, magnolia cones with their scarlet seeds, milkweed pods just breaking open to show their silky insides, and a collection of acorns. You could find things too, and carry them to church school to share or just keep them at home. If you live in the country you can find many more things than we in the city.

Sometimes you will hear people say, "Oh, I don't like to see the fall. It is a sad time." They really haven't thought about it very much. The fall is the time when the trees, plants and bulbs go to sleep. Think how you would feel without any rest. It is hard to stop and go to bed sometimes when there is something especially important to be done. But off to bed you do go, and in the morning there is more pep for finishing the special something. God was very wise. He knew that even the littlest rosebush and snowdrop needed rest, just like people. In the fall they go to sleep. The winter is their night, and the spring, the lovely morning. He sends the snow later for a wonderful blanket to get them cozy.

The trees all free of leaves can stretch and rest from their heavy coats and the birds that sit on their limbs and talk and listen have gone away. Do you feed the birds? They like grain and bread crumbs, and suet for an extra treat.

Have some of you been to the Fair? Ours is over now. There were pigs, cows, and chickens—lots of chickens. Some ponies, too. It is good to see all the animals fat and glossy. The men in charge of them, comb and smooth them many times. I hope you can go to a fair and have a good time.

Here is a verse of Scripture for this week: Psalms 100:1, 2. Many of you know this song of praise. October is a time for praise!

Look at the cover of this month's Children Religion—there are two little boys playing in the leaves. What happened to one of them?

HIGHER EDUCATION.

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I read to the end of Ralph's report—then went into my husband's study.

"Look, Tom!" I thrust the card into his hand. "There's not a good mark on it; and the boy has failed in two subjects."

Tom studied the card. "Humph!" he sighed. "He'll never make college at this rate." Tom read the last remark on the card aloud, "Has ability, should do much better work."

"Well, why doesn't he? What's the matter with him?" I cried.

"I'm sure I don't know, Nan. If only I'd had his chance—"

A gay whistle along the hall, a sharp knock, and Ralph—tall, slim—came into the room.

"Hi!—Why all the gloom?" The merry blue eyes slowly sobered as they rested on the report card. "Oh, that thing!"

"Yes, it's a disgrace! How are you going to college when you don't work!" I said sternly.

"Mom! Pop!" He fixed us each in turn. "I don't want to go to college; I'm sick of study!"

"What do you propose doing then?" Tom's voice was sarcastic.

"I'm going to sea in the Merchant Marine. They're taking on boys now. A chief down on the wharf says he'll take me on as a greaser and I'll work up. They're shorthanded, else I wouldn't get this chance. Please let me go." The lad's eyes held deep earnestness.

Tom looked to me for acquiescence, and with a heavy heart I gave in.

After inquiries about the ship Ralph set sail on a large freighter with all the joy of adventure animating his gay young spirit, and with touching gratitude toward us for our approval.

A few months later I received a parcel with a foreign stamp—in it a silver brooch engraved, FOR MOTHER, and a card, "From my first pay check, Mom! Love, Ralph."

Two years passed. Then in early spring a lean, bronzed young man walked into our house. In the joy of reunion we did not at first notice that he walked with a limp—result of an accident on board ship. It proved bad enough to prevent his going back to sea. Now, it seemed, he was back where he had started. But he came in one morning, just glowing.

"I've found a job! It's trying out engines in new ships. My ankle is good enough for that—and it's getting better."

For several months Ralph worked, lived at home, and paid his board; and during that time he began to take a girl out. It looked as if the boy had settled down, but in my heart was dull ache of disappointment.

Then one evening he amazed us with, "Mom, I'm going to college—to get my engineer's degree. I have to take some supps."

"Splendid!" Tom cried. "And the money we saved for your education is still—"

"No, Dad. You and Mom take a holiday with that. I have enough of my own." The lad stood straight and smiling, dignity in every muscle. Here was an adult doing what he wanted to do—and paying for it. This was no adolescent being forced to study without seeing the purpose of it all. When college started Ralph chose his course, paid his bills; and he did so well later we literally swelled with pride.

Do we sometimes keep our children dependent too long? There is an innate longing in the best of us for independence. Some great urge makes those growing up long to be on their own—to be producers. Such calls are fine and noble and not to be crushed. So when our young people beg to be allowed to go to work, let us not be too discouraging. The chances are they will apply themselves to education when they see the purpose—and can pay their expenses. But without our earnest wishes for them to learn more they would probably never think of seeking higher education. The part of parents is to uphold the desirability of learning and the ministry, after the union, and until a standard method is provided by the constitution, shall have the same status, and be licensed or ordained as ministers by the Associations or Conferences and Synods in the same way, as before the union. The standard method shall provide for ordination by authorization of the Conference or Association and normally upon the call to a Congregation. Similarly the formal induction of a minister into his parish, which is recommended as normal procedure, shall be by authority of the Conference or Association at the request of the Congregation.

BASIS OF UNION.

B. A minister of another denomination shall not be accepted by any body of the United Church in which ministerial stading is held without recommendation from the body to which he belongs; if, however, a denomination refuses to recommend a minister in good and regular standing, he may be accepted after proper examination by the Conference or Association in which his standing would be held.

C. The calling of a minister to a Congregation is a concern of the Church at large, represented in the Association or Conference, as well as of the minister and the Congregation. Ministers and churches desiring to maintain a system of pastoral placement in which the Conference or Association shall have little or no part, shall be free to do so; but the recommended standard of denominational procedure shall be one in which the minister, Congregation, and Conference or Association approving candidates, the Congregation extending and the minister accepting the call. The new communion will appeal to all Congregation not to call or dismiss their ministers, and to all ministers not respond to calls or resign, until the Association or Conference shall have given approval. In all relationships between minister and local church or Congregation, the freedom of the minister and the autonomy of the church are presupposed.

VII. MEMBERS

All persons who are members of either communion at the time of the union shall be members of the United Church. Men, women, and children shall be admitted into the fellowship of the United Church through baptism and profession of faith according to the custom and usage of each congregation prior to the union. When they shall have been admitted, they

RELIGION IN PRACTICE.

LESSON IV—OCTOBER 26, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Faith, if it have not works is dead.—James 2:17.

LESSON: James 1 and 2; Matthew 52:34-46.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 7:15-27.

A Letter from the Brother of Jesus.

"James a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus" . . . thus does the writer of the book of James introduce himself. It is somewhat indefinite. But scholars are pretty generally agreed that this James was none other than the brother of our Lord Jesus Christ. He became a believer after his brother had risen from the dead, and because of native ability and earnestness, rose to a place of leadership in the Apostolic band. It makes the letter all the more interesting to know that our Lord's brother did write it.

A Practical Fellow.

This man James was a practical fellow. He was no sweet dreamer, a starry-eyed idealist that never faced reality. He was what the philosophers call a pragmatist. He tested things by the acid test of whether they worked. And he applied the same test to religion. He reflects the ideals and the spirit of Jesus in this respect. Jesus said, for instance, "he that heareth my words and doeth them, or doeth them not. . . ." Again he said "why call ye me Lord and do not the things I command you?" And again, "Inasmuch as ye did it, or did it not. . . ." Both of these brothers believed that religion ought to work, ought to make a difference. And it ought. And real religion does.

God-Given Guidance.

"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth liberally to all men and upbraideth not, and it shall be given unto him." That does not mean that a Christian will never make a mistake. But it does mean that God guides those who will be guided. One is reminded of the words of Jesus—and there are so many words in James that remind us of the words of his brother: "If any man will do his will, he shall know." When one stands at the cross-roads of life, when one does not know what to do, it is of immeasurable help to know that God will give light and guidance if we are committed to do his will. But one must pray in faith, and obey in full.

Traffic Laws of Life.

"But let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." Here are sound traffic laws for life. Let every man have an eagerness to learn, let him be alert to hear that which will enrich his life and furnish his mind. All too many of us like to talk and do not like, or know how, to listen.

"Slow to speak." How often do we say "I spoke before I thought." And we usually regret what we have said under these circumstances. Deliberation in speaking often pays big dividends "Slow to wrath, or slow to anger." Let a man learn to control his temper and not to give way to anger. For such tantrums of temper and such exhibitions of wrath do not work out the righteousness of God. A soft answer turneth away wrath. And better is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city. Swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to become angry, if one heeds these traffic rules as he gives through life, he will go farther and more safely.

Doers and Not Hearers.

"But be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, eluding your own-selves." To be sure one must be a hearer. Jesus put a great deal of emphasis up the importance of hearing. "Take heed how ye hear" he was constantly saying. But hearing should find expression in doing. A man was just fooling himself if he was always hearing and never doing. James says it is like a man looking in a mirror and as he turns away, forgetting what he saw there. Doing helps to make permanent what one hears. One suspects that church people would be more vigorous Christians if they spent more time and effort in doing and less time in hearing. Do not misunderstand me. I do not mean that one should not go to church. I do mean that he ought to give more thought to translating into action what he hears in church.

The Acid Test.

We often hear it said that "money is the acid test" or at least "an acid test" of one's religion. And it is. But James says that the way one controls one's tongue is the acid test of religion. "If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain." They are straight and strong words. And they are tragically true words. Our words all too often belie our religious profession. Many another wise, good man, or good woman—one can hardly say that one is more guilty than the other—makes a poor impression on the folks of the world by the lack of control of the tongue. In a later chapter James has some sobering and stabbing words about the tongue.

Pure Religion.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." That is not a complete definition of religion. James was not trying to give a complete definition on religion, he was simply saying that forms and ceremonies were not the core of religion, but rather kindness and sympathy, coupled with the discipline of a man's soul. But even in this definition he combined the inner and the outward life. Religion deals with the heart, the inner life—one should keep himself unspotted from the world. And it should find expression in service, in human helpfulness. By their works ye shall know them is what he is saying.

Faith and Works.

As I recall it, Luther the great leader of the Reformation, referred to this letter of James as "an epistle of straw." Luther of course put the emphasis upon faith. "The just shall live by faith" was the verse that galvanized him into action. And James seems to be emphasizing works, rather than faith. As a matter of fact, James did not minimize faith and certainly he did not say that a man was saved by good works. He was simply saying that a man showed his faith by his works. Mere profession without performance was meaningless and even dangerous. Mere belief is not enough—the devils believe and tremble. Faith without works is barren or vain or dead. Believe and do.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

if possible, to provide the means, if the child is ready to accept the opportunity, but never to insist that he follow any plans for his future made for him by another. In the attitude we manifest toward life we have a responsibility to our children; it wields a far greater influence than we sometimes dream.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

was enjoyed by all. As we received our gifts we did not forget several shut-ins in the community, to whom we sent gifts.

Both of our study books for the year were reviewed by two members of our society.

The Bible study was given at the July meeting by our pastor, Rev. W. W. Snyder.

We sent Friendly Service gifts to Carroll County Mission, Elon Orphanage, and overseas relief. We also sent cards to the sick and shut-ins all during the year.

As the little boy we had "adopted" as the orphanage left during this year, we have this year adopted a little girl five years old. She has not visited our society, but we have received a nice picture of her. Sharing our gifts with her has been and will be a real pleasure.

We have reached the Standard of Excellence, having twelve meetings this year with good attendance at all of them.

We are planning and looking forward to another year of missionary work.

LYNCHBURG.

We were very fortunate in having Dr. Hazel Foster, an ordained minister of the Congregational Church, and a Professor of Religion at Randolph-Macon College, to teach our foreign mission study, India at the Threshold. The meeting, which was at the church, was held in the evening to insure the largest possible attendance.

Dr. Foster told us of her desire to travel, and how in 1939 she began a world trip. When war broke out in 1939 she was on the Mediterranean and consequently was forced to spend two years in India to escape the war.

She told many of the things that she did and saw while there. One of the interesting stories was about a Christmas party she attended which was given for lepers and tubercular patients. Their gifts were highly parched grain as a substitute for candy or nuts. The religious services were held in the mud walled church and our carols were sung in their language accompanied by native instruments.

Dr. Foster also told about the home life of the Indians. She mentioned the saris requiring five to ten yards of material, but no needle to sew them; also the twenty-five ways in which they can be worn. Religious sects have formulated styles of dress. Much jewelry is worn. It is the custom to ornament the women and children, and in general, their homes are drab and bare. Her tales of scorpions, ants, and lizards were the usual ones.

In conclusion she spoke of the few number of Christians, less than 8,000,000, and of the high feeling concerning caste. Also of the many, confusing religions. She recalled the simple life that Gandhi is leading and of the great interest in world peace that he has let the people have. She admonished that Americans should think more, and do more for this great country. We could bless each other mutually.

A social hour followed.

REPORTER.

BETHLEHEM (NANSEMOND).

The Junior Missionary Society of Bethlehem Christian Church (Nansemond) under the leadership of Mrs. Edward Johnson, met each third Sunday in the month in the Sunday school auditorium with the members having charge of the devotionals. We enjoyed doing this and it was also good training for us.

During the year we gained some new members. We also sold Every-Day Cards to help us raise our apportionment which was $26.00.

Mrs. Paul Yates reviewed our foreign book which we enjoyed very much. Our book, Call Me Charley, was reviewed by our leader and some of the older members.

We were entertained with a weiner roast on the church lawn, by our leader in the month of July.

We hope to have a more successful year next year.

MARY WILLIAMS,
Secretary.

MT. AUBURN.

Another year of work for and with our Lord, in the capacity of a Missionary Society has passed. As would be natural, we have our regrets that more service was not rendered, that better attendance was not secured, that more whole-hearted and sustained interest was not given. But our hearts have been stirred with the vision of greater faithfulness in the future.

Some things encourage: The goodly list of subscriptions for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Missionary Herald. There are only a very few members who do not have both these papers in their homes. Our financial goals have been reached and we have raised some of our assessment for next year. We had eleven meetings with excellent programs. Our Thank Offering Service was well attended and the response, financially, good. Bad weather and roads prevented meeting for the World Day of Prayer, which was to have been observed in connection with churches of other denominations. A Christmas program was also sponsored and enjoyed by those present. We sent in one Life Memorial in honor of one of our loved members, deceased. We were host to our District Spring Rally and felt honored and inspired by the fine program, attendance and fellowship.

As our Christian life is a growth in grace, so we trust our Society will continue to grow in usefulness in the Kingdom.

MRS. J. A. KIMBALL.

PLEASANT RIDGE.

Our society has, we feel, had a very good year. Our theme for the year was: "The Lord Thy God and Thy Neighbor." It was helpful to us all. At our regular meetings we had singing, readings, prayer—by different members of our society.

Mrs. J. Wright Pegram, our president, had something good for us at each meeting. The young people's society of our church is doing a splendid work. Our meetings have been held jointly.

In November we had our Thank Offering Service at the church. At Christmas we took food and clothing to two needy old people in our community; bought potted plants for some shut-ins and sent cards to the sick. We joined with churches in Greensboro for the World Day of Prayer Service. At Easter we sent a box of clothing to the orphanage at Elon. Our president and other members attended the Rally at Reidsville.

Our Life Membership this year goes to Mrs. Mollie Huffine Nelson who has been a member ever since the society was organized many years ago. Our study books have been reviewed. Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN and Missionary Herald have been taken care of. We believe we have met all requirements of the Standard of Excellence. Our aim has been to do all the good we could in any way we could, and be a neighbor to all.

We want to thank our pastor, Dr. W. E. Wisseman, and Mrs. Wisseman, for their help to us the past year. We are looking forward and hoping we can do more and better work this year.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Woman's Missionary Society from our Berea Christian Church, Mrs. Ben McIntyre, president, with Rev. Fields, pastor, and quite a group of the members of the society, paid the orphanage a very pleasant visit on Sunday, October 5. They had a long service and prayer in each building, and while in the buildings they gave each child candy and gum which made the children very happy. We believe all children like candy. The red stick candy they brought attracted the children's attention. In one of the buildings Mr. Fields asked all the children who did not like candy to hold up their hands. One little girl who did not understand held up her hand, which gave the other children a good laugh at her expense.

We took a great deal of pleasure in showing them over the buildings and let them see the condition and the manner in which they are kept. They seemed to be very much pleased with the condition in which they found the buildings.

Besides the treat they brought the children, they also brought several boxes of used clothing to help us out in the clothing line.

We have always tried to run this institution on the large family plan. Both boys and girls, large and small, live in each of our three buildings. We change their work from week to week. The girls who work in the kitchen this week will work in the house next week. We do this in order to give them thorough training in all departments while they are in our care. If a girl stays here until she is eighteen, she should be able to do all all kinds of domestic work when she goes out, such as cooking, sewing, house keeping, or anything that goes to make a happy home, if she has one. Many of them who have gone out from here are now home builders.

It is not so with the boys. We cannot change their work so often. When a boy learns to milk we have to keep him on the job for a longer period, as it takes longer to teach him. If a boys feeds the hogs he stays on that job for a whole season. It takes a long time to train a boy to take that responsibility and one who will assume that responsibility. There is a lot at stake. For instance, we have thirty-three nice hogs to kill this year. We begin to kill as soon as the weather gets cold enough in November. We will kill five at the time until we get them all killed. We do this in order to have fresh meat, sausage, etc., for some time during the winter months.

October, November, and December are the months to lay special stress on offerings for the Christian Orphanage. We hope our church people will begin now to plan to raise a large offering for Thanksgiving. We always look forward to the "Thank Offering" with happy expectations, and we hope the churches will not disappoint us.

Book Reviews

EVERYMAN'S ADVENTURE. By Merle William Boyer. Harper and Bros. $2.50.

Using a church building, with its adjacent "God's acre," as a symbol, this volume presents God's adventure with men, and man's reciprocal adventure with and for God. Echoing Augustine's classic sentence, the author writes: "Man never fulfills his high calling except as he ventures in quest of God who is the answer to his loneliness."

But man does not always adventure with God. Secularism—the spirit of pride, skepticism, indifference—takes possession of man, building barriers between him and God, cutting him off from his source of strength, and forcing him to become involved in pathological attempts at adventuring to escape from his own loneliness, contemptible conceit, and sin. The great struggle of the church today is with this arch-enemy of man.

The church has sometimes committed the heresy of the neglect of the great adventure. It has been divided, it has been constrictive and isolationist; it has been against the world, or, otherworldly; it has failed to create a sense of religious awe, and an awareness of the possibilities of communion with God; it has developed a static theology, and emphasized a philosophy of religion to satisfy the intellectual needs of the individual.

From the definition of the adventure, the adventure without God, and the heresy of the church in the neglect of the great adventure, or quest for God, the book passes into the second part, which presents "fields and resources for adventuring." These are indicated by the chapter headings: "Adventuring in Worship," "Adventuring in Church Unity," "Adventuring in Ethics—Beyond Authoritarianism," "Adventuring With Lonely Souls," "Adventuring Into Darkness and Depth," "Adventuring in Social Action."

The author's style is heavy, requiring close and constant attention; and his conclusion "In the end the church must depend upon the witness of everyman to substantiate its claim of being God's instrument for adventuring" would probably be questioned by many. However, the book is a sincere and fresh description of the Church's task and sphere of action.

BASIS OF UNION.

shall be recognized as members of the United Church.

VIII. ORGANIZATION OF BOARDS*

A. The Boards, commissions, and other agencies and instrumentalities shall proceed to correlate their work under the General Synod as rapidly as their charters, constitutions, property rights, the effectiveness of their program, and the laws of the State will permit. In the original personnel of the Boards, commissions, and other agencies and instrumentalities, when consolidated, due representation shall be given to each of the consolidating communions.

B. At each regular meeting of the General Synod each Board and commission shall submit for review a report of its operations during the time elapsed since the last regular meeting of the General Synod.

C. Except in the case of the Pension Board, the members of Boards shall be nominated and elected by the General Synod. They shall be represented through corresponding members, with voice but without vote, in the General Synod itself. They shall elect their own officers. The executive committees or other governing groups of the Boards shall have a sufficient number of members to provide for geographical distribution, representation of both of the uniting Churches, and the inclusion of persons qualified to render specific services, as for example in the fields of investment, medicine, education, etc., as the Boards may require.

D. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the Board of International Missions shall be united under the name of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

1. The Board thus constituted shall from the time of the consummation of the union until the adoption of a constitutional plan of organization consist of two hundred and twenty-five members, one hundred and thirteen of whom shall be chosen from the Evangelical and reformed Church and one hundred and twelve from the Congregational Christian Churches, all to be elected by the General Synod of the United Church. One third of these members to be women.

*This article has been ratified (subject to the adoption of the entire Basis of Union by the negotiating communions) by the Executive Committee of the Congregational Christian General Council, by the Evangelical and Reformed General Council, and severally by the governing authorities of all Boards, agencies, and instrumentalities involved.

3. On the adoption of a constitution and by-laws for the United Church, the term of office of all board members elected under these provisions shall terminate on the date designated by the General Synod for their successors to take office under the permanent plan of organization of the Boards.

E. The homeland Boards, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church, exclusive of the Pension Board and the agencies for social action, from the time of the consummation of the union until the adoption of a constitutional plan for their organization, shall function by means of a single corporate body. The name of this corporate body shall be the Board for Home Missions of the United Church of Christ. In order to provide the appropriate corporate structure for this enlarged and consolidated work, the charter of The Board of Home Missions of the Congregational and Christian Churches shall be amended so that it may be used for this purpose.

1. There shall be two hundred and twenty-five corporate members of the Board for Home Missions of the United Church of Christ elected by the General Synod of the Church. . . .

6. The terms of these corporate members shall be six years and they shall be elected in three class of seventy-five each, . . .

7. In order that there may be continuity of operation during the years of reorganization, the first list of corporate members shall include persons who are members of the Boards, agencies, and instrumentalities of the two uniting bodies at the time the union is consummated, as follows:

From Evangelical and Reformed Church:
Board of National Missions	14
Board of Christian Education and Publication	12
Commission on Evangelism	10
Board of Business Management	12
Commission on Benevolent Institutions	4
Commission on Higher Education (excepting the Presidents of Colleges)	12
Forty-eight persons elected at large	48
Sub-total	112
From Congregational Christian Churches:
The President, three Vice-Presidents and thirty-six other members of the Board of Directors of The Board of Home Missions	40
Commission on Evangelism (excluding the four persons elected to Commission by The Board of Home Missions)	12
Three persons designated by the association of Congregational Christian Colleges	3
Elected at large	58
Sub-total	113
Grand Total	225

NOTE: It is at present believed that the Board for Home Missions will require the following Divisions in order to care for all the interests involved:

- Division of Christian Education—continuing
- CC Division of Christian Education
- ER Board of Christian Education and Publication (education and curricular editorial functions only)
- ER Commission on Higher Education
- ER College and Seminary interests
- CC College and Seminary interests

Certain aspects of the higher education interests to be lodged with a College-Seminary Council composed of the Division of Christian Education, the American Missionary Association Division, and of the Colleges and Seminaries.

- Division of Ministerial Relief—continuing
- ER Relief functions of the Board of Pensions and Relief
- CC Division of Ministerial Relief

- Division of Evangelism and Church Extension—continuing
- CC Church Extension Division
- CC Commission on Evangelism
- ER Board of National Missions
- ER Commission on Evangelism

- American Missionary Association Division—continuing
- CC American Missionary Association Division

- Division of Publication—continuing
- CC Pilgrim Press Division
- ER Board of Business Management

The Division of Publication will proceed forthwith to develop and recommend particularly to the board of directors of the Board for Home Missions a plan for consolidating and unifying the publication and merchandising interests of the United Church.

8. The particular class to which each individual belongs will be indicated by the General Synod at the time of election.

F. The Commission on Christian Social Action of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches shall be united under the name, the Council for Christian Social Action.

1. From the time of the consummation of the union of the communions until the adoption of a constitutional plan of organization, there shall be twenty-four members . . . twelve chosen from the Evangelical and Reformed Church and twelve from the Congregational Christian Churches. . . . The Council . . . shall have power to take over, unify, and operate the activities carried on by the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Commission on Christian Social Action of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

The Rural Church and City Church

By THOMAS ALFRED TRIPP

The use of the rural designation for churches is a sociological consideration and represents the application of sociology. It is well-recognized that the church as a social institution reflects its community and cultural environments. Just as the urban church is a mirror of the city, the rural church is a reflection of farm and village culture. The problem is can the rural church—which is, by nature, enmeshed in the materialistic culture of town and country neighborhoods—be sufficiently self-analytical, socially pertinent and theologically vigorous so that it will not only reflect its surrounding culture, but also challenge its community with a Christian dynamic?

The importance of developing an adequate rural church policy is at least two-fold. First, it is necessary for rural people if they are to have effective religious services. At present, many farmers and village people have no church that they recognize as their own or which claims them in any parish. Country churches, for instance, are closed because an enlarging business zone and other factors have made a new enlarged community. This enlargement works satisfactorily as far as economic, educational, recreational and other purposes are concerned. But the church frequently lags in enlisting and serving the farmers beyond the end of the sidewalks or village limits. Even where the outlying church is not closed, too frequently the rural church does such a poor job that the rural citizen is underprivileged religiously. So, a sound rural church program is needed for the rural church people themselves.

Second, the city church has a stake in the rural church. The relatively higher birth rates on farms and in villages creates a "surplus" population in rural areas—surplus to rural labor needs, that is. They migrate to the cities by necessity. Furthermore, the increased efficiency of agricultural production, due to the use of continuously improved farm machinery, farm management, animal-breeding, plant-breeding and other factors, requires progressively less laborers on the farm. Consequently, there is still more reason for migration to the cities.

The urban church does or should receive these rural migrants, many of whom reach the city at their most productive years, both economically and professionally. They frequently are among the business and professional leaders of the city. They become the class of people whom typical Congregational Christian churches seek. The probability of enlistment of these former rural citizens in our city churches depends, in part, upon their previous religious training in country and village churches. It follows, then, that for the sake of the urban church an adequate rural policy is needed.

PROPOSED SUPERINTENDENT'S HOME

The above picture, with minor changes, is the proposed Convention Superintendent's home as selected by the committee. Plans and bids for construction will be submitted to the Executive Board for consideration at its meeting this week.

NEWS AND VIEWS

The Eastern North Carolina Conference is in session this week.

The Rev. O. D. Poythress is assisting the Rev. J. E. Neese in revival services at Bay View, Norfolk, this week.

Rev. and Mrs. J. Everett Neese have moved into their new parsonage at 1041 Bay View Blvd., Norfolk 3, Va.

The Rev. William L. Wood of Greene, N. Y., is moving to Sunbury, N. C., this week to assume charge of the Sunbury Parish.

The Convention's Board of Christian Education met at Elon College on Wednesday of last week. Dr. J. H. Dollar is chairman..

Mrs. John G. Truitt, president of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will meet with its officers on Wednesday, October 29.

Mr. H. W. Lee has been charged with the promotion of a Layman's Organization in Eastern Virginia. Mr. Lee plans to have a meeting with lay representatives during the Eastern Virginia Conference next week.

After serving Berea Church, Norfolk, for six years, the Rev. B. H. Watkins has resigned to become the pastor of Union, Southampton near Franklin, Va. During his ministry at Berea a modern educational building was added, the budget increased and the membership strengthened. Mr. Watkins will be the first minister to give full-time service at Union. His ministry will begin November 11. As the first unit in their expanding program the church has begun the construction of a parsonage. The Rev. R. E. Brittle, the retiring pastor, has served the church for eighteen years.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE TO HOLD ANNUAL SESSION.

The Western North Carolina Conference meets at the Congregational Christian Church, Albemarle, N. C., November 5-6. It is hoped that each church will be represented by its pastor and delegates. The Albemarle Church wishes to make preparations for the comfort of all. It will assist greatly if the names of those desiring overnight accommodations are sent immediately to Rev. W. Walter Hall, 338 Concord Road, Albemarle, N. C.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.
Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE PROPOSED MERGER BETWEEN THE EVANGELICAL REFORMED AND CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

(NOTE: This article is not the writer's attempt to argue for or against the merger, but rather with the words of the BASIS OF UNION to attempt to answer some questions which naturally arise in the minds of our people.)

Why Should We Unite?

1. We affirm our devotion to one God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our membership in the holy catholic (meaning universal) Church, and believe this universal Church of Christ is greater than any single Church and than all of the Churches together.

2. We believe that denominations exist not for themselves but as parts of that Church (universal Church of Christ), within which each denomination is to live and labor and, if need be, die.

3. Confronting the divisions and hostilities of our (divided) world, and hearing with a deepened sense of responsibility the prayer of our Lord, "that they all may be one;"

4. There, upon these convictions we declare ourselves (the CC and ER Churches) willing to be one body, and do set forth the following articles of agreement (the Basis of Union) as the basis of our life, fellowship, witness, and proclamation of the Gospel to all nations. (See Preamble to Basis of Union.)

What Will Be the Belief of the Merged Church?

"The faith which unites us and to which we bear witness is that faith in God which the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments set forth, which the ancient Church expressed in the ecumenical creeds, to which our own spiritual fathers gave utterance in the evangelical confessions of the Reformation, and which we are in duty bound to express in the words of our time as God Himself gives us light. In all our expressions of that faith we seek to preserve unity of heart and spirit with those who have gone before us as well as those who now labor with us.

"In token of that faith we unite in the following confession, as embodying those things most surely believed and taught among us:

"We believe in God the Father Almighty, Creator and Sustainer of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ, His Son, our Lord and Saviour, who for us and our salvation lived and died and rose again and lives for evermore; and in the Holy Spirit, who takes of the things of Christ and shows them to us, renewing, comforting, and inspiring the souls of men.

"We acknowledge one holy catholic Church, the innumerable company of those who, in every age and nation, are united by the Holy Spirit to God in Christ, are one body in Christ, and have communion with Him and with one another.

"We acknowledge as part of this universal fellowship all throughout the world who profess this faith in Jesus Christ and follow Him as Lord and Saviour.

"We hold the Church to be established for calling men to repentance and faith, for the public worship of God, for the confession of His name by word and deed, for the administration of the sacraments, for witnessing to the saving grace of God in Christ, for the upbuilding of the saints, and for the universal propagation of the Gospel; and in the power of the love of God in Christ we labor for the progress of knowledge, the promotion of justice, the reign of peace, and the realization of human brotherhood.

"Depending, as did our fathers, upon the continued guidance of the Holy Spirit to lead us into all truth, we work and pray for the consummation of the Kingdom of God; and we look with faith for the triumph of righteousness and for the life everlasting.

"Baptism and the Lord's Supper are the recognized sacraments of the Church."—(Basis of Union II; Sec. IV-F.)

What Will Be the Name of the Merged Church?

The name of the Church formed by this union shall be the UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST.

(NOTE: No name adequately or accurately expresses all the facts, beliefs, and practices of any Church. For example, the Methodists are not the only Church which has "method" in their work; the Christian Church did not constitute the only people who, as followers of Christ, could claim themselves as the only "Christians;" the Congregational Church did not represent the only Church body being governed by the congregations, notably, the Baptists are probably more congregationally governed than were the Congregationalists themselves; the Reformed Church was not the only Church which had its foundation or faith from the Protestant Reformation—but rather all our Protestant denominations stem from it; the Evangelical Church was not the only Church possessing the "evangel"—the "Good News" of Christ. A name, therefore, quickly becomes a mere means of classification, and it is hoped that the world will soon come to know that the Churches uniting under the name THE UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST do not pretend to be more than they actually are.) (NOTE: It is the writer's interpretation and understanding that the matter of local Church name will not be affected by the merger, unless that congregation so desires. For instance, our Church at Burlington, North Carolina, now known as "The First Christian Church" (Congregational Christian), might continue that name just as it now is, but as an evidence of fellowship in the merged Church might add "Affiliated with The United Church of Christ." Or, since there is an Evangelical and Reformed Church in Burlington, our Church might use the following name: "The First (or Second) United Church of Christ"—placing underneath that name ("Christian") or ("Congregational Christian") showing the origin of that congregation as a part of The United Church of Christ.

What Will Be the Government and Practice of the Merged Church; What About Ownership of Property? The Minister?

1. The Local Church.

The basic unit of THE UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST is the Congregation; that is, the local church.

"Each Congregation . . . has the right of retaining or adopting its own charter, constitution, by-laws, and other regulations which it deems essential and proper to its own welfare. This includes the holding and operation of its own property. (See Basis of Union III-H, page 6.)

2. The Members of Local Churches.

"All persons who are members of either communion at the time of the union shall be members of the United Church. Men, women, and children shall be admitted into the fellowship of the United Church through baptisms and profession of faith, according to the custom and usage of each

SHOP TALK

The Board of Christian Education was in session at Elon College. As in most meetings of this kind, numerous opinions were voiced which never found their way into the records. Dr. J. H. Dollar, pastor of the Elon Community Church, lamented the fact that Methodist parents were more responsive than our own in forwarding helpful information concerning their children who are enrolled at Elon. Dr. Stanley C. Harrell of Durham and the Rev. Bernard Munger of Chapel Hill reported difficulty in locating and enlisting Congregational Christian students at Duke University and the University of North Carolina. In each instance parental foresight and cooperation were considered indispensable factors. Unless we are willing for our denomination to go out of existence, it behooves us to follow the religious development of our college youth with tact and persistence.

Conversation with an insurance agent gravitated toward the church. Means of recruiting membership in the Sunday school and church were discussed. "How about members who move here from other churches, don't you get a notation when they arrive?" Regretfully, the answer to this question had to be a qualified negative, "Occasionally." My consultant expressed surprise that the Church was less efficient than the insurance company in maintaining contact with its clientele as it moved from one locality to another. We are reminded again of the sad commentary of Christ: "For the children of this world are in this generation wiser than the children of light."

METHODISM and ECUMENICITY

Methodists from Ireland, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Mexico, Brazil and other Latin American countries, China, India, Great Britain and America concluded their Seventh Ecumenical Conference on October 2. This Conference at Springfeld, Mass., issued a message to the Methodists of the world. Gratification was expressed "for the manner in which the torch which John Wesley passed on to the little group of his followers has been carried from person to person and from land to land. The amazing result is that that little band has so increased that the Methodists now constitute one of the largest churches in Protestantism. We have twelve or thirteen million members in the Methodist churches over the earth, but we are solemnized by realizing how small that number is in contrast with the population in many lands where our torch has been carried who have not even heard of the name of our Christ."

The message pointed to many of the evils of the age: war, moral lapses, gambling, drinking, skepticism and humanism. Some of the great issues of our time were treated at length, and are worth our study. Racism is singled out for special consideration.

"Racism, on the assumption of the inherent superiority of one race over another, raises its ugly head so widely that it has become a world issue. We are all guilty before God. How can we claim to be Methodists, not to speak of being Christians, with our cherished doctrine of a universal atonement, that men are sons of God and therefore brothers together, when we turn aside and treat our Negro brother almost if he were an outsider? We do not minimize the difficulties; we recognize that we are in the aftermath of the master-slave condition, and yet, with all that, we acknowledge and urge upon all our fellow Methodists to realize that this problem is pressing upon us as never before. We cannot sit supinely by and take our cue from the more or less worldly communities in which we live and do nothing. One of the most serious features of the situation we face is the satisfied ignorance of so many of us Methodists. The first requirement is an intelligent appreciation of the facts. This lays a heavy duty upon our whole church, not only in America, but in many other lands, to undertake a program of education, both on the general problem of the relation of races but specifically related to the conditions which are faced in many of the lands where Methodists are found."

As one might surmise, the cause of missions received renewed emphasis. It was stated that "Delegates to this conference and many to whom this message is addressed are members of the church because Methodists, or at least certain Methodists, have been missionary-minded. Have we realized that the missionary enterprise is the one organized form in which the church is able to assert its belief in the universality of its gospel? We are very near the center of our faith when we are intelligently devoted to the unfinished task of carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to men wherever they are found."

The concluding statement bears eloquent testimony to a faith which is gaining ascendancy: "As our Conference has drawn to a close, certain overtones which have been sounded from the beginning became louder and more insistent until they broke through the lesser sounds, and in the last address of the final day almost drowned out all lesser music. The essential oneness of all who are in allegiance to our Lord and Master, the solidarity and permanence of the church as the body of Christ, the absolute necessity of recognizing the bonds which hold Christians together—these were notes in that great series of affirmations which will not permit us ever to be the same again."

It must be obvious to those who take the time to look at human life that its greatest values lie not in getting things, but in doing them, in doing them together, in all working toward a common aim, in the experience of comradeship, of warmhearted 100 per cent human life.

Church Union Realized

By DR. F. M. POTTER

I am writing these lines while still under the spell of the most impressive church service I have ever attended in any country. The centuries of church history hold no parallel to the drama of Christian reunion which was enacted at Madras, India on September 27. In this colorful Indian city I saw consummated after 28 years of patient, prayerful work, the union of three great Protestant churches to form the new Church of South India.

The uniting churches need only be named to show how important this event was, not only to India but all Christendom. The new church is made up of the Anglicans of the South dioceses of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, the South Indian districts of the Methodist Church (British), and the South India United Church. The last-named communion represented an earlier union of Presbyterian, Reformed, and Congregational bodies both British and American. The new church has 1,100,000 members.

Six hundred persons crowded historic St. George's Cathedral and in a temporary structure immediately adjoining nearly 2,000 more were assembled. The presiding bishop, the Right Reverend C. K. Jacob, an Indian Christian from Travancore, gave the call to worship. Then the congregation rose and began to sing, "O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come." For a moment the voices struggled to achieve unison, but soon the joy and triumph in all hearts joined in the swelling volume of harmony which alone could fittingly express our feelings.

One of the most impressive parts of the service was the reading of the resolutions of the uniting churches. A representative of each in turn read the enabling act of his own denomination's highest judiciary. Then he placed on the communion table signed copies of the "basis of union" and of the constitution of the Church of South India, together with statements signed by all those performing any ecclesiastical function in the united church, declaring their assent to these basic documents. The presiding bishop then formally inaugurated the new church with the following portentous words:

"Dearly beloved brethern: In obedience to the Lord Jesus Christ, the Head of the Church, who on the night of his passion prayed that His disciples might be one, and by authority of the governing bodies of the uniting churches, whose resolutions have been read in your hearing and laid in prayer before Almighty God, I do hereby declare that these three churches, namely, the Madras, Travancore and Cochin, Tinnevely and Dornakal dioceses of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon; the Madras, Madura, Malabar, Jaffna (Ceylon), Kannada, Telegu and Travancore church councils of the South India United Church; and the Methodist Church in South India, comprising the Madras, Trichinopoly, Hyderabad and Mysore districts; are become one Church of South India, and that those bishops, presbyters, deacons and probationers who have assented to the basis of union and accepted the constitution of the Church of South India, and whose names are laid upon this holy table, are bishops, presbyters and deacons of this church, in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Amen."

The choir and the congregation then lifted their voices in the Te Deum. Surely never in these 2,000 years have the servants of the Head of the Church joined with greater cause for devout thanksgiving in that ancient ascription of praise. The commissioning of the existing bishops began immediately. The presiding bishop moved outside the communion rail. He and the other bishops were asked to declare their wholehearted assent to the basis of union and the constitution of the new church. They did so. Then a minister of the former South India Church and a minister representing the former Methodist Church in South India read a formal commission of authority to these bishops to exercise the episcopal office in the new church.

An even more memorable event followed. The first communion service of the Church of South India was solemnly celebrated. In conformity with the practice of the cathedral, the rite was conducted according to the Anglican practice. The beautiful silver service of the cathedral was used. One by one the people filed silently to the altar and ate the bread and drank the cup of the Lord's Supper. Simultaneously a similar observance was conducted in the temporary building near by. Bishops in white robes and saffron stoles, presbyters in simple white gowns, laymen in varying apparel, women in many-colored saris, Europeans, Indians and Americans communed at the table of the Lord.

All who participated were aware that nothing less than a special providence had brought about the inauguration of the new church at this particular moment in history.

So, after 28 years of labor and intercession by great numbers of Christian people, the Church of South India is launched. Nobody can read the record of the humility, patience, tolerance and deep understanding revealed in almost three decades of effort in the joint committee on union without recognizing this church as a fruit of the Spirit of God. But it is characteristic of all who were present at Madras that they regard this as a beginning, not an end. Many details of organization remain to be worked out. The elements which have been so disparate are now joined, but they must grow together. One council of the former South India United Church has so far remained outside of the union. While all Anglican and Methodist bodies have united, there are still important questions of relationship to the older churches, and particularly to the Anglican, to which the final answer has not yet been given.

But one may look with confidence to the future. No other attitude is possible after the impressive demonstration of harmony of spirit which breathed through every act of the solemn services of inauguration and consecration. These were no light acts, hastily taken in a moment of emotion. Long study and prayer lay behind every step of these services, which were worked out with meticulous attention to the last detail. Unanimous acceptance of the new order was set forth in mutual pledges of the most solemn character, taken in the presence of God while the whole world looked on.

Fifty North Carolina Congregational Christian and Evangelical Reformed ministers at an all-day meeting held at the First E. & R. Church, High Point, North Carolina, Tuesday, October 14, voted unanimously in favor of the union between the two denominations. The Basis of Union was discussed, questions asked and answered relating to the present organization and work of the two communions, and a day of good fellowship was enjoyed by all.

Attention Conference Delegates— Many of our people renew their subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN at Conference. Superintendent W. T. Scott will be present to receive renewals and new subscriptions from your church. Kindly bring this matter to the attention of your people.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Sunday school teacher is one of the most important persons in our American life. He has a divinely opened door to the heart of the youth and community. It is a job that must not be taken lightly. Sunday school teachers are usually not paid in money, nor honored in public gatherings. But they are paid, and they are honored. God will see to that. To little two-year-old Tommy she is one of the most important people in all the world. And to unnumbered hundreds of plain men and women the teacher of their Sunday school class is very greatly appreciated. The little group of boys find in him, or her, a most delightful friend. The writer of these lines can never forget his happy Sundays as a boy, and the Sunday school teachers of his childhood. Two large, adult-sized pews were filled with us and we were taught truths too precious to have been taught but by the best of understanding friends. In Suffolk, for instance, there is an old lady whose life is far sweeter and happier because for years she taught a group of boys in Sunday school. The church can count on those men now.

On a Sunday in October ninety teachers and officers of the Suffolk Sunday school will have their names read out by their pastor and they will be invited to arise from their seats and come to the altar of the church for recognition of their worth to the church, the community, and the world; and a prayer of thanksgiving for their acceptance of responsibility, and for the rededication of their lives will be offered. When one considers the importance of the Sunday school teacher, and the work done by the Sunday school it can readily be seen that every effort should be made to make the Sunday school more and more efficient. Any church that fails its Sunday school is failing the very heart of its work.

Mrs. W. J. Baines, superintendent of our junior department, for instance, took as a project for her department some time ago the establishing of a library for her teachers and officers, and for the boys and girls in her department. Shelves and books have been placed in one of the rooms and the library is growing. The workers' council is developing a library of helpful books for teachers, officers, and pupils. For sometime those who have been responsible for securing of new teachers have had the privilege of offering the teacher whatever helps and literature she felt she needed from time to time as a teacher, because the Sunday school feels that the purchase of such material is money well spent.

One other thing which most of our Sunday schools need to do is to secure a greater attendance. Efficiency in the Sunday school classroom will greatly help, but much of this work can be done only by the home. Every home should see to it that none escapes the call of the Sunday school bell. Good hard work on the part of all officers and teachers toward securing new members, and keeping attendance regular, will get results in every church. A live Sunday school helps make a growing, progressive church. Honor and blessings upon the Sunday school teacher.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

CONDEMNING A CHURCH

"Time marches on." Whither bound are we? Where will we be when we get where we are heading? We are living in a fast and furious age.

The boys and girls of today, the young men and young women in our schools and colleges must determine what the new world order will be like. We are confronted with the most serious situation civilization has ever faced. Will these future citizens and world statesmen be equal to this stupendous emergency? Let's look at a few facts.

In one six months recently 184,000 boys and girls were arrested and finger-printed. Of these 144,324 were boys, 40,041 were girls—total 184,365.

The ages checked ran from 16 to 24. Boys 17 years of age led—23,120. Among girls age 22 led—5,870. A few days ago I stood on a street corner waiting for a bus. A Negro man was waiting for the same bus. Said I: "What is that big abandoned building in the distance yonder?" "That sir," said the Negro "was once a church. The State condemned that property, and all this vacant block you see there. They have to enlarge the penitentiary—they say it's very much over-crowded."

Condemning a church to get the land to build a bigger penitentiary! How has all this come about? Where lies the blame? Who is responsible for this sad state of affairs? Juvenile court records show that in many cases the delinquency is parental rather than juvenile. A certain juvenile judge whom I know, one night ordered police to round-up all older boys and girls found loitering around after midnight. They were brought in, registered and sent home. The next day their parents were arrested and brought to court. That method of procedure worked. Juvenile delinquency in that town diminished. Parents became alert.

A certain mother was heard to remark this summer: "I certainly will be glad when school starts. I've done nothing all summer but look after the kids. Husband and I can't go out at night. We've had to give up two card clubs and we never get to a night club."

I had breakfast in a suburban cafe one morning recently. Two college students went out the door in front of me, each with an armful of books. "Come on now, let's go down to Jack's place on the corner and get a couple of beers before we go on to class." Fine, young American manhood getting ready to meet and fight life's battles in an already war-torn, sin-scarred world. How far will they get? Liquor and crime go hand in hand. They are close side-partners.

A few drinks helps to let down the bars and make it easy to step out and take a first chance. Court records tell us that a major crime is committed every twenty seconds. That's nine every minute, five hundred and forty every hour.

Are we living in Christian America or aren't we.

S. M. Smith.

ROANOKE, ALABAMA.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the First Congregational Christian Church are happy to report a year of good work under the splendid leadership of our faithful president, Mrs. Luke Huey.

During the year we have enjoyed well planned programs and devotionals with each member taking part.

We observed the World's Day of Prayer with the ladies from the Lowell Church.

Mr. Hay from Wadley reviewed very beautifully our study book on India, after which we had an informal tea in the church basement.

We sent a check to the orphanage for Easter. We make a special effort to remember the sick and shut-ins.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

A DANGEROUS THREAT.

The fall is passing; winter will soon be here. In winter heat is essential to the health and comfort of any group. At Elon College all college buildings, on and off the campus with the exception of two, are heated from the central heating plant. These facilities were prepared and installed in 1904. They were ready for use in the fall of 1905. The boiler installed then was second-hand. This boiler, together with another installed shortly thereafter and other necessary equipment, has lasted for these forty odd years. Heating experts tell us that the average life of this kind of equipment is twenty-five years. It would seem that these facilities have about served their day. In fact state authorities and insurance companies have ordered a drastic reduction in steam pressure. The requested pressure will not keep the buildings comfortable in cold weather. The same authorities state that this equipment is likely to fail us at any time.

These conditions do constitute a dangerous threat to the life and economic stability of the College. To be forced to close the school for the lack of heat, even for a short time, would be a calamity from which it would be difficult to recover.

The college authorities, including the Board of Trustees, have been working on this proposition for nearly two years. The engineers had so much work on hand that they were tardy in getting to this job. Now the work is being delayed for the lack of funds. It is not advisable to borrow and if it were, under present banking laws we could not borrow without sufficient and acceptable personal endorsement. As a rule, people hesitate to endorse the kind of paper that would be required for this undertaking. Something must be done, however, and done quickly.

It would seem that the only way out now is to raise the necessary cash to pay for this required improvement and thus remove the threat. The necessary funds could be raised from our churches and friends and would be, I am sure, if they only realized the seriousness of the situation confronting their college.

In last week's CHRISTIAN SUN a detailed report was given showing the contributions to the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation. If all of the churches would pay their voluntary apportionment for this fund, the College would be able to repay the undesignated funds the amount borrowed more than a year ago to increase its endowment to the required amount. Then the undesignated fund would be in a position, with individual contributions, to pay for the heating plant.

This week we sent an earnest appeal to all churches that have not paid their voluntary apportionment in full beseeching them earnestly to come to the College's rescue. This appeal was addressed to pastors and church officials. I do trust and pray that they will let us hear from them. Some way we must remove the threat that now hangs over our college.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We have passed the half-way mark of the total college apportionment, but we are a long, long ways from the total amount. The churches are only asked to contribute $12,500 annually to the College. Not within the past sixteen years have the churches as a whole sent to the College an amount equal to the apportionment. Today the College is facing a very serious situation. It does seem that in light of the fact that every other cause of the Convention supported by the churches has received more than its apportionment that they might rally and see that the College receives its total apportionment for one time. The College realizes its dependency upon the churches. It could not go without them. I would not want to go without them. We must go along together. We are mutually dependent upon each other. The College is always anxious to do its share and appreciates the desire of the church to be of help to the College.

congregation prior to the union. When they shall have been admitted, they shall be recognized as members of the United Church."

3. The Ministry. (How Licensed, Ordained, Called?)

"a. The ministers of the two communions shall be enrolled as ministers of the United Church. Candidates for the ministry, after the union, and until a standard method is provided by the constitution, shall have the same status, and be licensed or ordained as ministers by the Associations or Conferences and Synods in the same way, as before the union. The standard method shall provide for ordination by authorization of the Conference or Association and normally upon the call to a Congregation. Similarly the formal induction of a minister into his parish, which is recommended as normal procedure, shall be by authority of the Conference or Association at the request of the Congregation.

"b. A minister of another denomination shall not be accepted by any body of the United Church in which ministerial standing is held without recommendation from the body to which he belongs; if however, a denomination refuses to recommend a minister in good and regular standing, he may be accepted after proper examination by the Conference or Association in which his standing would be held.

"c. The calling of a minister to a Congregation is a concern of the Church at large, represented in the Association or Conference, as well as of the minister and the Congregation. Ministers and churches desiring to maintain a system of pastoral placement in which the Conference or Association shall have little or no part, shall be free to do so; but the recommended standard of denominational procedure shall be one in which the minister, Congregation, and Conference or Association cooperate, the Conference or Association approving candidates, the Congregation extending and the minister accepting the call. The new communion will appeal to all Congregations not to call or dismiss their ministers, and to all ministers not to respond to calls or resign until the Association or Conference shall have given approval. In all relationships between minister and local church or Congregation, the freedom of the minister and the autonomy of the church are presupposed." (See Basis of Union VI, pages 9-10.)

INSTRUCTIONS FOR SENDING PACKAGES TO CHINA

GENERAL MERCHANDISE —

Packages may now be sent by parcel post to addresses in China. The packages are limited to 22 lbs. in weight and the rate is 14 cents per lb. or fraction. The size is limited to a total of 72 inches length and girth combined. The greatest length is 42 inches. A single Customs tag No. 2966 should be attached to each package showing the true contents of the bundle, also one International Parcel Post sticker No. 2922.

Packages for Missionaries in the Peiping area should be addressed to the Missionary in care of The American Board Mission, Peiping, China; and those in the Foochow area to the Missionary in care of The American Board Mission, Foochow, Fukien, China. Thus:

Rev. Richard L. Jackson,
American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukein, China.

No registration possible.

PRINTED MATTER—Books and magazines should not be included in parcel post packages, but should be sent forward under their own classification clearly marked "Printed Matter." The limit of weight to a single package is 4 lbs. 6 ounces (6 lbs. 9 ounces for a single book). The rate is 1½ cents for each two ounces.

In commenting on the above instructions, Mr. Harvey L. Meeken of the American Board says in regard to parcel post: "I think I would not attempt express or any other method of shipment, because we have found that the mail service works out better in the long run. We are asking the various interests in similar projects to mail the packages directly from their local post office, and have them to write to the Missionaries offering to reimburse them through the American Board Treasurer for any expense that may be involved at the other end. In most cases the sender is more than willing to underwrite all charges through to the Mission Field."

Regarding printed matter he adds: "This is a universal postal rate for printed matter to all members of the postal union, which of course includes China. Packages sent at printed matter rates are not dutiable to most countries, including China. There is no restriction as to the number of packages that may be sent under this method."

WHERE YOUR CHURCH'S CONVEN-TION APPORTIONMENT GOES AND WHAT IT DOES.
(FROM A LETTER TO CHURCH SECRETARIES.)

Home Missions.—Your gifts for Home Missions help to make America Christian, beginning right here in North Carolina and Virginia, by assisting churches needing aid to provide pastors, furnishing a pastor for the Mission in Carrol County, Va., aiding churches in erecting adequate building, starting new churches where our witness is needed, and in supplying missionary information. A small percentage of our funds go to support the Home Mission work of our denomination outside of the Convention.

Foreign Missions.—Your gifts for Foreign Missions are an effort on your part to fulfill Jesus' command to His disciples (which we profess to be), "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15. We have a world parish of 42 millions of people who are in need of Christ and who without us may never hear the message of Christian salvation.

The Christian Orphanage.—One hundred little children—without a home of their own—are looking to us for food, shelter, clothing, Christian care and training that they may grow into good men and women. Your gifts will help your church to do its Christian duty toward these children.

Elon College.—Our Church needs trained Christian leaders. Most of our ministers and leaders have been trained at our College, established, owned and operated by our denomination. Your gifts to Elon College are investments in training of our young people in Christian knowledge and ideals. Elon believes that knowledge is not enough and therefore she seeks to provide a Christian atmosphere and Christian teachers that our youth may have solid Christian foundations and beliefs to direct knowledge into Christian living and conduct.

Christian Education.—Gifts to Christian Education are used by The Board of Christian Education in training Sunday school and church workers, directing young people's work, promoting Daily Vacation Bible schools, Summer Conferences, distributing Christian literature, providing the salary and expenses of the Field Director for Christian Education and Young People's Organizations, and other helps through The Convention Office.

Superannuation.—Your gifts to the Board of Superannuation provide funds with which our churches may aid our aged and disabled ministers, their widows, and dependents. These Soldiers of the Cross have given their all to preach the Gospel and to give you spiritual ministry. Your gifts will provide them with a reasonable security in their old age and infirmity.

The Convention Fund.—Your gifts to this Fund provide money with which to pay the expenses of the Southern Convention; providing the services of a full time Superintendent and Field Workers to visit, counsel and assist the churches; maintaining the Convention Office to receive and distribute your gifts, supply literature

HOLY NECK JUNIORS

As we come to the end of our church year, looking back, I feel that it has been a successful year for the Junior Missionary Society of Holy Neck Church.

Ours is an organized group of thirty-two boys and girls who select their own officers. Those who were selected have served well this year.

We have used our two study books this year. During the first part of the year we studied about India, and the title of our book was "Fig Tree Villages." For the past few months we have been using the book "Call Me Charley." Both books have been quite interesting and have helped us to learn many things.

At Christmas time the members of our group drew names and exchanged gifts at our Christmas party.

On Fifth Sunday morning in August we presented our Public Program with a large number of our Juniors taking part.

All of our apportionments for the year have been paid and we have paid for all our literature. Last fall we sent $5.00 to Shaowu. Recently we sent a Friendly Service gift to Franklington Institute. Besides our dues each month, we used dime cards to help raise money for our society.

MRS. ROBERT WARREN, Leader.

SOUTH NORFOLK JUNIORS

The work of the South Norfolk Junior Missionary Society is carried on in the Junior Department as a whole. The leaders have as their aim the development of a true missionary spirit through education and opportunities for service. They have tried to instill into the hearts and minds of the Juniors the fact that every true Christian is a missionary, and as far as possible have tried to acquaint them with those especially chosen to work both at home and on the foreign fields. It is seldom that a Sunday goes by without the presentation of missionary work in some form. And on the first Sunday in each month a special missionary program is given.

During the past year the following contributions have been made:

Junior Missionary Society Apportionment, $15.00; Christian Missionary Association, $10.00; Christian Orphanage, $5.00; Elon College Apportionment, $35.00; Rally Day, $50.00; Special Thank Offering, Shaowu, $5.00; Special Missionary Offering to Sunday School, $19.09.

In addition to the above, the Juniors collected toys and other supplies and sent them to the churches in Carroll County.

They also sponsored the collection of $200.00 with which medical supplies and laboratory equipment were bought and sent to Dr. Riggs, Shaowu, China.

MRS. ANDREW SMITH, Supt.

MT. CARMEL

We, the Young People's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel, Virginia feel that we have had a good year. We have had good programs and our members have been very supporting.

We joined with the Woman's Missionary Society in the Thank Offering program in public service in November.

Our July meeting was held outdoors following a hamburger roast.

Our pastor, Rev. P. Shannon Morgan gave an interesting review of our mission book, "Our Country Is India," at our September meeting.

We believe we have met all the requirements of the Standard of Excellence and hope to be among those on the Honor Roll.

LOUISE CARR, Secretary.

PLEASANT HILL CHURCH

Rev. and Mrs. M. A. Pollard moved to the new parsonage at Pleasant Hill on September 3, 1947, from Greensboro. They are now taking an active part in the work here.

Mr. Pollard preaches the first and third Sunday morning of each month.

The revival started the first Sunday morning in September and continued through Saturday night. Each service was well attended.

Mr. Pollard preached with a zeal and determination, sermons which were filled with the Spirit of God's love revealing to us Salvation for which Jesus died.

The church was greatly revived, fine rededications were made and ten confessions of faith. Fifteen members were added to the church, some by letter and others on confession of Faith. There was also one convert and one addition to the church at the third Sunday morning service.

May the years ahead bring the conversion of many souls and may the church be a source of strength and light to our community, and to those who know not our Savior, is our hope and our prayer.

CYPRESS CHAPEL.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church has come to the close of a most successful year. We are thankful that we have had a small part in spreading the gospel in God's world.

Our organization has done a full year's work under its capable leaders: Mrs. R. E. Brittle, sponsor; and Mr. Melvin Bunch, president.

The work for the year was well planned and included these objectives:

1. Raise money by (a) calendar bags, (b) piggy banks, (c) sale of flavoring, (d) lawn party.
2. Mission books—studied with other societies.
3. Cheer shut-ins.
4. Carroll County.
5. Shaowu Mission—Jacksons.
6. Increase membership.

Following this program, the following projects were accomplished:

We sent $30.00 to the Jacksons at Shaowu and $10.00 for our membership in the C. M. A.

At our Thanksgiving Sunrise Service, Sunshine Boxes were sent to thirteen shut-ins.

At Christmas a large number of our young people sang carols at the homes of eleven shut-ins.

We paid $15.00 for our Pilgrim Fellowship dues, sent $10.00 to Carroll County, and $10.00 to Franklington Institute.

We sent a box of toys, games and school equipment to Carroll County.

The Society bought a cross for the worship center in our church and it was presented to the church in a very effective program.

Mr. Tom Odom of Whaleyville, Va., taught our mission study book, India. Liberty Spring and Bethlehem societies joined with us to hear our study. Following our study we had a social hour.

Our society and Liberty Spring society joined with Bethlehem to hear our home study book, Race Relationship.

Our annual picnic was held at Culpepper's Pool in July.

Two of our young people attended the Senior Camp at Camp Hanes.

A lawn party was given on August

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Friends,

How shall I write you? I am told that boys and girls from 5 to 75 read this page, and goodness, gracious! How can anyone write for so many different ages? I'll try to write something for one group one time and so on.

Last Sunday the Three Score and Ten Club of Richmond held special services at our church in the morning. These people are 65 and over. Many of them are very old. They enjoy meeting together and going to church and other places. It is good to see them well and able to be about their work and fun. Thoughtful persons are always kind to older people. Fortunate are the families of you who have an older aunt or a grandparent living with you. Listen to them! It really is hard to believe, and once they did not believe it themselves, but older people do know things.

I remember my own grandfather who was born during the Civil War told fascinating stories of when he was a boy. He spoke of riding on horseback to Cypress Chapel to services. He went to Bethlehem and Liberty Spring too. Old churches, like old people are interesting and they teach us if we let them.

Please do not be in such a rush that you can not find time to speak kindly to older people or do errands for them. Just because one is young doesn't mean that one has to be naughty and rude. Being old, doesn't mean that one is quiet and kind. There are children who don't feel happy and old folks as well.

Older people are usually wise and very great men have done things in their later life. Some of the great living people who are old are: Toscanini, the musician; George Bernard Shaw, the writer, Bernard Baruch, the great American; and Albert Schweitzer, the missionary.

I want to say a few things about Dr. Schweitzer. A most interesting write-up and series of pictures about him appeared in the October 6 issue of LIFE. He was born more than seventy years ago in Alsace. As a young boy he had been a musician and was considered the greatest master of Bach's music. Since most of Bach's music is churchly, young Schweitzer was that too. Then in his mid years he decided to go as a missionary and he studied medicine and went out to Africa as a medical missionary. Today he is at Lambarene, preaching, doctoring and practicing his music. Some have called him "The greatest man in the world." Anyway, he is a great man and an old one and one we should hold in reverence.

What about those letters?

NEED DADDY BE AN OGRE:

LUCIA MALLORY

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Just wait till your daddy comes home! I'll tell him what a naughty boy you've been today! Daddy will punish you—"

Quickly I closed my door to shut out the strident tones that came from the apartment across the hall. It was painful to me to hear my young neighbor scolding her little son and taking away all his joy in his father's return.

I could picture the father coming in at evening, eager for the happiness of his home. As he held out his arms to the child, the mother's cross recital of the day's unpleasantness would interrupt their greeting. Instead of being an understanding friend, the father would have to become an aloof judge, meting out punishment, which, if really needed should have been pronounced by the mother in place of the threat to "tell Daddy."

Knowing that my neighbor had been working ceaselessly at housecleaning from early morning, I wondered if her own weariness might not have been responsible for the impatience she had felt. Very likely she was making an issue of something that on ordinary days would not have annoyed her.

If correction is needed, it should not be postponed. When a baby toddles off into a busy street, one does not wait a moment to call him back and insist on a safer place in which to play. A child's mind is occupied with the present. Neither the future nor the past has much conscious significance for him.

Parenthood is a sacred experience. Certainly a father should have a part in guiding and counseling his child, but the petty, irritating grievances of the day should not be carried over into the evening. Such a procedure magnifies small misdemeanors out of all proportion to their importance.

A happy comradeship with Father is the best possible safeguard against the influence of false standards and vicious habits that are bound to force themselves upon one's attention in adolescence. And the only assurance of any parent's being able to hold this protecting relationship is the steady growth of an equally happy companionship throughout childhood.

I like to see how much my brother, Ned, and his sixteen-year-old son, Kenneth enjoy doing different things together. They are happy in each other's company at work or play. Often I hear them discussing an article on some recent development in science that both have read, and I recall that Ned has been interested in his son's reading ever since the child first learned to recognize a meaning in printed words. I remember, too, how, as a small toddler, Kenneth used to follow Ned around the yard and garden on summer evenings, learning to share his father's interest in plants and trees and flowers. Ned has a small workshop in his basement. Kenneth was very small when he began to handle tools and to "help Daddy" make things for Mother.

That happy companionship, I know would have been denied both if Beatrice, my sister-in-law, had relegated all matters of discipline to Ned and had met him each evening with whining tales of his son's misbehavior. Beatrice keeps her serenity and poise, in spite of the little ups and downs of every day, thereby imparting to her children her own habit of self-control. She has shown unusual strength in a willingness and ability to cope with any situation that has arisen; and she has never needlessly involved the children's father in the settlement of trifles.

Kenneth and his two sister have a much better start toward harmonious and sensible living than my little neighbor will have, unless his mother changes her methods. To be habitually twice scolded and then often finally punished, for each small offense, is in itself either discouraging or callousing, but when the retribution for each offense involves both parents it sadly weakens the priceless sense of home security.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF EASTERN VIRGINIA.

It is with the greatest of pleasure that I launch forth on this new missionary year. To work with such a fine group of young people is quite an inspiration. It is of utmost importance, and my heart's desire, that through our cooperation together and God's ever guiding light we may derive many benefits and may reach others in His name.

To our retiring superintendent, Mrs. James Lynch, who has served us so faithfully and so well, we do humbly say, "Thank you." Your steadfastness has certainly challenged us to continue the work which has been started for us.

Don't fail to use the mimeographed sheets Mrs. Lynch has prepared for you for I feel confident they will prove very helpful. The above mentioned were distributed at our Eastern Virginia Fall Missionary Conference held at the Suffolk Christian Church.

As you probably know we were very fortunate to have the Rev. Robert Houff, President of the United Christian Youth Council of Virginia, who spoke to us of the Young People's Conference at Oslo, Norway. It was an excellent message; and too, we commend you young people for the very good attendance.

Young people, please feel free to call or write me at the following address: RFD 2, Box 720, Suffolk, Va., at any time. I look forward to hearing from you about your activities, problems, and good work.

Trusting we will have a very successful year together, I remain with best wishes to all of you

FORSYTH COUNTY PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP RALLY.

On Sunday night, October 12, 1947 the young people of the Forsyth County churches met together at Belevs Creek Congregational Christian Church for an evening of worship, fellowship, and enlightenment. Presiding was our president, Grady Young from Salem Chapel.

Our topic was "Summer in Review and Winter in Preview." In order that our theme might be carried out, reports from various camps attended by our members were given. Baxter Twiddy, who attended Work Camp in Missouri, gave a report on his work there. From our Forsyth County Churches Don Neal brought us a report on the FFA Camp near Asheville, and Ruby Neal and Faye Neal told of their favorite pastimes and many new things that they learned at the 4H Camp which was held at Camp Betty Hastings. From the Congregational Christian Church Camp at Camp Hanes near Winston-Salem this summer two delegates from Greensboro, North Carolina, Nancy Ballenger and Fleta Mae Moffatt, reminisced the inspirational and constructive experiences that they found most beneficial.

To enlighten our view of the future Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, our field director in the Southern Convntion, previewed our winter projects. A new packet containing program material will be available probably next month for use particularly by small groups. It is our duty to know more about the merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, the UCYM, and the CWVR.

Our officers for the coming year wear elected. They are: Max Marshall, persident (Salem Chapel); Juanita Hartman, vice-president (Belevs Creek); Jo Anne Johnson, secretary (Salem Chapel); and Helen Jackson, reporter (Winston-Salem).

After our supper each church presented a stunt which was followed by the projection of colored slides taken at Camp Hanes by Oscar Paris of Greensboro.

A choir from Pleasant Ridge Church under the direction of Miss Edna Glenn Huffine participated in the closing worship.

Having had our summer summarized for us and our winter previewed, we departed to reach constantly toward those higher goals which we as Christian young people must strive to gain.

HELEN JACKSON, Reporter.

INSTITUTE ON INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS.

Plans for an institute on international affairs have been announced by the Rev. J. H. Marion, D. D. The Department of Social Education and Action of the Virginia Council of Churches is working with the Southern Office of the Friends Committee on a joint sponsorship.

A special feature of the opening session on Friday evening, November 7, at 8:00 o'clock will be an address by Mrs. Carkhoosa Fischer, specialist on Russian affairs. Dr. Benj. E. Mays of Morehouse College at Atlanta, Ga., and Dr. Paul Hutchinson, new editor of The Christian Century, have accepted invitations to make addresses at the Saturday session. The place was will be Ginter Park Presbyterian Church, Chamberlayne Avenue (campus of Union Theological Seminary), Richmond, Va. The dates are November 7 and 8.

For descriptive folder and information write to Dr. John H. Marion, 1444 E. Main St., Richmond 19, Va.

AWARDS OFFERED.

Thirty-two national and regional Parshad Youth Week Awards will be made again next year through the United Christian Youth Movement, according to Miss Helen Spaulding, associate executive secretary of U. C. Y. M. and associate director of youth work for the International Council of Religious Education, which administers the movement. The awards are one of the main aspects of the annual celebration of Youth Week, which next year will be observed January 25-February 1.

Eight college and twenty-four summer conference awards will be made during 1948 on the basis of participants' Christian service and understanding of Christian responsibility. In addition to showing evidence of their Christian service in local churches and interdenominational cooperation and of their Christian citizenship in school, work, and community life, the participants will write essays of 1,500 words on the topic, "Youth in the Community: Our Christian Responsibility."

Two national awards of $400 annually for four years for college scholarship and annual scholarships to summer regional conferences sponsored by U. C. Y. M. will be given to the winning boy and girl. In each of six regions one $250 annual college scholarship and and a conference award will be given. Second high persons in each region will receive full conference scholarships. The other 18 awards will be partial conference scholarships to three persons in the six regions.

"The purpose of the awards, in addition to providing educational training for Christian youth, is to center the thinking of young people upon

CHRISTIAN STANDARDS OF CONDUCT.

LESSON V—NOVEMBER 2, 147.

MEMORY SELECTION: Let the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer.

LESSON: James 3:5; Acts 4:1-10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 12:13-22.

The Responsibility and the Reward of Teachers.

"Be not many of you teachers, my brethren, knowing that we shall receive heavier judgment." James' words would seem to discourage folks from being teachers. But the words have to be interpreted against the background of the times in which he lived. In those days many people aspired to be teachers—there was no lack of them. There are frequent references to them in the New Testament, for the word "scribe" refers to them. People liked to pose as teachers, as leaders, as those who knew more than others. It was not all to the bad James would say. But privilege brings responsibility. To whomsoever much is given of him will much be required. "Knowing that we shall receive the heavier judgment" is the way James puts it. A teacher, by virtue of the fact that he is a teacher has a responsible position, he will have to give an account of himself.

But he has his reward. The very fact that one is a teacher, is an incentive to growth both in knowledge and in character and in moral and spiritual stature. One ought not to refuse to teach if he has any qualifications for teaching, and if he is sincere. It will enrich both his own life and the lives of those he teaches.

The Perfect Man.

"There ain't no such animal," said the Irishman as he saw for the first time a giraffe in the sideshow of the circus. And the same goes for a perfect man. There ain't no such animal. But James says the way to such perfection lies in the absolute control of the tongue. "If any man stumble not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able to bridle the whole body." Strange indeed that a little organ like the tongue should be the stumbling block to perfection, but thus it is says this man of God.

A Little Member.

"So the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things." It is not large in proportion to the other members of the body such as the arms or the legs or the heart or the lungs. A little soft, flabby, ungainly piece of muscle—but it is a destructive and even deadly thing. It has a power all out of proportion to its size. Like a bit in a horse's mouth, like the rudder of a ship, it exerts an influence, determines action far beyond its size. It is comparatively tiny, but it is potentially terrible.

A Little Member, But A Fire.

James stood in awe of the tongue. The havoc which it could work was like unto that which a small fire could work. One match would be sufficient to set a whole city on fire if the fire which it started was allowed to get a head start. And so with the tongue. Loosed and uncontrolled it could defile the whole body and the whole natural and social order. Fire has been a great destructive factor in life—it has taken an awful toll through the centuries. But it is a small thing as compared with the havoc wrought by the tongue.

A Restless Evil, Full of Poison.

This fellow, James, has a profound respect for the tongue. Indeed he had a wholesome fear of it. It was a fire, a world of iniquity, a restless evil, a poisonous thing, full of deadly poison. Its sting was as much to be feared as the sting of a rattle snake. It not only stings, it kills. He was speaking out of observation and experience.

A Mixed Fountain.

The tongue had dual possibilities. With it we can praise God and bless men. With it we can also curse men. It is like unto a fountain that pours out at the same time blessing and cursing, bitter and sweet waters. It just could not be tamed, that is not by man. "The tongue no man can tame," said the brother of our Lord. Only the Holy Spirit could tame and subdue this tiny, terrible monster. Well, history has confirmed James' scathing denunciation of the tongue. Ah the tragedy of the unbridled tongue!

Friendship With the World, Enmity With God.

Discipleship with Jesus brought in that day the hostility of the world. And friendship with the world, was a denial of the things for which the Kingdom stood. There must be no compromise with the world. Such compromise is in a sense a denial of the faith.

Grace for the Humble.

"God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. The scientist who ultimately makes the greatest discoveries is the man who humbly approaches a truth, or comes to a study with an open and eager and humble mind. So it is with the things of the spirit. Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are the poor in spirit . . . blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness. Pride not only goeth before a fall, but it shuts the door to the best things in life and to God himself. "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall exalt you."

Licking the Devil.

"Resist the devil and he will flee from you." He sometimes puts up a good fight. He is tricky and persistent. But if we really fight him he is a coward at heart, he will run away. The trouble often is that we love sin, we want to do the things he wants us to do. We often get licked because we want to be licked.

Careful In Judging.

James sounds like his brother when he asks, "But who art thou that judgest thy neighbor?" Judging others is difficult if done on its merits, and dangerous even when done by the best of us. We do not know, and it is almost impossible to know all that is involved in the action of others. "Judge not that ye be not judged," said Jesus.

The annual meeting of the Georgia Conference will be held at Woodbury Chapel near Chipley, Georgia, October 28-29.

OUR WORLD NEEDS A NEW AXIS

Sermonette by
REV. CARL R. KEY

"For he is our peace, he who has made both of us a unity and destroyed the barrier which kept us apart; in his own flesh he put an end to the feud of the Law with its code of commands, so as to make peace by the creation of a new Man in himself out of both parties, so as himself to give the death-blow to the feud by reconciling them both to God in one Body through the Cross; he came with a gospel of peace for these far away (that is, for you) and for those who are near, for it is through him that we both enjoy our access to the Father in one Spirit."—Ephesians 2:14, 18 (Moffatt).

The world of yester-year tried many axes, but none have proven to be permanent and useful to mankind. Our world needs a new axis. There are many kinds of axes. You find them in anatomy, botany, mathematics, the fine arts and the like. A simple definition which is workable for us says an axis is "a line actually drawn and used as the basis of measurements."

That is just where the trouble lies with us individually and collectively today. We have lost our faith, our standard of measurement, and spurned its symbols. How, then, can we have any hope?

One standard of measurement and hope today is the United Nations. It has as its official symbol eight interesting lines surrounded by four expanding or contracting circles evenly spaced. An olive branch is placed on either side. A map of the world is also placed in the center over its axis. That is to say, the nations standing together in mutual helpfulness and freedom can preserve the peace of the world. They propose to build up rather than destroy. All "Middle walls of partition" can be broken down when they outlaw hatred and create a new man in a new world by this new standard of measurement. It is the only way to preserve the peace which has been won at such tremendous cost.

Right has always triumphed over might and always will. If we have faith so as to remove mountains we can count on that. If not, then we are headed for the scrap-heap of history.

A few weeks ago I sat in a meeting where one man was "cussing", not discussing, the United Nations. Verbally at least, he slapped the leaders of that organization in the face—along with its founders and all humanity—by summing up what he had to say by calling the UN the "Un-tied Nations". In my mind I could see back of that the picture of all the rubble in Britain and Europe, the leveled cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The screech of bombs and the cries of the dying were almost audible. I felt like doing two things. First, to slap his face forcible enough to bring him to his mind. Second, to say to him that he belonged with men like Hitler. A spirit other than my own must have had the better of me. I knew that either or both, force and name-calling, would be using the techniques that ravaged our world the first half of this decade. A silent prayer is the best resort in a case like that. Do not, for the sake of heaven and earth, join the name-calling and the believers in force. Dr. Frank C. Lauback recommends that we try PRAYER—the greatest force for good in all the world. Try it! That is one axis that can bring great good to the world.

An ever old but always new one, The Cross, is pictured on a bulletin issued by a Christian organization in Ohio. It is run by a Christian business man. In this picture there is only the Cross of Christ with a globe of the world over its axis. The picture is completed by these words—"OUR WORLD NEEDS A NEW AXIS. There it is! An emblem of shame—likewise, a symbol of hope and final victory. The price of tragedy must be paid for the triumph of those who would overcome. That ought to be our faith in this hour of the world's need. If not, it will be our down-fall.

A silent meditation used in a recent youth meeting was this:

"The call of the hour is not for lower but higher standards of Christianity . . . Lowering the standard spells defeat. The bill of exaction cannot be satisfied by writing in fifty or eighty where the requirement calls for one hundred.

"This old world can never be evangelized by Christians who compromise. The Cross of Christ was not entwined with flowers. Those who carry that cross will feel its sharp angles and corners. Hooks baited with a soft gospel adapted to the natural senses and tastes will never catch that type of souls of which martyrs are made. Christ is not offering pillows of ease but calling for pillars of power . . .

"To You, O Man, Christ is throwing this challenge for a great Christian crusade for plainer living, higher thinking, and sacrificial service.

"To You, O Man, Your Church looks for that day when you shall place the supremacy of human values above all other values of life and make Christ the dominating motive although that may involve you in social ostracism, financial hardship, personal sacrifice, and suffering.

"If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his Cross, and follow me."

This is the only way to remove all barriers to peace, to reconcile all men to God, to preach peace to those afar and to them that are near. THE CROSS OF CHRIST IS THE OLD BUT EVER NEW AXIS THAT OUR WORLD NEEDS TODAY.

BASIS OF UNION

of the

Congregational Christian Churches
and the

Evangelical and Reformed Church
Adopted by the Joint Committee

G. The pension activities of the United Church shall be administered by one corporation, the name of which shall be left for later decision by mutual agreement. It is here referred to as the Merged Fund.

1. Provision shall be made in the by-laws of the Merged Fund whereby the General Synod of the United Church shall from time to time take examination of the practices and developments of the Merged Fund.

2. The Trustees shall be chosen from eligible persons whose names have been presented to and approved by the general Synod of the United Church.

3. The Merged Fund shall be a non-profit membership corporation in which control lies in the members of the Fund through a Board of Trustees, elected by the members. Congregations and other employing agencies shall be included as participating members.

4. The maximum annuity provided . . . shall be . . . $500.00.

5. The liability of the Merged Fund to the members of the three "original plans" shall be set up on the books of the new corporation for the funded portion of their respective annuities only.

6. Sufficient money shall be designated in advance . . . as a prior claim upon apportionment to meet the indicated annual requirements for the unfunded portion of the annuities under all three "original plans" and to make cumulative provision for their funding.

7. This prior claim upon the apportionment shall not be less than $500,000† in each year in which the apportionment giving of the United Church for the year immediately preceding equals or exceeds $3,300,000. The prior claim may be proportionately reduced in any year in which the apportionment giving for the preceding year is less than $3,300,000, but the prior claim shall in no case be for less than an amount sufficient to meet the requirements of the year in question for the unfunded portion of the annuities under all three "original plans" plus the necessary expense of promotion and administration. The prior claim upon the apportionment shall continue until the total liabilities of the three "original plans" are completely funded. (Estimated time required thirty years.)

8. Liability for payment . . . in any year shall be limited to the money received as applicable. . . .

9. The assets and liabilities in the Merged Fund . . . shall be consolidated as completely as legal requirements and considerations of equity permit.

10. Ministers enrolling in the Fund other than those who are members of one of the present plans at the time of the union, shall be received under a new form of certificate.

11. The assets . . . shall all be pooled into a common unit of investment, and . . . no particular assets shall be segregated . . . except for conditional gift accounts and other accounts that may be required to be segregated by law.

12. In the operation of the Merged Fund the Pilgrim Memorial Fund‡ Income received in any one year shall be allocated in the succeeding year in the following manner:

a. A specific sum determined before the merger shall be allocated to the Original Plan of the Annuity Fund.

b. A further specific sum deter-

†In 1945 the amounts received from the apportionment of the two denominations for similar purposes were as follows:

Evangelical and Reformed Churches $210,741
Congregational Christian Churches 117,025

Total $327,766
This amount does not include $176,846 contributed by the Congregational Christian Churches through the Unit Plan.

mined before the merger shall be allocated to the Merged Fund to meet the expenses incurred in the operation of the Original Plan of the Annuity Fund.

2. An amount determined from year to year shall be allocated to the Merged Fund to meet the expenses incurred on account of Congregational Christian members of the consolidated "expanded plan."

d. Such an amount shall be allocated for the benefit of the members of the Expanded Plan of the Annuity Fund as shall provide $45 for each unit sharer among the members of such Expanded Plan, according to the rules of the Annuity Fund, or as nearly this amount as can be provided after allocations a, b, and c have been made.

e. Any balance after the above four allocations shall be used for the strengthening of the whole Merged Fund, or in such manner as the Trustees believe most beneficial for the benefit of ministerial members of the Merged Fund and their families who do not fall within the four following categories:

I. Congregational Original Plan members.

II. Evangelical Pension Fund members.

III. Reformed Sustentation Fund members.

IV. Congregational Christian Expanded Plan members.

f. If allocations under heading e shall exceeding $45.00 per member, members under heading d shall be entitled to further allocation.

13. The pension boards of the two denominations shall give careful attention to the continuance and extension of a plan to provide retirement income for lay workers of the churches and other organizations of the United Church.

"FREEDOM TRAIN"

By REV. WILLIAM C. KERNAN

Moving slowly across the country through the teeming cities and quiet towns is Freedom Train. America's real treasures are on it—the original documents of her great charters of freedom. Without them America is but a geographical expression—a part of the earth's surface—plains and mountains and deserts, rivers and lakes—a place—no more. But with these precious documents—the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Bill of Rights—America is a towering and inspiring idea expressing itself in free institutions and human rights—a home for men of every race, creed, and national origin.

Many an American, boarding Freedom Train, will see for the first time the documents of our heritage. These, they will say to themselves, felt the touch of George Washington's hands. Here Benjamin Franklin signed his name. These words—the very handwriting—are Jefferson's, the high thoughts and deep feelings of his soul. Here is what the grave men who founded America believed—in their own words—just as they wrote it down.

"All men are created equal."—They said that. All men are "endowed by their Creators with certain inalienable rights." They believed that—not just for their own day and generation but for all future days and generations, too. They were speaking about truths—things that don't change. "We hold these truths"—they said. There it is on Freedom Train—before our very eyes—calling to us out of the past—admonishing us to remember what America is—what it means—and to look about us and see how America fares today.

For Freedom Train is a reminder and a warning. A reminder of what we are as a free nation of many nations—as a free people of many peoples. A warning to fight off the attack on us of men who never knew what Americanism is and who go about stirring up every kind of racial, religious, and class hatred—using every kind of falsification and half-truth to spread their prejudices—claiming America for themselves—their race, their religion, their class—and seeking to deny the rights of all others. Fascists, we call them—and Communists—un-American, unpatriotic, traitors in their hearts, men who would destroy America by destroying the principles of equal rights for all and equal justice for all set forth in the Freedom Train documents.

Yes, it's time we were reminded what America is—time we were warned against the enemies who threaten her—time we all boarded Freedom Train together—Protestants, Catholics, Jews, Whites and Negroes. Something else. It's time we recalled that the American principles of freedom and justice are derived from the Bible. For those who read the Bible—and will to live in accordance with it—realize that the love of God for all mankind, set forth in the Bible, lays upon them the necessity of loving their neighbors—the necessity of seeking to do justice toward them.

NUMBER 43.

The Case of the State Council of Churches

By CHARLES P. TAFT, President

Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America

One of the most encouraging signs of growing unity within American Protestantism is the development of State Councils of Churches.

These councils are a voluntary partnership, and in them evangelical communions testify to the fact that the local parish is more than denominational; it is a symbol at the grass roots of a common Christian ministry. The State Council is the channel for each participating communion to minister more effectively to the religious needs of the citizens of the state, unmet in so many areas. The State Council of Churches is not "The Church"; rather it is the churches themselves working together, with no existence apart from them; it is their instrument.

The lack of a sound Protestant strategy among scattered churches in local communities is widely recognized and deeply deplored. This situation is chiefly responsible for the church's feeble impact upon the human problems of community life—within the jurisdiction of State and Municipal Government, in the fields of Social Welfare, Public Education, the Economic Order, the Press and Radio.

Fortunately, through federal, state and local councils of churches, a greater unity is coming. The number of state and local councils has nearly tripled during the past five years. Communions now recognize they cannot adequately preach and teach the Gospel if the sectarian isolation of the past is perpetuated by them today, especially in the smaller communities. As a part of the ecumenical trend toward a larger Christian unity through the whole of Christendom, they have created these State Councils through which, by their own direct representatives, they may think and speak and act together in behalf of their common ministry.

The cost of this cooperative ministry should really be borne by the member communions. This should be done, either through their area budget appropriations, or through encouragement of their local churches to accept and pay the cost of their share of their cooperative work. Useful yardsticks are available by which to measure and determine what each share is.

It is encouraging to see how more and more communions are accepting their share of this cost. This trend should be further extended until it becomes adequate to cover the entire budgetary requirements of State Councils through the financial support of the participating communions in each state. I believe in this policy because of the success which has attended it to date. I am further convinced of its wisdom because the compulsions of the Christian Gospel itself require that churches cooperate with each other to make their message of love, good will, human worth and sacrificial service known and obeyed now.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Mr. Walter C. Rawls has returned to his home in St. Louis after spending several weeks in Barnes Hospital.

Congratulations to Mr. J. L. Cash of our Durham Church who has completed 47 years of regular attendance in Sunday school.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

WORLD COMMUNITY DAY—1947.

The United Council of Church Women has adopted as its slogan for 1947-48—"We Give Ourselves."

Ruth Mougey Worrell, in her graphic picture of world needs, in October Church Woman, says, "A good neighbor will not allow her neighbors to be cold and hungry if she can help in any way to prevent it. Yet people froze to death last winter in Europe and millions of them are hungry today. It behooves us to work rapidly if the people of the nations are to live together in peace and friendliness—for this is not a World Community—YET."

November 7 is World Community Day. The call is for 500,000 "Boxes and Bundles" for six to twelve year olds, representing the response of American church women to the needs of suffering children around the world.

We are asked to pack two bundles:

I. Clothing Bundle, containing:

- 2 suits or dresses (or materials).
- 1 coat, 1 sweater, 3 sets underwear.
- 2 sets night clothes, 3 pairs socks.
- 1 cap, 1 pair mittens.
- 1 bright scarf or hair ribbon.
- 1 pair house shoes (soft soles only).
- 3 handkerchiefs.
- 2 towels, 2 washcloths.
- 1 blanket.

A short note with sender's name & address.

The articles should be folded on an imaginary 15 x 24 inch base to fit baler. Be sure that the top as well as the bottom has the same dimensions and that the sides are as straight as possible. The height is unimportant. Wrap the bundle neatly in the blanket and pin flaps smoothly with safety pins. Sew to outside of bundle a cloth tag marked G (girl) or B (boy) and age.

II. Shoe and School Box, containing:

- 1 pair shoes in good repair, polished, new laces.

School supplies, such as: notebooks, pen, pencils, colored pencils (rather than crayons), pencil sharpener, star stickers, clips, gummed tape, calendar, comb, soap, and a simple schoolyard game such as ball, jump rope, or jacks.

A card with sender's name and a short message.

Put the shoes in the box and pack the other articles around them. Stuff with paper "hankies" to make rattle proof. Tie securely. Make your shoe box attractive with pretty pictures of American children at school or play, cut from magazines, showing the way of life in this country.

It is suggested that these packages be brought to the World Community Day service and that a short consecration service be conducted, dedicating the gifts to Christ's use.

All boxes and bundles should be shipped (prepaid) to your nearest Church World Service Center. New Windsor, Md., would probably be nearest for us of the Southern Convention.

CHRISTMAS PROJECT FOR CHURCHES.

It may appear to be rushing the season to say, "Do your Christmas shopping now," when "now" is October and Christmas is months away. But so, too, though only a few hours by air, are great sections of Europe and Asia by the slower processes of land and ocean travel. And in those areas are millions of children whom war has robbed of homes, families, schools, proper food, adequate clothing and even of Christmas. There is nothing for them to look forward to at that special season of the year. The struggle for the simplest necessities of life is too much.

For this Christmas, the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland, has a plan that gives every American family the chance to delight the heart of a boy or girl overseas, with a package made expressly for him. It won't be like the Christmas gifts most children receive in America, for everything it contains will be one of necessities, small or large, that people in the United States can take for granted.

To send these presents, pick out a colorful bath towel, the heavier the better. Fold it in the middle and sew up two sides. Pack in the gifts and stitch up the remaining side. To the outside attach a card containing this information: your name and address, the age and sex of the child for whom your kit is intended, a list of all the articles in the kit. Wrap the whole thing securely and mail it to the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland. Ask your friends and neighbors, fellow church members, to make kits, too. Write the New Windsor center or your State Council of Churches for a Christmas kit folder and tag for each of them.

Then, remember, if your is to be a Christmas present, time is short. Imagine your "adopted child" in the most remote villages of Europe or Asia, and set to work now to make sure December 25 is not just another day in a year of misery for him. Do your Christmas shopping now!

Sunday School—9:30 A. M.

Sunday Services—11:00 A. M. and 8:00 P. M.

This is the only Church of our denomination in Richmond, although some churches of another denomination employ the name Christian. The Church is located in the West End and is accessible from all parts of the city by public transportation. Floyd Bus and Belmont Car come within a block of the Church.

Write us about your relatives and friends in Richmond or vicinity. Send this issue to them. "The Witness," our weekly publication, may be had on request or by subscription at 50c a year. You may help us build a strong church of our faith and order in Virginia's Capital.

"COME WITH US AND WE WILL DO THEE GOOD"

HITLER'S PICTURE.

How long has it been since you saw Hitler's picture? Do you remember? It was before us constantly only a short while ago. Now it rarely ever appears. That name which struck consternation throughout the world so recently is being forgotten quite rapidly. Soon children will be saying, "Hitler—who was he?"

Without a doubt, Hitler became a menace to the world. Civilization has not yet recovered from the imbalance for which he was largely responsible. And yet we realize even now that the immediacy of his threat destroyed our perspective. We, perchance, dismissed the wisdom of the Psalmist: "The way of the ungodly shall perish."

Over against the transitoriness of human pretension stand the laws of God. Our generation has witnessed one of the mighty acts of God which will give theologians and historians food for thought for years to come. We have not only witnessed one of the great historic deliverances, we live under the constant and beneficent influence of God's age-long institution, the Church. Over against the exigencies of time stands the eternal providence of God.

O where are kings and empires now
Of old that went and came?
But, Lord, Thy Church is praying yet,
A thousand years the same.

We mark our goodly battlements,
And her foundations strong;
We hear within the solemn voice
Of her unending song.

For not like kingdoms of the world
Thy holy Church, O God;
Through earthquake shocks are threatening her
And tempests are abroad.

Unshaken as eternal hills,
Immovable she stands,
A mountain that shall fill the earth,
A house not made with hands.

THE ECLESIA.

Language usually suffers in translation. This is particularly true of the language of the Bible. Numerous translations have been made for the benefit of those who cannot read the Bible in its native tongue. In a number of instances words have been brought over bodily into our language in order to emphasize their significance. One thinks of St. John's "Logos" (word) and of St. Paul's "Agape" (love). These and others require delineation or amplification which our English equivalents do not convey.

One of the great words of the New Testament is "Ecclesia," which we translate "the church." The Christian Ecclesia is composed of those who are "called out," not for exemption, but for assembly, discipline and preparation for redemptive participation in society. The Ecclesia is to be "the salt of the earth, the light of the world." Listen to the Master: "I pray not that thou wilt take them out of the world, but that thou wilt keep them from the evil one. As thou hast sent me into the world, so have I sent them into the world."

Some of the current conceptions of the Church have attractive features, but lack biblical validity. One suspects that the philosophy of many people concerning the Church is expressed in the popular jingle: "The more we get together, the happier are we." The true Ecclesia is not a mutual admiration society, nor was it organized for the self-gratification of its members. It is the divine leaven in the lump of secular society. It is the body of those, minister and laymen alike, who have been called, called out for a divine mission.

Emil Brunner has this to say about the Ecclesia: "When the Word of God kindles a flame of faith in the heart of a human being, he ceases to be an individual. He becomes a member of the Body. He is torn out of his self-centered isolation, out of the tension of the solitary, self-imprisoned soul, by the love that he receives in the Word of God. Since God gives Himself to us in Jesus Christ, He takes us out of ourselves, He takes away our self-will, and gives us to the 'Other.' Faith, as the reception of the divine love, is the birth of 'being in community.' Faith means being open to the 'Thou,' just as unbelief is being shut up within one's self. Hence everyone who wakes up to faith finds himself a member of a community, united with those to whom the same miracle of enlightenment has been granted."

We are indebted to the Ecclesia for the Bible, since the Ecclesia antedates the Bible. It is the Ecclesia which has translated the Greek and Hebrew Scriptures into the languages of all nations, and thus made them accessible to all. What other body save the Ecclesia has made the Bible intelligible through an unbroken chain of sermons and expository writing all down the centuries?

S. Parkes Cadman, who was the first president of the Federal Council of Churches, declared: "The Christian Ecclesia, her creation and growth, faith and practice, present to us the progressive stages of what is conceded to be the foremost spiritual achievement in the world. It is with the concrete aspects of this achievement that we have to do; with its wonderful birth, experience and work, its seeming defeats and real victories."

Dr. Cadman then concluded with these words, which are peculiarly applicable at this stage of our negotiations with the Evangelical and Reformed Church: "One may maintain the belief that this universal Ecclesia, which He called 'My Church,' has been from the first the inner soul and selfhood of all existing organizations which bear His name, and as such, the source of that indestructible unity now revived among Christians after their prolonged stay in the wilderness of sectarian divisions."

A SERVANT AND A WITNESS

*A Sermon
Before the Eastern North Carolina Conference*

By REV. BERNARD V. MUNGER.

Although it is never possible to say in advance what will happen to men when they encounter God, there are some constants in this age-old meeting of man and God. One of these constants can be expressed simply: When God meets man, comes pressing into his experience, and lays hold upon him, He puts him to work! An encounter with God results in a calling to a task to be done for God. That's why one of our great American pulpiti-teers of last century could truly say: "Religion means work. It means work in a dirty world. It means peril; blows given and taken. Religion means transformation. The world is to be cleaned by somebody, and you are not called of God if you are ashamed to scour and scrub."

Wasn't that what happened to Moses out there at the burning bush? Wasn't that what issued from that magnificent worship experience described in Isaiah 6? And is this not a fair paraphrase of what Jesus Himself said at the beginning of His ministry: "I know, and you can soon know, that God's Spirit is upon me because He has called me to do a great work."

Perhaps there is no more dramatic encounter of man with God than that three times described in the Book of Acts. Many things have been said about Paul's meeting with His Lord on the Damascus road. Many more things will be said, for it was one of the high points in mankind's religious history. But tonight I suggest we find the meaning of the experience in Paul's own words. In the 26th chapter of the Book of Acts, Paul said these words were spoken to him by the Living Christ: "Stand upon thy feet, for I have appeared to thee for this purpose, to make you a servant and a witness." That is why God pressed into Paul's life. At least Paul thought so.

I think that what God wanted of Paul, He also wants of us—when He comes pressing into our experience. He wants us, too, to be servants and witnesses! Tonight I want to emphasize a few of the things that it means to be a servant of God in our day. These are not substitutes for the more commonly emphasized ways of serving God. They are supplementary, you might say, to the accepted service we are called to render.

We who would serve God in our day, should be moral guides to those around us. We should have a sensitive moral insight which can discern right from wrong and which can interpret the situations of life so that others, too, can see the right. I don't mean moral busy-bodies, trying to make decisions for others. I mean literally guides—men and women who march ahead of their fellowmen, leading the way to righteousness. That is the kind of guidance our generation hungers for, either consciously, or unconsciously. And God is calling you and me to open our hearts to His guidance, and follow that guidance fearlessly, so that men can find in us the moral guides they need, lest they continue in their moral confusion.

Also, the God who has never failed to raise up prophetic voices in every generation, is calling us to add our voices to those who are speaking for God's way in our time. There's probably not a community represented here where God has raised up at least one prophet to speak for His way in our world. But God's work isn't done when one voice trumpets His message. God's work gets done when His prophets are joined by groups who share in the calling. God's work gets done when preacher and people serve their day and time by openly denouncing all that under God's Rule seems wrong and evil and hellish in the community around them, and then shout out both a call to repentance and instructions as to what that repentance involves in the way of changed behaviour! God is calling congregations to be prophetic in our day.

Furthermore, we are called to serve as ministers of reconciliation. Once it was written of Christians, "These men and women hold the world together." It needs be written of us in our day. Paul glorified that to him and his fellows the "ministry of reconciliation" had been given. It is to our shame that we in our churches and church schools know far more about the geographic routes of Paul's missionary journeys than we do about the instances wherein Paul is described as fulfilling this ministry—reconciling men to men, groups to groups, races to races, and all to God in Christ. Yet we so need to catch that spirit of Paul's service. In our day there is tremendous need for taking the ministry of reconciliation out into all of our relations with others. Then shall we, too, be faithfully discharging the ministry given to us when God called us into His service.

But the highest service any of us can render to God and man is to witness to God's transforming power over life. Surely this was the kind of service at which Paul excelled. And the history of the Church is resplendent with the deeds of men and women who rendered a like service. We are certainly not called to do less. I believe our calling is the same as that of the early Christians. That was a calling to witness not only as individual lives transformed, but to group life transformed. Of them, one observer exclaimed, "See how these Christians love one another." Oh, what if that were true today? What would be accomplished for God were the churches we represent examples to the world of the true fellowship. With a world bedeviled by the problems of how to live together in peace and harmony, can we doubt that God is calling His Church to be the living example of peace and harmony? With the world in danger of perishing through lack of the love that casts out hate and fear, can you doubt that God is calling your church, and others like it, to be that "community of love" in which the world can see the answer to its query, "How can men live together?" Therefore, if your congregation is to be truly a "servant and a witness" for God in our day, can it accept a lesser calling than to "serve the Lord of Love by being a community of Love"?

As He said to Paul of old, He is saying still to us: "Stand upon thy feet, I have appeared to thee for this purpose, to make you a servant and a witness. May our lives, and the lives of our churches, confess with Paul—"We were obedient to the heavenly vision." May the Christ who was Paul's strength, be ours, now and throughout all our days in His service. Amen.

As you ride along Route 4 between Springfield and Dayton, Ohio, you will pass Knob Prairie Church at Enon, Rev. Ernest F. Brickhouse, pastor. Two new altar chairs have recently been added to the chancel furniture. Also, a new Bible graces the pulpit and a bulletin board adds much to the outside appearance of the church. These additions are gifts of members and friends of the church.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It was the face of a little boy—not much older than a baby—but how bright and eager were the eyes of the little fellow that pushed the curtains aside just enough to look through the French doors into the dining room to take a peek at Uncle Charley and his guests. I cannot say that I blamed him a bit, because the guests were the members of the Executive Board of the Southern Convention, and it was Uncle Charley's birthday besides. President Vitus R. Holt, of the Orphanage Board, sat at the head of the long table. We had been having much laughter and good times, as well as good food. We laughed at the pretty picture the boy's face made, and when Uncle Charley turned around so he could see what was attracting our attention and saw his little friend, he laughed, too, but I saw him brush a tear from his cheek. . . . He had just had a telephone call put through to him from a son in Germany. . . . Perhaps he was remembering when that son was just a wee bit of a boy. Is there anybody reading these lines that does not know that Uncle Charley is a father to every boy and girl in that Orphanage?

How gently, intently, proudly he had shown us about the great dairy barn, the cattle pens, the farm lands, and into each of the three main buildings. Upstairs, downstairs, through the dining rooms and the kitchens had we gone; onto the porches front and back, into bedrooms, refrigerating rooms, and reception rooms. Everywhere it was beautiful—spic and span as a lovely ship. And what is more, well trained, mannerly youth escorted us and helped explain where, and what, and why. We liked it. But we had seen hot biscuits coming out of the ovens in three kitchens, and had caught the fragrance of good food so we were plenty hungry when at last we were led into the big dining room of Johnston Hall. The table was pretty, the dinner was bounteous and delicious and beautifully served.

As we went about the place we found the boys and girls happy, healthy, and very courteous. And it was more than skin deep or of a day's coaching. It was real—their joy and their well-being. They were like a big family with each member sharing in the work of the home, and each one happy both at work and play. No wonder the principal of the grade school to which these boys and girls go had called up to say that fewer were the disciplinary problems with them than with the others. The spirit of caring and sharing is obvious amongst them, and good was their play, and light their laughter as they gathered around their respective buildings at meal time.

When we sang "Happy Birthday To You," and said "God bless you, Uncle Charley," we meant it. And we believe—since we represented the entire Southern Convention—that each of you would have had it so. For more than thirty-one years Uncle Charley has been a "father to the fatherless" in that Orphanage, and has rightfully inspired the response which he so rightly deserves.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

A PASTOR REPORTS TO HIS CHURCH.

It takes the hopes and prayers and services of many people to make of our church a useful instrument in the hands of Jesus Christ. My heartfelt gratitude goes out to every single one of them. For without their services, we could not have this church, we could not make adequate use of this magnificent building which our fathers built and bequeathed to us; without their services we could not worship God in terms of our Congregational Christian heritage of faith, freedom, and fellowship.

Our world is topsy-turvy today, but I want still to look at it through eyes of hope and not through eyes of despair. Our Christian faith should inspire us to do this. God hasn't quit; he hasn't let us down. Christ is still our leader and the leader our world needs. I believe that more people than usual are earnest and sincere in their concern for life as we know it in Christ. The spirit of "Let's do something about it," is really taking hold of large numbers of fine people. And all over the world Christian leadership is brave and determined to hold fast to its high ideals of faith and practice.

What we want to do first, if these are truly to be days of hope and not of despair, is to strengthen the institution which stands for all that is highest and best. Most people regret the weakness of the church. No one would willingly live in a community which had no church. No one deliberately wants to make the church fail. And indeed, there are people among us who show by their faith and services that they are helpfully constructive in the life of the church. These are the people I wish to commend. There are many such among us.

The church exists primarily for the worship of God in Christ. Leslis D. Weatherhead, the famous minister of City Temple, London, is constantly emphasizing this. City Temple is the outstanding Congregational Church in all of England. It is rendering a great ministry. I worshipped in this church one Sunday and couldn't help but think of its three centuries of history, and of the many people who found God there through the years. During the bombing of London in the war, the City Temple was completely destroyed. That, the fine, old building was leveled to the ground, but the faith which the church stood for, I am glad to say, continues in the hearts of the minister and people. Dr. Weatherhead recently wrote an article in which he affirmed again what he had often espoused in the past; namely, the church's main activity is the worship of God.

The church has other activities, of course, and they are important; but they fall in a secondary place when compared with worship. The minister who is called as the leader of the church is trained in the art of worship. He knows how to seek God's grace. In praise and solemn aspiration, in humility and contrition, in gratitude and thanksgiving, in teachableness and open-mindedness, he leads his people in drawing nigh unto him who is the Ruler of their hearts and homes, of their nation and the world. Even the sermon must be considered chiefly in terms of worship. It may be instructive, inspiring, and sometimes even entertaining, but if it is done properly and in the right spirit, it will lift the hearts of the people of God. And that is worship.

As your minister, I consciously seek to make our service of worship helpful; that is, emotionally impressive and intellectually stimulating, as I base it from Sunday to Sunday on a sound Scriptural foundation. I don't think we are bored by it, nor do very many of us go out of a sense of sheer duty without any hope of reward.

The church is God's institution, founded in the name of Christ. It is not merely a fellowship of like-minded people, nor of a proud, self-satisfied group, nor is it an organization for doing things. It is, first of all, God's House where his glory is mani-

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

TOO LITTLE AND TOO LATE.

"Too little and too late"—an accusation hurled at the Allies during World War II when the hordes of Hitler were sweeping over Europe. Too few men, too little supplies and provisions were dispensed to the scene of action to cope with the strength of the enemy, and what they did send at times arrived too late. Now the same accusation is laid at the door of of America in its efforts to help feed a hungry world and prevent economic and moral chaos in needy countries.

At Elon College we are not fighting a war, nor are we on the verge of starvation, but we are face to face with a crisis that is serious—so serious that it may force the College to close its doors for a time which would be a calamity from which it would be difficult for the College to recover. These are facts which, I fear, some are not facing as grim realities. They are not possibilities but they are probabilities, extremely so. The old boilers have served their day and served well, but they have been condemned and steam pressure reduced to fifty per cent efficiency. Obviously, when cold weather comes, and it is just around the corner, there must be heat if faculty and students are to have comfort. If they are not comfortable, there will be general dissatisfaction, and we shall be threatened with an epidemic of colds and flu that may spell disaster for the College.

It may be that you are taking these facts lightly. One man said to me, "The heating plant won't blow up. It has been there for more than forty years, and certainly it will last one more." One of our good churches writes, "We are providing long and badly needed equipment for our church, and we cannot assist the College now." Another writes, "We cannot give any assistance at this time." Comparatively few churches have replied to the SOS mailed to pastors and churches on October 15, 1947. This is encouraging so long as they do not say "No." It takes time to handle requests of this nature. I believe that our churches as a whole are concerned and that they will come to the assistance of the College in this emergency. The following churches have responded generously:

Newport News—Will send next payment in advance of due date.

Grensboro, First—$500 paid and $500 to be paid early January, 1948.

Liberty (Vance)—$254 paid and $385 pledged which completes the church's voluntary quota for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation.

Henderson—$152.42 to be paid within a few days which will complete the church's voluntary quota for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation.

Berea, Norfolk—$100 pledged to be paid this year.

Christian Temple—$450 paid.

Elon College Community Church—$640 paid. There is a possibility that this church will pay its entire quota for the memorial fund.

Graham, Providence Memorial—$25 paid.

Greensboro, Palm Street—$40 paid.

New Elam—$100 paid.

Mt. Auburn—$75 paid. Already overpaid on Staley-Atkinson-Newman Fund.

Wake Chapel—$750 paid. $1,000 pledged, $500 to be paid this year and $500 January, 1948. This church has already paid more than double its quota for the memorial fund.

We are encouraged to feel that a number of our churches that have not responded will respond generously soon. In addition to the churches, a number of individuals have sent generous contributions, and others have made generous pledges to be paid either this year or during January, 1948.

This is most encouraging but we are still far, far from the required amount. We are interested and greatly concerned for the continuance and efficiency of the College. Churches and individuals expect to do their part but let's make sure that our gifts are neither too little nor too late. Resolve to begin your efforts now and send your contributions as quickly as possible.

Contracts awarded amount to more than $70,000. Boiler room equipment and heat distribution will cost slightly more than any other equipment. This contract has not been awarded but must be awarded soon. The new building is nearing completion; the two boilers are on the ground and will be installed within the next week or so. We have been able to pay all bills submitted. It is hoped that many of our churches and friends will send their contributions as quickly as possible so that it will not be necessary for any payment to be delayed. When we think of the experience that Elon College has had with creditors, we cannot afford to have any semblance of the same occur again. Elon College is depending on you.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

As we near the end of the conference year, many of our churches are paying their apportionments for the College. They are sending their contributions to the Convention Office rather than sending them to conference. This is to be expected and is greatly appreciated. By far the greater number of our churches pay conference apportionments in full, but there are always a number who do not reach the goal set by conference. In order for the College to receive its full apportionment of $12,500, it will be necessary for some of our stronger churches to go beyond their apportionments. We have a splendid report this week and are hoping for a better one next week.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS

October 4, 1947.

Dear Friends of THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

It has been a long time since I (Dick) have written to you. During the month of September I went to Foochow to bring our nurse, Frances Whitaker, up to Shaowu. While in the "big city," I bought some needed supplies, got some things through Customs, and helped get the new CINRRA X-ray loaded on a boat and started up to Shaowu.

The chief reason for my not writing however, is that I have become a bit discouraged about the situation here. Older and wise missionaries have told me never to sit down and write letters home when in that mood, so I've followed their advice. Now, however, I find I must get a letter off anyway, despite my personal feelings. In fact, if you don't mind; let me tell you a few of the difficulties before us. Perhaps it will help me to get them off my chest and help you to have a better understanding of the work here.

One of the biggest questions facing our churches here (and in all of China) is that of self-support. As long as the money comes from outside, consecrated ministers can be found who will work diligently and people will be loyal to their churches. However, take away the outside financial support, and, as we have seen in some instances, within twenty years, there's no sign of Christian activities in the community. This problem is aggravated by the serious economic condition in which China finds herself, to be sure; however, there are several churches in the Synod with comparatively wealthy members which could be self-supporting, but which are making little effort, it would seem, in that direction. They are content to use American money to finance their churches.

As long as this condition continues, the future seems very dark to me. It means that Christianity is still a foreign importation and does not mean enough to the Chinese to merit their financial support. It's like the old story of relief—if a man can get a pay envelope each week without working, why work? Yet if the present churches could become self-supporting the money coming from America could be used to open new work.

This is one of the problems I hope we will be able to find some solution for in the next few years. It is a goal to aim toward. It won't be achieved all of a sudden, but will require patience, understanding and wisdom from above.

A second problem much on our minds these days is that of the "little flock" or small sect which was organized here several years ago in competition with our churches. On the one hand, there is much good to be said about it. The members seem to be conscientious and loyal Christians. They contribute liberally to their church and it is financially independent.

The organization impetus, as far as I can discover, came from the outside, and the leader still is a man from Foochow. This sect has many of the peculiarities of the typical American sects—the practice of baptism by immersion only, the observance of the Lord's supper every Sunday, closed Communion, and a fervent emotionalism. Furthermore, they claim to be the true Christians and say that all others are false. Most of them refuse to enter our churches or to co-operate in any way.

The majority of the "little flock" originally were members of our churches and were educated in our mission schools. In fact, it is reported that the only people they go after are those who are already church members. They begin a campaign of calling week after week on a particular church member of ours, continually pointing out the faults of some of the church members and inviting them to worship with true Bible Christians. Many of the best Christians in our churches have been won over. They have no minister—the laity take the leadership (This may be a reaction in part to our preacher dominated churches). They give liberally, but it is reported that they don't know what becomes of the money. There is also a tinge of anti-foreignism present as they make it plain they don't want any foreigners to have anything to do with their church. I was interested to hear in Foochow recently, that such groups are springing up all over China, with the same basic beliefs and tactics.

It is too early to say what will be the result of such a movement. By some it is being hailed as the "indigenous" church of China. It seems to me to be a pity they don't spend more of their time working with non-Christians instead of those already in the churches. It is a pity too, when there is so much to THANK OFFERING SERVICE FOR 1947.

This program is suggested to be used on Sunday evening, November 2, or some nearby date. The leader and five women could give this, and others may be added as needed. The person who speaks on the object of the 1947 Thank Offering should have the special sheet of information sent out from the chairman, Mrs. W. E. Wiseman. The service has been arranged with the idea in mind that it will be used at a public meeting of the society, but it can be used also at a regular meeting or at a circle meeting.

THE THANK OFFERING SERVICE.

(Preparation: Worship table, with autumn leaves or bittersweet on one side; the open Bible in the center.)

QUIET MUSIC: "For the Beauty of the Earth."

CALL TO WORSHIP: "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High."

HYMNS "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come (or some other hymn of thanks).

LEADER: Many are the lessons of thanksgiving which we can learn from the early Hebrew people. The Psalms are full of expression of their thanks. Every time the Hebrews gathered together they remembered to thank God for His goodness. See them in your mind's eye sitting outdoors around the camp fire, out under the stars, or in the noon day heat of their Sabbath day. The leader enumerates the many gifts of God's love and spontaneously the people sing forth their thanks—"for his mercy endureth forever."

For our scripture tonight we will use one of their songs of thanks—the 136th Psalm. I will be the leader and enumerate the reasons for our thanks, and you, the congregation, will respond with the refrain, "For his mercy endureth forever."

SCRIPTURE: Psalm 136:1-9; 25, 26.

LEADER: In our lives there are many things which are symbols to remind us of something big and fine and noble. Our flag reminds us of our love for our country; the cross, of our Saviour. The candles on our worship table are symbols of the things for which we are especially thankful. Four women will enumerate these gifts as I light the candles. Will you turn in your hymn books to No. (?) "For the Beauty of the Earth." After each candle is lighted we will sing a verse of this hymn.

FIRST WOMAN: The orange candle reminds us of the beauty of the earth—the colors in God's world—the blue arch of the sky, the green of the grass; the brown earth turned up by the plow; the scarlet and gold of the forests in autumn. We are reminded anew each day of God's thoughtfulness in giving us a beautiful world in which to live. We think with the poet:

God who touchest earth with beauty
Make me lovely, too.
With thy spirit recreate me
Make my heart anew.

—Mary S. Edgar.

Group sings verse No. 1 of "For the Beauty of the Earth."

SECOND WOMAN: The red candle is a symbol of the wonderful things in God's world. The miracles which we see about us each day—the miracle of electricity and steam; the miracle of seeds and bulbs; the miracle of growth; and yes, the miracle of change in human hearts which God can bring to pass.

One asked a sign from God; and day by day
The sun arose in pearl; in scarlet set;
Each night the stars appeared set;
bright array;
Each morn the thirsty grass with dew
was wet;
The corn failed not its harvest, nor the vine—
And yet he saw no sign.

—Author unknown.

Group sings verse No. 2 of "For the Beauty of the Earth" (leader lights red candle).

THIRD WOMAN: The yellow candle is the golden cord of friendship and love. The friends who love us in spite of our faults; members of our family who appreciate us and encourage us when we are tempted to be less than our best.

My mother was gentle and queenly and sweet
My father was noble and broad.
It must be that childhood acquaintance with them
Has helped me to understand God.

—Author unknown.

Group sings verse No. 3 of "For the Beauty of the Earth" (leader lights yellow candle).

FOURTH WOMAN: The white candle stands for Christ and the Church. It reminds us of the purity of His life; it beckons us on to follow in His way and make our own lives pure and spotless; to say with Matthew:

I heard Him call.
"Come follow"—that was all.
My gold grew dim.
My heart went after Him.
I rose and followed—that was all.
Who would not follow
If he heard Him call?

—Author unknown.

Group sings verse No. 4 of "For the Beauty of the Earth" (leader lights white candle).

A PRAYER OF THANKS: By a woman, or the minister, or several women.

A SONG OF THANKS: (This may be a solo, an anthem, or another hymn).

A GIFT OF THANKS: "The Thank Offering for 1947"—by the leader or some other woman of the society.

INGATHERING OF THE GIFTS: (If the group is not too large, let each person come forward to put her gift on the worship table. If ushers take up the gifts let the offering plates be placed on the worship table afterwards.

PRAYER OF DEDICATION: Father, we bring our gifts of thanks. Bless the new home which they will help to build. Bless our homes. As we have given our thanks and made our gifts we know we were not alone. All over our Convention our women are making their gifts and giving thanks. Bless us all and bind us together in love. Amen.

HYMN: "Blest Be the Tie That Binds."

BENEDICTION.

VISUAL AIDS FOR OUR PROGRAMS

Many of you have asked me recently, "Is there one especially recommended visual aid for our study theme of 'World Evangelism' for our programs this year?" And I am glad to say that there is now available a slide set with a recorded script, entitled "Go Ye, Therefore."

You will need a projector for use with 2 x 2 inch slides, and if you would like to use the accompanying records, you will need a record-player. However, if you find that you cannot obtain a phonograph, ask one of your very good readers to read the script as the slides are shown. The projector may be borrowed from the Southern Convention Office.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Children:

Last week I was writing—What about those letters? Have you seen some of the letters that Franklin Roosevelt wrote to his mother? They are interesting to read. Letters usually are. Friends who write us interesting things are long remembered.

This is the time of goblins and witches and the pumpkins. Some churches observe All Hallows Eve, we observe Hallowe'en, with its fun and mischief. Mild mischief, I hope. Masks and costumes, jack-o'-lanterns, and beggars at the door are part of the fun. Make believe is always good and even more so in the dark. Have fun and be bewitching instead of bewitched!

My annual conference is meeting. It concludes today at Suffolk. Do you like to go to Conference? I do. Since I was thirteen years old I have only missed one session. I like to see the ministers, the Superintendent, the superintendent of the Orphanage, the president of Elon College, and usually the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is there. And then, there are the delegates, the people from our churches, the people I often don't see but once a year. It is a great privilege to be a delegate or substitute for a delegate.

Conference begins with the president calling for order and then follows the roll call of ministers and the enrollment of delegates. There come speeches of welcome, speeches on many subjects, and reports and more reports. There is the rush of buying tickets for dinner and eating the food prepared by the church ladies. It is always good and sitting listening to sermons and reports gives one an enormous appetite.

Afternoon brings more talking and discussion. Then recess and much visiting with friends old and new. Homes are assigned and the delegates find the place where they are to spend the night.

In the evening, there is usually lovely music and a good sermon and finally, the communion service. Deacons from any churches help the ministers administer it. And then to bed, tired, but happy from the events so like the year before but different.

In the morning one has to be up early for breakfast with the host and hostess. Later, back to church and the reports and committee reports. About noon the work is complete and conference adjourns. Some old, some new officers, some good, some not-so-good things have been done. After lunch, heading for home which is always a happy experience. The church where conference has met is glad to have had the people, but glad to rest their tired backs and feet—I know, because conference has met in my church.

Some times a new minister is received in the conference or a young man ordained to the ministry. This great service leaves a lump in one's heart. There should be more young men becoming ministers in our church.

My conference is Eastern Virginia. What is yours? When does it meet or has it already? If you get the chance, go!

Yours for conference-going,
JUNE JOY HOUSE.

I HEAR YOU HAVE A JOB FOR A BOY

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

One of the State College dormitories had burned. A new one was to be built, and the old red bricks were being sold. Professor Russell bought some for the terrace and driveway in connection with his new house.

"Here's a job for you, David," said the professor to his son, as they finished breakfast on Monday. "I'll pay you for cleaning that white mortar off the bricks. How about five cents for fifty?"

"Oh, that's too many bricks."

"No, it's a fair price; they have been partially cleaned. See what you can do."

Eight-year-old David worked alone before and after school that day, but it proved a dreary task. His dad suggested he invite a friend in on the job. David told Jimmy about it, and the next day Jimmy came to work.

Professor Russell was just getting into his car the following day, when two boys who lived on another block appeared. "Is it all right for us to go to work?" one inquired.

"How did you know about the bricks?"

"Oh, the boys at school were telling that there was a job for pay at Russell's."

"Do you really want to clean bricks?"

"Yes, we do."

So four lads were soon working. They provided their own tools—trowels, knives, scrapers, whatever they thought best—and each set up his own pile of cleaned bricks. No one was urged to work; the initiative came from the youngsters themselves. Others kept coming. By Saturday ten were working, some of them high school boys—even the Colonel's son scraped with a right good will.

David's father was impressed with the way they kept at work. He had expected a lot of fooling and side play and had thought he might have to hire a college student in the end. He was surprised and pleased.

The next Saturday afternoon—the day on which the boys had planned to go to the pool—Jack, the one least fond of work, finally said, "Aren't you ready to go swimming now?" But none of the others wanted to go. He kept urging at intervals. At length, Ted said, "Wait till I get twenty-five more bricks done." But when these were finished he was seized with a desire to begin on another fifty. So Jack did not go swimming; none of the others would stop working long enough to go with him.

"My pile is ready to be checked!" some boy would shout whenever Professor Russell appeared. He was businesslike—with an exact count, a strict requirement of clean bricks, and prompt pay. The boys liked this. By Saturday night the two thousand bricks had all been cleaned, and the pay roll had amounted to two dollars. All had worked happily and industriously—each absorbed in his own efforts—and they pocketed their final pay with complete satisfaction.

To a child, play is simply work that he enjoys—watch him dig a hole in the sand or move blocks in his wheelbarrow. When presented to him in the right way, real work becomes the best form of play.

These boys were all sons of faculty men and well-provide for; it was not the need for money that influenced them. They were attracted by the idea of a specific job. This fascinates children, especially adolescents.

It is true that children should have an allowance, and they should also work about the home without being paid for it; but an exceptional job, like the brick cleaning, with definite pay, is very desirable for them.

Another reason these boys kept at the job so well was that the assignment was clearly defined—fifty cleaned bricks in a pile meant five cents.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

You may wish to use these visual audio aids as a worship service, for a discussion, or for an "open" meeting, to which you invite all the groups of your church. One group I know is planning to use "Go, Therefore" at one of its big quarterly meetings, when all the circles meet in a body.

Send your request for rental of "Go Ye, Therefore" to: The Missions Council, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, 10, N. Y.

Send to The Missions Council, too, for a mimeographed sheet, entitled "When You Are Preparing to Show Your Pictures." This would be a very convenient paper to refer to whenever you plan to use visual aids, and could very well be a part of your permanent files, so that anyone using or showing pictures could have access to it.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

A CALL TO RIGHT LIVING. (A TEMPERANCE LESSON.)

LESSON VI—NOVEMBER 9, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Whether, therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.—I Corinthians 10:31.

LESSON: I Peter; Daniel.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 24.

Stern Business.

"Girding up the loins of your mind . . . be sober . . . be holy . . . as children of obedience . . . not fashioning yourselves according to your former lusts in the time of your ignorance. . . ." This business of being a Christian is stern business. This does not mean that it is a grim and glum thing, but it does mean that one has to be serious about it. There is no royal road to Christian character. It is not given, it is achieved. Straight is the gate and narrow the way that leadeth unto life that really is life. If a person is going through life, easy going and free from tension, let him beware. Let him read Peter's letter to his friends and he will be stabbed awake as to the serious side of Christianity.

Changed Folks.

"Not fashioning yourselves according to your former lusts in the time of your ignorance. . . ." Christians are not perfect people but they ought to be changed people. They ought to live differently from the way they lived before they became Christians. And they ought to be becoming better all the time. They have new standards of character and conduct, and they also have new resources of the spirit. One suspects that there is not quite enough difference any more between those who are Christians and non-Christians.

Bought At Great Price.

"Knowing that ye were redeemed, not with corruptible things as silver and gold . . . but with the precious blood as of a lamb without spot or blemish, even the blood of Christ. . . ." We are not our own, we have been bought with a price. Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures. There is a mystery as to the how of it, but the best Christian thought has always felt that Christ did an atoning work for humanity in His death on the Cross. The thought of what He has done for us humbles us and furnishes us with incentive for Christian living.

The Scarlet Thread of Sacrifice.

"Who has foreknown indeed from the foundation of the world." Calvary was not an incident, an unrelated incident to the scheme of things. Calvary lies at the heart of the universe. It was written into the nature and structure of things even from the beginning. Christ's death on the cross simply revealed what had always been latent in the divine and human life. Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins.

Born Again.

"Having been begotten again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, through the word of God which liveth and abideth." That is what Jesus said in another way. "Ye must be born again." "Which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." A Christian is a "twice-born man" according to Scripture. Unless he is he cannot see and he cannot enter into the Kingdom of heaven or God. It is mysterious, but it is necessary. And it is possible of demonstration. The statement becomes easily understood when we see some folks who have been born again. It comes by the gracious working of the Spirit of God by faith. This does not mean that a man must first be a hardened sinner in order to become a Christian. But it does mean that at some point in his life he must be born of the spirit even as he was born of the flesh.

The Fruits of the Spirit.

"Finally, be ye all likeminded, compassionate, loving as brethren, tender-hearted, humbleminded, not rendering evil for evil, or reviling for reviling, but contrawise blessing, for hereunto were ye called." How little formal creeds and mere ceremony enters into what Christ and his followers regarded as the heart of His way of life! How searching are these words! How they puncture our complacency and our sense of goodness and righteousness! When you begin to think that you are a pretty good fellow, read these words slowly and prayerfully and test your life by them. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His."

Being Good for Goodness Sake.

Peter reminded his friends that goodness did not always pay. Indeed he plainly told them that goodness often brought suffering and hardship. But even suffering was not to bring murmuring and complaining. Christ left us an example here as elsewhere. And the way in which we endure suffering and persecution and mistreatment is an acid test of our genuine Christian spirit.

There's A Reason . . . Know It.

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind. Do not be afraid to think. And as Peter says "be" ready to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason concerning the hope that is in you, yet with meekness and fear." A man ought to know what he believes and why he believes it. He does not have to be a college professor to do this. He does need to have an experience, and then simply to tell it in simple and direct language. When the scribes and priests tried to tangle the man born blind, he simply replied, "Whether he be sinner or no, I know not; but one thing I do know; whereas I was blind now I see. That is eloquent language, and irrefutable logic.

Arguments Hard To Beat.

"Having a good conscience, that wherein ye are spoken against, they may be put to shame who revile your good manner of life in Christ." Folks may criticize you, and find fault with you and say mean things about you, but in the long run they will be put to shame if you go on your way quietly letting the light of Christ's spirit shine in and through you.

Who are the Strange Folks Anyway?

"Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them into excess of riot, speaking evil of you." Some folks wonder how people who do not drink and carouse and indulge their passions and appetites, and play fast and loose with life and life's sanctities, have a good time. They think it strange that folks want and try to live godly lives. But after all, come to think of it, the other folks are the strange folks after all.

Danger . . . Go Slow.

"Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the living and the living and the dead." This universe is a moral universe. In the long run good is rewarded and evil is punished. The appeal to fear is not the highest appeal in life. But ministers and Sunday school teachers need more and more to remind modern men and women that we must all give an account of ourselves to God, that we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that sin when it has run its course bringeth forth death. The Ten Commandments have not been repealed. Christ's solemn words about judgment shall never pass away. Danger . . . go slow.

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

do here, that the church of Christ is divided and unable to present a united front.

Another disappointment has just come. Ever since I arrived, I've been looking forward to a trip through the entire North Fukien area to visit our churches (we would travel about 300 miles on foot requiring about one month). Dr. Riggs, Pastor Hwang and I planned to leave on October 17th. However, Pastor Hwang came by the day before yesterday to advise against making the trip. The government has recently forbidden all foreigners to go into the Chienning, Taining area because several groups of bandits are operating and would be only too happy to kidnap Americans for ransom. (one Catholic father, an American, was captured in March and has not been heard of since). It is rumored that Communists are active among the bandits providing them guns and ammunition since it is to their advantage, let me tell you about upset.

Now, lest you think everything is discouraging, let me tell you about the World-wide Communion Service, we attended last Sunday at the East Gate Church. To prepare for the service, the visitation plan was followed which is recommended by the American Federal Council of Churches and which no doubt many of you used. Pledge cards were mimeographed and each member of the churches was given the opportunity to sign saying he promised to attend church on World Communion Sunday and the five Sundays following. At East Gate Church, 75 to 80 signed this pledge and the morning service was attended by over 200 people. It was a real thrill to us as we partook of the Lord's Supper together, to call to mind Christians around the world united in this historic observance, and we particularly remembered you in the Southern Convention. The Young Peoples' Choir (over 20 voices), directed by Dorothy, sang Bach's "O Sacred Head Now Wounded" and did it beautifully. The service gave us a real inspiration and helped us better to tackle these problems which have been given to us.

I have written these things to you in order that you may better understand our work here and with the earnest expectation that your prayers may go out for us and our fellow-workers that we may be strengthened and given divine wisdom for the tasks ahead. We do not ask that God take these difficulties away from us, but that He give us the discernment and indefatigability that we need to solve them.

Cordially,

DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

GREENSBORO PAYS TRIBUTE TO RETIRING PRESIDENT

We pause to pay tribute to our retiring President, Pattie Preston Paris.

All of us here want to express to you our appreciation for your wonderful leadership during the past years. "To every man there openeth a high way and a low." Many of us grope along on the low road; but we like to have as our leaders those who travel the high road, and truly, Patt, you travel this high road. We feel that our auxiliary, our church and our denomination owe you much. You have inspired us to higher consecration, a world outlook and a joy in menial tasks. Because of you we have made our auxiliary a leader in our convention. We know what your leadership in this achievement has demanded of you: sacrifice of time with your family, a strain on your patience and tolerance, and untiring thought and effort to urge us on in the true Christian spirit. In these years of your leadership we have never seen you discouraged, even though the going was rough. You have always been a "sturdy rock" on which we could depend.

While we are paying a tribute to you, we are also paying tribute to your father. We thank him for the Christian home he maintained after your mother was gone, the home that gave you such high ideals and such Christian understanding.

Now, you have accepted a responsibility much larger than our local work. We want to wish you success and assure you that all of us will support you to the best of our abilities. We are glad to share you with the wider fellowship. We know they will love you and follow your leadership as we have. If you should become discouraged, we hope that you will look at the fruits of your labors in our auxiliary and be inspired to greater achievements.

We give you this book of Madonnas by Cynthia Pearl Maus as a small token of our esteem and our love. We have all signed our names, not only as members of the auxiliary, but as your friends who love you.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

WAKEFIELD.

The Missionary Society of the Congregational Christian Church, Wakefield, Va., was called to order by the president, Mrs. Walter Seeley on the ninth of October. The meeting was held in the home of Miss Kate Harris. The entire program consisted of the discussion of "United Nations in World Peace." Mrs. Carroll H. Beale presented the historical and political facts established upon the first charters granted by the United States, England and Russia as the founders of the U. N., into which there are now fifty-six nations.

Mrs. Walter Seeley gave a beneficial discussion of World Peace, based on biblical facts, followed by a prayer for world peace today.

At the conclusion of the program, Mrs. Seeley asked for the roll call, the collection of dues and the reading of preceding minutes.

Mrs. Fenton Branch, secretary, presented the names of Mrs. Holt, Mrs. Lear Brittle and Mrs. Lyster Goodrich for membership. The ladies of the society are very happy indeed to have these new members.

The devotionals were read by Mrs. Bailey, and Mrs. Walter Seeley made applicable remarks in regard to world peace. Her prayer was the concluding feature of the program.

Delicious refreshments were served by the hostess, Miss Harris.

CONCORD CHURCH.

The woman's Missionary Society of Concord Christian Church has had a very good year under the leadership of our President, Mrs. Sam Travis. God has blessed us bountifully as a group and individually for having contributed to the building of His Kingdom.

We express our appreciation and gratitude to our pastor, Rev. W. W. Snyder, and his loving wife, for their help and inspiration guidance during the year.

Our society met all the requirements of the Standard of Excellence. We have had a part in all the special programs and activities during the year. Besides these, we have assumed the responsibility of raising some money for the building fund of our church.

We covet your prayers that even though we are small in number, our society may continue to grow in favor with both God and man.

MRS. H. P. TERRELL, Reporter.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Orphanage children have had several surprises of late which they enjoyed immensely. Sometime ago the Pleasant Hill Sunday School held their annual picnic on our campus and brought supper for all, which I have already mentioned in a former letter.

Then the Cole Brothers Circus came to Burlington, and one of the owners of the circus is a Burlington boy, and the circus requested that we send all the children down as their special guests. We accepted their invitation. They gave all the children reserved seats and showed them every courtesy. Many of our children had never seen an elephant, lion, or bear before. They were very much interested in the animals, as well as seeing the trained horses in the ring.

Next the Missionary Society of our Hines Chapel Church wrote and asked if they could prepare and serve supper for the children on Saturday evening, October 18. Of course, their request was gladly granted. Mrs. H. W. Donnell, Mrs. Rowland Isley, Mrs. James Smith, and Mrs. Turner Smith, who represented the society, came with baskets of food and spread it on our picnic table. After thanks was returned they told the children to help themselves, which they gladly did. Chicken, pies, and cakes, and many other good things to eat was highly enjoyed by all of the Orphanage family. Mrs. Smith made a tub of lemonade with broken ice in it, and you all know how good it looks with ice floating on top of it. It carried the writer back to his little boyhood days when his father hauled his tobacco to Danville, Virginia, in a two-horse wagon to sell, and sometimes he would let the writer go with him. We well remember the old colored man would come around with a cedar bucket with brass hoops highly polished full of lemonade, which had broken chunks of ice on top and slices of lemon floating with the ice, crying, "Lemonade made in the shade, stirred with a spade, the best lemonade ever made, five cents a glass." I tell you it looked good to a little boy.

Then the next thrill our little folks had, which they enjoyed very much, was when Mr. Oscar F. Smith, who was attending the Horse Show near the Orphanage, came over to the Orphanage with his pony wagon drawn by six beautiful ponies, which were dressed in beautiful harness. He took all the little boys and girls for a ride. He took the children in each building, one building at a time so they would not be overlooked and the children would not be crowded. It was a grand treat for them and they will always remember Mr. Smith and the pony wagon. Then Mr. Smith invited all the larger children to see the Horse Show as his special guests. We think they were about as happy over Mr. Smith winning the grand prize as he was.

Please be liberal with your Thanksgivng offerings. We need it!

festes in Christ, and where his creatures may worship him in spirit and in truth.

The church needs people. Indeed, God himself needs people to get his will done on earth as it is in heaven. This is our Protestant conception of God and of the Church and of religion. Nothing happens in these matters except through human hearts and hands. Stones won't do. So that if the church, as God's instrument, is to do its appointed work in the world, it must have people who truly love and serve it. I am glad to say that there are many people who truly love and serve the church.

But there are not enough of them. There never was, for that matter. Christ died for the world, and the world has not yet been brought in obedience to him. There is our job. It is at this point that I do most of my worrying about our church, and I worry about it because the matter of recruiting new members is left almost entirely to the minister. That won't do. We need our entire membership deeply concerned about this vital point. It is precisely the point where each of us must put in some effort and thought. Each of us will help to make our church more useful to God in this community, and in the far reaches of his Kingdom, by doing some personal work in winning new members and in seeing that the new members worship with us.

The Religious Survey of our entire city, which is now in progress, should be of help to us in this matter. Every family which expresses a preference for our church will be called upon by the pastor and members—this may be a good job for our deacons—and invited to unite with us in our faith and fellowship. We must do our part in completing the survey, and after that the real work for our church will begin. This past year we received forty-four new members, which is a larger number than we have received in any recent years, but it is not enough if we are to do our part in evangelizing our city and in maintaining this church as a useful instrument in the hands of Christ.

We have many denominational responsibilities which we hear in patience and goodwill and charity. We, as a church, are a link in the chain which is the Congregational Christian Churches. Our denomination seeks to carry on missionary and educational work the world around, in which all the churches share as they are able. I believe our giving to these various denominational causes is generous. We meet our apportionment in these matters, and give in addition to the Shaowu Mission in China, the Memorial Endowment Fund of Elon College, and the Congregational Christian Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction. In 1946, the last year for which we have complete figures, our benevolence giving totaled $5,079.00, and this does not include the amount given by various members to the Memorial Endowment Fund of

Marriages

KIRKMAN - MURCHISON.

Miss Marian McNeil Kirkman became the bride of the Rev. Victor Murchison, Winston-Salem, September 14, at 5:00 in the afternoon in the Tabernacle Methodist Church, Greensboro, N. C. Rev. J. Frank Apple of Henderson performed the double-ring ceremony.

Mrs. Murchison is the daughter of Clark H. Kirkman and the late Mrs. Kirkman of Pleasant Garden. Mr. Murchison is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Murchison of Liberty.

Mr. Murchison served as assistant pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church for a year and is now pastor of the Friends Church in Winson-Salem. Mrs. Murchison was the assistant Home Demonstration Agent in Henderson, N. C., prior to her marriage. The couple will be at home on 612½ Summit St., Winston-Salem, N. C.

In Memoriam

VEAZEY.

Mrs. Guy H. Veazey was born near Alexander City, Ala., June 22, 1893, and entered into rest at her home in New Market, Va., on the afternoon of August 16, 1947.

She became a Christian at the age of ten years, and united with the Baptist Church. When her husband, the Rev. Guy H. Veazey entered the ministry she united with the Christian Church that she might better serve with her husband the cause of Christ. She lived the Christian life which she professed, wholly consecrated to her family, her home and her church.

As previously stated in "The Christian Sun," services were conducted at Bethlehem Church, near New Market, August 17, but final services were conducted at the Striffler's Funeral Parlor, Columbus, Ga., Tuesday afternoon, August 10, at 2:00 by the Rev. J. D. Dollar and the Rev. J. M. Shell. The body was laid to rest in the Park Hill Cemetery, Columbus, Ga.

Mrs. Veazey is survived by her husband. There are also surviving their three children, one son and two daughters—Charles Veazey of Chattanooga, Tenn., Mrs. Gordon Culpepper of Columbus, Ga. and Miss Martha Veazey of Elon College, N. C.; one grandchild, four sisters and one brother.

"Fold her O Father! in thine arms,
And let her henceforth be A messenger of love between Our human hearts and thee."

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

FOUSHEE.

On July 7, 1947, God in his infinite wisdom and love called home Mrs. Georgia Frances Nance Foushee. She was a member of Providence Memorial Church of Graham, N. C. Her loyalty, devotion and generosity will ever be remembered by her many friends.

Therefore, Be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.

2. That even though she was confined to her home because of ill health, we as Christians emulate her Christian spirit, her sweet disposition and her trust in the Heavenly Father's care.

3. That we extend to her family and loved ones our sincere and heartfelt sympathy and pray God's blessings on them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to The Christian Sun, and a copy placed on the records of the Missionary Society.

Mrs. W. H. HOLT,

Mrs. O. J. STUCKEY, Committee.

WHITT.

Mrs. Elizabeth Bray Whitt, daughter of the late John and Sarah Bray, was born June 8, 1873, and died September 26, 1947.

On December 26, 1894, she married Jas. David Whitt. She is survived by five children: Mrs. Janie Tuck and James Whitt, of Nathalie; John Whitt, of White Plains, N. Y.; Edward Whitt, of Columbia, and Mrs. Agnes Crutchfield, of Holland. There are nine grandchildren, four sisters and two brothers.

Sister Whitt when young joined Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., and when Liberty was organized in 1910, she became a charter member.

The funeral was conducted by her pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes, and the writer. She was an earnest, sincere Christian, faithful in all her life's duties. She rests from her labors, and her influence for good lives on.

C. E. NEWMAN.

BARRETT.

Lycurgus Barrett, the son of the late Lucillius and Nannie Story Barrett of Southampton County, Virginia, died on Saturday, September 13, 1947, in Suffolk, and funeral services were conducted on Sunday at the Suffolk Christian Church, of which he had long been an active member. Dr. John G. Truitt, his pastor, officiated. The burial services, with Masonic rites, were held at the graveside in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Byrdie Mae Barnes Barrett; a daughter, Mrs. W. T. Brantley, of Suffolk; two sons, Earl C. and Harold Lycurgus Barrett, of Suffolk, and three sisters, Mrs. J. A. Brown and Mrs. Lewis Knowles, of Suffolk, and Mrs. T. E. Barrett, of Norfolk.

A PASTOR REPORTS.

Elon College, which is running an average of $1,700.00 per year for five years.

This past year we have continued to take care of our own properties. The Social Hall and Parlor were painted and the floors sanded; the Parsonage was given some needed paint and repair work; and we purchased new hymnals for the church. In this connection, I wish to express our gratitude to the parents of the six young men of our church who lost their lives in World War II, for making the suggestion of having new hymnals as a Living Memorial to these young men, and for their own generous gifts. The parents together gave $450.00, and balance of the cost, $150.00 was raised in a single collection at a church service.

I'm no hand for statistics and do not count the number of calls I make, but I do try to stay on the job. My first responsibility is to the sick, the bereaved and those in any kind of trouble. Next to that in importance ranks the obligation of calling on prospective members. Each new member represents of course several calls as a rule, and there is a great deal of time given to interviewing those who ought to be enrolled in the Christian enterprise with us, but who for some reason have not been prepared to take that step as yet. I next endeavor to seek out those who are out on the fringes of the church's life and are not active in either the worship or the work of the church. Lastly there comes the calling on members in good and regular standing. I am aware of the importance of pastoral visitation and I pursue it as faithfully as the multitudinous duties of a church like this will permit.

Five members died during the year: W. G. Edmonds, Laban W. Bartlett, Mrs. A. H. Nichols, A. M. Johnson, and Mrs. Mary L. Tuttle. In all, I officiated at fourteen funerals. I also officiated at nineteen weddings. There were nine children christened.

There were many denominational duties to perform—meetings to attend, committee work, sermons and addresses here and there, a week of special services at Mt. Carmel. Then there were interdenominational duties—like this Religious Survey in which we are now engaged (I am chairman of the Park Place and Colonial Place district); other work in and through the ministerial association, like the Preaching Mission; work with the National Conference of Christians and Jews; and work with the Department of Radio of the Virginia Council of Churches. I have never been busier in my life. There are books to read and I don't get a chance at many of them.

Our church work is after all an individual affair. So is our attendance at the service of worship, at the Sunday School, and other gatherings. No organization or scheme will be of lasting help in this matter. It is up to the individual. And God doesn't save us in bundles anyway. I would urge, therefore, that in the year ahead we all seek by prayer, by meditation, by admonition from the scriptures and by attendance upon Divine Worship, to make ourselves increasingly useful channels through which the Holy Spirit may be set free to do His work in the world.

PETER YOUNG, Minister,
The Christian Temple.

By C. B. RIDDLE

Sand is one of the most commonplace things, yet it has been the background for many chapters of fiction and the stage upon which some of the great episodes of history have been enacted. In some parts of the world vast wastes of sand hold many of the secrets of nations that have perished.

Those who dwell and work in modern buildings spend most of their lives behind glass, which is made of sand. It is possible that the world would still be without glass had it not been for nature's great plan to break up large portions of the earth into trillions upon trillions of particles called sand.

There are test tubes, thermometers and containers for manufacturing weapons to fight disease. Most of these are made of glass, but the glass was made of sand. The finer plaster on the interior walls and ceilings of the world's homes contains sand. In the kitchen cabinet, on the table, in the bathroom—almost everywhere—there are glass and chinaware. The basis of these useful and ornamental things is the simple commodity of sand. Makers of porcelain and enamelware use sand as a basic element in manufacture.

The machine age is also a sand age. Indeed, there is scarcely a piece of machinery or metal equipment that does not owe its existence to sand, and the metal parts, at least, being molded in it.

Sand as an abrasive plays an important part in the telephone. In this instance, however, not every type of sand is suitable, and so nature, probably foreseeing the farflung extension of the world's most frequently used medium of communication, prepared a literal underground mountain of sand at Ottawa, Illinois, recognized as the finest sand in the United States for the manufacture of delicate telephone parts.

A curious thing about sand, except from the vast deserts, is that it seems to come from nowhere. The bottom of the ocean is muddy and often as soft as velvet, yet when the waves of the seas lash the shores, tons of sand washed white are dumped into the sunlight. A striking instance of this is on the beach at Monterey, California.

Sand is so important that many scientists and economists believe that the millions of miles of desert sand in Asia, and even the vast stretches of sand in the United States, are only waiting to be utilized. Glass houses are already blueprinted, and if and when timber becomes too scarce to be used for lumber—as many believe it will—billions of tons of sand may be employed along with other materials from the earth to construct houses.

"Sands of time" is a time-honored phrase, as if the shifting of sand marks the onward march of civilization. Many poets have waxed eloquent in writing of sand, and the first glimpse of the limitless acres of sand produces an impression which often cannot be expressed.

When mortals depart from this world, erected to their graves are monuments made with the aid of sand, for the sawing of stone and marble is done largely by the use of sand and water.

Seemingly dead and inert, sand has a tendency to make one feel that it marks the end of man's trail. But to the industrial world, sand may be only now coming into its own. If man ever gets a full glimpse of Mars he will do so only by the use of a telescope made of sand.

Crusading With Christ

President's Message to Eastern Virginia Conference

By REV. O. D. POYTHRESS

In the sixth chapter of Ephesians and the eleventh verse, the greatest Christian of the Centuries gave to the followers of Christ of that day and of every day, these words: "Put on the whole armour of God," for said he, "You are going out to battle against Principalities and Powers."

Events of the last few years have brought our civilization to the brink—truly these are dark and fateful days. How shall we face them—how can we rediscover the real values of Christianity? We can do one of two things: first—have faith in God and in the message of Jesus Christ, or second—drift with the tide of worldliness. We have been caught in the undertow of Materialism. Let's look for a moment at the inner life of the Christian Church—let's discover some of the fundamental Christian virtues of the Bride of Christ. Oh, yes, there are critics, severe critics, of the Church today. They tell us that the Church has failed, that Christ as failed, but let me here and now repeat what I have said over and over again: I believe in the Church, the Church for which our Lord died, the Church our Lord commissioned to go out to bear the glad tidings, the Church that preaches the Fatherhood of God, the love of Christ, as the only way of life. Now, can the Church give to the world the Dynamics the world needs? Have we lost the Heroism of the Church? My friends, the early Church took the Christian message and swept over the Roman Empire. The writer of my text today swept aside all the difficulties and said "Let's be going." The early Church made no compromise with the world—she feared nothing. We need to quit saying "We could do so and so if the times were different."

If we are to crusade with Christ, we must have, first—Convictions, and once we have convictions, that is, believe in something—let's abide by them. Unless we do, we face defeat. On the other hand, we can be like soldiers charging into battle—we know no fear, but through faith in Him, the Captain of our Salvation, we will become fearless. If we are to crusade with Him, we need, second—Christian Courage. The society of Paul's day was pagan. We still live in a pagan world. We used to sing "The Old Time Religion" but it seems we have quit it. Why? I think we are afraid the world will take us too seriously. Paul felt it was better to please God than man. We have developed an "accommodating conscience." The Church of that far off day feared no one and flattered no one. The Church of that day felt it had a message that would solve all problems, in spite of danger, darkness and hardship, they marched straight ahead. If the Church does not leaven the world, the world will leaven the Church. Now my friends, if we have convictions and the courage of our convictions, let's take, third—Christ, the Captain of our Salvation and relate Him to the needs of the world. We need to take our Christian religion seriously. We need to count our lives as nothing for this Christ. Today from every land and every clime, come the calls, "Come and save us," "Come and help us," and again we hear Paul saying, "Put on the whole armour of God and go forth to do battle for our Lord." Thank God we live in a time when we can go forth in a world Crusade for our Christ.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Dr. Thomas Alfred Tripp will serve on the faculty of the Rural Church Institute to be held at Duke University June 7-11, 1948.

Rev. O. D. Poythress, popular minister for many years in South Norfolk, performed 78 marriage ceremonies last conference year.

The Fall Thank Offering for the Ohio Women's Fellowship is to be used for furthering our Christian work at Angola, Portuguese West Africa.

Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, is spending some time this week in Eastern Virginia in the interest of the college.

Dr. Paul Hutchinson, new editor of the Christian Century, Dr. Benjamin Mays and Mrs. Markoosa Fisher will speak at the Virginia Institute on World Order which will be held Saturday at Union Seminary, Richmond.

Allan Knight Chalmers, who succeeded Dr. Charles E. Jefferson at Broadway Tabernacle (Congregational) in New York, has resigned his pulpit and will join the faculty of the Boston University's School of Theology next year.

Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, minister of the Mt. Pleasant Congregational Church of Washington will give the address this Friday in observance of World Community Day by the Richmond Council of Church Women. Mrs. R. L. House is program chairman and the service will be held in St. Mark's Episcopal Church.

A campaign for pledges and contributions to overseas relief was conducted by the Chapel Hill Council of Churches on October 26. Rev. Bernard Monger, campaign chairman, reports that the council will be able to send $732 a month to relief and rehabilitation agencies throughout the coming year. Contributions ranged from 50 cents to $500, and pledges from $1 to $40 a month. If all of the pledges are paid it will mean approximately $8,800 from this community for overseas relief. Chapel Hill has set a noble example for other communities.

WANT AN ANNUAL!

This is a notice to all conference secretaries and secretaries of auxiliaries of the Convention. We can get the Annals for this year if you will turn your minutes to Dr. Wm. T. Scott, our Superintendent, within a few days after the meeting of your organization. It is our hope that the minutes will be published in the Annual 60 days after the last minutes have been received by the printer. (Note: by the printer, not by Dr. Scott.) Dr. Scott is dependent upon each secretary for these minutes immediately following the adjournment of the meeting.

The Board of Publication is also asking that each organization having minutes printed in the Annual pay accordingly for space and copies. Notices of payment due will be sent to each organization for this coming Annual after it is published.

The Board of Publications regretted very much the resignation of Mrs. A. C. Todd as editor of the Children's Page and asked the editor to secure someone to take her place. (Since the meeting, Mrs. R. L. House is filling temporarily this position as editor of the Children's Page.)

W. J. ANDES, Sec'y,
Board of Publications.

OHIO CONFERENCE CHANGES HEADQUARTERS OFFICE.

On November 1, the address of the Ohio State Conference office will be 3056 Prospect Avenue, Cleveland 15, Ohio. In addition to the main office, there will be a private office for each of the state staff and for the Cleveland Union. The first floor will also contain a good-sized printing and mailing room with adequate storage space as well as a library and reception room. There will be a chapel and board room on the second floor, and a comfortable lounge and guest room. There is also a kitchenette from which simple luncheons may be served to committees and boards. Provisions have been made for a parking lot in the rear and a caretaker on the second floor. The headquarters is described as "beautiful and dignified—worthy of the prestige of our denomination in Ohio." Rev. Everett A. Babcock is Superintendent.

SECOND CHURCH, NORFOLK.

Our Annual Church Conference was held the first Wednesday in October. We brought our supper and enjoyed good fellowship around the table after which we listened to reports from our financial secretary, Mr. Clyde Etheridge and other organizations of the church. Mr. J. H. Johnson, a deacon, complimented the church in giving more to missions this year than ever before. He said if our church would live and grow stronger it must continue doing that.

The "Morning Star" class deserves special mention in work done during (Continued on page 14.)

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

DRAMATIZATION OF CHRISTMAS STORY TO BE ON RADIO.

A Christmas cycle of five broadcasts dramatizing the story of the birth of Christ from the time that John the Baptist heralded His coming to the point at which the Three Wise Men separated to go their own ways will be heard during the American Broadcasting Company programs of "The Greatest Story Ever Told" each Sunday at 6:30 p. m. Eastern Standard Time, from November 30 through December 28.

The broadcasts are the first which have dramatized the story of His birth in a complete chronicle. The Angel Gabriel will be impersonated on the air. Each broadcast will tell of a separate episode of an event which has been celebrated throughout Christendom each year for almost 2,000 years.

All of the broadcasts will include in the forthcoming "Greatest Story Ever Told" albums which are being offered for release to religious teaching groups.

WHEN YOU VISIT or MOVE to RICHMOND ATTEND

THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

3000 Grove Avenue

ROBERT LEE HOUSE, Minister

Sunday School—9:30 A. M.

Sunday Services—11:00 A. M. and 8:00 P. M.

This is the only Church of our denomination in Richmond, although some churches of another denomination employ the name Christian. The Church is located in the West End and is accessible from all parts of the city by public transportation. Floyd Bus and Belmont Car come within a block of the Church.

Write us about your relatives and friends in Richmond or vicinity. Send this issue to them. "The Witness," our weekly publication, may be had on request or by subscription at 50c a year. You may help us build a strong church of our faith and order in Virginia's Capital.

"COME WITH US AND WE WILL DO THEE GOOD"

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

Good weather, Virginia hospitality, thoughtful and stimulating reports marked the annual meeting of the Eastern Virginia Conference last week in Suffolk. The Conference voted 57 to 12 in favor of union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, and voted unanimously their participation in the United Church if the union is consummated. All churches were instructed to vote on the Merger by April, 1948.

Secretary W. B. O'Neill reported that the churches of the Conference raised $297,296 during the year. Dr. Louis T. Gilbert, missionary to China, spoke of the "overwhelming results of sinfulness in our age" and declared that our church must not default in this history-making era. He stressed the fact that the church is historically conditioned to meet and emerge from a crisis.

Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer of Washington reported on his trip to Europe. Authentic evidence of persistent deprivation and frustration was given. He said that we live in an island of unreality, compared with a bankrupt civilization in which people faint from exposure and undernourishment. Following this appeal for a "bond of recognized Christian unity," Dr. N. G. Newman placed a gift on the altar which led the Conference in a spontaneous offering of $176 for the Committee on War Victims and Reconstruction.

The Conference voted to "request the churches to accept their quotas on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation, bring their payments up to date, and if possible, pay in full immediately." It was voted "that the Conference memorialize the Southern Convention to increase the Convention Fund apportionment to provide for adequate funds for all operating expenses of the Convention Office and to cover the amount required for publishing The Christian Sun, so there will be no transfer of any money from any other fund raised for the Convention, for these expenses, but all funds shall be used for the purposes designated in the appeal for the support of the Convention apportionments."

After two terms of efficient service as president of the Conference, the Rev. O. D. Poythress turned the gavel over to Dr. Frank S. Lewis. The Rev. R. E. Brittle is the new vice-president. Secretary O'Neill and Treasurer White were re-elected. The Conference will meet next year at South Norfolk.

NOBEL PRIZE

Two religious organizations, the British and American Friends Societies, are the recipients of the 1947 Nobel Peace Prize. Widespread gratification is being expressed over this award which was made by the Norwegian Parliament. The prize of 140,000 Swedish Kroner ($38,990) will be given at ceremonies at the Nobel Institute in Oslo, December 10, fifty-first anniversary of the death of Alfred Nobel who set up the award which bears his name.

The Friends have taken seriously the Scriptural injunction: "Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." They have demonstrated in a convincing way that a religious body does not have to be large in order to be creative and redemptive in its service. They have never sought to become the lump of society; they have been content to be leaven.

Quakers will not fight or recognize war. But they brave death in battle and in disaster in every capacity but that of bearers of arms.

Their ambulance corps, their relief workers, did their greatest work in two world wars.

The American Friends Service Committee carried out an enormous relief program after World War I. In France alone in 1919 46,000 families and 1,666 villages were aided by it. The Quakers carried on relief work in Russia after World War I and in 1931.

They worked through postwar typhus epidemics in Poland and Serbia. In cooperation with the American Relief Administration of Herbert Hoover—himself a Quaker—they handled distribution of food to numerous countries.

Between 1917 and 1927 the Quakers spent $12,000,000 on charity in Europe. Between the two world wars they carried out relief work in China and Spain. In Germany they worked to stop persecutions of Jews and others.

In World War II Quakers concentrated on such work as medical aid and carrying out mass evacuation of war victims. After the war they set up relief committees in all the war-torn countries of Europe, notably in Germany, Austria, Finland, Hungary, Poland and Italy. The American committee has requested the society for not less than $7,000,000 for charity work this year. Last year the Quakers shipped 700 tons of clothing to Europe and spent enormous sums for food. The British society has done similar work.

Dr. Henry J. Cadbury, Hollis Professor of Divinity at Harvard University and author of the recent publication, "Jesus—What Manner of Man," is the distinguished chairman of the American Friends Service Committee.

Rebuilding the Rural Church

By THOMAS ALFRED TRIPP

Who has not come upon a beautiful church by the wayside, a freshly painted temple in the hills set about with shrubs and flowers in the midst of a trim green lawn, showing the results of attention from loving hearts and careful hands? In spite of tremendous handicaps and limited resources many such churches are to be found in villages and open country, churches which are the center of their respective communities and making the best of their situations in effectively meeting their great opportunities.

Unfortunately, other churches are to be seen in many rural communities that are not such wholesome sights. The buildings often show the signs of neglect, are in great need of repair, and are set in grounds which are barren, unsightly blotches on the landscape. While the condition of the property does not always indicate the real state of the church, it is often true that neglected buildings house a routine of religious services with little meaning and an inadequate program. But whatever their appearance, many rural churches need to be "rebuilt" that they may have significance to persons and the community.

The difference between the unsightly and ineffective church, on the one hand, and the beautiful and vital one, on the other, is something that does not just happen. It will require work to build or "rebuild" the rural church. The best efforts of both city and country churches will be needed to accomplish this task.

America is two-fifths rural. Nearly three-fourths of the churches in the United States are rural, that is, located in the open country or in small towns. A two-thirds of all Congregational and Christian churches are rural.

These churches are to be found in every section of the nation and are often the strongest factors for neighborhood solidarity and social change in their respective localities. Some of them are being closed and a few new ones are being organized each year to meet the demands of specific situations. Changing times call for a changing church. The coming of the automobile, modern communication and scientific farming are having profound effect on the rural community, the agricultural economy and especially the country church.

A rural church is a community of Christians trying to live the good life and to build a wholesome society with much the same motives as a city church endeavoring to do similar things. A rural church, however, is close to the soil, and its people are acquainted with nature. It is the church of the farmers and the village dwellers.

Country churches are often small and frequently associated with others in the vicinity in "larger parishes" or "yoked fields" in order to share in the support of a minister. Some of them must have missionary aid to keep going; not all rural churches are weak, however. Many of them being able to compare well with their city brethren in a strong Christian program and in missionary giving. It is to the credit of country and village people that they usually make remarkably good use of their meager resources in what are sometimes most trying circumstances.

Rural churches suffer from floods, droughts, dust storms, grasshoppers, boll weevils, and bad markets. The stronger help the weak, and the churches that are able to do so go quietly about their work of aiding needy parishes through their missionary giving year after year.

Through the Board of Home Missions, Congregational and Christian churches reach out a helping hand to the smaller rural parishes with assistance for the pastor's salary, loans for their building needs, pensions for ministers and materials for their educational activities. Through the visits of the Board's field workers, helpful counsel is offered toward the improvement of programs that will meet the needs of the rural community, the discovery and training of rural ministers all for the enrichment and appreciation of country life and the church.

John Frederick Oberlin, famous rural pastor, once said, "I do not want to labor in some easy pastoral charge where I can be at ease. I want a work no one else wishes to do; and which will not be done unless I do it."

While not all pastors of town and country churches have such high ideals, many of them have deliberately dedicated their lives to a ministry to rural people. Here is a story told by one of them:

"Through the years I have chosen to serve rural churches. Last spring my wife and I went to a church 15 miles from a town at the foot of the Ozarks. The parsonage was all run down and not fit to live in. The stable was a ramshackle old shed. We almost camped out while we put in a garden and got the church work going. Then we started to fix up the place a bit. With the help of the laymen we built a garage, 10 x 24 feet, using the lumber from the old house and barn. We are living quite comfortably, though cramped, in that until we can build a new parsonage.

"We count on our garden for 50 per cent of our food to supplement our small salary. My wife cans from 450 to 600 quarts of vegetables and fruit every year. By keeping two cows and a horse we make good use of the 36 acres attached to the church property.

"Then, too, we have a few sheep and about 60 chickens. The sheep began as an experiment with us. I bought six for $25. Last year we made $57 from wool and meat and have more sheep than when we started.

"We have electric lights, too. There is no rural electrification program near us, so we put up a 50-foot tower with a big windmill at the top. Turned by the southwestern winds, the plant generates electricity to light our garage-home, operates the pump in our well, and runs our other appliances, including a washing machine, sewing machine and the like. We have running water in the garage and a bath tub in the light house.

"Our main job, of course, is our parish work which takes all of our time, but we manage to live happily among these people."

Not all rural pastors have as difficult a field but many work under great handicaps. This case reveals a devotion that challenges the easy-going attitude of many of us who call ourselves Christian.

Mr. Roy West of Riverview, W. Va., writes: "We had on hand about 35 buildings which would make excellent churches and Sunday school rooms. In fact we have sold a good many of them for this same purpose. Inasmuch as we are well along in the season we are desirous of moving these buildings at once, and would be willing to make a special concession, should they be used for a worthy cause. We would be willing to cut our ten per cent profit out of these buildings and sell them to religious organizations, without one penny down and giving them up to ten years to pay.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

At a meeting held immediately after the morning service last Sunday—the Sunday before the convening of the Eastern Virginia Conference—the Suffolk Church voted unanimously for the merger. At the evening service the Rev. Carl R. Dille, pastor in a former Christian Church and now an American Board missionary in Angola, Africa, preached to the great delight of the evening congregation. Mr. Dille was to have been the missionary speaker at the meeting of the Eastern Virginia Conference but was called to Boston relative to his immediate return to his missionary post. Missions in our church were given a great boost by the excellent address of Mr. Dille, and we wish him and his charming family God-speed in the work. His family consists of Lois, his wife, Nancy, his 13-year old daughter, and Tommy, his 11-year old son. Mrs. Dille was Lois Lawson, daughter of the dean of De fiance College.

The Eastern Virginia Conference brought great inspiration and delight to the Suffolk Church, which acted as host. The Wednesday sessions were well attended. Rev. O. D. Poythress presided in a gracious manner, and brought to a close one of the very good years of this Conference. The merger was approved by a 57 to 12 vote, after due discussion well placed on both sides. To this writer it seemed that the general sentiment was that the merger is not expected to be a panacea for many difficulties but a proof of the desire that the Church may press forward toward unity of action in a much disturbed post war world.

A high spot in the Conference was the address of Rev. Fred S. Buschmeyer, pastor of one of our Washington, D. C., churches, and president of the Executive Board of the Congregational Christian Churches, when he spoke on the closing day at noon telling of his recent trip through devastated Europe. At the close of his most stirring address Dr. N. G. Newman, perhaps the oldest minister present, arose and in his own inimitable way, led the members and visitors present in the old-fashioned way of placing money that "will not rattle" on the altar table for the needy in Europe. The sum of $175 was received.

Upon recommendation of the nominating committee the following were elected: Dr. Frank H. Lewis, Portsmouth, president; Rev. R. E. Brittle, Cypress Chapel and Bethlehem, vice-president; Dr. Will B. O'Neill, Holland, secretary; G. Chapman White, Waverly, treasurer; Dr. N. G. Newman, historian; Mills E. Godwin, of Chuckatuck, and Rev. John G. Truitt, Suffolk, nominees for representatives of the Eastern Virginia Conference on the Southern Convention Executive Board. The Conference is to meet next November 3, and 4, with the South Norfolk Church.

The pastor of the Suffolk Church was very pleased at the splendid cooperation evidenced by its members in acting as host to this Conference. May God bless all our churches, our pastors and all their members, in greater realization of the joy of consecrated service throughout the new church year.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

WHAT I THINK ABOUT THE MERGER.

I am strongly in favor of uniting with the Evangelical and Reformed denomination. The proposed "Basis of Union" appeals to me as fair and democratic. It will both preserve and combine the best traditions of both groups. No, one denomination has the whole of Christianity in its keeping. Congregational Christians have something to give, and also something to learn. Let us welcome this opportunity to enlarge our household of faith. The things that unite us are the great truths of the gospel—the things that separate us are secondary and capable of reconciliation and adjustment. United, we shall form a much more influential and representative Christian body in American life than either of us can alone—as strong in Pennsylvania as in New England, strong in the heart of cities like Chicago and St. Louis, and in their suburbs—a truly nationwide and culturally comprehensive Christian fellowship. God grant that we may all see this and let no minor differences defeat this great forward step in Christian unity.

ALBERT W. PALMER, Moderator of The General Council.

FIRST, PORTSMOUTH.

The annual conference of the First Christian Church was held on Wednesday evening, October 1st, with a splendid attendance. Encouraging reports were read. The officers elected for the church year beginning October 1st, 1947, are:

Financial Secretary, W. H. Lee; Assistant Financial Secretary, Mrs. O. C. Hartung; Treasurer, B. L. Sawyer; Church Clerk, E. M. Story; Assistant Clerk, H. F. Collette; Sunday School Superintendent, H. H. Harecum; Chairman, Finance Committee, David White; Chairman, Property Committee, H. W. Lee; Chairman Music Committee, Caroline Gort; Chairman Board of Ushers, David White; Historian, Mrs. J. F. Brothers; Auditors, H. W. Lee and J. T. Daughtrey; Trustees, J. F. Brothers, B. F. Collins and R. W. Holland.

The following were elected to represent the church at the Eastern Virginia Conference, at Suffolk, October 29th and 30th; Delegates, H. W. Lee and Mrs. O. C. Hartung; Alternates, B. L. Sawyer and Mrs. C. J. Heath. To the Southern Christian Convention, which meets in 1948, there were elected: Delegates, Harry H. Harecum and B. L. Sawyer; Alternates, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Storey.

The church went on record as approving the proposed merger with the Evangelical Reformed Church. Delegates to the Conference and Convention were so instructed.

This is the first annual conference attended by the present pastor, Rev. Stanley Carne, who came to Portsmouth in June. The Church is looking forward to a year of activity and fellowship under the leadership of the pastor and those elected to serve as officers during the coming year.

BRITTLE HONORED AND FETED

On Monday evening, October 27, the members of Union Church (Southampton) honored their retiring pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle. Mr. and Mrs. Brittle were presented with a beautifully engraved four piece sterling silver service. A large cake bearing 18 candles, "Eighteen Years of Faithful Service" was served during the fellowship hour.

Substantial improvements have been made during the ministry of Mr. Brittle. A new church has been built and paid for, oil furnace and heating plant installed, modern church pews added, carpets laid, sanctuary redecorated, conference apportionments raised from $69.00 to $290.00, pastor's salary raised from $150.00 to $2,400.00, the membership strengthened, and work on a six-room parsonage begun.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FOUNDATION.

The Eastern Virginia Conference in session at Waverly, Virginia, in 1943, voted to request the Convention to authorize the establishment of the Staley - Atkinson - Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education in Elon College. One hundred thousand dollars was set as the amount to be raised. All conferences constituting the Convention meeting after that date approved the resolution offered by the Eastern Virginia Conference. The Convention in session at Reidsville in 1944 approved the establishment of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education in Elon College, and at the same time authorized a campaign to raise $1,000,000 for Elon College; the $100,000 for the memorial foundation to be a part of the Million Dollar Campaign. The conferences passed the recommendation to raise the $100,000 for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation without a single vote in the opposition. The same was true with the Convention. The conferences and the Convention are representative bodies. Usually the action taken by such bodies becomes binding on the churches represented. The church would not insist on a legal interpretation of its actions, but it would place the matter upon the consciences of the churches with the hope that they would cooperate. A large number of the churches of the Convention have been enthusiastic and most cooperative in their endeavors to carry out the Convention's vote. I am sorry to note that a number of our churches have not yet given their approval or pledged their cooperation. It is to be hoped that they will cooperate before many more weeks pass.

This is first of all an effort to strengthen the Department of Religion and Philosophy in the College by making available greater financial support that this department of the College may operate with greater efficiency and more ease. It also seeks to honor and keep alive the memory of three of the beloved servants of the Church: Dr. Staley in the pastorate, Dr. Atkinson in the field of Missions, and Dr. Newman in the field of Christian education in the College. These two incentives should encourage our people as a whole to contribute generously. We do want to do a more efficient job in the field of Christian education, and we do want to express appreciation of the valuable services rendered by these three great churchmen.

It is regretted that we do not have a large number of reports from our churches for this article. Two have reported that they would not cooperate in this effort. The following churches have reported that they would:

Morrisville—$25 paid.

Winchester—Accepts its quota and will forward $150 immediately.

Union (N. C.)—Accepts its quota and sends $160.

Lindville—Reports that it cannot accept the entire quota of $750 but that it will cooperate.

Big Oak—Sends post office money order for $7.59.

Burton Grove—Will send money soon.

These contributions are greatly appreciated and they will assist the College as it faces its present emergency.

More than a year ago it became imperative that the College's endowment be increased to meet the minimum requirement of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, our accrediting agency. In lieu of the churches' delay in raising the Staley - Atkinson - Newman Memorial Foundation, $60,000 was borrowed from undesignated funds and placed to the credit of the endowment funds. These undesignated funds had been raised for our building program. We now need very badly the money to repay the undesignated funds that the College may be in a position to pay for the erection of the power plant. Your church's contribution now will help to relieve an impending emergency which, if not met, will be serious.

Brother pastor, won't you please confer with your church and cooperate in this necessary undertaking?

ELON COLLEGE ANNOUNCES PROGRAMS FOR THE 1947 1948 LYCEUM SERIES.

A complete list of stellar attractions to be presented during the current season on the Elon College Lyceum Series was recently announced.

Since it is the desire of the college to help promote activities of a cultural nature for both the student body and surrounding community, every effort has been made to secure a well-rounded group of programs to be presented by some of America's outstanding artists. As the college hopes to continue this program from year to year, the patronage of the surrounding territory will be a determining factor in the furtherance of this endeavor.

The program, which is under the joint sponsorship of the Departments of Music and Dramatic Arts, opened with one performance by the Barter Theater of Oscar Wilde's comedy, "The Importance of Being Earnest," on October 15. This will be followed by four well-balanced musical offerings by some of the outstanding artists of the present day.

These presentations include the Chicago Little Symphony on December 3, 1947; James Montgomery, tenor, on January 4, 1948; the Mozart Trio on March 9, 1948, and Guy and Lois Maier, piano duo at some time later in the spring.

The Barter Theater, founded by Robert Porterfield during the depression for the purpose of giving unemployed Broadway actors a chance to act and earn a living until conditions were better in the professional theater, sky-rocketed at once to national fame, since all its transactions were done in barter fashion. Patrons purchased tickets with vegetables, meat, milk, and eggs.

The venture was so successful artistically that it has become a permanent institution of professional actors, endowed by the state of Virginia. The Barter Theater maintains summer repertory companies in Abingdon, Virginia, and goes on tour through surrounding areas during the winter season.

Second in the series will be the Chicago Little Symphony, an instrumental ensemble whose playing has been characterized by the Chicago Daily News as "having a splendid degree of polished intensity." George H. Shapiro, the conductor, was formerly Associate Conductor of London's Royal Albert Hall Orchestra on tour with Sir Henry Wood and Sir Landon Ronald, with appearances in such European capitals as Vienna, Brussels, Munich, Rotterdam, Berlin, and Leipzig.

According to the Music critic of the Chicago American, "Mr. Shapiro is an inspired and inspiring conductor. His readings were sensitive." (Continued on page 11.)

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

IMPORTANT EVENTS FOR CHRISTIAN YOUTH.

Two events of great importance to Christian youth the world over have taken place in the last four months. One of these was the World Christian Youth Conference at Oslo and the other the convention of the International Society of Christian Endeavor.

Here is the specific importance of the latter of these two events. The convention of Christian Endeavor young people voted to merge with the United Christian Youth Movement. This step will bring together the two largest Protestant youth groups in the United States.

Youth of the convention specified that the proposed new youth movement "is to be centered in the fact that it recognizes the primacy of Jesus Christ and commits itself in loyalty to the Christian Church."

The convention also asked in addition to the major youth organizations, the union include other Protestant youth agencies.

This plan must be approved by the United Christian Youth Movement before further action can be taken.

Another indication that young people are in the process of unity trend maybe seen in the action taken by the first national Westminster Fellowship. General Assembly, an organization of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. There was an approval of a joint meeting of Westminster Fellowship Council officers with national officers of the Presbyterian Youth Fellowship, Presbyterian Church in the United States (Southern), preparatory to the reuniting of the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches.

Many youth leaders are hopeful that Christian young people, impatient of red tape and unnecessary delay, will achieve unity more quickly and will be a powerful impetus in speeding up this trend among their elders.

HERE'S NEWS.

There is a new program on the air Sundays at 6:30, called "The Greatest Story Ever Told," and thereby hangs one of the most unbelievable stories in modern broadcasting. If any one had suggested six months ago that the Bible could compete with Jack Benny, Fred Allen and Charlie McCarthy for America's ear on Sunday night, he'd have been laughed out of radio.

Wondering what inspired all this, Christian Herald went to the sponsors—to the Chairman of the Board of Directors of Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. It may even be that you don't know Goodyear is responsible for this; unless you listen very closely at the start and finish of the program, you'll miss mention of their name. That's deliberate—and revolutionary in radio. The sponsor is trying his best to stay in the background; if it were not for the regulation laid down by the Federal Communication Commission, Goodyear probably wouldn't be mentioned at all. In a day when 99 out of every 100 of us are weary to the point of rebellion at the long intrusive and often insipid "commercial," we find a program with no commercial at all. Why? We asked Mr. P. W. Litchfield, Chairman of the Board of Goodyear, "Why?"

And he said, "We sponsored 'The Greatest Story Ever Told' because we thought it was time something like this was done on the radio. We didn't do it to sell tires. We did not want to commercialize this story. But we did believe that the lessons taught by the Prince of Peace should become more a part of our thinking and action than has been the case in recent years. One Person two thousand years ago, confined to a radius of eighty miles during His lifetime, travelling on foot or on the back of a domestic animal, reaching only those within the sound of His voice, left such an impression on the hearts of mankind throughout the world and over the centuries, that we thought it would be a worthwhile contribution to society if this same lesson could be brought, through the power of modern radio to a world-wide audience who, in such times as these, are so much in need of it. I don't have to tell you that there is a wave of materialism sweeping this country. Too many of us are living by the ancient 'every man to himself!' philosophy. That's true not just in business and industry, but in politics, in race relations, even in some religion. That trend is bad; you just can't build a decent society or an intelligent economic order on such thinking as that. We believe that in the New Testament lies the only cure."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S RALLY.

On September 28, the young people of the Western North Carolina Conference met at Liberty for their fall rally and business meeting. Although a comparatively short time was spent together, we feel that much was accomplished there.

In the afternoon, the opening worship service was conducted by Evelyn Moore, the chairman of Interdenominational Action of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship. The rest of the afternoon was given over to business: election of new officers and a brief discussion of plans of the Convention young people for the coming year. The following officers were elected: President, Mr. Jack Shoffner, Liberty; Vice-President, Miss Charlesanna Robbins, Asheboro; Secretary, Miss Frances Biles, Albemarle; Treasurer, Mr. Harold Boone, Hank's Chapel.

The social hour followed during the picnic supper, then the Pleasant Ridge young people conducted the evening session of the rally. They presented a pageant "Life's Cross Roads," which was directed by Mrs. Fred Allen. The meeting was closed with the benediction being pronounced by Rev. W. T. Madren.

FOR JUNIOR OR JUNIOR HI GROUPS.

"What is new in the field of visual education?"

Beyond Our Own, first production of the Protestant Film Commission, is a 16mm. sound movie—available from denominational boards and from the Religious Film Association (297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York) immediately after the world premier, Nov. 10th. It runs 40 minutes and will rent for $10.00. The film using Hollywood actors, tells the story of two brothers. As college football stars, Peter is the dazzling runner who scores the touchdowns and Bob is the one who makes the scores possible by his skillful interference. Peter becomes an attorney, marries his college sweetheart and concentrates on becoming a "success," to the exclusion of all other interests except his young son. Bob, as a young interne, is thrilled with the work of healing people but

BURTON'S GROVE.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Burton's Grove has finished a very successful year. All reports have been sent in with full apportionments each quarter.

In November, we gave a program and took our offering for Shaowu.

We observed World Day of Prayer with the Wakefield Church.

We had our study books taught by our pastor and his efficient wife. We all enjoyed them very much, especially the one on India.

We hold our meetings in the homes each month with a very good attendance, and also a very good program.

We are a mixed group from seven to seventy but we all enjoy the fellowship of being together and the Juniors are becoming more interested as time moves on.

We hope to do better work this year, as our slate of officers is the young people this time. We have a strong will to press forward to the goal that is ahead.

PLEASANT HILL.

The Woman's Missionary Society at Pleasant Hill Church has been active during the past year, under the leadership of Mrs. Glenn Murchison.

We've had a program, including a devotional service each month, with members taking part. Our meetings have also been well attended.

At our last meeting our secretary reported that our dues were more than paid, and we had given thirteen dollars as a Thank Offering. We also gave two Life Memorials during the year.

Due to bad weather we failed to observe The World Day of Prayer, which we had planned to observe with the women of Cane Creek Friends Church.

Two members of our society attended the Woman's Convention and Mission School at Elon College in June, and two also attended the Woman's Missionary Conference in Burlington recently.

During July a Cradle Roll Department was organized with Mrs. O. T. Wicker as Superintendent.

They now have twenty-five members. Our desires are for a greater work in the coming years under the leadership of Mrs. R. C. Carter, our new president.

BEREA.

Being reporter for the Berea Christian Church, I submit the following report for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

Under the leadership of its President, Mrs. Cora McIntyre, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Berea Church held its monthly meeting on October 16, in the home of Mrs. Margaret Pritchett. After we had had reports from the delegates who attended the Woman's Missionary Conference held in Burlington October 7 at the First Christian Church, plans for the coming year were discussed. At the next meeting the members expect to pack clothing and essentials for the War Relief Victims in Europe. We are also having our Thank Offering on Sunday, November 9th, which will go for our Home Missions.

The Berea Society has had a very wonderful and successful year—it being highlighted recently with the impressive Candlelight Installation Service of the incoming officers for the year and a visit to the Orphanage with the distribution of candy and gum for all the children.

fumes because so much of the time seems to be spent by doctors in prescribing for imaginary ills of a restless social set. In church one Sunday, as Peter makes notes on his next day's jury plea, Bob gets an inspiration from the sermon which causes him to become a medical missionary to China. When his young son is accidentally killed, Peter, already strained from overwork, becomes ill and loses interest in his legal career. To help him recuperate, his wife arranges for him to visit his brother in China. At first, Peter is disdainful of the poverty-stricken Chinese among whom Bob is "wasting his life." However, Peter begins to change when he meets Wong, devout Christian who had lost his fortune and family during the war. When the war reaches the mission station, Peter risks his life to save Wong, pinned under the wreckage. The supreme faith of the dying man opens Peter's eyes to things "beyond our own," and finds a new life opening before him.

MT. ZION GROUP VISIT VALLEY.

A group of seventeen young people from the Mt. Zion Church in North Carolina, along with their pastor, Rev. Walstine Snyder, visited the Bethel Christian Church, near Elkton, Va. recently. This group happened to come by on the week-end of our revival and by their presence they added much to our worship and to the crowd. Mr. Snyder was formerly a member of our young people's society and of our church, so this occasion was a very high honor to our church to have one of our own young men come back and bring with him an example of the fine work that he is doing. This nice group along with their minister, sang a special song for our service on Saturday night. We deeply appreciate their visit with us, and would like to invite them along with their pastor to come back to worship with us again, on their next trip to the valley of Virginia.

A THANKSGIVING PROJECT.

Would you like to have a Thanksgiving with which you may give to show your thanks during November? You can give it meaning for younger children around the world. The call is for 500,000 "Boxes and Bundles" for 6 to 12 year olds to be gathered and consecrated at your church or in your local societies on this day or Sunday as an act of Christian friendship and of faith in a Christian world of tomorrow. As you go off to a happy day at a well-equipped school or office, dressed in your new fall outfits, rested after a good night's sleep under warm blankets in a comfortable bed, and fortified with a hearty American breakfast—guide your thoughts to those little folks overseas unable to attend school because they have no proper clothing or shoes, who are still living in makeshift shelters, sleeping cold because there is almost no bedding, and waking tired and miserable to a world of hunger and despair. For further information concerning contents and packing instructions, write Miss Ruth Elliott, Box A, College Station, Durham, North Carolina.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Children:

Tomorrow is the day that a group of many Protestant women called The United Council of Church Women have asked us to observe as World Community Day.

A community is a group of people whether they live in a neighborhood, country or the whole wide world. God has made people alike and unlike. We all have many twos or pairs about us: eyes, ears, arms and legs. Inside our bones and our organs are the same. Even our blood. No matter what color a person's skin, he will have one of the four types. What makes us different is the place we live, the words or language we speak and the color of our skin. We are indeed neighbors.

The leaders of the Council of Church Women suggest that it would be fitting to give gifts on this day and so we will send bundles and boxes to boys and girls in Europe. The ages for the gifts to be from six to twelve. In our Church the Bundle was prepared by the women. It has clothing in it, underwear and suits and socks. But the box with shoes and school supplies was fixed by the boys and girls that I teach with a special gift from the Kindergarten. Their teacher is Mary Melcher from Asheville and she has taught Rebecca and Oliver Todd in Sunday School. Now she is in Richmond to be an occupational therapist for children. Our boys and girls love her.

First we found pictures of American boys and girls at play. No pictures of food for that would make the European children who have so little food very unhappy. We, (we are Cecil, Ashburn, Joyce, Dicky, Florence, Kathleen, Eleanor, and Delores,) pasted babies on top of the box, pictures of Sunday School and play times on the sides and flowers on the ends. Then the box was shel-lacked. In it went a pair of shoes for a girl and such things as colored crayons, pencils, a pen, gem clips, and the toy that the little folks gave. We wrote a greeting too and tomorrow our box will be taken to Church and blessed and then sent to some girl in Europe. We wish we knew her for then we could be closer neighbors. Are some of you packing boxes for now or at Christmas time?

This month our Eleanor, who is Eleanor Page is leaving with her mother and father for a visit to Australia where she will see her grandparents for the first time. We are excited about her trip. She is going to fly across the Pacific and will see many wonderful things. I hope that if Eleanor isn't too busy playing with her cousins or seeing the kangaroos that she will write us about the neighborhood in that part of the world, and the Congregational Church at Melborne, or maybe she will write for us when she comes home.

Thank you for the nice letters that I have received, but how about some news for this page? I would like to hear from many communities.

THE CHILDREN GET READY FOR CHRISTMAS.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mothers, have your children been getting ready for Christmas? If you live in the country, or can reach it easily, there are many, many preparations that can be made in the autumn.

When you are going for a walk, or a combined ride and walk, suggest that each child carry a paper shopping bag. A great variety of usable things could be brought home in it, but often the children gain more enjoyment when their collection is limited to objects of one kind. On the first trip they might secure acorns, to be made into Christmas-tree ornaments.

Then, on stormy days, you can let the boys and girls take out their paints and color some of the acorns. Others could be covered with tinfoil, if that is available; when it is not, colored paper will answer the purpose. If the acorns are not too ripe, it will be easy to pierce one end of each with a needle, threaded with silkateen that has been doubled and knotted, and to draw the thread through the opposite end. When the thread is cut and tied it will form a loop with which to hang the ornament on the tree. However, if the acorns are to be covered with bright paper, instead of being painted or covered with tinfoil, it is more satisfactory to roll each paper covering in the form of a cylinder—tying the cylinder above and below the acorn and leaving a loop at one end.

On another autumn day, the collection of cones might be the object of a getting-ready-for-Christmas trip. If this particular outing can be made in part by automobile, so much the better. The children's bags will soon be filled with cones of different kinds, and extra containers will be likely to be needed.

Cones are delightful gifts for those who have fireplaces. The older children will enjoy making cheesecloth bags of various colors for receptacles. The gift is more interesting when the cones have been treated chemically so that, while burning, their flames show beautiful hues—blues and greens—like those of driftwood. If the cones have been treated chemically, do not allow the papers on which they have been dried to be destroyed; instead, let the little folks roll them tightly and tie them into knots. These paper knots will burn with the same brilliant colors as the cones.

Another way to prepare this Christmas gift is one that can be done even by five-year-old children, but be sure to instruct each child to finish one cone before beginning on another. First, the cone must be covered with shellac, then, while it is still wet, driftwood powder should be scattered over it. This powder is sold under different trade names, such as "Seafire" and "Driftwood Glow."

There are many dry grasses, dry berries, and seed pods that when combined make pretty Christmas bouquets. Gathering these can be the object of one more merry autumn trip. Advise against selecting any that easily shed particles of any kind—thus becoming an annoyance instead of a joy to the recipient. Inexpensive scissors should be used for cutting, and only the older children should carry those grasses that have delicate stems. This carrying should be understood to be an important responsibility and a very definite contribution to the preparation of the gifts.

A milkweed-pod trip is always considered great fun if it is taken early enough in the season. By this time, in many localities, the pods will already be empty. When they still contain their feathered seeds the children always delight in playing with them for a while before gathering the stalks bearing the empty pods.

The next rainy day will be looked forward to with eagerness. With large aprons protecting dresses and suits, the pod-painting will soon be under way. The inside of each pod JUDY'S JOURNEY. By Lois Lenski. 221 pages. J. B. Lippincott Company, New York and Philadelphia. $2.50.

"'Go down to the dump and git some pieces of galvanized tin,' said Mr. Mulligan, 'and drag 'em back here. Mighty fine place—that dump. No tellin' what you'll be a-finding there.'"

So ten-year-old Judy and her brother go from their home in the tent on the drainage canal in Bean Town to Ike's Junk Yard for material to make a pen for their goat. And it is there that Judy finds the discarded geography book with Christopher Columbus' three ships on the cover, and above them these words: "A New World Lies Before Us."

Judy is a child of deep feeling; she has temper and fibre and imagination. As she journeys with her family from Lake Okeechobee in Florida following the crop season north to Delaware, she treasures the book and the vision of a new world. She is also a realist; and in South Carolina she uses the book to teach geography and much else to a group of Negro children in a box car.

Lois Lenski visited numerous migrant camps on the eastern seaboard, talking with migrant children and their mothers and fathers, absorbing the stories of their experiences and the cadence of their speech. Every background detail is authentic. The vividness with which the Drummond family come to life is matched in the illustration, which the author-artist has invested with mood and movement, sympathy and humor.

Many a parent whose children have taken to their hearts Strawberry Girl and Blue Ridge Billy will rejoice to find another charming regional story by the same author. If they have not before been alert to the grave sociological problem created in our national economy by the increasing demand for agricultural migrant labor, they may be a little startled to discover in Judy's Journey a humanized economic study of the way of life of two and a half million American citizens. In no government report or sociological dissertation will they find a more accurate presentation of the migrant problem in all its aspects than in this story for ten to fourteen year olds. The hazards of seasonal employment, the sub-standard housing, the community resentment of "bean-pickers who don't belong," the problems of schooling and sanitation and health provisions, the absence of religious services and counseling, all these emerge in the story of Judy Drummond and her family.

In her preface Lois Lenski pays tribute to the Home Missions Council program of health and child-care centers and religious ministry in migrant camps. How genuine is the tribute is evidenced by the fact that a generous share of the royalties from the book is turned over to the Home Missions Council for expansion of its program, in order that more and more migrant workers may indeed exclaim with Judy, "A New World Lies Before Us."

tively wrought, showing most exquisite phrasing, perfect balance, an astounding gift for achieving innate feeling for rhythmic subnuance in tonal coloring."

James Montgomery, American tenor, has presented recitals in nearly every state in the Union, has been a leading tenor with the Philadelphia Civic Opera Co., and has sung the tenor solo roles in practically every major oratorio. His diction is crystal clear, his tone quality magnificent; and his ability to make everyone enjoy and appreciate good music is such that he usually has difficulty concluding his programs because of the enthusiasm of his hearers for encores. At a previous appearance at Elon Mr. Montgomery was acclaimed as one of the finest singers ever to have performed in North Carolina.

The Mozart Trio, listed for March, is composed of Hendrick de Boer, Dutch tenor, Rose Albanas, soprano, and Myron Carlisle, young American baritone, who is resuming his concert career after three years of touring England and the Continent as a singer and producer of Army Special Service Shows.

Also appearing with the Trio is Agnes Blafka, concert pianist, who has recently been heard in joint recitals with the Metropolitan Opera soprano, Gladys Swarthout.

Guy and Lois Maier will close the season at some date in the spring to be announced later. This famous two-piano team are returning to the Elon campus by popular demand, after a most successful appearance there last year.

Critics of New York and Chicago, as well as audiences all over the country, have acclaimed them for the joviality, spirit, and enormous understanding of their performances. They converse on their keyboards with wit, finesse and delicious lilt. And they themselves are as personally interesting as their programs.

Lois Maier's great charm is matched by Guy Maier's immense popularity as editor of the Etude Magazine's Round Table and Pianist's page, and as coach and advisor to hundreds of America's young artists and teachers.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There is a trite saying, "Better late than never." There is also a good saying, "Never too late." However, time is running against us so far as conference apportionments are concerned. Three of our five conferences have already met. It is interesting to see how the church meets its apportionment for other causes but not too inspiring to tabulate for the College. Only a few more days remain in this conference year. We are still quite a ways from our goal for the College for 1946-47. We are grateful for the good report this week and for every church and Sunday School that have a part in this week's contributions.

BIBLES FOR FREEDOM TRAIN.

Each of the forty-seven members of the personnel of the Freedom Train was presented with a specially inscribed Bible when the train was on exhibition at Grand Central Terminal, New York City. The Bibles were inscribed with the name of the recipient, the name of the train and the date, 1947. A larger Bible was prepared by the Bible Society for the lounge library of the Freedom Train. Symbolizing, as it does, the source of all democratic thinking, the Bible will be one of the permanent fixtures of the train, as it covers more than 33,000 miles in its travels—that will touch all of the forty-eight States of the country.

BUILDING CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 16, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: As therefore ye received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk in Him, rooted and builded up in Him.—Colossians 2:6,7.

LESSON: II Peter; Jude; Luke 2:40, 52.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 5:3, 16.

Being Born Into the Kingdom.

Anyone who reads the New Testament will sooner or later discover that men have to be born into the Kingdom of God. They do not work their way into it, or think their way into it, or buy their way into it; they are born into it. And they are born into it by the spirit of God—it is not by the flesh or the will of the flesh, or even of blood, or the will of man, but of God. John 1:13. Furthermore it is an act of grace on God's part—by grace are we saved through faith, it is not of ourselves. Thus modern talk of educating men into the Kingdom just does not square with the words of Jesus or the writings of the New Testament.

But Growing In Grace.

Yes a man must be born into the Kingdom of God. That is absolutely necessary and extremely important. That is one of the primary emphases of evangelism and one of its supreme goals—to get men through repentance and faith to become the spiritual children of God. But alas that has all too often and for too long been the only, or the major emphasis. As if just getting into the Kingdom of God were enough! Goodness gracious, one might as well say that it was enough that a child be born into the world and let the matter end there. But how would a child ever live if it was not fed and clothed and sheltered and nurtured? And how can a "babe in Christ" ever become a full-grown man, and come finally by coming increasingly unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, unless he gives attention to the nurture of his spirit. Thus it is that while we find the emphasis upon being born into the Kingdom, we also find another emphasis upon growing in grace. And for those who are already Christians, this emphasis needs to be sounded again and again. There are a great many folks, big, grown-up folks, who have been Christians for a long time, who are simply babies. Paul said he had to give some of his Christian friends a bottle of milk because they the place where they could eat meat. were babes—they hadn't grown up to

The New Nature and Its Nurture

"Seeing that His divine power hath granted unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness." Nowhere in the New Testament is there any grounds for thinking that this matter of birth or growth is a matter of mere human strength or wisdom or power. It is "His divine power" that effects the original change and which produces the continual growth. The glory of the Christian religion is that it helps us to do and to become what it tells us to do and to become. Christ is our Helper as well as our Ideal and Example.

Exceeding Great and Precious Promises.

"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that we may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped from the corruption that is in the world through lust." Exceeding great and precious promises indeed! How they have strengthened and steadied a great host of men and women, young men and maidens, whose name is legion, through the centuries. For faithful is He that promised. He is not slack concerning His promises as some men count slackness. Sometimes there are periods of waiting, but He always keeps His word and fulfils His promise.

Adding.

"For this cause, adding on your part . . . diligence, faith, virtue, knowledge, self-control, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, love." Dr. Roy L. Smith writes about a man who selected at least one virtue or one new quality of character which he diligently cultivated until it became a part of his life, an integral part of his life. One thing is certain—the Christian life is not static. Nor is it fair to think of it in terms of what we have to give up. To be sure we must give up things and sins of the spirit. But the emphasis is upon what is added to life, not what is subtracted.

And Abounding.

And our goal is not the minimum, but the maximum. We are not to be satisfied with how little we can grow, but rather with how much we can grow. "If these things be in you, and abound"—there is a note of fullness in the New Testament. It is as we abound that we become most fruitful.

Giving Diligence.

Jesus sounded a note of urgency regarding the matters of the spirit. And His disciples caught it and repeated it. The life of the spirit demands and deserves attention. Peter uses the word diligent twice within a few verses. There is no place for complacency for sleepiness, for carelessness, and half-heartedness in this matter. A man ought to give more heed, as a matter of fact to his soul or spirit than he gives to his body. But there are many, many people who are greatly concerned about what they will wear, or how to take care of their bodies, or how to get cured of their ills, who give little or no thought to the poverty of their souls, or the sickness of their eternal spirit. One does not have to do anything terribly wicked to lose his soul; he has only to neglect it.

An Entrance into the Eternal Kingdom.

"For thus shall be richly supplied to you the entrance into the eternal Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." He is not saying that we earn it, or that we deserve it. If any of us get to heaven, to use a familiar term, it will be by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. But there are resources available whereby we can get an entrance into an eternal Kingdom. The wise man listens to what the centuries say against the minutes, says Emerson. And the wise man takes the long look concerning the relative value of the earthly to the heavenly.

THE MAN OF GALILEE.

Sermon by

REV. CARROLL HOWELL BEALE.

"Whom do men say that I, the son of man, am?" This question, asked by the Galilean, shows a human side to Jesus which is beautiful. Jesus was both human and divine while He lived on earth. Men differ with each other in their appellations concerning this most unique of all men.

His influence in the world today is too marvelous and wonderful to be passed over lightly. Jesus' birthday halts the entire world—all because He was born. No other man's birthday is thus honored.

His death causes banks, shops, stores, schools, and offices to close, and time takes note of this day. Why is there a pause in the world's affairs on Christmas, Good Friday, and Easter? Men who refuse to believe in Christ and repudiate His doctrines and His influence, are caught up with the believers, and are brought to a pause. This Man of Galilee was without "where to lay His head," Matt. 8:20. Some say Christ was without power or influence.

He was "the lowly Nazarine"—"the carpenter's Son." His disciples were uncultured fishermen. He was scoffed at and ridiculed by the throngs of people. Jesus was betrayed by one of the chosen twelve. He was denied by another whom He made chief. After His resurrection one would not believe until he put his fingers in the wounded hands and sides. Jesus' followers were hunted and destroyed.

In spite of all, the Reformer began a movement that has grown, until it has reached the farthest confines of the world. There are millions of doubting Thomases today, yet does His influence grow and increase? His teachings are forcing themselves upon the world today. The world is learning truths which He could not convey to His disciples. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," John 14:6, is the lesson for all nations, the doors of knowledge are opened revealing the treasures within.

The Bible reveals the truths of life and nature. To honor His death, the world suspends activities, and the glorious announcement, "Christ is Risen," thrills the world on Easter Sunday. The star of hope shines brightly in our lives today. Our faith is strengthened and we trust Him more each day. We sense immortality and require no argument to convince us.

Let me say, He was the world's greatest philosopher. Think of Aristotle, Plato, and others; then think of Jesus of Nazareth, you must say no man is in hailing distance of this great teacher. Jesus came out with a new idea. Before His day, might was right; since He lived, right is might.

He rescued childhood and forever gilded it. Before He came children were chattels. He recognized them, gave them a place in His life, in His Book, and in His heaven. Jesus declared that "Except a man be born again and become as a little child, he can in nowise enter the kingdom of heaven."

In climbing Golgotha's brow, an Ethiopian helped Him carry the cross. Jesus lifted the downtrodden race and gave them a little part in the work of redemption. He is the Christ of every road. Jesus became the king of chronology—today you cannot buy a farm, sell a car, print a paper, make a deed, borrow or lend money, marry or even die, without recognizing His birthday some two thousand years ago.

He is the world's greatest orator. He takes the common things of life, and glorifies them. The mountains declare Him to be the Rock of Ages. Matt. 16:18, "Upon this rock I will build my church." The waving fields of wheat proclaim Him the bread of life. In Matt. 4:3 and Luke 4:3, Christ was tempted to turn stones to bread. Yet in John 6:35, "I am the bread of life." The flowers whisper, "He is the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley." The stars call Him the bright and morning star. The sun calls Him the sun of righteousness. The bounding billows of the Atlantic and Pacific declare Him to be the pearl of great price. The winds call Him the breath of God. Christ gave to nature the emerald of spring, the beauty of summer, the gold of autumn, and the ermine of winter.

Jesus redeems man's soul. He stands today and controverts every wrong thing of life. He is the world's only transformer. Jesus declares that "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Christ was the world's purest man, and all standards of life are judged by Him.

On the cross there was a pull of pity, and all calls of distress have been glorified since He pitied us and died for us. It was a pull of prayer, when the Man of Galilee cried, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." He was not only praying for His murders, but for the wide world, even in our day. Nature forms us, college informs us, preachers reform us, sin deforms us, but Jesus Christ transforms us.

Christ is the world's greatest strategist. Napoleon, Caesar and Hannibal said to their soldiers: "The acid test of patriotism and loyalty is your willingness to die for your country." Christ came to the end of the way, He reversed human strategy and said: "If you will live for me, I will die for you." We stay as far from death as possible. Christ faced death and laid down His life, that we might have eternal life.

Jesus has impressed the earth's greatest. Pilate called Him "Faultless Man". Napoleon called Him "Emperor of Love." Renan called Him "Greatest among sons of Men." God called him "His beloved Son."

This Man of Galilee is willing and ready now to save you and me. The rich young ruler came to Jesus seeking the way of life. Jesus touched his point—covetousness, and he is known as the man of great refusal. Dives went to hell because he worshiped riches; his money possessed him. Judas carried the bag, and its contents were more precious to him than Jesus. The ancient barn builder had no true appreciation of relative values, and he lost his soul.

Aaron Burr, student at Princeton, said to a friend who was begging him to accept our Christ, "If Jesus will let me alone I will never bother Him." You know the results. This gifted man, once vice-president of the United States, became a traitor to his country, stained his hands with another man's blood, died on foreign soil, Christless.

God is not first, but last and, with many people He is left out altogether. People are cumbered with the fruits of the world, not concerned about life beyond this present one. The most pitiful thing in this world is to see a person who leaves Christ out of his life.

Let me say as I finish this appeal, He is my Savior, my Friend, my coming King and future Judge. What does He mean to you now? My earnest plea is for no one to leave the Lord's house today without Christ in his life and heart.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

A number of our Haw River friends visited the Christian Orphanage on Sunday, October 26th. These good people came from our Haw River Christian Church. The writer was a member of that church for a number of years. He well remembers the sacrifice many of the members made to build the church. We were all very proud of it when it was finished, and were even happier when we got it paid for. That was more than forty-five years ago.

The writer believes he is one of the oldest members living of the ones who were the original members of the church when it was built. In fact, most of the original members have crossed over the river and are now on the other side. But new members have taken their places and the work moves on. Our Haw River Church has always been a working church and has always pulled together.

The writer remembers that Rev. W. G. Clements was elected pastor before the Church was completed, and served the church as pastor, if my memory serves me right, twelve years. We all loved and revered him, and as a mark of respect we called him "Uncle Clements." The church members at that time got a lot of joy out of surprising him. We well remember on one occasion we bought a beautiful carpet and put it on the floor and did not let him know it until he walked in the church on Sunday morning to preach. The writer will never forget the happy smile on his face when he saw the carpet on the floor. But the church members got a real joy out of giving him this surprise.

We will always have a very tender feeling in our heart toward the Haw River Christian Church as we had a part in many happy services held there.

Mr. Wagoner, the Orphanage farmer, started pulling corn this week. Being in the extreme dry area this year with practically no rain from the first of April until September 24th, has greatly reduced our yield. We planned to make two thousand bushels, but the ears are so small if we make five hundred bushels we will do well. Unless, it turns out much better than we expected.

We are looking for and expecting a large Thanksgiving offering. We have mailed out little Thanksgiving envelopes to all the Superintendents of our Sunday Schools. We hope and pray that they will use them to good advantage. It seems that many of our church people think if they raise the Conference Apportionment, that is all that is expected. The Conference Apportionment is the goal, if I understand it, that the churches are expected to raise. If you want to double it, what business is it but yours? If your Apportionment for Elon College is $500, and you want to make it $1,000, who can forbid you. If the Apportionment for the Christian Orphanage is $300, and you want to make it $600, who can say you cannot do it, and so on down the line. So at this Thanksgiving season let us remember the little fatherless child—the little child without a home left to the mercy of the church people and other friends who love little children. A fatherless child should appeal to the best within us.

A good lady in one of our large cities wrote me a few days ago and said: "Since I have been looking after this little boy in the Orphanage it has caused me to have a feeling in my heart I have never experienced before." It will do your heart good, too, to help us in this work. Try it.

SECOND CHURCH, NORFOLK.

the year. This class reported good attendance, monthly meetings and about one thousand dollars given through the class to church projects.

They carried on a wholesome program of recreation during summer which increased their enrollment. Messrs. Roland Allgood and Horace Johnson are co-teachers for the new year. They succeeded. Mr. R. F. Allgood, a faithful teacher and deacon of the church for many years.

The Ladies Bible Class also gave a good report. They gave over five hundred dollars and attended church almost one hundred per cent. The third Sunday of each month they became a Missionary Society, having a Missionary Program and making an offering to missions. The average attendance is twenty-five. The pastor's wife teaches the class.

Another encouraging phase of our work has been the splendid attendance of our Sunday night services during the summer months. Some designated member of the church leads the song service and presents several special musical numbers followed by a fifteen minute sermon by the pastor. The people seem to like their informal night service.

As we face the new year we realize the needs of our church are many. We need more and better trained leaders, an evangelistic fervor that will send us out to win more people to Christ and the church and a more united effort to spread Christian ideals of living in a confused and disturbed world.

THANKS FROM THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

The Board of Publication in recent session at Elon College voted to extend their sincere thanks to Rev. J. E. Neese for his good work as editor of the Young People's page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Mr. Neese took over when Richard L. Jackson left and has continued to bring before the young people of the Southern Convention the latest information and excellent helps.

Miss Elizabeth Chicoine was elected as editor of this page and Mr. Baxter Twiddy as president of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship Council was elected as associate editor. Miss Chicoine is our field director and is in the center of our young people's activities at all times. You, the young people of our Convention will find something vital on this page. Be sure to read it.

In Memoriam

POND.

Guy Philip Pond, aged 66, retired Suffolk policeman, died September 8, 7:37 P. M., at his home on Charles Street after an illness of three and a half years.

A member of the Suffolk Christian Church, he was an officer on the Suffolk police force for twenty years, being retired three and a half years ago because of illness.

A son of the late Conoly M. Pond and Sarah Andrews Pond of Sussex County, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mary Richardson Pond; three daughters, Mrs. C. T. Early, of Suffolk, Mrs. J. O. Chappell of Surry, and Mrs. Otho Palmer of Suffolk; a son, W. Wilson Pond of Norfolk; four sisters, Mrs. J. T. Hargrave of Newport News, Mrs. E. C. Richardson of Suffolk, Mrs. S. C. King of Richmond, and Miss Bessie Pond of Waverly; a brother, H. Butler Pond of Waverly, and six grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted on Wednesday at 2:00 P. M. at Baker Funeral Home by Dr. John G. Truitt, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church. Burial followed in Spring Hill Christian Church Cemetery, Sussex County.

GIPSY SMITH.

When George Borrow, that tall, untamed Cornishman who made himself an authority on Romany ways and language, died in 1881, Rodney Smith, who had been born under a hornbeam tree in Epping Forest, was already twenty-one years old. Borrow, as a "majestic tramp," had frequented gipsy camp fires in his romantic youth. He would have been greatly interested, one can guess, in what was to become the fame and accomplishment of an unlettered Romany youngster who was to teach himself English in about the same manner that George Borrow acquired the speech of gipsy van and camp.

Gipsy Smith, as he came to be known, considered himself "called of God" at the age of seventeen. At first a boyish mission worker, for almost seventy years and on five continents he preached the gospel with a power and conviction that converted thousands to his message and appeals. No eater of locusts and wild honey, well tailored, self-assured, looking in his middle years more like a successful business man than one who had grown up in copse and spinney, Gipsy Smith yet brought to his lifework gifts he owed to his race. His magnetic dark eyes, his musical voice, whether in speech or song, his ready passion and compassion—all these are still to be found in Britain among those who know, as in Borrow's day and words, "the wind on the heath."

Gipsy Smith made almost forty visits to America, coming first in 1889. Less than eight years ago he spoke here in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine to more than 7,000 deeply moved hearers, literally "standing them in the aisles." He was then seventy-nine years old, but he could still, he declared, "bend and touch his toes twenty times every morning." Those who heard him then remember that he could still touch the hearts of men.

All his life he had good news to give. All his life he never forgot his gipsy boyhood. Perhaps the secret of his influence and power as an evangelist lay in his own simple words: "I have never lost the wonder." It is, one can believe, the best of creeds under which Romany or "gorgio" can live or die.—New York Herald Tribune.

DETERMINATION ALONE WILL NOT PULL EUROPE THROUGH BITTER WINTER.

The will to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps is present in the people of Europe, but willingness alone is far from enough to do the job, according to Frank Papp, NBC producer-director who has returned from a tour of Europe during which he interviewed hundreds of people for a new radio series.

Mr. Papp, with Mrs. Papp, who is NBC actress Mary Patton, and Noel C. Warwick, NBC recording engineer, spent the summer collecting interviews on a tape recorder. They recorded approximately 20 hours of interviews with 175 persons, material which will be used in a series of 13 quarter-hour programs now in preparation by the Joint Religious Radio Committee. Their trip was sponsored by Church World Service, a co-operative relief and reconstruction agency of the major Protestant and Orthodox churches of America.

Papp disagreed with the contention that the people of Europe are lazy, that they can recover if they will get down to work. They are working, he said, but they face a bitter winter after a summer which was disastrous to crops.

Mrs. Papp said she seldom saw children playing. "If they play, they get hungry," she explained. In England the group found that the egg ration was one a week—when one could be bought—and the bacon ration was one-and-a-half slices a week. A single good meal by American standards costs a month's wages for a workman in some of the European countries.

Mr. Papp will direct production of the dramatic series, using the interviews as the core. He will continue production duties at NBC and teaching at Columbia University, where he has classes in advance production of radio drama.

RETIRED COLLEGE OFFICIAL DIES.

Rev. Judson L. Cross, former president of Tougaloo College, Tougaloo, Miss., died in Wellesley, Mass., October 20.

A native of Colorado Springs, Col., and pastor of churches in Connecticut, New York and Massachusetts, Dr. Cross retired last May after 12 years in the presidency of Tougaloo College—first Negro institution in Mississippi to receive a rating as a Class B college from the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Enrollment tripled—rising to 324 during his presidency, and a dormitory for girls was added to the institution.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

should be some gay color—orange, pink, red, or yellow; the outside should have a contrasting color—black, gray or sage green. This, for the time, becomes an absorbing interest, but, of course, when done by children who are very young it will need constant supervision on the part of Mother. These brilliantly-colored pods should be included in the winter bouquets, so that the children will feel they had a large part in the preparation of the gifts, and a warm glow of satisfaction will be felt by each of them—also, Mother will know that her efforts were worth-while.

You will think of other country walks with Christmas in view. Baskets can be woven with grasses or rushes and later filled with nuts that the boys and girls have gathered. Or, the woven grasses may be formed into covers for glass jars and pots in which vines and hardy ferns have been planted. These colorful living plants may be found in the woods long after winter has come to stay.

Christmas preparations of all kinds are important in the life of the child. The wise mother is always looking ahead and planning ways and means for making the Christmas holidays a time for thinking of others and sharing with them. For best results we must begin this character-building experience when the children are very young—why not start now?

Why I Love Our Rural Church

By a Farmer Churchman
South Butler, New York

Although I live in this beautiful section of Central New York, close to the blue water of Lake Ontario, and just north of the scenic Finger Lakes, my home is on a fruit farm, within fifteen to forty minutes' drive of six small towns, and reasonably close to two large cities, where are fine churches. By fine churches I mean ornate architecture, pipe organs, trained and vested choirs, etc. In spite of this opportunity, I attend our little village church, nestling amid the tall trees on the brow of the hill.

In the first place I appreciate what this little old church has meant to this community for more than a century. I think of those grand old pioneers who sacrificed time and money to build the first wooden structure here, so that this community might be composed of Godfearing men and women. I recall that many outstanding men have preached here, leaving an abiding influence.

As you drive into our neighborhood from any direction, the church, well kept, and attractive, catches the eye; and the visitor naturally judges our community as being thriving, wideawake, and a desirable place to live. Since I want my community to be such a place, I want our church to be a beauty spot, a source of inspiration, a real worship center, and a help to every hungry soul. Unless I attend my local church and help to support it, and give my faith and confidence to it, and help my minister, I fail in building my community into the best possible place in which children can grow to manhood and womanhood.

I know, too, that I could not meet God any more surely in a cathedral than I do in our little gray church, where children come bounding in, and where little fingers sometimes bang the piano. I love our people, though sometimes I wish they recognized God's House a little more. But if they are to think of me as one who loves God and His house, if any influence I may have is to count for Him where He has let me live, I must attend my own local church.

The influence of every Christian in America is needed in his own community, and in the church in his own community. If we Christians worked with as much zeal to have our influence count for the Lord as those who are not Christians do for lesser interests, our nation would be a Christian nation not in name only, but in reality.

After all, we go to church not to meet friends, not to criticize the minister and the choir, not to be on parade, not to associate with the best people, not even to contribute to church work and missions, but to worship God.

We country folks are needed in our country churches. Our country needs us. God needs us. I am glad I am an American Farmer. As such I pledge my support to my rural church, to participate in all its activities as God gives me the ability so to do. And in my old beautiful, hilltop church I will worship God for whom it testifies and stands.—Congregational District News.

The Call for Compassion

By THE REVEREND FRED BUSCHMEYER, Litt. D.

The call for compassion came to us as we saw total destruction spreading through the major portion of the cities of Munich, Frankfurt, and Berlin. It came to us as we saw women, old men and children crawling through the fields of Germany on hands and knees to gather up the few grains of wheat left after the harvest had been completed. It came to us out of the sea-flooded fields of Holland. It came to us out of the poverty and desolation of a small war destroyed village in the mountains high above Thessalonika, to whose people the Apostle Paul wrote the first letter to be preserved in our New Testament. It came to us out of the caves of Naples where hundreds of families live, six, eight, or nine members to the family, each family crowded into one small dirt-floored and vermin infested room, with never more than two beds. It came to us out of harvest fields all over Europe in which we saw not one single piece of modern farm machinery anywhere. It came to us out of the mere shells of churches in which devout and destitute people were worshipping in each of the countries visited. It came to us as we saw young people of a Displaced Persons summer camp rise from their rough tables and say their Grace of gratitude for a meal of thin soup, dark bread, and a meagre bit of vegetable. It came to us out of the words of our own American Educational Administrator for the American Zone in Germany as he explained to us that the best that their local economy could produce in the way of shoes was one pair of shoes per person every two years—and the winters are cold and long.

In the midst of these conditions, the parable of the Good Samaritan came to my mind again and again; and especially his words spoken to the innkeeper after he had made his initial attempt to care for the stricken stranger, "Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, . . . I will repay thee."

The call for compassion still comes out of England and Europe two years after the war. If it was worth our Christian efforts to keep these people alive in the midst of war, is it not still worth our while to give them strength, and courage, and a consciousness of our Christian concern, in these fateful days when they and we together, must lay the foundations for the future?

I cannot read my New Testament in a vacuum. If it contains a Gospel of Life, and the promise of a more abundant life for all of God's children, then I must read it in the light of the needs of the living present. It is in the living present that I hear the Master's words, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me." What will your response be?

NEWS AND VIEWS

LEADERSHIP TRAINING AT SUFFOLK.

The Worker's Council of the Suffolk Sunday School is arranging for a week of leadership training, Nov. 17-21. The seven neighboring pastors and their Sunday Schools—the Revs. R. E. Brittle, H. E. Crutchfield, I. W. Johnson, Robert M. Kimball, C. Shannon Morgan, Will B. O'Neill, and Wm. L. Wood, have been invited to help fill up the four classes. Courses will be given in Children's Work, Mrs. Robert M. Kimball; in work with Juniors, Miss Elizabeth Chicoine; Young People, Miss Nora Butler; and a course in Bible by the writer. The classes will begin on Monday evening at 7:30, with two sessions nightly, closing at 9:30. Anyone in this section is invited to attend.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference met in its 122nd annual session at Turner's Chapel Christian Church, near Sanford, N. C., October 21-22, 1947. Most of the churches were represented by delegates or sent report by letter. The attendance was good on the first day, but as seems to be the usual practice in most of our conferences—the second day's attendance was cut considerably. Rev. R. T. Grissom, host pastor, and his people were gracious hosts and a good spirit of Christian fellowship prevailed.

Reports from committees indicated concern and interest in the life and work of the Church, and the annual address of President Frank Apple was a renewed challenge to deeper devotion and more earnest service through the Church.

Collections for Missions and Benevolences were better than usual, and the majority of the churches will pay in full all apportionments for the conference year 1946-47.

The Conference was inspired by the addresses of Rev. Carl R. Dille of Africa. Mr. Dille and his wife are products of the former Christian Church and were the first missionaries commissioned for service under the American Board after the merger of the two denominations.

The Conference considered the proposal to unite the Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed denominations, and the delegates voted favorably on the question.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The Western North Carolina Christian Conference held its 77th annual session at the First Congregational Christian Church, Albemarle, North Carolina, November 5-6, 1947. Rev. H. V. Cox, of Ramseur, presided over the sessions which were well attended. Thirty-three churches were represented by delegates and the remaining number were represented by letter or report.

Laymen were elected to three important offices by the Conference: President, Mr. George T. Gunter, Trinity; Secretary, Mrs. F. C. Lester, Asheboro; Treasurer, Mr. Cyrus Shoffner, Liberty. Mr. Gunter and Rev. E. Carl Brady were nominated to serve on the Executive Board of the Convention.

Mr. and Mrs. James M. Hess, missionaries to India, were guests and brought vivid and challenging messages concerning the Christian opportunities of independent India. Addresses by Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College; Mr. C. D. Johnston, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, brought before the session the opportunities of our churches in two important areas. The Conference

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS REGARDING THE MERGER.

By WM. T. SCOTT, Supi.

We have heard earnest questions asked and have seen earnest searching for answers regarding the issues involved in the proposed union between the Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed denominations.

Whether we are for or against this particular merger, both the former Christian and Congregational Churches have long been committed to the cause of Christian union. We cannot, therefore, turn aside lightly from the issue before us for answer. If we are true to the teachings of the Principles and Government of the Christian Church—under which the Southern Convention, its Conferences and Churches operate—or true to the deals and pronouncements for Christian Union by both the former Christian and Congregational Churches, we must face this issue, give it our best, honest thought, praying for the guidance of the Holy Spirit ("who takes the things of Christ and shows them to us") and then exercise our right and duty to register our honest conviction for or against the merger, OR renounce our belief and the teaching of our denomination regarding Christian Union, disclaiming any right of Christ to pray that His followers be one!

Therefore, it is our earnest purpose to endeavor to throw as much light as possible on the questions raised. Questions regarding the matter of VOTING ON THE UNION, and the rules of the proposed United Church of Christ applying to THE MINISTRY have been raised with us more frequently than any other. We attempt here to answer these questions. We will welcome your comments and other questions. In further issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN we will endeavor to answer further questions.

The Conference officers or the Superintendent of the Southern Convention will endeavor to fill all requests of local Churches for visits from persons informed on the merger, both from the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church, to answer questions and to discuss the issues involved in the proposed merger. No individual or Church should hesitate to ask questions and otherwise endeavor to become informed on the matter before voting for or against such an important matter as Church union is to former Christian Church or Congregational people, who have always championed and led in attempts to answer the prayer of our Lord "that they may be one." In all such inquiry, however, it is not too much to expect of people who wish to ask questions—that they keep an open mind. It will be just as wrong for an individual Church member or delegate to Conference or Convention to vote for or against the union because he has a closed mind or prejudice as it would for him to fail to vote at all.

I. Voting on the Proposed Union.

It is suggested by the BASIS OF UNION, and urged by the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches, that our local churches, Conferences, and the Southern Convention study, discuss, and register their (separate) approval or disapproval of the union as proposed and outlined in the BASIS OF UNION.

LOCAL CHURCHES should take their vote and send the result either to their Conference Secretary, or to The Southern Convention Offices, Elon College, N. C., before April 1, 1948. It should be clearly understood that the local church vote will not bring or defeat the merger in itself, but these votes of local churches throughout the country will be totaled and unless of the total number of local churches voting seventy-five per cent of them vote favorably it is doubtful that the General Council in session in 1948 would vote for the merger. (Please read the concluding paragraphs under this section.)

Conferences (called Associations in most other areas of the Congregational Christian denomination outside the Convention) and the Southern Convention (called Conferences outside the Southern Convention) should likewise take their vote and register it before June 1, 1948. (See following paragraphs.)

"It is recommended that the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches vote approval if seventy-five per cent of the conferences voting, seventy-five per cent of the Associations voting, seventy-five per cent of the Churches voting, and seventy-five per cent of the members voting have already approved the Basis of Union.

"The actual union would probably follow in the early Autumn of 1948, the first step being the official uniting of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches and the General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. This ceremony would take place in some appointed city and other gatherings celebrating the union would probably be held in other important centers throughout the country." (Note: In the case of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, the procedure for approval of the union is—approval by their General Synod and two-thirds of their area synods.)

(Quoted from THE BASIS OF UNION, page 3.)

II. The Ministry and the Calling of Pastors.

The question as to how the local Church, candidates for the Ministry and pastors will be affected in the event of the Union has been of central concern to local Church and Conference groups discussing the Basis of Union. This is a vital question and one which should be faced honestly. In regard to this question, as well as others, the words of the Basis of Union should be studied. Regarding this matter, the Basis of Union speaks as follows:

1. Candidates for the Ministry. Licensure and Ordination.

"Candidates for the Ministry, after the Union, and until a standard method is provided by the constitution (See note a. below), shall have the same status, and be licensed or ordained as ministers by the Associations or Conferences and Synods in the same way, as before the union. The standard method shall provide for ordination by authorization of the Conference or Association and normally upon the call to a Congregation." (See note b. below) (VI-A).

(Note a. The Constitution is to be prepared by a committee of the General Synod of the United Church of Christ, which "shall in no wise abridge the rights now enjoyed by the Congregations," and which shall be declared in force when it shall have been ratified by not less than two-thirds of the former Congregational Christian Churches voting and by not less than two-thirds of the former Evangelical and Reformed Synods. (See Basis of Union II-F, X-B).

(Note b. This method is almost identical with the practice of the Southern Convention. In the Convention, the Conference approves the MEDIOCRE INSTITUTIONS?

Dr. Sankey L. Blanton, dean of the school of religion at Wake Forest College, spoke at the Baptist General Association of Virginia which was held last week in Roanoke. The gist of his message was this: "We cannot serve the Lord Christ with mediocre institutions. Unless we put money, loyalty and love into our Baptist institutions we'll be out of the picture before long."

Dean Blanton spoke advisedly. We need to realize this sober truth as one of our institutions, Elon College, faces a financial crisis. Neither the genius of our Christian gospel nor the demands of our age permit us to "serve the Lord Christ with mediocre institutions." For us, as with Baptists, "money, loyalty and love" are the passports to continued service. Let these considerations prompt our individual and corporate response to Elon's call for assistance.

TEAMWORK PAYS OFF.

Teamwork pays off daily in countless homes and endeavors, in domestic and multi-lateral relations. Ordinary teamwork is not spectacular, but gets results in approximate proportion to its intelligence, integrity and intensity. Great dividends are realized through consistent teamwork between church and state, church and school, capital and labor, etc. Spectacular results appear occasionally.

Drs. Carl and Gerty Cori, two of the three co-winners of the 1947 Nobel prize for medicine, attributed their award to family teamwork. The Czech-American scientists have worked together since they first met in medical school at the University of Prague. A few months after graduation in 1920, they married and their collaboration in biological-chemical research began in earnest. Dr. Carl is quoted as saying: "Collaboration is advantageous. Science is such a big field and there are so many implications. A good scientist wants to develop a field with all its aspects and it takes years if he goes it alone." The Coris climaxed their work begun in November, 1935, by the discovery of a new enzyme, phosphorylase.

Teamwork on new and unprecedented scales will result in the progressive amelioration of social ills. Teamwork between nations and between denominations are prerequisites to the realization of the Kingdom of God on earth.

WHAT IS CHARACTER.

The cultivation of Christian character is the primary task of the Church. We have taught that Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership. The church has cultivated and inspired many characters of true greatness.

And yet character is a rather vague term. How is it produced? What are its essential elements? Those who are in the character-making business should have a clear conception of the desired results and the means by which they are achieved. What are the criteria of well-balanced and well-developed character?

The Church and the school are working with the same pupils, and each may learn from the other. The John Marshall and Thomas Jefferson High Schools in Richmond are currently rating the character development as well as the scholastic standing of their student body. Ratings for character and aptitude appear on their reports. The following listings indicate the scope of character study and formation:

(1) shows initiative and originality; (2) has special aptitude for this subject; (3) follows directions carefully; (4) effort deserves commendation; (5) has ability but effort is poor; (6) daily work should be prepared promptly; (7) needs to attend more regularly.

Also, (8) co-operates, shows intelligent respect for authority and maintains self-control; (9) has an attitude of indifference; (10) needs to develop a sense of responsibility; (11) should have more regard for the rights of others, and (12) needs to improve in courtesy and self-control.

A BISHOP'S TESTIMONY.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States is touring the Southeastern dioceses of his denomination. He stopped in Richmond to visit his godmother and confer with church officials. When asked by reporters for a statement, he gave this testimony: "The pagan world in which we live is in a position to say to the Christian Church in its disunity, 'Physician, heal thyself'. I have a very strong feeling that a united Christian voice is the only voice to which all of the world would listen. How can the church preach unity to the nations of the worlds from its own disunity?"

As to the question of union of the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian denomination, Bishop Sherrill noted that the differences between the two are "ecclesiastical and not on matters of faith." The extended time during which this proposed union has been studied and the fact that it has by no means approached consummation indicate that the ecclesiastical differences are paramount if not insurmountable.

While there are obvious and admitted differences and difficulties in our union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, we may be grateful that there is no major ecclesiastical problem to delay or circumvent its realization.

All worthwhile men have good thoughts, good ideas and good intentions—but precious few of them ever translate those into action.—John Handcock Field.

The Proposed Merger

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

The proposed merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Churches has been in the minds and hearts of leaders within both groups for many years. Though for half a century leaders within each group have cherished the hope that someday the respective groups might "become one," not until 1940 were definite steps taken in consideration of the possibility of the groups merging their forces.

Christianity is "A Fellowship" of men and women who are in love with Jesus Christ, and hence should be in love with each other. The people in the early Church conducted themselves in their relationship with each other in such a way that people outside the fellowship were forced to declare, "Behold how these Christians love one another." It would be a thousand pities if in the modern world Christian groups would treat each other in such a manner that those outside the fellowship of the Church would be justified in saying, "Behold how these Christians suspect and discount one another."

In order for the various denominations today to prove to the Modern World that they are Christians, they are compelled by consistency to seek and to promote Christian Unity in order that they may share with each other "what they have in differences." Christian Unity seeks to gather into one body of teaching all Christian truth and into one fellowship all Christian believers. Because of larger knowledge and better understanding the very things that once divided and separated Protestant Groups should now unite them and bring them together. The ocean at one time was thought to separate the different continents of the world from each other, but today because of man's larger knowledge and better understanding, we realize that instead of the ocean separating peoples it unites them—instead of longer being a barrier it now provides opportunity for contact. Just so, the differences which in time past separated the denominations from each other and divided the denominations from each other—now in the Providence of God and in the light of fuller understanding should inspire the desire for and provide opportunity for contact and approach between all branches of the Protestant Church. "In Union there is strength" for religious faith as for everything else. And so far as the differences of theological opinion are concerned, within every denomination there are as many shades of theological opinion among both clergy and laity as there are between the various denominations themselves. Every denomination has within its own circle more than the traditional "57 varieties" of theological opinion. No religious leader today could be so naive as to think that any denomination has uniformity in theological thought. But that fact has not militated against denominational fellowship. Neither will theological differences militate against the fellowship of a United Protestantism, for the spirit of Jesus Christ in the hearts of his followers makes them rise above theological differences into the unity of Christian love and service.

Christian Unity does not seek its goal by the process of elimination but by the process of assimilation. Christian unity does not seek to find the lowest common denominator of creedal statement, but instead it seeks the highest numerator of Christian thought and expression. Christian Unity recognizes the fact that there is good in all denominations and that no one denomination has a corner on divine truth. The sin of exclusive denominationalism too long has justified each group in putting its "light under a bushel." In the days of men's ignorance God winked at this offense against His Son and against humanity, but today He calls the denominations to repent of their weaknesses occasioned by their divisions, and to bring forth the spirit of Christian Unity as evidence of their repentance. Indeed it is little short of blasphemous for the divided Church longer to pray and plead for a United World, until the Church itself gives a united front to the world. Unless there is sincere effort made soon by the churches to set the example of Unity before the nations of the world, they will forfeit their right even to ask for or talk about a United World.

The most appealing reason for our uniting with the Evangelical and Reformed Church is not what our denomination will get out of it, but what can it put into it,—the rich heritage it has to share. And the same holds true for Evangelical and Reformed Churches—the most challenging reason why they should favor the merger is the fact of the rich heritage which they too have to share. God forbid that the slogan "Get! Get! Get!!!" should longer obtain among Christian groups! "Give" and "Share" are the Christian verbs.

Christian Unity insists that as Christ, during His earthly ministry, welcomed into His fellowship all who sincerely loved Him, so also today should every church that bears His name welcome into its fellowship all his disciples. Christian Unity declares that as The Lord's Supper is "The Lord's Supper" it is a serious matter to deny that privilege to any one who is in fellowship with the Lord. Who are we that we would exclude from our fellowship as disciples of Jesus any individual or any group that He would include or has included in the broad sweep of His invitation, "Whosoever Will"?

Any church within either of the two groups concerned about the proposed merger would without hesitation, but with delight, welcome into its fellowship individual members or even an entire congregation of the other group. Neither group can rightly feel that it possesses a superior type of Christian character. Before God each group stands on equal footing through the merits of the same Christ to whom both groups have pledged allegiance. Many are asking the question, "If churches of both denominations gladly welcome into their fellowship, individual members and families from churches of the other denomination why should there be a question about the desirability or the propriety of the respective denominations, as such, uniting in a common fellowship?"

The consummating of the merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church into the United Church would throw wide open the door for other like-minded groups to enter into the fellowship of this United Church, and thereby a long stride would be taken toward the realization of a United Protestantism in America.

The late Bishop Gore declared shortly before his death, "If the present day denominationalism is not abandoned for the Christianity of Christ, the world will revolt from Christianity—from real Christianity as well as from what is but conventional Christianity, and from its moral principals as well as from the intellectual dogmas." Those words may be more the pronouncement of a prophet than many would like to think.

Not until the Books of Judgement unfold will it be known how tragic—

A Sermon

By REV. CARL HEATH KOPF.

"I am speaking concerning Christ and the Church."—Ephesians 5:32.

I

If "history is the lengthened shadow of a man," then the history of the Christian Church should be the lengthened shadow of Jesus. But in many churches Jesus is set in the shadow, instead of the church standing in his shadow. The farther away we get from the earthly life of Jesus the temptation grows stronger to obscure Jesus by doctrine and complex theology.

But let the simplicity and radiant power of the life of Jesus come back into the center of our preaching and teaching of religion, and there will be a revival of devotion and loyalty to the real Jesus that could shake the world and turn it to God. The primary business of the church is to make the Christ of the Gospels known and loved and followed. Nothing else the church does is so important. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw men unto me," is the bold statement of Jesus but it is proved in the history of religion, for wherever Jesus is given the primacy and exalted above all other interests, he draws men in glad loyalty to his will and ways.

But what were the particular qualities of life which Jesus stood for and which the church of the future ought to stand for?

II

Jesus stood for voluntary allegiance rather than compulsory. "Whosoever will, may come" was the word, not "Whosoever won't must come." Jesus did not force any man's discipleship. Unless we open our hearts to Christ he will not force his way in. As in Holman Hunt's picture "The Light of the World," Christ stands at the door but the door can be opened only from the inside. It is this voluntary aspect of religion that needs to be underlined in a world where compulsion has spread like wildfire. We have never talked so glibly about freedom, yet never have so many people been in slavery, forced to do what they neither choose nor wish. Men go to war because they have to, not because they wish to; high taxes are paid not because of willingness but because of compulsion. Let religion keep open one area of voluntary action, the area of personal decision in things of the soul.

We cannot be driven into the Kingdom of God. Only by free choice can we become useful children of the living God. Whenever religion becomes compulsory rather than voluntary, it loses the very core of its power. Compulsory chapel services have probably alienated more people from devotion to God than they have led into closer communion with God. One remembers college compulsory chapel services with students signing slips to indicate their attendance, in body, but no slip could prove they were present in spirit or mind. Sunday papers and textbook lessons for Monday were often read in the back pews during the sermon.

We live in a day when heavy pressure will be put upon men and women to make up their minds for them. We shall be told what to do with our time, with our money, with our lives. In such a day as this let the church of the future keep alive the flame of voluntary action, the spark of inner conviction, the still, small voice of conscience which may be the voice of God.

III

Jesus stood as conscience for the person and the world. Here is the second task of the church of the future, to be a conscience for the individual and for society. Jesus knew that some things were eternally wrong and other things eternally right. The modern church tends to straddle most issues and tries to be so well-rounded that often it has no good point. The church is a place of worship, but it should also be a place of prophecy, where the ethical issues of personal and public living are clarified and where people find some help in holding the conscience in line with God's will and the way of Christ. Many churches have abdicated this function of religion and have become weather vanes showing which way the wind is blowing instead of guide posts showing which way the soul ought to go.

But in what areas of living can the church speak with a clear voice of conscience? The first is the area of personal character. Already we see the harvest of crime and dishonesty and deceit which a turbulent time like this is likely to produce. People make excuses in wartime for cutting corners in work or character. How we need men and women who can be depended upon to tell the truth, to live the truth, and deal honorably with their friends and relatives and neighbors and enemies and casual associates.

The second place where strong speaking of conscience is needed is in the home. The divorce rate is rising, a sure indication that many of our homes were not built on solid foundations. Homes are split apart by the war and need higher ideals instead of lower to hold them together spiritually. Let the church make it clear that it takes patience, very deep love, loyalty, forgiveness, sharing of trouble and work, and a strong religious center for the home, to build a family fellowship that will stand the pounding of modern life.

Or look at our deep need of conscience on the whole liquor problem. Nobody seems to know how to deal with it, yet everybody knows America is drinking too much, and everybody knows somebody whose life is well nigh ruined by what alcohol has done to him or to someone he loves. Every minister I know faces this problem almost daily in his ministry to people in trouble. Our only hope is a growing conviction that the truth needs to be told about alcohol, and hard work needs to be done among young people so that, not starting to drink, they will not be faced with the problem of having to stop. The church should lead, instead of standing dumb and silent in the face of this alcoholic flood; the church should lead in making clear what will happen to our

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Holly Neck Church had a celebration! And what a great and good day it was! It was time for a celebration, for two hundred years ago that sacred spot had been properly decided to a church, and continuously since then the generations have turned to it for prayer and praise. Their present pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, seemed very happy and handled the program in a most excellent way.

Let me tell you who have never been there that it is a beautiful site, situated on a neck of high land between two swamps, surrounded by towering oak, and hickory, and cedar, away from town and at the junction of two public roads—one of them hard surfaced. It is in the center of some of the finest farmlands of Nansemond County, and if you can visit that place without being impressed with the beauty of the church, its lawn, its "God's Acre," and its fragrant, deep forest, you will be different from many who have made their way there within the last two centuries.

This is not any attempt to recount history, for no doubt that will be done by historians in due time, because with the aid of Mrs. B. D. Jones in collecting materials and data Miss Gladys Yates of the Suffolk High School faculty had prepared an appropriate historical sketch. There was a morning service with beautiful music under the direction of Mrs. J. E. March, and an address by Dr. N. G. Newman, a former beloved pastor; and the sermon by the pastor, Rev. Henry E. Crutchfield.

At noon there was a lovely picnic dinner served to several hundred members, former members, visitors, and friends. The expeditious and orderly manner in which all were served was only excelled by the bounty and deliciousness of the food. Pastors and representatives of several churches enjoyed this occasion as well as the morning and afternoon sessions.

The afternoon session included the historical sketch read by Mrs. B. D. Jones, chairman of the program committee; a talk by Mrs. W. E. Wiseman, of Greensboro, N. C.; greetings from Elon College by President L. E. Smith; a lovely solo, by Miss Eloise Holland, of Holland, "How Lovely are Thy Dwellings"; and greetings from several neighboring churches.

Perhaps some of the adjectives in this article found their way into it because of the fact that it is the home church of the wife of the writer of this letter, or maybe because so many members and leaders of the Suffolk Church look on Holy Neck as the church of their parents and grandparents. However that may be, it is and has been for many years a great church of a good people. Long before many of our rural churches had their own parsonages Holy Neck had a full-time pastoral service, and a parsonage of their own. Like many of the rural churches of Eastern Virginia it stands humbly but rightly in the fore front of culture and service.

LAYMAN CHIEF REPORTS ON SOUTHERN CONVENTION VISIT.

The days from Sunday, October 5, through Thursday, October 9, were really enjoyable since during that time it was possible to begin a real visit to the Southern Convention, beginning at the church in Winchester and working down through Virginia to the city of Asheboro, North Carolina, and ending there in a supper rally with the fine men of the neighboring churches.

The morning service at Winchester was sponsored by the laymen of that area, and Mr. Larrick was the presiding officer and did an excellent job. Various men of the church participated in the services and it was a good occasion for all. The attendance was approximately 150 and was a little bit better than the average according to some of those who were present.

In the afternoon, after a lovely drive through part of the Shenandoah Valley, a group of some sixty people met together at Newport Church for service at 3:00 o'clock. The singing was excellent and the pianist was a little girl eleven years of age who was quite an important person in the community.

Going to and from the church it was possible to meet with a good many of the local citizens and particularly to be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Lowderbach at their farm home near Shenandoah, Virginia. We sat down to a good old fashioned chicken dinner with our friends, both the Rev. and Mrs. Newton, Mr. and Mrs. Larrick, and Mr. George D. Colclough and enjoy a real Southern hospitality dinner.

Following the fine meal and the conversation, we then drove on down to Lindville which is not very far from Harrisonburg. There at 7:30 approximately 60 men gathered together to enjoy some good old-fashioned hymn singing and to take a part in the laymen's program for that night.

On the next day, Mr. Colclough and I drove 250 miles down to Suffolk and to enjoy a meeting with 175 laymen in the church of the Rev. John Truitt.

The meeting at Henderson had a small attendance but the interest of those men, as shown by their questions and participation in the discussion at the end of the address, was most heartening. It seems that the men there are busy as are the men all over the States, and once they catch the interest of doing something in the church, it is a mere matter of giving them something to do to keep them at the job.

The following day the men of Sanford and vicinity met together at 6:00 at the church for a grand dinner and a good meeting. There was a bit of singing and the men seemed to want to sing more. The presence of some thirty-five men was a good indication of the growing interest in the work of the church by laymen. This church is thinking about building an addition in order that they may do a better job to meet the needs and interest of the people in the locality.

The last meeting of this trip was held at a dinner meeting at Asheboro, at which there were present some 75 or 80 laymen. The meeting was an interesting one, and after an excellent dinner and some singing, the address was given and a bit of discussion entered into.

During the entire week some hundreds of miles were traveled, perhaps more than 1,000, and a chance given to talk personally, or in a group, to some 568 men. In all of these contacts there was a sign of growing interest in the church and a desire to help the ministers do the job that is in front of them. The State office, as well as the State Convention Chairman, of men's work have done an excellent job in promoting the program. It is hoped that much good will come from the meetings.

A tribute of praise should be given to the State Superintendent of the Southern Convention, Rev. William T. Scott, and also Mr. George Colclough, who is the chairman of the men's work in the Southern Convention. In every meeting they pre-

PASTORS AND PARENTS OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

There are more children in the public schools of this country than ever before. There are more seniors in the high schools across the country than we have ever known. A greater percentage of high schools graduates are going to college or will want to go to college than the system of higher education has yet experienced or than the colleges have been expected to provide for.

There is also an increasing number of G. I.'s who are applying for entrance in our colleges. The colleges themselves are crowded. Rooms and other facilities are limited and competent instructors at the college level are exceedingly difficult to find and more difficult to secure. Experts (I use "experts" advisedly) tell us that these conditions will continue certainly to 1950 and possibly to 1960. I agree with these opinions. There are more young people who want to go to college, and there is more money to be had by the average family with which to pay its children's way in college than in previous years. All of this means that our colleges as they are today will be utterly unable to admit all the young people eligible for college who want to enter.

Elon College is our institution of higher learning. It was built for the public. All young people eligible for college are invited, but as a church, we are particularly interested in our own young people. We want them to go to our own college. Not only will they receive first-class instruction and careful guidance, but they will have the privilege of meeting and knowing our young people from other churches in different sections of the country. In this way they will acquire universal acquaintance and form a solidarity of interest in our own church program.

At Elon College we are most anxious to have the young men and young women from our own church homes. Now is the time for pastors and parents who have high school seniors who plan to enter college to begin to talk with these young men and young women about going to college, about preparing for higher and better things of life, about making application for entrance, about applying for entrance in Elon College in September 1948.

Applications are already being received in numbers; the greater part of which are from a distance—a very few are from our own church.

Brother pastor and brother parent, of our own church, please write now. Don't wait until a few weeks or a few days before college opens and then write, "I have a fine young person, a good student. This student would be an honor to any college. I want to see him enter Elon. Could you possibly make room for him?" This is fine. We want your interest. We want you to write, but please do it now while it is possible to have these young people admitted and secure good accommodations.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FOUNDATION.

Elon College's appeal to churches and individuals of the churches for payment on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation is meeting with favorable response in certain sections. Since last week the following churches and individuals have sent in payments on their voluntary quotas:

Windsor Christian Church	$ 300.00
Union (Surry) Church	 19.00
Eure Church by Allen E. Askew	 25.00
Pleasant Union Church	 12.00
First Church, Norfolk, by Mrs. J. Monroe Harris	 20.00
Mt. Auburn Church by J. A. Kimball	 100.00
Liberty (Vance) Church by M. L. Grissom and Mrs. S. F. Journigan	 25.00
Newport News Church	 366.25
Winchester Church	 150.00
Wake Chapel Church by K. B. Johnson & Sons	 500.00

These contributions were much needed and greatly appreciated. We have bills coming due on the new power house without funds to meet them. If the churches of the Convention could really realize the seriousness of the situation at the College and its immediate needs, I am sure they would respond quickly and generously.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference convenes Tuesday, November 11. This is the last conference in the Convention to meet in annual session during this conference year and this conference will have met and adjourned before this message reaches the reading public.

The total apportionment for the College is $12,500. To date, including this week's report, we have received $9,415.50, which means that we are still more than $3,000 from the goal. It is suggested that the members of our church consider the amount apportioned for our other interests and compare the apportionment with the amount contributed and then consider that out of these funds the College is asked to contribute $750 for the publication of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and in addition to give free tuition to all students enrolled in Elon College preparing for full-time Christian service. There are twenty-six enrolled in the College this year who are eligible for these considerations. All of this means that the College, out of the funds contributed, must pay back to the church more than $3,000 which, if the entire apportionment should be received, would leave the College less than $9,500, as the net contribution from its church in comparison with the large amounts given for other institutions and causes. It would seem that we are falling short of our obligation to our own College. The College is grateful for every consideration and assistance.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

BETHLEHEM.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church of Nansemond county, Virginia, are happy to report a very successful year under the capable leadership of Mrs. T. D. Dilday as President.

Our Spiritual Life Programs have been very interesting throughout the year under the leadership of Mrs. R. O. Luter, assisted by Mrs. Roy Mizelle, Mrs. Paul Yates, and Mrs. J. E. Harris.

Our Missionary Society being in three circles, we have used a portion of the Bible Study Book, The Divine Fatherhood as the devotionals at each meeting with the assistant Spiritual Life leader in charge.

The Home Mission study book Portrait of a Pilgrim has been read and passed around from one member to another in our circle.

On March 18th, the Home Mission study Book, The Fine Art of Using was reviewed at the church by Mrs. Thomas Woodward of Suffolk, Va. This was truly one of the outstanding events of the year—with three other of our sister churches—Berea, Cypress Chapel, and Oakland Christian churches—all combined. The spirit of "Who Is Thy Neighbor?" has been carried out in all of our year's work.

The Foreign Mission study book, India at the Threshold, was reviewed at the church September 11th by Mr. James McLemore of Suffolk, Va. This meeting was held at night and the families of Cypress Chapel joined with the families at Bethlehem and enjoyed the interesting and inspiring messages, since Mr. McLemore was stationed in India during the war as a member of the U. S. Secret Service. He told much of his experiences while there.

This past year we have all had great interest in the Shaowu Mission. The Thank Offering program and Thank Offering surpassed any that we had ever had. Not only was the Thank Offering made for the Jacksons, but other offerings and gifts sent to support them.

This past summer we had a delegation of six besides our pastor to attend the summer School of Missions at Elon. A delegation of 20 attended the Spring Rally. For our Friendly Service this year we have sent gifts to Carroll County, Franklinton Institute, and money and clothes to Elon Orphanage. For the sick and shut-ins in our community, the past year, our society sent 1306 cards, 285 trays, 472 flowers, and 1264 visits were made.

Very liberal donations have been made to the Religious Education; Red Cross, T. B. and Cancer Drives. We have raised money selling brooms, various home made items, using the Piggie Bank, and serving dinners and suppers.

The entire society has averaged 60 per cent for the yearly attendance.

A good delegation is expected to attend the Conference at Waverly, Va., October 3rd, since we had 28 to attend last fall's conference.

We started the year's work with 70 members and we end with 70 members. We gained four new members, but during the year we were most unfortunate to lose four of our beloved members, some of whom had been with us for many years. For each of them a memorial was given as follows: Mrs. J. C. Pierce, Mrs. Isaac Piland, Mrs. Bettie Cullifer, Mrs. C. R. Howell. A Memorial was also given for Mrs. C. H. Rowland, our first Eastern Virginia Conference President.

This completes the year's work with all requirements for Standard of Excellence exceeded, and as we count our blessings, we have a feeling of sadness over those who passed on to their reward, and we write the following poem in their honor.

When all our hopes are gone,
'Tis well our hands must still keep toiling on for others' sake;

For strength to bear is found in duty done,
And he is blest indeed who learns to make
The joy of others cure his own heart-ache.

MRS. HARRY F. SCHADEL,
Secretary.

BETHLEHEM JUNIORS.

The Bethlehem Young People's Missionary Society has had a successful year. We have or will have met all the requirements for the Standard of Excellence.

We have contributed willingly to the Red Cross, Tuberculosis Association, and the Carroll County project. We also sent our Thank Offering to the Jacksons to help benefit them with their inspiring and wonderful work in Shaowu, China.

We met with two of our sister societies (Cypress and Liberty Spring) and reviewed our study books together. Our mission study book was taught by Mr. Tom Odom, who spent some time in India while serving our country in the Navy. He also had an interesting display of articles from India.

The Christian and Race was taught by our own young people, one from each of the three societies. We enjoy studying our books with other young people. It helps carry on good fellowship among ourselves and our churches.

We had our public service at Easter—a very appropriate song service.

Our pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle, is to teach our Bible study, The Divine Fatherhood. All in all, we feel we have had a good and profitable year thus far.

Mr. Harvey Harrell has been our leader, and we have had a fairly good attendance throughout the year.

MOBILE CHURCHES OPERATED BY HOME MISSIONS.

The "Eastern Harvester," first unit in a fleet of station wagons to be equipped to provide religious and recreational services for migrant farm workers across the nation, was dedicated at the Cutchogue Migrant Labor Camp near Riverhead, Long Island. The fleet of "mobile churches" will be operated by the Home Missions Council of North America, 297 Fourth Ave., New York.

Each unit in the fleet is to be equipped with a portable organ, folding altar, motion picture projector, record player, reading material, and first aid supplies. Recreational facilities will include quoits, table games, and softball equipment.

Because the migrants follow the crops from North to South and back again every year, the Council's staff travel with them, setting up child care centers, recreational and religious programs and working with local church and civic groups to interest them in the plight of agricultural migrants. A nursery was operated at the Cutchogue camp this summer for young children whose parents and older brothers and sisters worked in the fields harvesting potatoes, cauliflower and lima beans.

Now that most of the crops in New

Little Friends:

First, I have a story for the smallest of you—

Timmy walked by the church holding his mother's hand very tightly:

"Mummy, what makes the bells go?" "Makes the bells go?" she asked. "What makes the bells go ding, dong, ding, dong?" "Oh," said Mummy, "that is because old Jed pulls the rope." "Let me see, let me see," cried Timmy.

And mother took Timmy into the church, up by the choir loft and let him look up into the belfry as we call the place of the bells. Timmy saw the long rope, but old Jed said, "I can't pull the bell rope today." Then mother and Timmy went away.

At bedtime after mother and daddy tucked him in, Timmy thought and thought about the rope and the bells. As he fell asleep he dreamed that he heard them ringing and that old Jed did not pull the rope. Guess what made those bells ring? Timmy's dream said that two wee small elves lived in the bells. One was Ding and one was Dong. When they wanted to laugh and be happy they shoved each other, jumped up and down and called so loudly their names for all to hear: Ding! Dong! Ding! Dong! until they were tired and fell into dreams like little Timmy. . . .

With Christmas excitingly near we are thinking about gifts to give and things to receive. Here are some new books that you might like to have or to give a friend.

Cobblestone Lane by Be Van Der Groen. The Pilgrim Press. Boston. $1.50.

This is an honest-to-goodness Christmas story about old St. Nick. It has gay pictures by Nora van der Groen who is the daughter of the author. Mrs. van der Groen is from Holland and that was the birthplace of St. Nick.

Written in poetry it tells a tale of people and animals who bring their presents to the good old Saint.

Beginning with "Saint Nicholas, little Scamp, Please put something in my shoe; Put something in my little boot; Thank you, little Saint Nicholas!" the book tells about Cobblestone Lane, at Number Twelve, and the little Chirpee who opens his door to call, Midnight, midnight! . . . Cuckoo! Cuckoo!" and a happy birthday surprise, on down to the very last page which carries "Saint Nicholas, little Scamp" as a happy song both in Dutch and English. It makes you wish Christmas was already here. . . .

Star Stories. Gertrude Chandler Warner. The Pilgrim Press. Boston. $1.25.

This is a new book taken from an old one. There are drawings by Winifred Bromall that show the stars and their diagram with a place at the bottom to write the date you discover them for yourself.

Christmastime is star time, too, and wintertime is star time for Jack Frost makes the heavens look so blue-black and the stars so bright and shiny.

You can see how the Two Dippers, Gemini, the Twins, Leo, the Lion, Lyra, the Lyre and many others look; when, where and how to find them. There are stories about them, too. . . .

And next a book for mothers and teachers. It is:

Creative Activities. Rebecca Rice. The Pilgrim Press. Boston. $2.75.

There are so many wonderful things to do and make in this book that all of you must ask your teachers to get it. It starts with a plan for work and collecting materials and then goes into the what and how of making things like: hand puppets, creches, dioramas, blueprint pictures, transparencies, peep shows, and on and on. There are recipes for modeling materials and stucco; also for paper mache and paper pulp. Lastly, there are seasonal things to make. Every Sunday School needs this book of "Creative Activities" which is illustrated by Verna G. McCully.

We will have more about books later.

JUST LIKE OTHER GIRLS

By LUCIA MALLORY.

"Sue Carmen and Jane Foster wore the darlinest new coats to school today—teddy-bear coats with green and red flannel linings—I'd like one with a red lining. Oh, Mother, do you think I could have one?" With that, my niece, Betty Anne, sat down in the kitchen where her mother was preparing dinner.

I was visiting in my brother's home, and at the moment was sitting in the adjoining breakfast nook, writing a letter, so I had heard the breathless announcement and eager question. Now came the quiet answer.

"You had a new coat last winter, Betty Anne; you don't need another one this year."

"But, Mother," the little girl persisted, "teddy-bear coats are new this winter. They're pretty and warm and furry. Everybody's getting one. Don't you want me to be like other girls?"

Beatrice, my sister-in-law, put aside the work she had been doing and turned to give her child her full attention before she answered.

"Of course, I want you to be happy, dear, but I don't want you to be exactly like June and Sue. I like my daughter just as she is."

"Oh, Mother, you know what I mean," Betty Anne pleaded. "Don't you want me to have pretty, new cloths like other girls?"

"Please put your school things away, Betty Anne," her mother said, "and then come back and we'll talk about the new coats."

Lagging steps traveled into the front hall and back through the living room to the kitchen.

Beatrice's voice was gentle as she spoke to her daughter. "Your Daddy and I like to have you children enjoy the things we have, Betty Anne, without thinking too much about their money value, but we do want you to have some understanding of money and how to use it.

"Each month Daddy receives a salary for his work. That salary has to pay for our home, our food, our clothes, the money we give to the church, your allowance and music lessons, as well as whatever we spend on special pleasure—like going to the basketball games to see Kenneth play with the high-school team. This year there are many places in the world where the people, however hard they try, cannot obtain enough food or clothing for their barest needs—so we have given some of our money toward helping them.

"Also Daddy puts part of his salary away each month to be saved for what we shall need in the future. You want to go on taking violin lesson, don't you?"

"Oh yes, Mother. There are ever so many new pieces I want to learn to play," Betty Anne answered earnestly.

"I'm glad you like the violin so well," Beatrice continued. "You'll be able to give much pleasure by your playing. However, the money we put aside for your lessons cannot be used for other purposes. We want you to have a good musical education, and we wish to have Alice study home

"Youth at Work in the Church"

ANNOUNCING THE NEW YOUNG PEOPLE'S PACKET.

Ever since the women's packet of materials and programs has been available for the women's groups within the Convention, there has been heard the plea, "Couldn't we have a young people's packet, too?"

Now, I can answer that request with, "Yes!" for the young people's packet for the year 1947-1948 will be ready for distribution about the middle of November. We are planning for programs and program suggestions to start with December and go through September of next year. There will be a plan book included, with month-by-month programs (at least one complete program worked out for each month, and in many cases, two programs), suggestions for other programs and where to find the materials, ideas for fun and fellowship good times, addresses, and other important materials. A young people's study book containing six study sessions will be included. Most of the program suggestions will be outlined by the leading young people of the five conferences who are taking an active part in the preparation of the packet. As in the women's packet, there will be materials on the four big areas of church life—Missionary Action, Interdenominational Action, Social Action, and Personal Action.

If you would like to order a packet NOW, you may do so by sending me your name and address and the name of the young people's group which will use the packet. The price is $1.00.

The women of the Southern Convention, the young people, and the Southern Convention Office are glad to be able to offer the packet—use it to the very best of your ability so that it may help to enlarge our young people's work throughout the coming year.

HOLY NECK FELLOWSHIP.

The Holy Neck Pilgrim Fellowship was well-represented at the fall Conference last October and has been for the rallies and other meetings held during the year. Our program committee has had well-planned and interesting programs for the meetings and the members have shown a fine spirit of cooperation. Our pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, is very much interested in our group of young people and their activities. Mrs. Cruthfield, too, is quite a help to us. We enjoyed the splendid book review she gave us on Blind Spots.

One of the most enjoyable occasions we have had during this past year was when we went caroling at Christmas time and took baskets of fruit to shut-in members of the church and community. About 35 people took part. Another enjoyable occasion was Pilgrim Fellowship week, when the Missionary Aid Society entertained the young people at a buffet supper. After the supper, a short devotional program was given.

We were glad to have Miss Chicoine come to us in the spring, when young people from four other churches came to our church for a joint meeting.

Several of our members took part in the World Day of Prayer program. Also taking part in this program were members of the Friends and Baptist churches in our community, as well as those of the Christian churches.

We had one member to attend camp this summer.

Our apportionment has been raised and we have made contributions to several local causes.

With the help of the Master, we pray that we may accomplish greater things this coming year.

sented the picture, so far as the Southern Convention is concerned, and got approval in every case of a program of men's work which the Southern Convention hopes to establish. This program is one of the finest in the nation and includes an active men's worker and a secretary in every local church, a council for the Southern Convention and cooperation with the National Laymen's Fellowship. The National Fellowship will never be strong until the local church is strong and meets the needs and interest of all of the men of the community, not only of the church, but all men who live in or near the community and can be served by it.

These are the times when the church needs the best of all men, and also when all men need the best of the church. In a cooperative endeavor much good can be done by finding out what needs to be done, by planning how it ought to be done, and then advertising the goal that we hope to reach and the results as we secure them along the way. Certainly, I want to express my own greetings to all of the men of the Southern Convention and hope that it will be possible in the future to again return and to meet those whom I did not have the pleasure this time of meeting.

economics in college so that she can teach cooking and sewing, as she would like to do. We also want to help Kenneth to become an electrical engineer, because that is the sort of work he enjoys.

"We have a plan for using Daddy's salary that we call a budget. It is a list of things we need now and what we shall need in the future. If you didn't already have a nice warm coat for this winter, we'd put that in the budget and leave something else out. As it is, we'll go on with your violin lessons."

"And help some little girl overseas to get a new coat," Betty Anne finished for her mother. "I'm glad I don't need a coat this winter. When I wanted one I had forgotten about those children who haven't enough clothes to keep them warm. I'm glad we can do something for them."

"So am I, Betty Anne," her mother agreed. "Now it's time for me to finish preparing dinner and for you to set the table."

As I put my letter away and went to see if I could help Beatrice, I was thankful that my brother's children have a mother who is giving them such good counsel about money.

Life is a place of service, and in that service one has to suffer a great deal that is hard to bear, but more often to experience a great deal of joy. But that joy can be real only if people look upon their life as a service, and have a definite object in life outside themselves and their personal happiness.—Tolstoi.

THE WAY OF LOVE

LESSON VIII—NOVEMBER 23, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Follow after love.—I Corinthians 14:1.

LESSON: I John 1-3; John 21:15-22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Cor. 13.

A Love Letter.

Here is a love letter, written by an old man to his Christian friends, and perhaps in many instances to those who were his spiritual children, to those who through his ministry had found Christ. It is a warm, tender, epistle, not easily analyzed into clear-cut divisions, because it comes from the heart of the old man, rather than from his head. It is a love-letter in the sense that it was written in the spirit of love, and also because it emphasizes the spirit of love, Godward and manward.

An Old Commandment.

"Beloved, no new commandment write I to you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning; the old commandment is the word which ye hear." The commandment to love, to love God and to love one's fellowman, was written in the Old Testament or the Old Covenant. Even there love was the primary law of life. But as with so much of the Old Testament, it was a cold, and formal thing when embodied in a formal commandment or law. It was more of a matter of the head than of the heart.

A New Commandment.

"Again a new commandment write I unto you." Jesus himself said that He was giving his disciples a new commandment. It was the fulfillment and the exaltation of the old commandment. In the light of His life and death, love had a new meaning, and also a new imperative and a new claim. The darkness was passing away and the true light was already shining. The command to love was both old and new.

A Badge of Discipleship.

"Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples," said Jesus, "if ye love one another." Members of lodges and civic clubs often wear a button or badge as a token of their membership in these organizations. John, in keeping with the words of Jesus says that the badge of discipleship is love. Strictly speaking if a man does not have the spirit of love, he does not have any badge of discipleship. One is reminded of Paul's words, "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His." That is the test of orthodoxy—not what one holds in his head, but what spirit one has in his heart. Unorthodoxy is simply to be unloving.

A Light in Darkness.

"He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is no occasion of stumbling in him." Love is light and gives light. A loving heart can find its way around in the world, even in the darkness. He that loveth need not walk in darkness. He has the light of life.

Walking Blindfolded.

"He that hateth his brother is in the darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because the darkness has blinded his eyes." It is a striking and sobering picture or figure of speech. Here is a man walking through life, heavily blind-folded, groping his way along like a truly blind man, bumping into people, tripping over things, and missing all the beauties and joys of life. And all because he is blinded by hate. Hate not only distorts, it blinds. We all too often think about what hate does to the person who is hated. We ought to think seriously about what hate does to the hater. As a matter of fact, a man cannot afford to hate another man—it is too costly.

A Father Speaks to his Spiritual Children.

There is a warm, personal touch in the letter, when John writes out of his heart of love to all his friends. He has something to say to "the little children"—their sins have been forgiven for the sake of Christ, and they know the Father; he writes unto the "fathers" because they know him who is from the beginning; and he writes unto the "young men" because they have overcome the evil one, and because they are strong and have the word of God abiding in them. All are in his great heart. Here is the pastoral spirit at its best.

Take Care of What You Love.

"Love is not of the world . . . for all that it is in the world, the lust of the flesh, of the eyes, the vainglory of life—all these things pass away, and the lust thereof, even the world itself." We ought not to lavish our love on these things, so perishable and impermanent.

Murderers.

"Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." That is strong language, but it is all in keeping with the words of the Master himself. A man does not have to take an axe and cut a man to pieces, or a gun and shoot a man down, to commit murder. He has only to harbour the spirit of hate in his heart, to hold malice, to cherish revenge, to be guilty of murder. The fact is, folks, just do not realize what a terrible thing the spirit of ill-will and hate is. It is a terrible thing to murder a man by an overt act. It is just as terrible to harbor hate in the heart.

Love in Action.

Love is not a vague, rapid, intangible thing. It is a very practical, substantial thing. Love acts. Love expresses itself in practical ways. If we see our fellowmen in need, and shut up our compassion from them, how doth the love of God abide in us?—thus does John reason. The situation in Europe confronts us with a test of love. Perhaps we cannot do everything, but we can do something. We can love in deed and in truth, and not in word or in tongue. If a man loves God whom he cannot see he will do something for God's children whom he can see. Like everything else, love is known by its fruits.

application of a candidate for admittance to the "Biblical Class," for "Licensure," and for "Ordination." The acts of Licensure and of Ordination take place usually at a session of the Conference.)

2. The Calling of a Pastor.

The Basis of Union (VI) says, "The calling of a Minister is a concern of the Church at large, represented in the Association (our Conference) or Conference (our Convention), as well as of the Minister and the Congregation."

Is it not true? We know from happy or tragic experience that the right or wrong type of pastor going to a Church affects vitally the growth, progress, and harmony of the local Church, as well as the interests and welfare of the Conferences, Convention and their enterprises. Likewise, it is a concern to all whether or not a Church has a Pastor, or whether he is in harmony with the principles and program of the denomination.

It was with this vital relation between Pastor and Church in mind that at a session of the Southern Convention (known then as "The General Convention of the Christian Church, South,") held at Mount Auburn Christian Church, Warren County, North Carolina, May 3, 1886, that a committee on Revisions consisting of three of our wise Church Fathers—Dr. W. S. Long, Rev. Jeremiah W. Holt, and Dr. W. W. Staley—presented the following report, which "was taken up by items, amended, and adopted as a whole."

"1. When a Church calls a pastor, the call shall be submitted to the Conference of which it is a member for ratification. The term of the pastoral relation shall be determined by the contracting parties, and it may be dissolved when the Church or pastor desires it, provided, the Conference of which the Church is a member grants permission.

"2. No Church shall be allowed to call a new pastor, or accept the regular services of another preacher, until it shall have discharged its indebtedness to its former pastor, or renders satisfactory excuse to the Conference and pastor for such failure; nor shall any pastor leave his work without the permission of the Church of his charge.

"3. When a Church is not able to employ a pastor for all his time, it should seek to associate itself with one or more Churches and they should together call a pastor.

"4. In case of a vacancy by the death, suspension, or resignation of any pastor, the Church may be supplied by the consent of the Committee on Home Missions of the Conference of which the Committee is a member." (Pages 19-20 of Minutes of 1886.)

This regulation passed by what is now the Southern Convention is still in force, so far as the writer can determine, and Conference minutes reveal until recent years the practice of approval of pastorates and pastors by the Conference. We would have saved our Church and the Kingdom much sorrow and loss in recent years had we been following strictly this practice put into force by our Church Fathers: They were wiser than we have been, it would seem!

The Basis of Union comes near to following the practice given above, though a bit more elastic. "Ministers and Churches desiring to maintain a system of pastoral placement (meaning a system of calling pastors) in which the Conference or Association shall have little or no part, shall be free to do so; but the recommended standard of denominational procedure shall be one in which the minister, Congregation, and Conference or Association co-operate, the Conference approving candidates, the Congregation extending the call. The new communion will appeal to all Congregations not to call or dismiss their ministers, and to all ministers not to respond to calls or resign, until the Association or Conference shall have given approval. In all relationships between minister and local Church or Congregation. The freedom of the minister and the autonomy of the Church are presupposed (taken for granted)." (VI).

THE PROPOSED MERGER.

ally denominationalism has retarded the promotion of Kingdom interests here on the Home Field and how it has crippled the work of Christian Missions on the Foreign Field.

A prominent layman of our denomination, a university graduate who successfully spent several years in educational work before entering the business field, recently declared that he believed it was a sin for any individual or group to oppose the uniting of the Christian forces. Said he, "Can any sincere disciple of the Christ of all denominations question that the spirit of the eternal Christ is seeking the Union of all His followers to the end that the world may believe?" Thousands of our laymen are asking that same question. They feel that Protestantism has suffered long enough from being divided into separate groups, and that the interests of the Kingdom of God have been sacrificed too long already by the various denominations struggling merely to survive when they ought long ago to have united for the establishment of the Kingdom of God upon earth.

Personally I am in favor of the proposed merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church because I believe that every such merger between Christian groups will be a definite contribution to the realization of "A United Protestantism" and an important gesture toward the answering of our Lord's prayer, "That they may be one." I am in favor of a United Church because the divided Church is so pathetically handicapped in seeking to effect a United World for which every sincere Christian labors and prays. I am in favor of a United Church because I have so many noble Christian friends in the various denominations.

I am stongly in favor of the proposed merger because of the fact that I personally know so many ministers and laymen in the Evangelical and Reformed Church whose noble Christian lives would so greatly enrich the fellowship of any denomination. I am strongly in favor of the proposed merger because the youth and young people of all churches in both groups are anxious that the merger shall be consummated. I would not want to stand in the way of their paryers and their hopes for A United Church, for both the Church and the world will be their responsibility in the years ahead. I am in favor of the proposed merger because I am confident that my Lord is in favor of it. I cannot imagine, try as I might, that He would oppose the uniting of any groups worthy to call Him Lord. I am in favor of the merger because local churches of both groups will be benefitted in areas where members of either group move into communities not having churches of their respective group but having churches of the other group. I believe in the merger because of the larger fellowship of kindred minds and hearts that would be made possible by the merger, and because of the new spirit of conquest the merger would engender within the local churches by reason of the larger fellowship, the larger resources, the larger responsibilities, the larger opportunities, and the larger vision of The United Church.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The writer had the very great pleasure of attending the Western North Carolina Conference last week. We don't remember of ever having missed attending the Western North Carolina Conference. The people in that Conference have always been kind to us in a number of ways, and we are grateful to them.

It is amusing how untrue reports can get circulated around. It has come to my attention several times lately that someone had said that the Orphanage owned two fine new cars. We have no idea how such a report could have got started. We only wish that it was half true and that we really had one new car. We think we could get along all right with just one.

Now what are the true facts? We drove a model T Ford for years, and have never owned anything but a Ford car. In the year, 1940, we traded our old Ford for a Mercury, which is made by Ford Motor Company. My brother said it was an improved Ford, but still a Ford car. We traded for a Mercury because it was more comfortable to ride in, and especially on long trips. Since we have had this car we have given it the best of care. We have kept it washed, cleaned, and waxed, and although we have driven it nearly 70,000 miles, it still runs and carries me there and back when I want to go. No, we have no new cars at all, and until the prices come down we will still drive the 1941 model Mercury car. I am sorry this report has been circulated.

A man said to me a few days ago: "I hear that the Orphanage has a big surplus and doesn't need any money. How about it?" The Orphanage did have a nice bank account to its credit the first of the year, but not so now. We have had to spend a lot of money this year on repairs and permanent improvements. The buildings needed quite a lot of work done on them to get them in first-class condition. They had to be re-screened, painted—on the inside and out—and one building had to be recovered and remodeled on the inside, and painted outside and inside. Besides, we ran a six-inch water main from the town main to the Christian Orphanage building to give us fire protection. The town was putting in some water lines, and we found we could do the work cheaper while the people had their machinery here working for the town.

After paying for all this expense and most of the surplus we have in the bank is already low, it leaves us only a few thousand dollars for running capital. So you can well see we need money to run this Institution.

Please remember when you take the Thanksgiving offering in your church that the Orphanage is very much in need of money to pay bills—shoe bills, clothing bills, grocery bills, coal bills, and many other bills, and it takes money to buy these things.

moral fibre, to our children and their children, to our homes and to our minds and souls and bodies. The gallant group of volunteers called Alcoholics Anonymous are doing more than most churches to help victims of alcoholism break their chains and go free. This is because the churches have largely lost their conviction of conscience on the subject and as in so many other fields, have found it hot to handle and have hoped somebody else would handle it for them. Let the church again be the conscience.

As one thinks of Jesus standing in our pulpits today we wonder what he would say to us about this war. Would he urge us to fight it through to unconditional surrender? What should be the voice of conscience of the church as it tries to speak for Jesus? It seems to me clear that Jesus tried to get the Samaritans and Jews to live with each other, he tried to show our common brotherhood in God, he refused to believe that it was impossible to live a life of serenity even in a time of war.

Therefore the Christian Church in every country should be seeking a way of reconciling men to each other and to God. The church dare not give up hope that the nations may learn to dwell together on earth. The church should lead in creating a public opinion in which it will be possible to form a fellowship of nations that will include all nations. When the church ceases to preach this belief and loses faith in its possibility then the church has failed to keep alive its function of conscience in the face of the world's most serious collective sin, world-wide war.

The church of the future shall be the conscience for the individual and the world.

IV

Jesus stood for healing. A large portion of the ministry of Jesus was given over to the healing of broken bodies and deranged minds. His power is still a mystery although many religions have tried to copy it, never with complete success.

It is in this ministry of healing that the church of the near future will have a gigantic work set before its most complete consecration. And I am thinking not only of the healing of bodies and minds but of the larger healing of broken society, disrupted nations and a bleeding world.

Let us rediscover the Vis Medica-trix Dei, the healing power of God. God may use the surgeon to help with the healing process, but every doctor will agree that God does 90 per cent of the healing and all the doctor can do is let the healing forces have their way unimpeded by infection.

In the Massachusetts General Hospital I have seen the healing power of a lovely chapel set in the midst of the hospital. This chapel seems like a place of "central peace at the heart of endless agitation." That is as it should be. Patients, nurses and doctors pause to pray in the quiet beauty of this lovely chapel and they rise with healing in their wings, renewed by the unseen power of prayer and meditation. The Christian Church ought not to leave to one denomination or two the witness of the healing power of God.

And who will heal the minds of Book Reviews

WE WOULD SEE JESUS. Russell Henry Stafford. The Pilgrim Press, Boston. $2.00.

Russell Henry Stafford, author, administrator, minister and theologian, has written an extremely readable book in brief compass. One would naturally expect that the former minister of Old South Church in Boston would follow the example of many noted preachers who issue volumes of their sermons. But Dr. Stafford calls his book "An Essay in Interpretation."

The chapters of the book give a succinct estimate of the synoptic gospels, outline and interpret the central issues in the life of Jesus. Dr. Stafford gives a cold appraisal of the materials with which we must work and lays a secure foundation for homiletic superstructure. It will serve as an antidote for much of our pious and uncritical sermonizing.

While the book will throw consternation into the camp of the literalists, it will be regarded by liberals as an excellent statement of the things most surely believed among scholars. Like St. John, the author asks frankly and without apology, "Art thou he that should come or look we for another?" Devastating frankness and utter candor mark the book from start to finish. For instance, he writes: "Search all his words, and you will find no specific rule among them, with the single exception that, in what may have been an excess of indignation and the lack of protection for women and children under the old Hebrew common law, he pronounced a sweeping edict against divorce. In the literal meaning of that edict it seems quite impractical for men and women of the twentieth century to concur." One is convinced that the author is unwilling to keep all his doubts locked in a closet, that he is keeping nothing up his theological sleeves.

Those who read the book will have their faith strengthened in the realization that the Bible and its central figure, Jesus, are able to stand under the rigorous criticism. Those who are troubled by honest doubts will realize that it is not necessary to stifle them, but simply follow them to their logical conclusion. One may read the book with the assurance that it was not written by a theological upstart, but by a man of mature, unshaken faith. And incidentally, the book is unencumbered with foot notes and quotations except those taken from the Bible.

R. L. H.

EVERYMAN'S ADVENTURE. Merle William Boyer. Harper and Bros., 1947. 167 pp., $2.50.

The author posits the continuing creativity of God in the world; he wants the Church to be the center and instrument for man in cooperation with the Creator. Man, he holds, is guilty of two major heresies: first of secularism; second, that of the Church, as having maintained organizational reaction in the universal process of change.

The second section of the book is given to an examination of the availability of the resources of the Church for adventuring, in worship, in church unity, in ethics, with lonely souls, and in social action. Basically, the appeal is that of Jesus' evangelism with men, in friendship of spirit.

The author may be said to cover too much ground, in something of a sketch of the history of Western culture with proper criticism thereof and an outline for the rectification of the evils of the age. But he is obviously sincere, of wholly Christian spirit, possessed of great erudition and of sound judgements. A more specific treatment of a limited phase of the situation in the light of the Gospel and of sound learning would have increased the value of the work to its readers. But the materials are of solid value. The book deserves study.

JOHN F. C. GREEN.

THE CHURCH OF THE FUTURE.

those broken by the war and all its tragedy? Psychiatrists will do their best, relatives will help, employers will try to find work that will heal, but the church, beyond and above all these ought to be ready to "minister to the mind diseased," and provide the ministries of religion for the healing of the broken spirit. Here is an almost entirely new field in which the church must be a pioneer rather than a follower.

Can the church heal the broken families? Not all of them, of course, but a church and a ministry which are alive to the need of reconciliation will be able to heal many of the broken cords and bring mothers and fathers and children together again. "And he healed them," was the fine tribute paid to Jesus by those who saw him. It should be the tribute paid to the church of the future.

And what shall we say of the healing needed between labor unions and the returning service men, the healing between labor and capital, the healing needed in every country ravaged by war where the church should be on the job feeding body and soul?

When the church sends wheat to Greece, medicine and food to France, medical service to Italy, food for the millions starving in Bengal and in China, then the church is fulfilling its destiny as a healing ministry, though the food is not enough unless brotherhood goes with it.

Jesus stood as a center of loyalty pointing toward God. This is another holy purpose which the church of the future may serve in a world where loyalty has grown more and more diffuse. Like the Greeks of old, we worship many gods, the god of war, the god of pleasure, the god of money, the god of success, the god of science, the god of nationalism. In the midst of so many gods we need One God, and Jesus leads the way to that One God.

War cannot save us, it may lead to another war unless God is the victor. Pleasure is a false god because it turns to boredom and hardness of heart. Money is a hard master because it makes us slave to what it can buy; success it a god who often drops us down the distance we have climbed. Science builds new airplanes whose destructive capacity is enormous, but only goodwill among men can put those planes to good rather than evil uses. And nationalism is a god that already has seared the earth and killed its millions.

We need above all else a new devotion to the God above all the little gods. And when God arrives the half-gods go.

Let the church of the future call all men everywhere to give their deepest loyalty to the God of Jesus Christ, and then we may be saved, both personally and publicly.

The delegates voted in favor of the proposed union between the Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed denominations.

The church building project of the Asheboro Church was voted the support of the Conference Missionary Association at a session presided over by Rev. M. A. Pollard, president, the churches of the Conference being asked to receive a special offering for the project.

The 1948 session will be held at Pleasant Union Church, near Asheboro.

A LETTER FROM THE MODERATOR

As Moderator I have a deep "concern," as the Quaker would say, to emphasize just now, both to churches and to individuals, the tremendous urgency of the day in which we live. This is no time for conventional routine. The world is on fire with something more dangerous than war because it may lead to war but does not itself arouse the heroic sacrificial spirit which war awakens and which the makers of war count on and perversely use for tragic ends. Our age is in peril because of crass self-indulgence and ruthless materialistic exploitation by some, and because of the unscrupulous and diabolically clever propaganda of others, who rouse and play upon the prejudices of men and nations.

We are living in an age which desperately needs to meet its problems with patience and tact, with insight and understanding—above all with the healing spirit of forgiveness and invincible good will. Without these our problems cannot be solved. Unfortunately, the traditional use of these attitudes, while it exists inside the family to some extent, is hardly ever expected, or even felt to be possible, in the rough and tumble of political and economic, or racial and nationalistic, struggles. But a generation armed with atom bombs and other terrible weapons simply must learn the better way. We must replace suspicion, hatred, threats, antagonism and military conflict by the unconquerable and undiscourageable attitude of creative and self-sacrificing love. Caesar and Herod, Caiaphas and Pilate, have always used the ways of coercion, but those who follow Jesus must exemplify and spread abroad his spirit of loving service, non-violence and patient understanding rather than quarrelsomeness, resentment or revenge.

In other words the supreme need of the world is peace—a true peace which is no mere verbalism but is living and demonstrated in every relationship of life.

This places a tremendous responsibility upon the church. Let us go back to our pulpits and our Sunday School classes, our youth groups and church organizations, our homes and our daily work in the secular world with a supreme determination to trust and follow the Christ-like way of meeting and solving every human problem—that way and no other.

Let each of our churches, through its worship, its teaching and the flaming word of exhortation, say to government and business, to management and labor, to educator, scientist and ordinary citizen: These are the words that must govern life or we shall perish: honesty, fair-play, good-will, patience, creative industry, non-violence, forgiveness, cooperation, long-suffering and unselfish love!

How to burn this message into the consciences of the unawakened and indifferent, as well as the corrupt, the wicked and unscrupulous, is the supreme task of Christianity this year. The time is short. Nothing less than a moral and spiritual revolution in values, attitudes and objectives can save us. Already we are starting the old and well-known deadly rigamarole of diplomatic squabbling, antagonism and armament races, the stereotypes of hostility which lead toward another world war. The church must stop this descent to hell and point the way to heaven.

If we are to do this, we must have a church which is truly united in spirit. It is no time for sectarian rivalry or denominational exclusiveness. Souls are to be saved, not the Gothic architecture or the niceties of ritual. A world civilization, hell-bent for destruction, is to be confronted with its sins, summoned before the judgement seat of Christ and converted to the will of God. It is no time to be bickering about polity or sixteenth century theology. It is, on the contrary, a time which calls us to devoted practical Christian service such as is exemplified in our Post-war Emergency Program.

It is a great day, therefore, to be a member of the Christian Church and especially to be a Christian minister. To be a follower of Christ is to believe and live and, in some vital thrilling way, transmute to others the principles of last Judgement and the Prodigal Son, and crowning all, the spirit of the Cross. Jesus can save the world if He can find enough followers who have faith in his way of life and are determined to demonstrate it in this age—this age which has such tremendous possibilities for either good or evil. We need Christ desperately and we need Him now.

As your Moderator I wish that I could say this personally in every church—and in every organization of youth or older folk—and pray that it may be translated into living deeds until America feels the upsurge of a thrilling new united Christian purpose and dedication adequate to the crisis which confronts us.

Our Orphanage Superintendent

MR. CHARLES D. JOHNSTON

The coming of Thanksgiving naturally brings to the minds of members of Congregational Christian Churches of Virginia and North Carolina, and the Southeast, our Orphanage at Elon College. For many years the Orphanage has depended upon the Thanksgiving Offering for a considerable part of its support. We believe that our churches will be liberal with their offerings this year. And when we think of the Christian Orphanage, we just can't help thinking of its Superintendent, too. "Uncle Charlie" Johnston has been the beloved Superintendent of the Orphanage for more than thirty years, having given up his position as Register of Deeds of Alamance County, to come to the Orphanage in 1916. That must have been a hard decision for him to make, for at that time the future of the institution seemed anything but bright. But he accepted the challenge, and those who have followed the history of the Orphanage know with what results. May he be spared yet a long time to serve in this work of love.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Rev. Paul S. Kershner of Cleveland, Ohio, has been called to succeed Dr. Noble Elderkin at First Church, Akron.

Dr. Frank S. Lewis preached last Sunday evening at Rosemont for Rev. H. S. Council who suffered a temporary illness.

Funeral services for Mr. E. L. Beale, an active layman in our Franklin Church, were conducted Monday by Rev. Robert Kimball.

Dr. Warren H. Denison conducted Stewardship Institutes for three weeks in North Dakota and is now beginning a seven-week schedule in Colorado.

The centenary of a beloved hymn, "Abide With Me," and the death of its author, Rev. Henry Francis Lyte, was observed in many churches last Sunday.

Rev. Aaron N. Meckel of Braintree, Mass., author of A New Day for Evangelism, has accepted a call to the First Church in Jacksonville, Fla. He succeeds Dr. John P. Jockinsen.

Rev. T. Fred Wright writes that there will be home-coming services at Liberty, Vance, Church on Sunday, November 30. All former pastors and members, and friends of the church are invited to attend.

Rev. Ben Joe Earp writes that eleven members were received into the First Congregational Christian Church of High Point, North Carolina, on November 9—seven on confession and four by transfer.

Reverend S. L. Johnson, writer of the article on "Adoption," is minister of the Park Manor Congregational Church in Chicago. The article was read and approved by Mr. Warren Thompson of the Illinois Children's Home and Aid Society.

Mr. Tom Radabaugh died in his home at West Milton, Ohio, November 3. Mr. Radabaugh had been associated with the Christian Publishing Association in Dayton for twenty years. He served the West Milton Church as chairman of the Official Board and superintendent of the Sunday school.

THE VIRGILINA GROUP.

During the month of October, we have had a week's meeting at each of the four churches in the Virgilina Group. Those ministers assisting the pastor of this group were Dr. W. E. Wisseman at Union, Rev. R. A. Whitten at Liberty, Rev. K. D. Register at Lebanon, and Rev. W. J. Andes at Hebron. Fifteen of the twenty-one new members received into the churches were on their confession of faith. Though some of the services were "rained out," the meetings in general were well attended and entertained a fine spirit.

This group of churches was accustomed to having their annual meeting in the mid-summer. Though the fall series was unusual for them, they co-operated nicely, and little, if any, difference was observed in the numbers attending and the spirit manifested.

CONVENTION SUPERINTENDENT'S HOME.

The Convention Committee on the Superintendent's Home reported to the Executive Board of the Convention at its mid-year meeting.

Plans for the building and bids for construction were presented. The committee was instructed to proceed immediately with the development of a plan for financing the project and raising the money with which to build. The house which is proposed is planned by Standard Homes. It is dignified, adequate and well arranged for the purposes which such a home would need to serve the Convention. Plans for financing the project will be forthcoming, but in the meantime it will be helpful if all of us will keep the matter on our minds and hearts—making plans to cooperate in the plans for realizing this worthy and desperately needed goal. The committee, in the meantime, will welcome any suggestions which will help us to develop a plan of finance agreeable to all our churches, for, after all, this is a matter which should interest our churches—and every individual.

The Thank Offering from the women of the Convention will be a great help to the project, but we must not expect the women to build a home which is to serve the Convention for years to come. Many individuals will want to help see the project completed. Our churches and Sunday schools, as well as adult classes and departments will get a joy out of helping to make possible a roof over the head of the family we choose to represent us and our institutions and enterprises. We should take the same pride in this project as a convention that a wide-a-wake church takes in providing its minister a place to live. Please think with us on plans for adequately and promptly financing this convention-wide project. The house, of course, will be deeded to the Convention and will stand through the years to come as a home for our servant and his family. What have you to suggest?

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

NEWS NOTES.

By WM. T. SCOTT, Supt.

Rev. Ellis D. Clark has been called to Berea (Norfolk) succeeding Rev. B. H. Watkins who becomes full time pastor of Union (Southampton).

Rev. Guy H. Veazey has taken up his work as pastor of Long's Chapel and Belew Creek Churches. Mr. Veazey formerly served in the Valley Conference.

Dr. W. W. Sloan is the new pastor of Shallow Ford Christian Church. Dr. Sloan is a member of the Elon College faculty in the Department of Christian Education.

Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds, head of the Department of Christian Education of Elon College has accepted a call to become pastor of the Providence Memorial Church, Graham.

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor of Bethlehem and Apples Chapel Churches for the past five years, has accepted the call of Palm Street, Greensboro. He will take up his new work February 1, 1948.

Friends of Dr. Archie H. Hook will regret to learn of his serious injury in an automobile accident near Dayton, Washington, on November 2. Dr. Hook suffered eight broken ribs and a broken hip. Dr. Hook is a graduate of Elon College, a brother of Professor Marshall W. Hook, Elon College, N. C., and is Superintendent of the Congregational Christian Conference of the State of Washington. Prior to his going to the superintendency a year ago he was a most successful pastor of our church at Troy, Ohio, for more than ten years. He held pastorates in the Southern Convention during his student days at Elon College. He is recovering at Brinning Memorial Hospital, Dayton, Washington.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, the able secretary of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference for twenty-five years, relinquished this position at the session held at Bethlehem Church November 11-12. Dr. Harrell has rendered distinguished service to his conference and it was deeply regretted to have him give up this post. He has been a valued friend of all, especially to young ministers and inexperienced officers. Not only has he served his Conference, but he has served as president of the Southern Convention and has served on many important boards and committees. All of these offices he has held with distinction. He is pastor of the Congregational Christian Church of Durham, N. C., where he has served for more than twenty-five years.

If your church has not "paid in full" all apportionments for the conference year just closed, why not send these payments to the Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., at once? Your denomination needs funds with which to continue the great work of the Mission Board, Christian Education, Superannuation, the Orphanage, the College, and all the other interests. One church did a noble thing recently. It went back over the record of its payments during the "lean days of the depression," checked up on its contributions to apportionment, and sent on Conference and Convention Apportionment this year enough to pay everything "in full" since 1931. This good example might well be followed by other churches. There is money available today. Consider the needs of your denomination's interests today. How does your church stand on apportionment payments for the past fifteen years?

THE NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The 122nd annual session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference met with Bethlehem Christian Church, Altamahaw, N. C., November 11-12. The sessions were well attended and reports indicate a good year by the churches. Rev. Joe A. French, president, and his associates, prepared an interesting program and which was well executed. Guest speakers included Rev. and Mrs. James M. Hess, missionaries to India; Rev. Ernest J. Arnold, executive secretary of the North Carolina Council of Churches; Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, pastor of Mt. Pleasant Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., and chairman of the Executive Committee of the General Council. Following Dr. Buschmeyer's address concerning the work of the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction the Conference received a liberal offering for the rehabilitation of Europe and the delegates pledged themselves to support this Christian work in a larger way.

The Committee on Social Action, headed by Dr. H. Shelton Smith, urged the support of the Marshall Plan and the establishment of justice for all. The Committee on Evangelism headed by Dr. L. E. Smith, recommended a Conference-wide campaign on evangelism during Lent in 1948. Mr. Charles D. Johnston told of progress at the Christian Orphanage. Mrs. William E. Wissemann reported on the work of Richard and Dorothy Jackson of our Shaowu Mission. Mr. W. T. Dunn reported on laymen's work and Mrs. W. W. Tate on the Woman's Missionary Conferences.

The proposed union of the Congregational Christian Churches with the Evangelical and Reformed Church was presented by round table discussion, composed of Superintendent Wm. T. Scott; Rev. John Peeler and Dr. H. A. Fesperman of the Evangelical and Reformed Church; and Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer. The Conference voted enthusiastically in favor of the union.

The newly elected officers for the coming year are: Rev. Kenneth D. Register, president; Rev. W. Millard Stevens, vice-president; Rev. Wm. J. Andes, secretary; Mr. Russell V. Powell, treasurer.

Rev. J. L. Neese and his people provided magnificently for the needs of the delegates with bountiful meals and homes. The 1948 session will be held at the Lynchburg Church.

TO CHURCHES AND PASTORS OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

Dear Friends:

Elon College is facing the dire necessity of completing the new powerhouse and installing new heating equipment immediately! Tragedy would befall our school should the present heating equipment break down—a real possibility as cold weather comes! This would mean the College would have to close! Nothing could be more costly to our Church. The 800 students (400 veterans) would have to go home!

"This must not be allowed to happen!" we say. "Go ahead and complete the powerhouse and install the new heating equipment!"—"With what?" President Smith and the Board of Trustees will ask. "Borrow the money!" someone will say. The fact is that the College could not bor-

THE THANKSGIVING OFFERING FOR THE ORPHANAGE

The support of the Christian Orphanage is a manifestation of practical Christianity. Assistance of partial and complete orphans comes naturally and inevitably into the sphere of our Christian responsibility. This cooperative enterprise of our Church brings the "abundant life" about which Christ preached within reach of a group who otherwise might be destitute. Let us continue our gifts and our prayers for the Christian Orphanage in order that these little ones may grow "in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man."

INCLUSIVE THANKSGIVING

During the Thanksgiving season we are reminded of our many blessings which we enjoy here in America. We think reverently and gratefully of our fertile farms and abundant agriculture. We realize that we are among God's elect, and are the constant recipients of his bounty.

And yet we cannot discharge our debt of gratitude by bowing down at our national shrines. Our forbears and much of our culture, including the Bible, came from other lands. Across the water there are thousands, yea millions, for whom Christ died. It is not our heavenly Father's will that any of these little ones should perish. They, too, become the wards of our Christian conscience and American abundance. Our constant temptation is to be rigorously selective and exclusive in our benevolence, then settle down in smug complacency. The parable of Dives and Lazarus will be reenacted in thousands of American homes this Thanksgiving. One of our ministers preached a heart-searching sermon on the theme: "How Much Is 'Inasmuch'?"

"I WAS IN JAIL, AND . . ."

The Virginia State Board of Corrections has started compiling and releasing month-to-month statistics on jailings. The report, summarized by Francis Churchill Jones, executive secretary of the board, indicates that "jail commitments during August were much higher than comparable incarcerations for any other month" since the board began compiling statistics.

In August 9,548 persons were sent to jails or jail farms. This boosted the total for the first two months of the current fiscal year, July-August, to 18,054, compared with 17,194 in the like period of 1946.

These were grouped as: drunkenness, 7,492; drunk and disorderly, 1,075, and disorderly, 1,222. Combined they represented an increase of 686 cases, or 7.54 per cent over the comparable months of last year.

Such grim facts, which touch countless homes and heartstrings, constitute a reprimand and a challenge to the church. These incarcerations bear mute testimony to the fact that our program of Christian education and evangelism is woefully inadequate. Unless we intensify our efforts and improve our methods, others will follow in rapid succession. Visit these unfortunate ones daily with your prayers. Resolve that our society shall be undergirded with a continuous program of Christian education which is both preventive and corrective in its relation to crime.

PHILIPPINE MISSIONS

Protestant foreign missions boards with work in the Philippines were urged to file no claims for indemnification for war-time property losses to be paid out of confiscated assets of Japanese firms and individuals, nor the supplementary appropriation of $400,000,000 U. S. funds appropriated by Congress, in an action passed unanimously by the Philippine Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America in session at New York.

The Committee also recommended that individual missionaries who suffered property losses be advised by their boards to forego the filing of claims under the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946, and that boards undertake to recompense individual missionaries insofar as their available funds will allow.

The action was announced by the committee chairman, Dr. Albert Elmer A. Fridell, of New York, Far Eastern Secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, who, explaining the conviction behind this self-denying action, stated that the membership of the committee was united in feeling that Christian agencies which are deeply concerned for the economic as well as the spiritual rehabilitation of Japan should not benefit by depriving of their assets individual Japanese who had no part in deciding national policy.

Joining in the recommendation were secretaries of foreign mission boards of the Northern Baptist Convention, the Presbyterian Church in the USA, the Methodist Church, the Protestant Episcopal Church, all with headquarters in New York, the Congregational Christian Churches, headquarters in Boston, the Disciples of Christ, headquarters in Indianapolis, and the Evangelical United Brethren, headquarters in Dayton, Ohio.

Surely there must be some place where the great minds of Shelley, Homer and Spinoza go after death. The denial of immortality does not square with intelligence. Adolph S. Ochs, shortly before his death, said that he believed that he was more than an animal and that he did not believe that this life is the end. Our bodies change and in the end crumble. It is a house of clay. But inside there is a spiritual duplicate. As we have borne the image of the earthly, so shall we bear the image of the heavenly.

Baby for Adoption

By SAMUEL LAWRENCE JOHNSON

"Next," thought Mr. Holton, "I wonder what will be next." He had returned from his vacation about two weeks previously and one thing after another—problems of all sorts had been piling in on him so fast that at times he almost gasped for breath. Among other things he had two weddings, with pre-marital counseling sessions, three funerals, and a dreadful mix-up over another wedding.

For the last three months he had been burdened with incompetent secretarial help, and the woman who was now supposed to be helping him had failed to make a proper checkup on a date chosen for the Barnes-Olsen nuptials and there was a conflict in the use of the church rooms for October 10. A church group had some months before reserved the main hall for that same evening with their program completely planned. Mr. Holton had found himself caught between the Pallen Society, having first right to the use of the rooms, and the Barnes-Olsen aggregation blaming him for the whole situation.

"At last," and he sighed, "It looks as if that's all settled. Now something pleasant to think about would be like a tonic to my soul." Then, as if the angels who look after harassed ministers were reading his mind, the phone rang:

"Mr. Holton?" said a charming feminine voice.

"Yes, this is he."

"Mr. Holton, we are going to adopt a baby. I'm sure he will be the sweetest little thing in the world, and you know how we have wanted a baby—we are just too thrilled for words—isn't it wonderful?"

"It must be, but please slow down for a moment—at least long enough to tell me who this is."

"Oh my goodness, I'm sorry, I'm so excited that I'm forgetting to be polite. This is Jane Crowman. May Jack and I come over and talk with you about it?"

"Certainly, Jane, I'm very happy for you, I'll be delighted to see you. When will you call?"

"Right now, if we may."

Twenty-five minutes later the Crowmans entered the minister's study. They were a fine couple. Jane was thirty, five foot five, with bright red hair framing a beautiful face. The column of freckles running across the bridge of her nose seemed to twinkle along with her green eyes whenever she smiled—which was a good deal of the time.

On more than one occasion Mr. Holton had remarked to his wife that he completely approved of Jane Crowman. Mrs. Holton was no little amused—for she knew her husband's general interest in red hair—in fact, she jokingly insisted that it was her own red hair and not herself that Mr. Holton had married.

Jack, thirty-six, and a graduate in chemical engineering was a tall, blond, handsome looking chap with distinct Nordic features. He had knocked at the door and stepped inside to allow his wife to pass. Coming into the study he grinned roundly and extended his hand to his friend.

"It's so kind of you to see us Mr. Holton. I guess we just wanted to talk to someone about our good fortune. The thought of having a kid of our own just has us in high heaven."

"Yes, Doctor Frederickson told me yesterday that he knew of an unmarried mother who didn't have enough money to pay her hospital bills who would be willing to let us have the baby if we would take care of everything for her, isn't that just wonderful?"

"Perhaps."

"What do you mean, perhaps? I thought from how Jane acted after speaking with you on the telephone that you would be enthusiastic about our having a youngster."

"Yes, Jack, I would be—but I was just wondering if it will have red hair?"

"Red hair? What's that got to do with it?" demanded Jane. There was a moment of strained silence.

"I think I see, Honey, and it's something I hadn't thought of at all. The truth is we don't know a thing about the girl whose baby we are contracting for—she might be dark, black hair, black eyes and all that; you with your red hair and light skin, and me with my white hair and pale complexion that I've been kidded about all my life. Gee! It would be strange to introduce a dark youngster as my child. I would have to be making explanations all the time."

"I'm going to call the doctor right away; may I please use your phone?"

"Ask him about the youngster's father, too, while you are at it, Jane," said Jack.

Jane talked to the doctor for a few moments, and a look of consternation spread across her face as she listened to the description of the mother of the child she had thought to adopt. She turned from the phone and with tears streaming down her cheeks. Nothing was known about the father of the child and the mother was of swarthy complexion, entirely different from either Jack or herself. Neither one had stopped to consider the many problems involved in the successful adoption of a child.

However, it was not until the minister outlined some of the reasons for a couple knowing something of the physical and mental traits of a child, and had told them how it was impossible to tell whether a newly born child was blind, deaf, or mentally incapable, that Jane and Jack realized how closely they had come to making a grave mistake.

Said the minister: "And remember, my friends, that actually an adoption in the eyes of the law is more binding than marriage. A marriage can be dissolved by a divorce, but an adoption sticks. I don't often give advice, but I do think it would be wise for you to consult some legitimate, licensed agency in your search for a new little Crowman."

"How does one do that?" queried Jane.

"You can learn of the licensed agencies by calling the state department of Public Welfare; or, if you wish, I could suggest one or two."

"Jane and I would like for you to suggest one, Mr. Holton. Won't you tell us just what to do, and go with us to interview whoever you think we should. We almost made a mistake because of our ignorance, and we don't want to take another chance. Here we are both college graduates, too."

"Yes, I'll be glad to do whatever I can. That's another thing, Jack—will you want your new youngster to go to college?"

"Sure thing."

"Remember to tell the worker at the agency about your hopes, for they'll want to find a child that will have the capacity for college."

"Can they estimate a baby's intelligence?"

"Yes, by the time a child has reached six months tests can be given which will pretty well indicate the ability and the mental possibilities of a youngster—that is, providing it has normal surroundings in which to live."

"That cannot be done until the child is six months old, Mr. Holton?" inquired Jane as she leaned forward absorbed in what was being unfolded.

"No, a child cannot be given adequate tests until then. That is one of the sad things about the number of children being adopted through the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Across the street from our church and parsonage is St. Paul's. It is a beautiful church, made more beautiful still by the lovely lawn, trees, and shrubs surrounding it. How often I have watched the children coming from school in twos and threes, and singly, strolling across its greenward. Yes, just ruining the grass, say some. While I hear their sweet laughter, their shrill calling to one another, and see their occasional gay prank. What happy days! What a country, where its youth can be so carefree! Now and then you see a couple of lads walking quickly and hear the low mumble of some intent discussion—and you wonder if tomorrow is not being made.

Just a block away is their school. On either side of their pathways are lovely homes. By the side of the church is a brick walk. Home and school and church . . . and I watch these youngsters from my breakfast room window. They should walk the brick-lain path their elders have made for them! But they make paths of their own! Perhaps it is just as well. Nor will their children walk exactly in the paths they make, either. But, may the paths they walk, as well as those which we walk, have ever about them the benedictions of the church, lifting its tower toward heaven, and with the shadow of the cross, from the top of the steeple, etched by the sun upon the way below. May the doors of our churches be inviting, and may they be joyfully entered by whole families in sweet fellowship together. Let me conclude with my own lines about St. Paul's:

Honored is thy towering steeple
High above the street below;
Pointing to our God above us,
Watching o'er the way we go.

Happy be thy carefree children
Laughing as they make their way,
Gaily from their day of schooling
For the coming glad new day.

Pleasant be their pathways winding
Round the church their fathers blit;
May its kindly benedictions
Keep them from their elders' guilt.

Gracious be thy ministrations,
With yon cross held high above;
Pointing ever these our children
To the God of truth and love!

BUILDING WELL.

It was the good fortune of the writer to have the fellowship for a week with the good people of our Liberty Church in Halifax County, Virginia, early in October this year. Rev. Mark W. Andes is the pastor of the Virgilina group of which Liberty is a part. Although Mark and his wife have been located only a short time in this pastorate, he and Catherine have made many friends among the people whom they serve. The people of the church are to be congratulated in having these fine, consecrated and well trained leaders to work with them in Christian service. Consecrated, as I believe them to be, I predict much progress in kingdom building under their leadership.

While visiting in the homes of the people of Liberty Church I observed there was always one dominant thought expressed in beautiful and glowing terms. It manifested a loyalty to a cause of which the founder might well be proud and point with pride to its achievement. It seemed to live in the heart of the folk, rather than merely the utterance of words. For back of the words was a more priceless possession, a love for one who had been their leader through a long period of time, even from the beginning of the Church, the honored name, Charles E. Newman, founder of the church, and who built well when he laid the foundation of this lovely rural church, Liberty, Halifax County, Va. If there were no other living monument to the memory of the labors of our dearly beloved friend, Charles E. Newman, than just this one church which he built and so faithfully served through many years as its pastor, this would be a worthy tribute to the greatness of his work for the Master. For out there, in that lovely open country, contented farmers live and labor through the week, and on the Lord's Day meet to worship in the sanctuary where they find strength for their spiritual needs and discover a deeper sense of life's meaning.

As I drove away from the community, with a wealth of memories in my heart, inspirations from the associations with the Christian people there and a vision of what this fine church may mean through the years ahead in kingdom building, I could not but return in fancy to the humble beginning of the church, from which there seemed to spread a light, reaching across our dark world. It was, and is, the projected shadow of a great man—Charles E. Newman, builder of Liberty Church, who built well for the Kingdom of Christ.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

We had a good session. The attendance was about as large as usual. I have not completed the statistical tabulation. But several churches have not reported. I have written to them and only two have responded. Then what must I do? Make out the reports and show all these blank spaces?

The reports of the various committees were read. There was some discussion, constructively, on the Home Missions report. A resolution was presented to the conference as a result of the discussion which was to the effect that a Conference Missionary Association should be organized. I think it would be a good thing. Every bit of the funds we collect, except that of the Conference Fund (that is small compared to its need) goes out of the conference. I am wondering if we will undertake such an organization.

There was not a word said in connection with the report on Evangelism. I don't mean a recommendation to increase the membership of the churches a certain per cent. I mean an act that would deepen the spiritual life of our people. There is one thing we all know and, that is, one can not teach of the things that are spiritual except he be spiritual.

There was no discussion on the report on Education except the address of Dr. L. E. Smith. It was good. But I feel we can not get into the hearts of the people the things that are needed when we depend on the President alone. I read an editorial in THE CHRISTIAN SUN last night to the effect that we need for the College loyalty, money and love. More of our people would love and support the College if they could have the proper impressions, for I do know that all who do support the College are not wrong in the act. The cause of education has, and does, contribute an unlimited amount of good to the church. We need Elon College.

These reports I have mentioned are vastly important. Properly attended to, or executed, would cure a great many of our "ills."

THE CHURCH'S CHANCE.

"The field is the world." "The fields are white unto the harvest." The Master called men unto Him, made them apostles, and sent them out to be His witnesses, to establish His kingdom in the hearts of men everywhere. He made it plain to them that they were to go to the ends of the earth, that they were to make disciples of all nations, baptize them in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, that He was depending on them and no one else, that He would equip them with irresistible power if they would only believe and trust Him. In faith they accepted the commission and found great joy in preaching Christ wherever they went. The blessings of God attended their efforts. Many were saved and the Church was organized and abides to this day.

The Church faced a great task then. It faces a great task today. The apostles bore witness and led the way. The ministers must bear witness today and lead the way.

The world is in a chaotic condition, wounded by war, and perishing for the want of food, shelter, and clothing. People are bewildered, not knowing which way to turn. Bereft of home, of family, of friends, of business, and of everything that brings physical comfort and protection from those things that threaten life. In America our state is different, but our responsibilities are overwhelmingly great. The people of the world are tired of war. They want no more of it and yet the war clouds hover over us with all their disaster and horror. Wherever you go people are whispering the possibilities of war. They say that war now would be the end of civilization as we know it. The world's only hope is in God. All people want peace but peace purchased by war is cheap and unenduring. The peace that will pass human understanding and will abide is the peace that comes from God. The Church has never faced a greater task, and at the same time a greater opportunity than today. If God is given to the world, the Church must do the giving. This is the Church's mission. It is its only justification for existence. It must begin where it is and go to the ends of the earth, but it can't go in doubt and with all kinds of question-ings in its heart. It must believe and know that God is, that His grace is sufficient, and that His rewards will be abundant.

If God's ministers, the pastors of our churches, could be conscious of the responsibilities that rest upon us and of the open doors that confront us, conviction would follow vision and our witness would be powerful and universal. We need to tarry at "Jerusalem," at our own homes, at the altar of our own church until the power is lent us for our mission. Then the voice of the Church will be heard in the world and the kingdom in its power will come. Much depended upon the apostles in the beginning days of the Church. Much and more depends upon the ministers in these critical times, both for the Church and for the world. If we could realize the extent of these responsibilities and the results of our failure or our endeavor, we would arise without delay and be about our Master's business. This is the Church's chance and our chance for the Church. May God move upon our hearts that victory may come in his name.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

Winter is here. The weather is most unfavorable. Buildings not properly heated are dangerous to health and and to life.

At the college we are doing our best to keep the buildings warm and we are succeeding fairly well. We must provide facilities that our buildings may be made entirely comfortable for the students enrolled at the College. Money provided for this improvement was of necessity used to increase our endowment. Since the money in hand was advanced for this impending necessity, I am sure that the churches of the Convention will be glad to send payments as they find it possible on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund that this advance of funds may be replaced, thus enabling the College to proceed with its new heating plant at the greatest possible speed.

A few of our churches have responded for which we are grateful. Won't you please, my brother pastor and churches, lend a helping hand in this hour of need. Your contributions will mean much to the cause that is dear to our hearts. We need to raise $40,000 through the churches as quickly as possible.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It certainly is encouraging to listen to reports from other departments in the Church and note how the Church has gone far beyond its apportionments for these causes, and also to listen to plans for the coming year which call for, in some instances, more than double the usual apportionments. This is indicative of progress and is hailed with hope and gratitude. But it is a bit discouraging to find opposition to any increase whatsoever in apportionments for the College. Could we remind ourselves that all agencies of the Church depend upon leadership and upon trained leadership in this day? The College is our only institution for the training of our leaders and the one institution to which we look for a trained leadership. How can the Church make its progress without the College, but how can the College do its work without adequate support? The officials of our Southern Convention need to ponder these questions, and the Church would be interested in their answers. We have a splendid report this week, carrying the report of the last session to be held this conference year. The College is still more than $1,000 short of the small apportionment made for its support.

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT SHAOWU.

The Shaowu was founded in 1876 and was a station of the Foochow Mission until 1918 when it became known as the Shaowu Mission. Revolutionary disturbance in 1926 interfered with institutional work which was largely suspended until this year. However, the church and primary school work continued all through the years.

Thanks to the Southern Convention and the missionary personnel supported by it the work has been reopened with Rev. and Mrs. Richard Jackson stimulating the expansion of the church and with Dr. Ed Riggs and Miss Louise Whitaker, R.N., working in the hospital.

Our American Board property is scattered in Shaowu in several places, but the part where the missionaries are now working is just inside of the north gate of the city where the Jackson residence and the primary school surrounded by walls are located on one side of the street. Directly across the street is the hospital. The hospital is just as closely connected with the mission as any of our hospitals are. With its own Board of Managers which includes Richard Jackson, the hospital is almost entirely self-supporting as far as finances are concerned. It is a Christian hospital, in name and in fact, insofar as the missionary and Chinese leadership are able to make it so.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL ACTION OF N. C. & VA. CONFERENCE.

Because the coming twelve months, and especially the next four, will be crucial in determining the possibility of world peace and economic stability, our report is confined to a consideration of what is known as the Marshall plan of economic aid to Europe. In the eyes of the beleaguered peoples of western Europe, this is their one last hope of restoring a desperately sick economic organism. America's decision in regard to the execution of this plan is therefore of fateful importance.

In a historic address at Harvard University last spring, Secretary of State Marshall invited the nations of Europe jointly to take the leadership in determining the amount of economic aid that they would absolutely require as a whole in order to restore their productive capacity, and then to lay that burden of need before the American government. In good faith representatives of the European nations assembled as Paris to see what could be done cooperatively to comply with Secretary Marshall's sympathetic overture. Unfortunately, internal dissension, provoked largely by Russia and her national satellites, prevented cooperative action on a total European scale. Nevertheless, sixteen nations succeeded in making a collective analysis of their economic needs. It is upon the basis of their requests, whittled down to a minimum by the State Department, that the financial program of the Marshall plan has been evolved. The plan calls for American assistance to the extent of $15,081,000,000 over a period of four years.

Our Congress meets to reach a decision on this far-reaching proposal. Candid realism requires us to recognize that the Marshall plan will probably encounter no small amount of opposition in one form or another. The European picture, indeed, is so black that few Congressmen who are not absolutely irresponsible will dare take the position that no aid whatever is necessary; yet a considerable number of them may try to reduce the amount of aid to a comparative trickle, to delay action until it will be too late to save the European economic order from irretrievable collapse, or to impose hamstringing limitations on the method of using the money provided. In other words, the tactics of the obstructionists will be cleverly designed to conceal their real desire to undermine the ultimate effectiveness of the Marshall program. Some, doubtless, will argue that our tax burden must be reduced; others, that a large amount of aid to Europe will be an overdrain upon our own economy; and still others, that the execution of the Marshall plan will throw out of control an already over-inflated domestic market. The unfortunate fact is that there may be a grain of truth in these and other claims that will be advanced by our Congressmen.

In the heat and turbulence of debate, the public as well as Congressmen may easily lose sight of the paramount issue: What will happen both to Europe and to America if the Marshall plan is not adopted? This is the sixty-four dollar question. It must not be obscured or side-stepped in the din of argument and invective, or else a later generation may well accuse our leaders of atrocious blindness. If a constructive answer is not given to this question, our most competent observers predict at least the following consequences: (1) Europe's rapidly sagging economy will dissolve in a welter of chaos, and its impact will veer America toward ultimate depression; (2) the last vestiges of democracy in Europe will be destroyed in tortuous battle between Fascist and Communist factions; (3) a whole generation will become hostage to disease and death; and (4) the last stable elements of a tottering continental Christendom will be liquidated.

We shall make no attempt in this report to elaborate the more detailed meaning of these effects, except to remark that the current tobacco crisis in North Carolina, in which our

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

WINCHESTER.

On Tuesday evening, October 14, thirty members of the Winchester Women's Missionary Society met at the parsonage for their regular meeting. After a short devotional it ceased to be a regular meeting and became instead a very special one. Mrs. Whitten reviewed the book, India at the Threshold, which needless to say was well received and enjoyed.

Then came the climax! We collected pocket books which had been prepared in response to a suggestion found in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Thirty in all! They were packed with articles ranging from pins to a child's length of new woolen material. All of these go from New Windsor direct to our Christian friends in Europe who are not so well off as we. Sending these small items, which to us are so commonplace and to them such every day necessities, afforded us great pleasure. We feel it has been a blessing to our Society and would like to hear of others who will also make the same effort.

JOHNSON'S GROVE.

As we come to the close of the year we, the Missionary Society of Johnston's Grove, feel as we look back that we have much to be proud of.

We met in homes for our monthly meetings, with a program and at these meetings the fellowship has meant so much to us.

We were represented at the World Day of Prayer at Bethel Friends Church and at our Spring Rally at Suffolk.

Mrs. Robert Kimball (our pastor's wife) gave an instructive talk on work in a small church, at our March meeting.

Mrs. Winslow Council ably reviewed the book, India at the Threshold, and Mr. Kimball taught the Bible study, The Divine Fatherhood. We enjoyed these very much.

Cards, visits, and trays were sent the sick and shut-ins.

We gave a Thank Offering in December and August for the Jacksons.

While our society is so few in number and unable to help the various missions of the church, we have adopted the Jacksons for our project and are trying to do all we can to help them in their wonderful work.

We hope to do and give more for the Master's work in the new year.

MT. ZION.

The Ladies' Missionary Society of Mt. Zion Church has concluded another very successful year.

We had an excellent Candlelighting Thank Offering in November.

We gave a number of suppers to make money for our building fund. Also put song-book racks on the backs of our benches, bought new song books and communion glasses, and sent flowers and cards to the sick and shut-ins.

We observed the World Day of Prayer and also Easter Sunrise Service.

Rev. W. W. Snyder, our pastor, took seventeen of his young people on a very interesting tour to the Valley of Virginia, including the Skyline Drive, Natural Bridge and one of the caverns. The hospitality and courtesy shown us in his father's home and by his home church was much appreciated.

WORLD COMMUNITY DAY OBSERVED AT UNION.

We decided to try something new this year in having a World Community Day service.

We invited the neighboring churches and although the response was not great, we feel that we have made a start toward observing this day as we do the World Day of Prayer.

Our material didn't come in time to pack the boxes, but we plan to take care of that at the circle meetings this week. We did take an offering for food and milk.

DOT REGISTER.

Mrs. Register sent a note along with her article, and I would like to quote from her letter, since it expresses so well the way I feel about the Woman's Page:

"For several years, I have felt that if the societies would send in a short item when the society had a special meeting or did something special that our Woman's Page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN would be more interesting. When we wait until the close of the year and try to write a summary of what's been done through the whole year it loses something."

It is hard to be enthusiastic about things if we wait a long time after they happen before we write them up. When your society does something unusual or outstanding, write it up and send it in so that we may read about the news while it is fresh and while you are still enthusiastic about it. I would like to have small items of news, too, even if it is only a sentence or two about a person or a happening. You might be interested in the following items which I have collected:

The Greensboro, First, Church received a Thank Offering of around $150.00, after a very effective talk by Mrs. O. H. Paris.

—o—

Antioch Church in the Valley recently held their Thank Offering service, with the whole church in attendance, and received an offering of something over $80.00.

—o—

The Happy Home Missionary Society recently sponsored an Apron Party, at which they cleared $200.00 to be used in helping build the new parsonage which they have started.

—o—

The Winston-Salem Church is planning a joint meeting with the women of the Memorial Evangelical and Reformed Church here in January, with the study book, Committed Unto Us, being reviewed. Dr. Reynolds is to give the Bible study in May.

TRIED AND TESTED.

Some of the armchair convictions I had before I went to China as a missionary of our Congregational Christian Churches were very good; they still hold. I would like to repeat them just as I would report an experiment in the laboratory. I tried them; they work, and I pass them on.

1. All the people around the world are essentially the same.

2. In a world where we are all closely knit together, we all stand or fall together.

3. There is no solution for any of the world's problems except in men.

4. The way of love works.

5. The way of love is the way of a cross.

6. God gives adequate strength for every need.—Congressman Walter Judd.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

No one knows when the first Thanksgiving really was. Not in America, not in England, nor in France, but maybe in Palestine. Long before Jesus was was a boy, the people gave of their grain and fruits to the people who had none, and thanked the Father for what they had.

What were some of the ways these people celebrated their Thanksgiving? First, they would gather from the fields the wheat, the barley and the grapes. After they had gathered all they chose the finest and carried a portion of it to the temple where the priest received and blessed it.

Second, the Palestinian people brought together all the fruits and grain that they had grown and took parts of it to the tents or houses of neighbors who had only a little or none at all.

These people of long ago even had a law of thanksgiving. When they had much, they allowed others to come to their fields and pick up what was left. In the book of Ruth in the Old Testament of our Bible, you may read about Ruth who went to the field of Boaz to get grain for her and Naomi. You may read about thanksgiving in Exodus 23:14, 16, too.

In America, the first people to give thanks to the Heavenly Father for food were the Pilgrims who were founders of the Congregational Church of which we are a part. Next week I will tell you about them.

* * *

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman who is the Superintendent of Children in the Women's Convention of our Church has sent the following list of books. She also says that Miss Elizabeth Chicoine at Elon College, N. C., has some missionary study books and will sell them to you or to your teacher.

The Bible Goes Round the World.—No story of fiction is more interesting or more thrilling than the true story of how the Bible has gone round the world! This book, or collection of books, is today our best seller and has ended encircled the globe. Men, on horseback and on foot, on bus and boat and plane, have carried this book which is a record of the best thoughts and noblest ideals of the Hebrew people, to every land and every clime.

This year the children of our churches will be using this theme for their mission study. Most churches have perhaps already secured the literature for this study, but just in case some churches have not ordered their books we list them below:

Around the World With the Bible by Gertrude J. Rinden (cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents). For grades 4, 5, 6.

My Story About the Bible by Mabel Niedermeyer (cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents). For grades 1, 2, 3.

Stories of the Book of Books by Grace W. McGraven (cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents). For leaders to tell.

A Junior Teacher's Guide on The Bible Goes Round the World—35c.

A Primary Teacher's Guide on The Bible Goes Round the World—

Maps—Picture map: "The Bible in Many Lands" (work map accompanied by cut-outs), 60c.

Friendship map: "The Bible in All the World" (map in four colors), 50c.

Every church in our fellowship should secure these materials and use them with the children of the church. Many are the ways in which this may be done—in Junior Missionary Societies, in Sunday School, in Junior Church, in Daily Vacation Bible School, in Week-Day School of Religion. The first step is to find someone in your church keenly interested in children, and equally as interested in missions. Perhaps you are that person in your church! If so, do something about it!

TEACH YOUR CHILD TO BE A GOOD LOSER.

By RUTH PECK MCLEOD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Dad, you'll let Harry win all the games, won't you?" suggested an indulgent mother to her father, when he spoke of playing checkers with her son as soon as the boy returned from doing an errand. "He's so little."

"I'll do nothing of the sort, Helen," he answered. "It's all right to let a youngster win some of the games, because it would be too discouraging should he lose every time; but to let him win every game would be even worse, for that would give him a false idea about life."

"Why, I should never have succeeded as an engineer if I had not been taught at early age to be a good loser. Remember, Helen, my mother was left a widow with a big family. Each of us eventually won his way in the world largely because Mother had taught us to be good losers.

"If Harry were to be allowed to win day after day, in spite of poor playing, he would stop making an effort to study his moves. There would be no incentive to acquire skill—in fact, the games would cease to have value for him. Losing as a result of unwise moves makes the player more determined to play carefully, so as to win the next time. I'll have no part in causing a grandchild of mine to become indolent through false successes," finished her father firmly.

There is a regrettable tendency on the part of many parents to shield a child from all jolts and disappointments. Mothers and fathers should realize that it is the courage which hardships often awaken and the persistence occasional failures can engender that definitely build character and provide the individual with sufficient stamina to face life fearlessly.

While we are inclined to tire of too many tales relating how our sturdy ancestors hewed logs and plowed fields, and, at an early age, walked several miles through the snow to a country schoolhouse—often insufficiently heated—and so on, we have to acknowledge that, in many instances, it was the courageous meeting of just such experiences that helped them to develop their dependable character and self-reliance.

The youngster brought up in the modern apartment has no fence rails to split, no firewood to saw, not many chores to do, and few errands to run. In numerous instances, too, he is the one and only child in the family. His parents should see that he has repeated opportunities to overcome difficulties and, too, that he learns how to meet disappointments bravely.

When a child fails to achieve the desired mark at school or to win some coveted prize, if the adults in his home have done their work well, he will not be discouraged. He will already have become master over failure through an ever-willingness to try again. He and his parents under such circumstances, instead of blaming the teacher's grading system or suggesting that the judges were not fair, will realize that in any competitive work there must be losers, for there can be only one winner.

Nevertheless, when the child loses, his courage should be strengthened. Some sincere praise for his effort on this occasion, and compliments regarding the ability he has manifested upon other occasions, will help to console him for his loss.

The boy or girl who never knows

"Youth at Work in the Church"

FIFTH SUNDAY RALLIES.

On the fifth Sunday, November 30, at 4:00 o'clock at Hank's Chapel Church there is to be a Young People's Rally of the Western North Carolina Conference.

Hank's Chapel is located approximately one mile off Highway 64 (Raleigh-Pittsboro road) about five miles from Pittsboro.

At four o'clock the young people of Hank's Chapel will present a Thanksgiving program which we are sure everyone will enjoy.

After this program, we will re-assemble at the Community House in Pittsboro for a picnic supper from the baskets we will all bring with us. We will have a social hour in order that the young people from each church may fellowship together and become better acquainted with each other. Miss Betty Chicoine from the Southern Convention Office will be present and show some religious pictures after the supper.

Let's all be present, both young and older, for we are never too young or old to enjoy Christian fellowship.

We will be looking forward to November 30 at Hank's Chapel and in hopes that the young people from every church in the Western North Carolina Conference will be present.

JACK P. SHOFFNER, President,
Y. P. of W. N. C. Conference.

SAY A GOOD WORD.

By PEARL ROSSER.*

Church people are anxious to have the very best kind of community in which children and youth may grow up to fulness of life and achievement. Often times this leads us to protect those things which are bad. We have been known, too, to work hard for reform of certain glaring infringements of decency and morals. But there is frequently one thing we neglect. We forget to say a good word.

There are so many things that happen in the course of an ordinary day's events that are really good. We take them for granted. Our schools are doing a magnificent job in the face of many handicaps. Our community agencies plod on day after day doing the things for which they were organized. Their work today is as dramatic as the story of the Good Samaritan. Newspapers in spite of many shortcomings help Americans to be the best informed people in the world. Motion pictures have at least some few productions that literally bring "the world to our doorsteps" and enrich our lives to that extent. Books and magazines brought to our homes by the postman, or made available on our newsstands, make life more interesting for millions of us. Radio, and now television, has the magic quality of bringing great persons and events right into the living room of our homes. Let us continue to take them as a matter of course, but let us also say a good word.

I especially want to urge you to say a good word for radio. There is much that can be said in criticism. Some folks are bored to death with long-winded or singing commercial announcements. Some say that the humor is trite and on a low cultural level. Some say that the daytime serial produces emotional indulgences and neuroses. And much of this is true, but there is truly another side to the whole picture. Where in the world, outside of America, can an ordinary family have brought into their homes the wonderful music and drama of the Metropolitan Opera? or the great symphonies? or top artists from stage and screen? Where else in the whole world can ordinary folk receive several times a day the very latest in news of happenings from all parts of the globe? There is much that is good in radio, so let us find the way to express our appreciation.

Here is a way you can do it. Participate in the nation-wide poll of radio programs that highlight family life so that we can say to those programs that are doing a good job—"well done!" The Protestant churches plan to award a citation to the programs which receive the highest number of votes from you and your neighbors.

This poll is being conducted during the first three months of 1948 so that the citations can be made during National Family Week, May 2-9. Ten criteria have been described by the Committee on Family Life by which radio programs may be measured to determine whether or not they are good programs. These ten points are listed on a ballot. You are asked to list in the order of your preference three programs which you believe meet at least seven out of these ten standards.

The programs which won these citations for 1947 were "One Man's Family," "Fibber McGhee and Molly," "The Aldrich Family," "Ma Perkins," "Pepper Young's Family," "Mayor of the Town," "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet," "A Date With Judy," "Life Can Be Beautiful," and "The Greatest Story Ever Told."

In our effort to praise that which is good we suggest by comparison those things of which we disapprove. This citation will be valid and worthwhile only if you along with thousands of our church people send in your vote.

A WORD OF WARNING.

May I in conclusion utter a humble word of warning? Let us please stop talking of the next world war. The language one hears in certain places is lamentably unconstructive, it arouses suspicions at a moment when mutual confidence is all-important. Not one of us wants the children of these selfless children of ours, whose graves are scattered as sacred mementoes all over the face of the scarred earth—none of us wants these children to die in another war in another generation—we want them to live and work for their respective countries in peace and security in a socially just and safe world. That's why we assembled here, that's why we drafted the Charter. It contains all the necessary safeguards against future wars. Let us see to it that our lofty aims are carried into deeds worthy of the memory of our heroic beloved youngsters.—Jan Masgryk, Czechoslovakian delegate to United Nations at San Francisco.

THE PROOF OF A CHRISTIAN.

LESSON IX—NOVEMBER 30, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: This commandment have we from him; that he that loveth God, love his brother also.—I John 4:21.

LESSON: I John 4 and 5; II John; Acts 4:1-13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Rom. 8:1-11.

Who Is Jesus Christ?

It will help us to understand these letters of John better if we understand something of the background against which they were written. At that particular time, there was a group of men, some of them intelligent and influential men, who asserted that Jesus Christ was not a real person, He only seemed, or appeared to be. The people who held this doctrine were called "Docetists". One reason they believed this was because they thought that the flesh was evil, and hence the sinless Christ could have no contact with the flesh. Many of John's statements become clearer and convincing when read against this background. For instance in the opening verses of his letter he writes as follows: "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of Life, for the life was manifested, and we have seen it . . . that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." John asserted that Jesus Christ had come in the flesh, the Word became flesh. Christ was the Incarnate Word of God, the image of the invisible and unseen and unseeable God. This is the first thing he emphasizes. And he emphasizes it again and again throughout his letters.

The Great Confession.

"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God. It would appear that the basic condition of discipleship in the beginning was a confession that Jesus Christ was the Son of God. The candidate for church membership simply repeated solemnly and sincerely Jesus is Lord. As I read today's lesson I was reminded of something which Dr. Thompson of Richmond said in his class in the Leadership Training School last week. Discussing the life of Paul, and seeking to get at the basic factors in his conversion, or seeking the basic factors in the thing called Christian conversion, he said that the first was a recognition that Jesus was the Son of God, that Jesus was Lord. You will recall that Paul's first question was "Who art thou Lord?" Whatever else may have been included in the process, one thing is certain—Paul ever afterward exalted Jesus Christ as the Son of the Living God. And John puts the matter on the same basis.

To be sure this does not mean that one can say glibly, "I believe that Jesus Christ is born of God" and thereby become a Christian. But it does mean that when a person simply and sincerely confesses that Jesus Christ is the Son of God he makes the only necessary confession of faith.

Living Dangerously Then.

In those days, to make a confession of Christ meant to live dangerously. These Christians to whom John wrote were living in the Roman empire. The Emperor was regarded as a god and Rome demanded that her subjects pay homage to the Emperor. For instance at public festivals as well as at public worship, the people were required to say, "Domitian, Lord and God." And woe unto that Christian who refused to do this. Being a Christian was grim business in those days. Civil rights were taken away from them, property was confiscated, right of trial was often prohibited, and in many instances, the death penalty was inflicted without benefit of trial.

Living Dangerously Now.

All that is different now, at least in our country. But if we took our confession of Christ as seriously as did these people, we would also live dangerously. Suppose for instance we should take Jesus' doctrine of brotherhood seriously and set out to extend his spirit of brotherliness to other racial or color groups. Suppose for instance that a union member undertakes to extend his brotherliness to some worker who is not a member of his organization. Suppose an employer sets out to treat his employees as brethren, breaking away from the accepted industrial practices. Suppose we set out to clean up legalized prostitution or the legalized liquor traffic. These are a few of the practical ways in which we can confess Christ and which will lead to trouble.

The Antidote for Fear.

"Perfect love casteth out fear."

"There is no fear in love." "He that feareth is not made perfect in love." When we wholly love God and fully trust Him, we will have no fear, either for the life that now is, or for that which is to come. Fear is perhaps Public Enemy No. 1. The doctors' offices, hospital beds, psychiatrists' consultation rooms, and private and public institutions for the mentally ill, are filled with people, the root trouble in whose lives is fear. And these doctors and psychiatrists are more and more emphasizing the part, and the large part which faith in God, and genuine religion can have in effecting cures. In fact there are many instances in which only this faith and loving trust can help.

Love God . . . Love Your Fellowman.

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar. For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God whom he hath not seen." Plain talk, that! It pricks the bubble of mere religious profession that does not find expression in practice. It is idle and vain talk for a man to say he loves God if he has a grievance or malice or hate in his heart toward his fellowman. This is a fundamental principle of Christianity. We are to love God, and we are also to love our neighbor as ourselves.

This Is the Witness . . . Eternal Life Now.

In John's thought eternal life was not something we were to get in the future; it was a present possession of the believer. "And the witness is this; that God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in His Son." He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. Jesus is the difference between life and death. Between existence and abundant living.

BABY FOR ADOPTION

"black market" in babies, there is so much unhappiness when a child turns out to be different from what the foster parents hoped. It is a crying shame, but at least seventy per cent of the children adopted are bought and paid for in some such way as you were contemplating—often taken into homes that have no business housing a child—and, more times than I like to think, the child proves to have some defect which deprives it of the love and care it needs."

"Speaking of cost—how much will it cost us to get a baby through a licensed agency?"

"It won't cost you a cent through the agency we will visit, Jack. If, after you get your youngster, you want to make a contribution to the work of the organization, I am sure they will be glad to accept it; but that won't enter into the picture. Nothing of that sort will be suggested to you, and I wouldn't have mentioned it unless you had asked."

"How long will it take to get a baby?" begged Jane, with a note of anticipation once more creeping into her voice. "Perhaps a year, or even two years?"

"Yes, Jane, there are by no means as many children released for adoption as you might think. Then, because of the 'black market,' the legitimate agencies have nowhere near the number of children needed; but how long have you been waiting?"

"Eight years."

"Then is a year or two more so long? If you could have a child of your own flesh and blood—would you have to wait?"

"Yes—many months—I believe I see what you mean. In fact, I think we might even learn to appreciate the days of waiting—we could plan ahead—prepare ourselves and our home for his coming. I want a boy, and we'll call him Jack."

"I'll agree with you, Honey, on the boy even if I do think a girl would be nice—but he's not going to be junior. One Jack in the family is enough. We'll name him after his adopted grandfathers."

"OK, as long as you are willing it shall be a boy."

"Is there anything we should do before visiting the agency?"

"Yes, Jack, I would suggest that you both see your doctor and ask for a complete examination, in order that he can certify it is impossible for you to have children of your own. Any good agency that you might go to with your request for a child actually and rightfully is more interested in the welfare of the child it places than in just pleasing you. They do not know if you want to adopt a child only because Jane is unwilling to undergo the discomfort of bearing one."

"You know, Mr. Holton, that I'd go through anything to have one."

"I know that very well Jane, but the agency doesn't."

The counselor further warned them that the agency would find out all it could about their home life. "The agency," he said, "wants to give the child a break. He will have two strikes against him to begin with, and the good folks who will see you through this adoption procedure do their best to assure the child's getting a favorable chance. On the other hand the child will be studied from every angle. Everything possible will be learned about his parents and relatives. It will be determined that there has been no history of feeble-mindedness in his family, no insanity. The agency will know not only the child's capacities, but the capabilities of his parents, their IQ's, how far they went in school, their social background, nationality, their general physical equipment. As much as possible will be learned about the baby's ancestors. In fact, everything will be known about the child that can be known. You will not be told these things—you will never know the parents of your child, but you can rest assured because of the integrity of the institution with which you are dealing."

Three days later Jane, Jack and the minister, went to the offices of the "Children's Friend Society" with an appointment to see Mrs. Richardson.

After introductions had been completed, Mrs. Richardson asked how old a child the Crowmans had in mind, and their plans for their child. She told them that within a few days a worker would visit them in their home. This is like getting a new job with a very particular boss—we want to know how reliable you are, your motives in desiring a child, how you get along with each other—oh, yes, and we are going to ask for references, too. We are not 'busy bodies,' trying to pry into your lives, but just some folks who have had a lot of experience in placing babies. We want you satisfied, and we want the baby to have the best chance possible for a full and happy life. You wouldn't try a case in court by yourself, you'd get the advice of a lawyer; nor would you try to perform an operation on a friend, rather you would get a skilled surgeon. We are skilled practitioners in this matter of adoption, and please remember we do these things only to protect you and the child."

"We understand, Mrs. Richardson, and I assure you Jack and I will be glad to cooperate in every way," said Jane, wrinkling up her pert nose as she looked from her husband to her minister. "You know, Mrs. Richardson, we almost made a mistake with regard to this whole business and would have except for Mr. Holton."

"Wouldn't you like to visit our nursery?" beamed Mrs. Richardson.

This was a revelation to the prospective mother and father. Here it was explained, after all the data was gathered pertaining to the children and parents, two or three babies would be picked out which had the necessary requisites—skin color, hair color, and many more physical peculiarities to correspond as nearly as possible with the merged characteristics of the couple who were doing the adopting. Children were chosen, they were told, who possessed the mental ability to fulfil the hopes which the foster parents had for their child. The Crowmans would some day be invited into the nursery to meet two or more such children and here would be given a choice. "The little one you fall in love with is yours," said Mrs. Richardson.

It was fun to cooperate with the agency for the workers seemed so understanding. "They act," said Jane, "as if they wanted to make our home the most happy they have ever known—and we are going to try to do just that."

When Jane and Jack saw their son for the first time they knew him immediately. There was no need to do any considering this way or that. There was no question in either of their minds. They took him home at once. The agency had insisted that they wait one year before final action on the adoption, but when that year was gone it seemed to them like no more than a few days.

It was on the twelfth of June that adoption proceedings were completed. Immediately afterward Jean and Jack drove to the brown stone church which was so dear to their hearts. Mr. Holton happened to be looking out of the window as they came up, but stepped back quickly before they had seen him. He noticed they had their little son with them. He heard them mount the stairs, turn to the left and enter the room of worship. All was silent for almost a half hour. There was a knock at the study door:

"Come in."

"Hello, padre—he's ours and we belong to him. It's all settled. We've been in the church, Jane, Richard Franklyn and I, just having a little

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

All five of the Congregational-Christian Conferences have been held. The last was the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, which was held at Bethlehem Church. All the Conferences had pretty weather except the North Carolina and Virginia. The first day was rainy, but the second was clear and the sun was shining.

All the Conferences have been well attended and the people have shown quite an interest, which we were glad to see.

But, in this letter we want to talk to you about the Thank Offerings in your church. First, we want you to take into consideration that the Christian Orphanage is an Institution of the Southern Convention of the Congregational Christian Churches. Second, it is supported by Sunday School Monthly Offerings, special Thanksgiving offerings, and personal donations by individuals. Third, it is a home for orphan and dependent children—dependent on the churches for care and training. It is their home, and they have no other. They look to the church for food, clothing, and care. They want to grow up to be good citizens of our great country, and if they are given a chance, they will.

The children are doing well in school. We offer a prize of fifty cents if they will make the honor roll. Last month twelve out of our group made it. We have some students who make all A's on their studies. They have beautiful report cards—nothing on them but A's from top to bottom.

The Convention has apportioned $12,500 to run this Institution. With prices as high as they are now, it just can't be done. We have to seek contributions from friends who have always been loyal to us in the support of this work.

Now at this Thanksgiving season we want to offer you an opportunity to give as the Lord has prospered you, to help swell the offering in your church large enough to make you feel proud of what you did. If we could get someone to make an appeal in your church, in behalf of these little children, on the day you take the offering in your church it would increase the offering quite a lot. Please remember that prices are high on everything we have to buy. We need a large Thanksgiving offering to help us through the winter and spring months, when the offerings are generally small. Don't forget us in your Thank Offerings.

Don't forget to send us a coop of chickens for our Thanksgiving dinner!

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

SOCIAL ACTION COMMITTEE (Continued from page 8)

farmers may experience a seventy-five million dollar reduction in income next year, is symbolic of America's interdependence with the Old World.

We Americans are now on the brink of making what is possibly as grave a decision as we had to take in regard to entering World War II. We churchmen are deeply involved in this decision, and we must not assume a neutral attitude toward it, as though Christian morals were not at stake. To their credit, the churches have a laudable record in their response to the needs of overseas war victims. Through their efforts, aid in the form of shoes, clothing, foodstuffs, and cash has been sent in large amounts. But a new phase of crisis is emerging, and it can only be met by quick and generous action on the part of the American government. A mass American consciousness of the imperativeness of the Marshall plan must be awakened. The churches, under the leadership of their ministers, must unite with other agencies in creating this all-important sentiment. If the public can be aroused from shore to shore, our representatives at Washington will be greatly encouraged to execute a plan of aid that will save Europe and her civilization from a dismal future.

Your Committee, therefore, offers a two-fold resolution: (1) that the Conference endorse the Marshall plan and commend it wholeheartedly to the conscience and support of all its constituent churches; and (2) that the Conference authorize and instruct its Secretary to convey to Senators Hoey and Umstead the following message: "The North Carolina and Virginia Congregational Christian Conference, in annual session assembled at Alamahaw, N. C., unanimously endorses the Marshall plan, and it urges you to give it your hearty support in the forthcoming session of Congress."

defeat in childhood days is likely to have a very difficult road to travel when maturity is reached. Many a marital misunderstanding and even divorce, has come about because in early life a child was allowed to expect to win—whether or not he deserved to do so; if he did lose, his lack of success was blamed upon others—never upon himself.

My father was an excellent example of taking losses in the right way. He was one of a large family, from which selfishness and the expectancy always to win in competitive undertakings were weeded out early in life. He endured great hardships but mastered them all because he had learned to be a good loser. It was demonstrated to him that the person who took his losses like a man was given another chance to succeed. This trait of being a good loser made him find contentment in life—he did his best courageously and hopefully; and when he failed he good-humoredly tried again.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EVANGELISM OF N. C. & VA. CONFERENCE.

For years in the annual sessions of our convention and conferences, we have been setting goals and passing resolutions regarding evangelism in our churches and the consequent winning of men, women and children to Christ and into the membership of our churches. But it would seem that we have been more out-spoken about having these resolutions printed than we have been in putting them into effect. The entire membership of this conference was asked to win 800 people to Christ and into the membership of our churches during the conference year now closing. I am afraid that we have not reached our goal—not because it is too high but because our efforts have been too feeble and too few.

We have an evangelistic gospel. We have an evangelistic church. The Christian Church was born in an evangelistic upheaval. When the Christian denomination was organized, our ministers felt that they were evangelists of a new Christian movement with a new emphasis on the old gospel, and they went to the extent of their means of travel and ability carrying this good news. Large congregations attended these meetings. Many were converted and churches were organized. The minister was the messenger of God then. The minister is the messenger of God today. If your church has not gained as it should, your minister is responsible. This responsibility must be laid at the door of the parsonage and on the heart of the minister. This is the purpose of his calling and if he fails, he fails. We must marshal the evangelistic forces of the Church anew if we are to win the world to Christ.

There are different ways of conducting evangelistic work. Different methods are employed but more depends upon the man than upon the method.

Evangelistic methods commonly used are: (1) Mass Evangelism, (2) Personal Evangelism, (3) Visitation Evangelism, and I am suggesting a fourth method—Graded Evangelism (Children, Young People, Adults).

Recommendations.

(1) That we authorize a simultaneous Evangelistic Campaign to be conducted in the churches of this conference.

(2) That the Lenten period beginning Ash Wednesday, February 11, and ending on Easter Sunday be designated as the period of evangelism in the churches of this conference.

(3) That we employ all methods of evangelistic endeavor mentioned above beginning with Graded Evangelism. It is suggested that a week be given to Child Evangelism including the Intermediate and Junior Departments in our Sunday School; a week to our Young People including Seniors in our Sunday School, Pilgrim Fellowship groups and Christian Endeavor Societies; and a week to Adult Evangelism. Each week closing with special evangelistic services on Sunday. Holy Week be given to Mass Evangelism, closing on Easter Sunday.

(4) That the Superintendent of our Convention, the Executive Committee of this conference, and the Committee on Evangelism be charged with the responsibility of setting up this program and of organizing the ministers and churches for this forward movement.

L. E. SMITH, Chairman,
M. A. POLLARD,
M. T. SORRELL,
MACK V. WELCH,
Committee.

The above report on evangelism was presented to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference in its recent session and adopted. It would be a fine thing if the other four conferences constituting our Convention would organize their efforts along the same line that we might have a simultaneous evangelistic campaign throughout the entire Convention in the spring of 1948. Superintendent.

CONVENTION OFFICE.

row the money—unless the notes were endorsed personally by those worth enough to make the bank secure. That is too much to ask of individuals, don't you think?

Borrowing the money is not the solution, even if that could be done. Borrowed money must be repaid! Besides, our people do not wish to have Elon go into debt again now. There is a way—an easy way—to complete the new building facilities without a cent of debt or borrowing! Here is it:

The Convention voted to ask the churches to raise a fund of $100,000, known as the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation. Quotas have already been fixed by the Convention and a considerable sum has been paid and pledged.

Now—if each church would raise in full its quota at this time—the powerhouse could be completed and adequate heating facilities provided without a cent of debt remaining. Will you accept this challenge and do your part? We believe you will.

We realize that many of our churches have accepted their quotas and have paid them up to date. If your church has done this, you have done what was asked of you. But to avoid this possible disaster, would you be willing to present the matter to your members and do what you can toward raising all or a part of any unpaid quota?

If your church has paid in full its quota, would you be willing to present the matter and endeavor to obtain an extra gift? It would mean much right now?

If your church has not accepted its quota, won't you present the matter at once and get the church's acceptance of its quota and collect all or a part of it now?

Please forward any money collected or on hand at once to President L. E. Smith, or otherwise let him know what you can do about this grave emergency.

The Executive Board of the Convention in a recent session at Elon College saw first-hand the need for immediate action. We were authorized by the Board to write this letter to you for your consideration. Enclosed is a card for your use. Please fill out and return it to us as quickly as possible.

Faithfully yours,
W. E. WISSEMAN, Pres.
W. MILLARD STEVENS, Sec'y.
WM. T. SCOTT, Supt.

RELIGIOUS RADIO INSTITUTE.

A highlight of the Religious Radio institute which takes place in Raleigh, November 24, 25 and 26 will be an address by Clifford J. Durr, Federal Communications Commissioner at the banquet to be held at Sacred Heart School on Monday night.

Mr. Durr will speak on "Broadcasting in the Public Interest," to audience composed of key North Carolina radio men and those actively engaged or interested in religious radio programs. The subject matter is of prime importance to those hopeful that the standards of religious radio broadcasting may be raised, the purpose of the institute.

The three-day radio session will represent the first cooperative venture by the three major faiths of North Carolina to provide direct assistance to those interested in religious radio programs. It will be presented by the National Conference of Christians and Jews and the various religious groups are welcoming the opportunity to work together on this project as they have long been conscious of the need for assistance in this field.

A CALL TO THANKSGIVING

"Time out of mind at this turn of the seasons when the hardy oak leaves rustle in the wind and the frost gives a tang to the air and the dusk falls early and the friendly evenings lengthen under the heel of Orion, it has seemed good to our people to join together in praising the Creator and Preserver, who has brought us by a way that we did not know to the end of another year.

"Let us give thanks for the blessings that have been our common lot—for all the creature comforts: the yield of the soil that has fed us and the richer yield from labor of every kind that has sustained our lives—and for all those things, as dear as breath to the body, that quicken man's faith in his manhood, that nourish and strengthen his spirit to do the great work still before him: for the brotherly word and act; for honor held above price; for steadfast courage and zeal in the long, long search after truth; for liberty and for justice freely granted by each to his fellow and so freely enjoyed; and for the crowning glory and mercy of peace upon our land;—that we may humbly take heart of these blessings as we gather once again with solemn and festive rites to keep our Harvest Home."

—GOV. WILBUR L. CROSS.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Please send to The Convention Office all contributions for C.W.V.R. Funds are desperately needed for overseas relief. Send your gifts promptly.

Carolina Church is installing a new furnace and heating equipment. Rev. R. Chase Tappan, the pastor, is continuing his education as a student at Elon College.

Rev. G. H. Veazey writes that he is "getting fairly straightened out" in his new field—Long's Chapel. He is assisting in revival service at Belw Creek this week.

Superintendent Scott spoke to the Laymen's Brotherhood of the Saint Marks Evangelical and Reformed Church, near Elon College, on November 14. On Monday night, November 17, he spoke to the Churchman's Brotherhood of the First Evangelical and Reformed Church, Greensboro, at a supper meeting when the men of our First Church, Greensboro, were guests.

The churches served by Rev. Mack V. Welch are each making progress in their building and improvement program: Monticello Church on November 23rd enjoyed their new heating system just installed; Hines Chapel is completing a new parsonage within the next two months; and Needham's Grove is raising funds with which to remodel the church. Mr. Welch graduated at Elon College last spring and is now a student at Duke School of Religion.

The Convention Office and the Conference Secretaries are working hard to get the material for The Annual ready for the printer by December 1. Some local churches and some organizations consistently fail to get their reports in on time. That makes it bad on everyone. Reports are important ("Let your light so shine before men that they seeing your good works may glorify your Father who is in heaven.") If you are a church secretary or responsible for organization minutes or reports, please that they are sent promptly. The Annual appearing later than it should each year cannot be worth as much as it could if it appeared on time! Help us, won't you?

BENEFITS OF THE MERGER.

1. Two great heritages—the English and the Continental (German)—stemming from early Reformation days will be brought together like the merging of two streams such as the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to make a mightier one.

2. The Congregational Christian Churches will have the benefit of homes for the aged, hospitals, and orphanages which we do not now enjoy. The Evangelical and Reformed Church will have the benefit of our more loosely knit conference organization and supervision.

THANKSGIVING.

Our Infinite Father, unsearchable in thy wisdom, mysterious in thy ways, tender in thy providence, we thank thee for the privilege of breath and the glory of living; for the happy shelter of our homes and the inner circle of our friendships for health which makes hard work a pleasure; for the great names of history and for the forgotten toilers who have made our civilization possible; for convictions which are anchors to faith and for doubts which blow away the unessential; for the church of God, mother of us all, and for Jesus Christ, master of us all, to whom be praise forever and ever. Amen.

—Hugh Elmer Brown.

3. Numerically, we will be on a par with several of the larger denominational bodies in America such as the Presbyterian, Baptists, etc.

4. Each will benefit from the sharing of outstanding Christian personalities, wider fellowship, and the intellectual achievements of both groups.

5. Both will strengthen the Church Universal by the merger and further fulfill one of our cardinal principles of Christian Unity.

CARL R. KEY.

OUTSTANDING CHURCHMAN DIES.

Dr. Robert Elliott Speer, secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, USA, for 46 years, died last Sunday evening at Bryn Mawr Hospital, Philadelphia, at the age of 80.

He was a native of Huntington, Pa., and was the first layman to receive the distinction of being the moderator of the General Assembly of his denomination.

He was a graduate of Phillips Andover Academy and Princeton University, and held an honorary doctor's degree from Edinburg University. Among the inter-denominational honors which he had received was the presidency of the Federal Council of Churches.

Dr. Speer visited nearly all of the mission stations of his church while serving as mission secretary from 1891 until his retirement in 1937. He was a writer of considerable ability and a speaker who carried conviction in his speech. He has spoken often at the Massanetta Springs Bible Conferences in the Valley of Virginia, and the lives of many of our own ministers and laymen are richer because of having heard him.

THIS HUNGRY WORLD.By DEETS PICKETT.

Political stability is impossible in a country where the people are hungry.

The situation in various countries of Europe is explosive. A European political collapse will precipitate an emergency no less menacing to the United States, to Western civilization, and to free men and women everywhere, than the menace presented by Adolph Hitler. In every practical sense it will be a menace exactly the same in character. The United States, and the United States alone, can ward off this menace and perhaps it can do so by the intelligent and generous use of food products.

Food Supplies Scanty; Prices at Record Height.

The European wheat crop is forecast at 1.20 billion bushels, as compared with 1.35 billion bushels last year. At best, Europe faces a terrible winter.

At home, the people are appalled by mounting food prices. Food costs are double what they were seven years ago. Steak is approximately $1.00 a pound, and many people are paying $1.00 a dozen for eggs. Not only bread, but everything produced by feed, is at record high. The middle class, the source of the nation's strength, is being seriously weakened. The people want Europe to be fed; they also want beef, pork, butter, cheese, milk, eggs, poultry and bread at prices they can pay.

The corn crop, which has averaged 2,639,102,000 bushels during the past ten years, will fall below this figure by 230 million bushels in the current year, according to the latest report of the Department of Agriculture.

In 1947 the distillers and brewers used about 52,307,415 bushels of corn. They used also 4,229,114 bushels of rye, 60,552 bushels of wheat; 2,797,785 bushels of rice; 287,029 bushels of barley; 85,537,152 bushels of malt (equivalent to 77,761,047 bushels of barley), and 6,869,442 bushels of potatoes, among other things, a total of approximately 3,500,000 tons.

Stopping the manufacture of alcoholic beverages at the present time, would supply nearly one-fifth of the amount of food materials exported last year.

Distiller Urges Ban on Whiskey-Making.

President Jay Ambrose, of Ambrose and Company, operators of a Colorado distillery, has announced that he has sent letters to the nation's principal distillers and to the Agriculture Department, asking that steps be taken to halt distilling in order that grain may be saved to feed a hungry world.

Mr. Ambrose stated that a tremendous backlog of whisky exists in the country and that continuing to make whisky of cereal grains is a needless waste of food.

"We advocate that the approximately 100 to 200 million bushels of

THANKSGIVING—1947.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Older than our nation itself is the hallowed custom of resting from our labors for one day at harvest time and of dedicating that day to expressions of gratitude to Almighty God for the many blessings which he has heaped upon us. Now, as the cycle of the year nears completion, it is fitting that we should lift up our hearts again in special prayers.

May our thanksgiving this year be tempered by humility, by sympathy for those who lack abundance, and by compassion for those in want. As we express appreciation in prayer for our munificent gifts, may we remember that it is more blessed to give than to receive; and may we manifest our remembrance of that precept by generously sharing our bounty with needy people of other nations.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, HARRY S. TRUMAN, President of the United States of America, invite the attention of all citizens to the joint resolution of Congress approved December 26, 1941, which designates the fourth Thursday in November of each year as Thanksgiving Day; I proclaim November 27, 1947, as a day of national thanksgiving; and I call upon the people of the United States of every faith to consecrate that day to thoughts of gratitude, acts of devotion, and a firm resolve to assist in the efforts being made by religious groups and other bodies to aid the undernourished, the sick, the aged, and all sufferers in war-devastated lands.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this tenth day of November, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and forty-seven, and of the Independence of the United States of America, the one hundred and seventy-second.

G. C. MARSHALL,
Secretary of State.

grain used annually for distilling could be used to far more useful advantage,' he contended. 'It could be diverted to Europe, made available to the American housewife for food, and part of it could be offered to hog growers for feed. The latter instance could serve as a useful pivot on which to swing pork prices downward.'

"The company manager, who said he was 'perfectly willing' to shut down his own distillery, said the country 'has plenty of whisky' in storage.

"On last June 30 there were 42 million gallons of grain alcohol in storage,' he continued. 'That last figure is 40 per cent increase over the 30 millions produced in 1946.'

"In addition, he said, there were 167,950,000 gallons of whisky produced in the first six months of 1947."

Attitude of the Brewers.

A circular distributed to its members, by the United States Brewers Foundation, on September 16, 1947, entitled, "Grain," states:

"As you have undoubtedly observed, some newspapers, as well as members of Congress, have recently been urging in view of the situation abroad, that the next Congress should enact legislation authorizing the reimposition of restrictions on the use of grain. In this connection, Secretary Anderson announced today from his home in Albuquerque, New Mexico, that President Truman's Cabinet Food Committee, consisting of himself, Secretary of State George C. Marshall, and W. Averill Harriman, Secretary of Commerce, would meet in Washington next Monday, September 22, to discuss a report on prices and the American export program.

"Mr. Anderson said that the report is being prepared by a staff in Washington and provided it is approved by the committee after it is received and discussed, it will then be submitted to President Truman at a Cabinet meeting the same afternoon. This is the same procedure which was followed when the Cabinet Committee recommended and the President approved, and the Secretary of Agriculture issued an order restricting the use of grain, which became effective on March 1, 1946. It is possible to presume, therefore, that similar action may be taken at this time by the Cabinet Food Committee and the President, except that the President has no present statutory authority to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to impose restrictions on the use of grain. New authority for this purpose would have to be given him by the Congress which is not in session.

"There are rumors to the effect that the Cabinet Food Committee will recommend voluntary curtailment in the use of grains in the interim between now and the next session of Congress when recommendations for statutory authority to re-

ACKNOWLEDGE BLESSINGS

"One of the greatest dangers to our nation is a thoughtless apathy toward the fundamentals of a free society. We take for granted, we do not appreciate the unlimited opportunities for happiness afforded every citizen of this country. Many of us are too quick to denounce every imperfection of our society and entirely too slow to acknowledge our blessings."

This statement was issued by J. W. Fulbright, United States Senator from Arkansas, in observance of Religious Education week. It is a sane statement quite apropos for meditation during Thanksgiving.

Christian people are not free from "thoughtless apathy." This sad fact is reflected in our stewardship and church attendance. Few people ever triumph over human apathy to the extent that their full stewardship and worship potential is realized. But this is the goal, the realizable goal in Christian living: "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

Again, must we not confess, we are "entirely too slow to acknowledge our blessings." We are not only slow, but inadequate in our acknowledgement. Multitudes are inarticulate. The grateful and sensitive spirit will react as did Cortlandt Sayres in his exquisite poem, "Bankrupt."

One midnight, deep in starlight still,
I dreamed that I received this bill:
Five thousand breathless dawns all new;
Five thousand flowers fresh in dew;
Five thousand sunsets wrapped in gold;
One million snowflakes served ice-cold;
Five quiet friends, one baby's love;
One white-mad sea with clouds above;
One hundred music-haunted dreams
Of moon-drenched roads and hurrying streams;
Of prophesying winds, and trees;
Of silent stars and browsing bees;
One June night in a fragrant wood;
One heart that loved and understood.
I wonder when I waked at day,
How—how in God's name—I could pay!

"PEACEMONGERING"

Americans followed with lively interest the progress of Friendship Train which began in Los Angeles with 12 cars and arrived in New York with 270, bearing gifts of food destined mainly for hungry France and Italy. It was estimated that the Train carried more than $1,000,000 worth of food. Warren R. Austin, permanent United States delegate to the United Nations, spoke to 25,000 in New York City and is quoted as saying: "This meeting, and all the many meetings along the trail of the Friendship Train, can certainly be called 'peacemongering.' By combining words and actions the Friendship Train has done, in a dramatic way, exactly what the General Assembly in a recent unanimously adopted resolution, requested all members of the United Nations to do." The Friendship Train is now headed toward Virginia, and an all-Virginia or "Cavalier" section of the train is being arranged.

Another typical example of practical "peacemongering" is the city-wide effort inaugurated by the Richmond Ministerial Union and the Virginia Council of Churches which has netted 90,000 pounds of wearing apparel for overseas relief with a tempo of contributions which indicates a total of 140,000 pounds.

Dr. Robbins W. Barstow, executive director of Church World Service, reports that $6,000,000 in cash and another $2,000,000 in commodity contributions was received and disbursed during 1946, and as much or more was sent from our United States churches in direct aid to sister churches abroad.

While endless talk of war proceeds, the Christian forces have kept quietly but persistently at their task of peacemongering, implementing their faith with concrete expressions in money, goods, and personal service.

CHRISTMAS SUBSCRIPTIONS

A subscriber wants to know if a special offer is made for gift subscriptions at Christmas. It is quite possible that others have raised the same question. The answer is, "No". The Board of Publications has encouraged people to forward gift subscriptions, but has announced no reduction in the regular subscription price.

Two facts may be added. First, our regular price has not advanced in recent years. In fact, $2.00 represents a "floor" rather than a "ceiling" price. Second, the offer of commissions to church organizations still stands. Why not put your organization to work and make money for the organization by securing Christmas gifts subscriptions to The Sun? Try it, and let us know the results!

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

"Churches do not flourish in the shallow soil of ignorance," was the theme of Dr. John R. Cunningham, principal speaker when Dr. Frank Bell Lewis was inaugurated as president of Mary Baldwin College in Staunton on November 18. "Sooner or later," the speaker elaborated, "unless there is intelligent well trained leadership in any branch or cause of the church, it fails or disappears. The very existence of the church, to say nothing of the democratic way of life, demands the continuance of Christian education. The church-related college continues to be the institution through which this type of education is chiefly promoted."

The church-related college is confronted with a two-fold task today. First, the undergrinding of it financial program to facilitate necessary growth and expansion. Second, the commensurate improvement in its scholastic program in order to harness the intellectual energies of its constituency. Fortunately, the town and the gown, the pulpit and the pew, may be fully represented in this redemptive enterprise.

"Sermonic Impressions of European Crisis"

Extracts from a Series of Sermons Delivered by REV. HAROLD G. JONES, D. D.,
Pastor of Central Church, Worcester, Massachusetts

I. WILL ENGLAND WIN THROUGH?

Last year I was asked to be one of seven American clergymen to be interchange preachers in England and Scotland this summer. This custom which has been interrupted by the war, had been in operation for many years and included clergymen coming from the British Isles as well as Americans going there. Through your kindness and encouragement and that of my own family, I accepted the invitation.

I sailed from the United States on the Queen Elizabeth on the seventeenth of July and less than six days later was in Southampton, England. I wish I had the time and the eloquence to tell you of the impressions of the trip over and the one back on the Queen Mary. These two vast ships are the true monarchs of the ocean, and great bridges of understanding between the people of the two continents and indeed the whole world.

It is apparent when you come into Southampton that this is one of the worst bombed cities in the land and when I walked about in the cool of the evening, it became very overwhelming. Everywhere there are signs of devastation and in the downtown areas especially, whole blocks are just cellars with wild flowers growing in profusion.

A week later while attending the Planning Committee of the International Congregational Council at Bournemouth, we had a chance to see Southampton, be received by the Mayor, and shown around the bombed areas by the chief air raid warden. The story he told, with the characteristic British understatement, was a very graphic one. Nine hundred, thirty-six buildings were completely destroyed and 9,236 had to be taken down, while 32,000 were repaired—a total of more than 50,000 buildings hit by bombs. Six hundred, two people were killed including 42 children wiped out in one air raid, while they were in the city hall passing art examinations. Churches were badly hit, 17 being destroyed—seven in one night. As we stood before the ruins of the leading Congregational Church, one of the pastors told us that it had been the church in which Isaac Watts, the great hymnologist and author of "Our God, Our Help in Ages Past" and "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," had been brought up, and that when this particular air raid was over, and the building in ruins, a bust of Isaac Watts stood apparently untouched amid the ruins. When he sought to pick it up and carry it to a spot of safety, it disintegrated in his hands. When an old safe was opened a number of sermons fell out and was one by Watts—very appropriately a funeral sermon.

London seemed almost as old as of old, until one looked more closely and realized what a vast number of buildings, many of which still stand although gutted inside, have been bombed, and there again, church after church was a mere shell of its former beauty. Around St. Pauls is a great deal of damage, yet the Cathedral still stands—and symbolizes the undying faith of a people, who never lost their courage, even when conditions were at their worst, and the whole city seemed on fire. One of the most interesting experiences in London was the day when we were received by the Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth Palace and saw the House of Commons in session. The Archbishop is a most gracious person, the father of six boys, and a man who seems amid all his grave responsibilities, to have a certain serenity of spirit. A simple hen coop there reminded us that even the Archbishop and his family felt the need of eggs more than once a week and that the only way to have them was to have their own hens. I preached three Sundays in England, first in Ealing where our Congregational Church, which lost most of its congregation during the war days, is making a gallant fight to win its way back under the inspiring leadership of an ex-air force padre, the Rev. B. Railton Bax. The last Sunday I was at the Purley Church, also in a suburb of London and without question one of our strongest churches in the London area. On August 10, I had the privilege of preaching at Kidderminster and Worcester, both in Church of England parishes. Kidderminster, as some of you know, was the town from which many Worcester people came under the leadership of the late Mr. Whittall when he founded the carpet factory here. The Baxter Congregational Church joined in the worship, giving up their own services for the first time since the Act of Toleration. The town is quite proud of its connections with our city, and the Whittall Chapel which Mr. Mathew gave, is a very lovely building and greatly appreciated. The great person in Kidderminster's history was the Puritan Divine, and hymn writer, Richard Baxter, whose parishioners after his ejection from office when Charles, the 2nd came into power, founded the Congregational Church. The evening was spent at All Saints in Worcester, and the next day I had a chance to see Worcester and its Cathedral and be received by the Mayor in the Guild Hall. I wish you could all visit Worcester. It is a truly beautiful city and its Cathedral one of the finest in all England. It has a population of slightly more than fifty thousand people and beyond it stretch the beautiful Malvern Hills. Here as in Kidderminster, there are many relationships with our city and a warm sense of fellowship.

What is it that threatens Britain today? I think we must first of all list the emotional and physical tiredness which is so characteristic of the people and which has slowed down production greatly. Everywhere you are conscious of the fact that the people are desperately tired. Let's be specific. The British had six years of unrelenting toil and pain and blood and sweat and tears. It meant that her young men were dying in the skies, that her whole population was working hard day after day and year after year with little or no respite, that people not only worked days but spent fatiguing hours getting home from work due to disorganized transportation, but also fought fires from the bombings most of the nights. Take a people who have gone through that for six years and then at the end of it all, when many are hoping and even believing for better things, let conditions get worse—and you have something of the situation of England today. This leads to the second problem—that of economic confusion and tragedy. The British, I hardly need to say, made an all out effort economically during the war. In the days before we entered and the Lend Lease functioned, they bled themselves white selling all their securities in other lands and leaving no effort untouched to fight the battle. They are tired, their plants are worn down, they face tremendous competition in world markets—and for the life of them they

SUFFOLK LETTER.

More than thirty teachers gathered each night this week in the Suffolk Church for a Standard Leadership Training School, under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, dean and teacher of teachers of juniors. Other teachers were: Miss Mary Walker, teaching a course for workers with young people, and Mrs. Robert M. Kimball, teacher of a course for those working with younger children. I had a delightful experience teaching ten lessons on the Sermon on the Mount. It was good to study this section of the New Testament in preparation for these lessons. We were quite unanimous in voicing the hope that we could have such a school the same week next fall. Three teachers from the Holy Neck Church came every night and received their certificates. The visiting teachers were each one well qualified to teach their courses, and I feel that the school was a good success.

Now we are looking forward to December 9—Tuesday after the first Sunday in December—when the Christian Missionary Association will hold its annual meeting here. The program committee is planning a meeting to begin at 4:30 on Tuesday afternoon, with the opening prayer made by a layman; the president's remarks; roll call of all churches in the Conference; and collection of membership dues. After which Dr. I. W. Johnson will welcome to the C. M. A. all new members; announcement of committees; treasurer's report; and a prayer closing the afternoon session led by a layman.

It is hoped that the Fellowship Hall will be crowded at 8:30 o'clock for the fellowship supper, when a layman will make the invocation; laymen and women will furnish the music; a layman will be acting as toastmaster, and brief four-minute speeches by six laymen and laywomen; the committee on plans will report, which will be followed by reports of the committees on resolutions, nominations, and place of next meeting. There is to be time in the afternoon for miscellaneous business, and at the supper table for good fellowship and wholesome fun.

Every church and many auxiliaries of all the churches, as well as a goodly number of individuals are being asked to become a part of this enthusiastic and helpful organization of our Conference. Turn to page 193 in your 1946 Annual (if you do not have one ask your pastor to let you see his) and read the minutes from beginning to end of last year's C. M. A. meeting. You will find some interesting reading there. This next printing of the Annual should carry the name of every church in Eastern Virginia Conference. This organization—the C. M. A.—is more than a half century old and has helped to build many of the best churches in our Conference. By building a church I mean much more than erecting a church building. The C. M. A. has helped to give inspiration to pastors, members, and communities in THANKSGIVING THIS YEAR CAN BE A NOBLE SACRAMENT OF MERCY OR A GREAT AMERICAN MOCKERY.

By H. H. Lindeman.

America is so prosperous that our wealth is our toughest problem and our chiefest danger—while the rest of the world (no fault of ours) hungers, shivers, sickens and despairs.

Hence, how shall Christians observe Thanksgiving this year? If we merely thank God, complacently rest back on our wealth and power, and gorge ourselves with food and drink, then one of the noblest American festivals becomes an abomination to God and an affront to decency.

Make It Christian.

But if we make it a Christian observance, with genuine humility because so much has been entrusted to us, far more than we can deserve; if we do it with heartfelt thankfulness to God for material wellbeing beyond our meriting; and if we prove our sincerity by bountiful outpouring to share with our suffering brothers everywhere, then it will be a Christian festival indeed. God will honor it with his acceptance and will bless the givers with his favor.

such way and for such length of time as to really help establish some of the most needed and now most active churches in our midst. On December 9 let's get together in a great meeting and find real joy in some constructive work for our Conference.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

ABOUT THE MERGER.

The writer of this article has been a member of the Newport Christian Church for forty-nine years; and has served as trustee for twenty-eight years, and secretary for twenty-one years. I love the Christian Church for what it is, and for what it stands.

I do not mean to be narrow-minded or non-cooperative, but I shall not vote for the Union if the name CHRISTIAN is dropped from the name of the church, for there is no other divine name peculiar to the followers of Christ. So why not call this organization "The United Christian Church"? The Christian Church consists of those who have been baptized in the name of Christ and who accepts His doctrines and live in harmony with them.

The Christian Church was established through the life and work of Christ, Himself, and consists only of his followers. Its first increase was at Pentecost where 3,000 souls were converted and shortly afterward 5,000 were added to the church.

At Antioch the guiding spirit of the Lord first built up a great union church of Jews and Gentiles; and there the disciples received their heavenly name, being called after Christ, their glorious Master, CHRISTIANS. The first Gentile church was at Antioch. When the disciples were scattered by the persecution of Stephen, they preached the gospel in Cyprus and Syrene, besides other places to none but Jews only. But men converted at Cyprus and Cyrene came to Antioch and preached to the Grecians. The Lord revived his work in a powerful manner and great numbers believed and turned to the Lord.

From Acts 26:28 we learn that at Paul's defense before King Agrippa that the King said unto Paul, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

In I Peter 4:16 we also find that Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, writing to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Asia, Cappadocia, and Bithynia, exhorted them to obedience and wrote, "Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf."

In conclusion, I would say—that the name CHRISTIAN is preferred for several reasons:

1. It was given of God.
2. Being derived from Christ, it honors the Saviour.
3. It is a name of union loved by all the followers of Christ.
4. It is hallowed by all the early martyrs who suffered under this name alone.
5. Under the name Christian the church in its primitive splendor achieved all her real glory.
6. It is the only name which all can love.

C. W. LOUDERBACK,

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

SHALL WE REACH THE CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENT FOR ELON COLLEGE?

By WM. T. SCOTT, Supt.

We can. We are now within $340.83 of the 1946-47 Conference Apportionment for our educational institution. Our churches have done well for the most part. Forty churches have failed to pay their Apportionment for Elon College. The amount due from these churches is $1,120.43. Where are these churches located? Four are in the Eastern Virginia Conference, one in the Valley, twenty in the Eastern North Carolina Conference, ten in the Western North Carolina Conference, and five are in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. The responsibility rests upon the pastor in most cases!

Now, if these forty churches would "pay up" we would exceed the apportionment for Elon College, as we ought to do.

Elon College is owned by the churches of the Convention. Our fathers founded the college because they were convinced that there must be trained leaders for the pulpit and pew. The record of Elon in providing most of our ministers and lay leaders well justifies the "faith of our fathers."

One is almost convinced that among some of our churches there is a "whispering campaign" or "a fifth column" working against Elon College and education. These people are dangerous—be they in the pulpit or in the pew. They endeavor to make people afraid of education, of truth. No one should be afraid of truth! God is truth, and the man who endeavors to keep people in darkness by appealing to men's prejudices and emotions will be judged of God and condemned. God is truth, said Jesus. Truth, therefore, does not need any defense from men. Half truths and untruths are our undoing—whether they come from the so-called fundamentalists or modernists.

Knowledge is not enough! Neither are emotion and ignorance! God in making man's body took care to place in it a heart—the center of emotion and feeling; also a brain—the center of thought and direction. It would seem, therefore, that the creator intended that our religion ought to pass through both the heart and mind. That knowledge is not enough was the conviction upon which Elon College was founded and is maintained today. Knowledge needs to be tempered by understanding and atmosphere. It is Elon College's mission and purpose to provide a Christian atmosphere and Christian teachers that our youth may have solid Christian foundations and beliefs to channel knowledge in to Christian living and conduct.

Elon College is not all it ought to be. Neither are your home or family or local church. But by love and support we can make each of these better. Why not send a word of encouragement and a prayer along with a gift to Elon College? It will do more good than you know.

If your church hasn't paid its apportionment to Elon College for the Conference year 1946-47 (just closed), send it along to the Convention Office at once. We need $340.83 to reach the goal. Let's reach it and do a great good and give much encouragement to President Smith and his associates. If your church has already paid its apportionment, send along an extra gift.

THANKSGIVING.

Thursday of this week was our national Thanksgiving Day. The President of the United States and the Governor of our state called upon us—all of us—to betake ourselves to our accustomed places of worship and express our gratitude unto Almighty God for His blessings to us and to our country during the year. This is right and proper. We should give thanks unto God. From Him cometh the blessings of the day and all good things of life. Truly, no people or nation, it would seem, has been blessed above ours. When we think of our comfort, safety and ease in comparison with the want, the hunger, the suffering, and the hopelessness of the future of others, surely we are humbled and should praise God for His blessings to us.

But we may express our gratitude in ways other than by word of mouth and hymns of praise. We should express our gratitude by sharing what we have with the unfortunate of our day wherever they are. There are plenty of agencies that are trustworthy that would be glad to handle any contribution that we may wish to make to help supply the needs of the world.

President Truman, in a recent appeal to the nation for support for the benevolent enterprises and institutions of our country, called upon us all to give generously and regularly according to our earnings. He assured us that such a plan would afford ample support for our institutions. What he meant to say was for everyone of us to give out of our paychecks according to the amounts of the checks for the support of these worthy causes and that if we would adopt such a plan, there would be no need for any just cause to be without sufficient funds to meet its needs.

This is but to emphasize the doctrine pronounced by the apostle Paul when he said, "Upon the first day of the week let everyone of you lay by himself in store according as God hath prospered him that there be no gathering when I come." This takes the fact of Thanksgiving out of any special period or any special cause. God's blessings to us are continuous and our thanksgiving should be continuous. Not only Thursday after the fourth Sunday in November should be a day of Thanksgiving and prayer, but we should consider every day as such and make our offerings accordingly.

There are religious denominations in this country that makes tithing a condition of membership in their churches. Members must obligate themselves to give a tenth of their earnings to the Church and its institutions before they are admitted to membership. Our church goes about it in another way. We admit them to membership in our churches and then we say to them, "This church is supported by free-will offerings. Give what you feel that you can spare and it will be appreciated." We make this statement without any instruction whatsoever concerning Christian stewardship or the Biblical doctrine of giving. Why should we be surprised that the church and her institutions are poorly provided for and that we must be continually applying the pressure and putting on drives to secure from every possible source enough funds to keep them going at a "poor dying rate"?

What do you think would happen in our Church if every member would lay by himself in store on the first day of the week according as God hath prospered him? Do you wonder? A good way to find out is to apply the test to your own earnings.

OUR FIRST VISIT TO THE CHURCHES.

By RICHARD L. JACKSON.

On a bright warm October day (15th), just as the sun was beginning to break through the early morning mist, Dr. Ed Riggs and I started out on our first visit to the North Fukien Synod churches. The area is about the size of the State of Massachusetts with a population of anywhere between 500,000 to 1,000,000 people, all living in small towns or villages. We were accompanied by Mr. Chiu, a lay preacher about 70 years of age, and Chien Fa, our loyal workman, who carried most of our sleeping bags, Bibles, and supplies suspended on a pole over his shoulder. Dr. Riggs insisted on carrying a full pack himself of medicines and supplies, while I had a small knapsack which gradually grew heavier as the day wore on.

We had thought that Mr. Chiu, because of his age, would slow down our pace, but we found he was quite used to long walks and could hold out much better than we. We had planned to go 70 li (about 23 miles) the first day, but when evening came, we were so tired, we stopped after 20 miles at the small town of Tupakan. The mountains along the way were beautiful and we passed by some very high ones, but by the end of the day, we were so tired that we hardly noticed. Arriving at the Tupakan inn, we were glad to wash our feet, eat a little supper and go to bed to arise before sunrise the next morning for an early start.

I recall from my Boy Scout days the first rank is called "Tenderfoot." I really found the meaning of that word. Unfortunately I discovered during the first day that my shoes were too small and that I was still a "Tenderfoot." The road (or better called cobblestone path) is difficult travelling. It winds around between rice fields, over hills and valleys and would be very beautiful, I imagine, if you didn't feel every stone pushing up through your soles. The Chinese, who are used to this type of road, take it in their stride and seem not to mind it at all.

We arrived in the afternoon of the second day at Chukon. Just as we were coming into the city, we met a man with a small child in his arms. His boy was ill and he wondered if we had some medicine for him. His description of the illness caused Ed to quickly diagnose it as "worms" (one of the three commonest diseases we ran across, the others being tuber-

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
November 10, 1947.

Dear Friends:

As the year 1947 draws to a close and as we prepare to celebrate again the Christmas season, our thoughts naturally go back through this eventful year, our first in China. It has been a thrilling experience to come into the midst of this ancient civilization, and to observe customs and traditions so different from what we had formerly experienced. Sometimes we have to pinch ourselves to make sure what we are seeing is not some dream. Yet, beneath the differences we have seen clearly revealed the many traits we humans have in common, among which are a love for family and children and a desire for peace and security. We have found a friendly helpful spirit on the part of all largely because those who preceded us left a rich heritage of goodwill.

We continually realize that we have come to a country which is in the midst of civil war. Although there is no fighting in Shaowu, there is a wounded soldiers' camp, so we are daily reminded of the high cost of war. The inflation, caused by the attempts of a desperately sick government to raise money to preserve its life, causes suffering on every hand. It is to the eternal credit of the Chinese people that there are not open revolts throughout the nation. The people we have met love their country, support the government, and believe that some way will be found to stop the menace from the North. They, along with the other peoples of the earth, long for peace.

As we listen to our radio and read the news periodicals from America, we note with grave concern the division of our world into two rival camps. How far we are from the ancient dream of peace. It is with a sense of need, therefore, that we approach the Christmas season this year. Then, for a time at least, the hearts of men everywhere will turn from the thoughts of war, suspicion and hatred to those of peace and goodwill among men.

Our Christian community here is small, but nonetheless, our hearts are full of joy and gratitude at this season for the "good tidings of great joy" which the angels said "shall be for all peoples." The "Babe of Bethlehem" has brought hope and peace to the lives of those who have opened their hearts to receive Him.

At this time we wish to express our gratitude to you who have so generously given your time, your gifts and your prayers that the message of the Christ Child may be more fully proclaimed in this hour of China's great need.

Dorothy joins me in the prayer for you, our friends, that the spirit of the Christ Child may give you new hope and courage and that the year ahead may be one of joy and satisfaction.

Sincerely yours,
DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.

The following Memorial Service was conducted in memory of the departed members of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference October 7, 1947, at Burlington, N. C., by Mrs. R. M. Cline:

I have lived. I have labored. I have loved. To love and labor is the sum of living. Now the day is far spent, and the night is at hand. The time draweth nigh when man shall rest from his labors. But still he shall love, and he shall enter into rest, through Him who is Light, and Life, and Love.—Sir Thomas Moore.

SOLO: "One Sweetly Solemn Thought"—sung by Mrs. Robert Wentz.

MEDITATION:

There are ferns in the garden of the soul, as well as flowers. The flowers grow best in the sunshine: the ferns grow best in the shade. There is the fern of Patience, and the fern of Long-Suffering, and the fern of Meekness. And the Great Gardener of the Soul delights in the ferns and purposes to save them from destruction by the garish day. And so He follows us into the shade of sorrow or the shade of sickness and pain. But it is a very blessed shadow, for it is the "Shadow of the Almighty." And here ferns flourish, and the cloudy day makes the garden beautiful.

—J. H. Jowett.

Into every home where the dreadful sorrows of death cast shadows of gloom and chase out the light of day, and draw the shades of an early night, the Christ of comfort enters; and into our listening ears and saddened hearts He whispers these words of eternal life:

"I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."—John 11:25, 26.

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you . . . that where I am ye may be also." John 14:1-3.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." Ps. 126:5, 6.

POEM:

It is so natural that we fall asleep,
Like tired children when the day is done;

I would question why the living weep
When death has kissed the laughing lips of one.

We do not sigh when the golden skies
Have donned

The purple shadows and the gray of night,

Because we know the morning lies beyond
And we must wait a little while for light.

So when, grown weary with the care of strife,

Our loved ones find in sleep the peace they crave,

We should not weep, but learn to count this life

And thus be happy for them, not distressed,

But lift our hearts with love to God and smile,

And we anon, like tired ones will rest

If we will hope and wait—a little while.

—Ella Bentley.

CANDLE LIGHTING SERVICE:

Two lighted candles are on the altar, one symbolic of Christ and the church and the other representing Mrs. C. H. Rowland, the beloved and moving spirit behind our woman's work in the Southern Convention. Our conference president, Mrs. F. C. Lester, lighted her candle from the one symbolic of Mrs. Rowland, and in turn lighted candles of representatives of the societies to which the departed belonged. Those with lighted candles remained standing at the altar until after the memorial prayer. A list of those in whose memory candles are lighted is printed on page 36 of the Year Book of the Woman's Missionary Convention.

(Here Mrs. Lester presented to Mrs. W. E. Wisseman and Mrs. M. T. Garren, daughters of Mrs. Rowland, a bound book of certificates of memorial given by the societies in memory of their mother.)

MOMENT OF SILENCE—In memory and honor of the departed.

MEMORIAL PRAYER:

O God, by whose grace thy people gain courage in the way of the heroes of faith: We lift our hearts in gratitude for all who have lived beautifully and valiantly and have given themselves unselfishly to truth and righteousness. Especially do we thank thee for such as those we remember today, who have consecrated to thee and to humanity their time and talent and means, that the gospel of love and freedom which they enjoyed might also be enjoyed by even those in the remotest corners of the earth. God of our fathers, help us to prize very highly and to strive to increase the gifts which their labors and sacrifice and devotion have passed on to the world. Grant unto us the gift of a vigorous and living faith that we may have the incentive to labor, even as these we honor labored: that we may be true to thee as they were true to thee; that we may be loyal as they were loyal; and that we may serve the cause of pure and undefiled religion all the days of our lives. And grant that we, with all those who depart hence in the faith, may wear at last the victor's crown. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

HYMN: "Faith of Our Fathers."

BENEDICTION:

Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

can't seem to produce enough goods for export. Do you know what this means personally to the average Englishman? It means he has coupons for clothes, and never enough, if he has children. It means he has coupons for food and many articles of food are just missing. Children get milk but not adults. Children get eggs but adults have only one a week (although it is more often one a month). Fruit especially of a tropical nature, is largely missing. Nobody is starving. The laws are fair. But everyone has a monotonous diet and lack many of the things which we feel are necessary for abundant living. And the tragic thing is that they haven't reached bottom but apparently have only begun the descent.

The third thing is the failure of the political leaders to give imaginative leadership. The Labor Government has done many good things. It handled the crisis in India very well, for example, but it hasn't captured the imagination of the people or made them unified. Many of its leaders are not too well versed in management. Furthermore, they have promised many things and it is hard to fulfill them. Their's is a painful task—that of telling the workers they must work longer hours and produce far more than they are now. Unfortunately, there is no clear note in the Conservatives either. I sat in the livingroom of one of my hosts and listened to Winston Churchill speak. His voice had the old ring in it and his English as always was classic and one felt "Here speaks a great man, a man who can truly lead." Yet, he by-passed any specific suggestions for

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

It is Thanksgiving. In the South we almost always have pleasant weather, and a snow for the day is very rare. It is our custom to eat turkey, cranberry sauce, potatoes whipped and creamy, and pumpkin pie. All of these are American foods and make us think of the first Thanksgiving in the New World.

The people of the New England wilderness had not had much to eat, but at last they had received a better harvest of corn and vegetables. Because the Indians had shown them how to make the maize and squash grow, they invited them to share their feasting. Governor Bradford called his people together and proclaimed the day of giving thanks and it pleased the people greatly.

Four men were chosen to hunt for game: deer and turkeys. As they set forth, the wives began preparing those things at hand. Chief Massasoit, with whom the Pilgrims had made a treaty of peace, came bringing nearly a hundred of his braves and people. They, too, hunted, adding deer to the ones the four white men had caught. There were wild ducks as well as turkeys. Potatoes and corn were roasted. The bitter-sweet cranberries were cooked and the yellow pumpkins turned into pies. For three days the Pilgrims and the red men ate and entertained one another.

It has been said that the English men marched in formation to the delight of the Indians, but that their greatest pleasure came from the strange manner in which the white women cooked. Even with all the celebrating and merry-making, giving thanks to God was not forgotten.

Today we in America still live in the "land of plenty." There are enough turkeys, cranberries and golden pumpkins for us all. Others abroad are not so fortunate. May we think of them and share with them?

Let us remember, too, that the early Pilgrims became the Congregationalists of whom we are a part.

And so the month of November is nearly gone. Here is a November poem:

November whirls around the hills
On crimson-slippered, prancing feet,
Each bending leaf with gladdening thrills
Responsive to a timeless beat,
The rhythm of her maddening pace
Makes ever more an endless race.

WHY ROBERT DOES NOT MARRY.

BY JANETT STEVENSON MURRAY.

(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarden Association.

"Betty wait! The boys said I could drive Buster alone tonight. Won't you come along?" Bobby was out of breath trying to catch up—he had loitered after kindergarden had been dismissed.

"Oh! May we hitch him up?" Betty's eyes sparkled.

Bobby, the youngest of four boys, had spent much of his life playing in his back yard with his cousin, Betty, who lived across the street.

The children did not get far with Buster. The pony was too wise to exert himself for five-year-olds—even though they coaxed, shouted, and slapped his back gently with the reins. But Bobby was content. To have driven alone was a great achievement—almost equal to the experience of entering kindergarden the week before.

Dinner had been served when Bobby came in—happy and hungry.

"Where have you been, Son?" Father inquired.

"Oh, I know!" exclaimed the high school brother. "Bob has a girl; they've been out buggy riding together!"

They all laughed, and the older boys began teasing the little fellow. "Bobby has a girl!" they chanted. It was a great joke, they thought.

The light went out of Bobby's face. He was shocked and hurt. "No, it was just Betty; she's no girl," he protested with trembling lips.

But that did not stop them. "Tomorrow Bob'll give his girl a box of candy, and Saturday he'll most likely take her to the show," jested one of the boys.

Bobby felt disgraced; he had evidently done some terrible things. He did not know exactly what, but it was connected with Betty. He could not eat and began to cry. Mother took him away from the table, but he refused to be comforted and he sobbed himself to sleep.

"Come and see my new gold fish," Betty called across the street the next morning. Bobby pretended not to hear and sneaked off down the alley to kindergarden. He must have nothing more to do with Betty.

By staying with the boys he was able to avoid her, and actually he never talked with his little cousin again. So great became his antipathy to girls in general, he scarcely spoke to one for years after that. If girls were invited to parties and picnics, he always remained at home. His family carelessly accentuated the harm they had done.

"Would you believe it," remarked one of his brothers, "Bob went around the block today to avoid meeting Betty and her friends!"

Bobby turned crimson with embarrassment.

"Yes, I can't understand what's got into you, Bobby," his mother said. "You always slip out of the house when the girls come in. I'm ashamed of you."

The boys joked him about being a woman-hater.

After graduating from college, Bobby, who was now "Robert," woke up to the situation and for five years made a definite effort to overcome his antipathy to the opposite sex. But now, at twenty-seven, this highly-educated man, with a fine position in research work, is still ill at ease with women.

"It isn't worth the effort," he said to a friend recently. "I don't think I'll ever marry. Being so thoroughly conditioned against girls at an early age, an unreasoning antagonism has taken root in my life and it seems impossible for me to rid myself of it."

Unfortunately, the behavior of Robert's family is not exceptional. Teasing little boys about girls and little girls about boys, in a way that is incomprehensible to them, is a deplorable every-day practice. With the outcome may seldom be as tragic as in Robert's case, that kind of teasing is always harmful. The innocent friendly companionship of little children should be taken for granted—never ridiculed.

NOTICE FORSYTH YOUNG PEOPLE!

All young people of our Forsyth County Churches are invited to a banquet at the First Reformed Church, in Winston-Salem, N. C., on December 4 at 7:00 o'clock. The young people of that church are seeking to know our young people. An interesting and helpful program is being arranged and Bob Keppel, a delegate to the Youth Conference at Oslo, Norway, last summer, will be the speaker.

WORLD COUNCIL OFFICIALS VISIT ABROAD.

Two officials of the World Council of Christian Education, formerly the World's Sunday School Association, left recently for visits abroad in connection with the expansion of the new visual aids department set up in the organization by J. Arthur Rank and Mrs. Clifford S. Heinz.

Dr. E. F. Voehringer, associate secretary of the WCCE, who has recently been appointed to head the New York office of the new department which has also a London office and a proposed one in Geneva, left for West Africa by plane on November 6 to visit the churches of the Gold Coast and Nigeria to survey their needs of visual aids such as films and slides. He took with him a projector for still slides, especially fitted to be run from a car available in many parts of Africa. While in that continent, Dr. Voehringer attended the 100th Anniversary of the Ewe Presbyterian Church to be held on the Gold Coast. He was a missionary and supervisor of mission schools at Ewe from 1934 to 1940.

Dr. Forest L. Knapp, general secretary of the World Council of Christian Education, departed by plane for London on November 12 to assist in setting up the London office of the visual aids department. While there Dr. Knapp had the assistance of the WCCE Committee on Visual Aids, of which Mr. Rank is chairman. Dr. Knapp also conferred with officers of the mission boards located in London.

The content and procedures of the recent eight international youth gatherings were studied at a seminar held at Columbia University in New York on November 1 under the sponsorship of the World Council of Christian Education and the National Intercollegiate Christian Council, under the chairmanship of Dr. Everette Stowe, WCCE associate secretary.

International conferences considered were the World Conference of Christian Youth at Oslo; the World Youth Festival, Prague; the International Student Seminars in the United States; the World Movement for World Federal Government at Montreux, Switzerland; UNESCO's First Summer Seminar on Education for International Understanding, Sevres, France; Ecumenical Church Movement Conference, Hamburg; the Girl Scout 35th Anniversary International Camp, Barrie, Pa.; and the Boy Scout Sixth World Jamboree in France.

Main purpose of the meeting was to furnish guidance for the program of the National Intercollegiate Christian Council in its relation to the study of world events. Descriptions and interpretations of the conferences were given by Mr. Burns Chalmers, Miss Libby Linn, Miss Rena Weller, Mrs. Siu-May Ting, Mrs. John Deschner and Miss Muriel Jacobson.

Two conclusions were reached by the thirty persons attending the seminar; one was the extent of the divisions existing between peoples; the other, the existence of real possibilities in building a community of interest among these peoples.

The spirit of all the conferences was believed to be expressed by one of the attending students who said: "I have had a blindfold lifted from my eyes."

THIS HUNGRY WORLD.

strict the use of grains can be considered by the Congress.

"There is much talk that the President may call a special session of Congress this fall for consideration of the so-called Marshall Plan, and if that should occur, the Congress could at the time consider the enactment of new legislation to restrict the use of grains.

"However, members are reminded that Senator Taft, the actual leader of the majority in the Senate, recently stated that he was unalterably opposed to the reimposition of grain restrictions."

The country is seriously handicapped by insufficient numbers of freight cars to move steel and other raw materials essential to many manufacturers, and to move crops, and yet the manufacturers of beer are using thousands upon thousands of cars to transport a product back and forth across the country which is causing a perfect plague of crime and disorder.

Why does the Government permit these things? Are the people in positions of responsibility indifferent to the distress of millions of Americans who cannot provide properly for their children at prevailing high prices? Why permit grain to be used to make men drunk which might be used to alleviate hunger in Europe, checking the on-rushing tide of Pagan Communism and possibly preventing a third World War?—The Voice.

What we can't understand is why a man whose "great chance" has been spoiled by drink, never loses an opportunity to put in a plug for booze.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN COMMUNITY LIFE.

The role of Christian education in development of community life will be discussed at the international Conference on Community and Religious Education at Columbus, Ohio, December 2-5, according to Dr. T. T. Swearingen, conference director.

Seven types of communities will be studied by the 300 representatives of church and non-church agencies who will attend the conference, sponsored by the International Council of Religious Education with the cooperation of the Home Missions Council of North America. Addresses, panel discussions, and worship services will be on the program in addition to two days of work group sessions.

These groups will analyze their respective communities according to the following topics: (1) essential characteristics of the community type; (2) the forces that destroy "community" and adversely affect human personality; (3) the constructive forces in the community; (4) the function of religious education in the community; (5) the cooperative planning and action that religious education forces need to engage in to develop an adequate program and the place of a council of churches; (6) nature and scope of cooperation between the churches and other constructive agencies; and (7) possible constructive action of a "mobilized" community.

THANKSGIVING.

ings and your own giving and see how much your contributions would be increased. Then multiply the result by the membership of the conferences and then by the membership of the Southern Convention, and you would get the answer. Apply the tithing test before you say, "I am giving all I can," or, "I am doing my best." This will give you the answer as to what your church can or should do.

Let us be thankful for our Church, for our Church's enterprises and institutions. Under the blessings of God we are able to support them. May God help us to give as we should.

Sound principles of government are unchanging. The Ten Commandments were given to mankind for all time and for all people wherever they may be. Just relations between men should govern the establishment and administration of laws rather than principles of expediency.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

LESSON X—DECEMBER 7, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Imitate not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God.—III John 11.

LESSON: III John.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Cor. 1:10-17.

Christian Friendship.

"The elder unto Gaius the beloved, whom I love in truth." There was a strong and tender tie between the old man, John, and his friend, Gaius, as well as many others whom he knew in the Christian faith. To be sure there can be fine and strong friendships between people who are not even Christians. But life has few finer gifts to humankind than true friendship between those who are Christian friends. The spirit of Christ and of Christian fellowship sanctifies friendship and lifts it to new and higher levels.

Even As Thy Soul Prospereth.

"Beloved I pray that in all things thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth." Read that again. Would you like for somebody to pray for you like that—that you would prosper, and that you would enjoy health only in proportion as your soul prospereth! That is a sobering word. Suppose some businessmen, both big shots and little shots, gave only as much attention to their business as they give to their souls. Suppose their business was not any more vigorous than their souls were. Or suppose that people were only as well as their souls were well. Suppose people paid no more attention to the care of their bodies than they give to the care of their souls. It is a sad commentary on human nature that folks will go almost any lengths and spend any amount of money to find healing for their bodies, and yet they will not go to the least trouble to find healing for their souls. Men who are sick in body seek healing, but they will go along with chronic and serious soul-illness and do little if anything about it. Or if they are not particularly sick of soul, they do nothing to nurture a strong and great soul. "As thy soul prospereth"—would you want that to be the standard or norm of the rest of your life.

The Joy of Preacher or Teacher.

"Greater joy have I none than this, to hear that my children are walking in the truth." Fathers and mothers know something about that—to see their children true to their upbringing and keeping faith with the ideals they were given. Teachers know something about that—to see their pupils fulfilling their dreams for them and carrying out their principles and ideals. Preachers also know something about it—to see their members living out Christ's ideals and spirit. There is something that makes a parent or teacher or preacher more than glad to see their "children" walking in the truth."

Christian Hospitality.

Hospitality was an important thing in those days. Hotel accommodations were very meager, and the Christian teachers and preachers who went about from place to place had to depend upon the hospitality of the Christians. Thus it was that John commends Gaius for his home of the "open door." These folks had gone forth forth "for the sake of the name, taking nothing from the Gentiles." They ought therefore to be welcomed, said the aged apostle, and by so welcoming them their hosts became "fellow-workers for the truth." Modern city life has wrought changes in the custom of Christian hospitality. But it still has a place, and many a missionary on speaking tour, and many a minister on preaching mission has occasion to thank God upon every remembrance of warm-hearted and generous-spirited people whose names have been open to them as they went from place to place.

Diotrephes, Who Loveth to Have the Preeminence.

"But Diotrephes, who loveth to have the preeminence among them, receiveth us not." This old fellow was a "church boss." He was going to be first batter or he was not going to play ball. He wanted folks to consult him, to kowtow to him, to elect him to office and keep him there. He loved to have first place in everything, in the seats in the church—if there was a church or in the home where the church met, and in the organizations of the church. We can picture the old fellow, or he may not have been so old after all. And this man had an amazing offspring. In fact many of his descendants are still living today. And they have got around, too, for they are to be found in almost every church. What church is there which does not have its Diotrephes or Mrs. Diotrephes "who loveth to have the preeminence." And the tragedy of it is that they would rather wreck a church than to lose that preeminence.

Obstructionists.

"And not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and them that would he forbid-deth and casteth them out of the church." This fellow, Diotrophes, was born in the "objective case." It did not make much difference what it was, "he was agin it," as the saying goes. He would not do anything himself and he would not allow anybody else to do anything. One can say in all Christ grace that it would be a good thing in some churches, perhaps in many churches, if there were several funerals. Many a church would better off if Mr. Diotrophes and his family were out of the church.

A Good Name.

"Demetrius hath the witness of all men, and of the truth itself; yea, we also bear witness." He was rich; he had a good name which is rather to be chosen than great riches. And it was a good name that was earned by good works. He had the witness of the truth. Happy is that man who is held in high regard in the church or community because of the simple integrity of his character and his sincere good life.

Speaking Face to Face.

"I am unwilling to write them to thee with ink and pen; but I hope to see thee shortly, and we shall speak face to face." It is often easier to write something than to say it to a person's face. Many a fellow writes an anonymous letter who would not dare to say the same thing to a person's face. But John had some intimate and important things to tell his friend and he wanted to tell him face to face. One can do his courting by mail, and write many sweet nothings in a letter. But there is an added depth and meaning to what one says to his or her beloved face to face. How important it is to be able to say to one and all, face to face, what needs to be said.

When the conduct of man is designed to be influenced, unassuming persuasion should ever be adopted. It is an old and true maxim "that a drop of honey catches more flies than a gallon of gall." So with men. If you would win a man to your cause, first convince him that you are his sincere friend.

—Abraham Lincoln.

GOD'S GLORY IN NATURE.

A Sermon

By REV. JOHN F. C. GREEN, D.D., McKeesport, Pennsylvania.

"And the hand of Jehovah was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise and go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee. Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of Jehovah stood there . . . and I fell on my face."—Ez. 3:22-23.

The Bible, which is God speaking to man, came out of the experience of sacred writers who were saturated with the lore and love of nature. The choicest portions of Holy Writ are nature passages: "The Lord is my Shepherd," "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament sheweth His handiwork," "Behold the lilies of the field, how they grow." Surely, it may fairly be said that those whose lives have blotted out—in a city-culture, or in nature-blindness in the country—the glory of God in nature are incapable of comprehending the wonder and the love of God in His creation.

The story is told of an aged clergyman, who had long and faithfully served in a hard station, that he prayed: O God, I am and old and tired. Grant me Thy mercy, take me home to Thee to enjoy the glory of Paradise." And that the divine answer came: "You have not enjoyed and honored the beauties of the earth, which is my handiwork; therefore you are not ready to enjoy the beauty of heaven." The aged servant of the Lord then began to travel, reading God's mercy and his power in the marvels of this world. He continually sent prayers of thanksgiving heavenward for the ineffable revelation of beauty revealed to him, after a long life of nature blindness.

There is a wise saying: "He who would bring home the wealth of the Indies must take the wealth of the Indies with him. So it is in traveling: he who would bring home knowledge, must take with him knowledge."

More of our fellow-countrymen have travelled this year than ever; they have seen—in all—more of this beautiful land of ours than ever before. What they brought home depends upon what they are, rather than upon what they saw. And what they understood and enjoyed afar, depends upon their interests at home. If they were content with an ungainly city, their home, they will not have appreciated beauty anywhere; if they selfishly ignored ugliness, except for themselves in and about their homes, they are selfish and have no share in God's creation which is the heritage of all. For "no man liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself."

The Prophet Ezekiel found God's revelation speaking to him in glory in the plain, and before it he fell upon his face, being unable to withstand its fulness. The charge has been made that Western Christian Churches have confined God and His worship to four walls and certain hours and days. Not so the founders of our faith; neither in Bible times nor of our ancestors in Europe who worshipped in "the groves, God's first temples;" who marvelled at the unspeakable pageant of the rising and the setting suns; who heard Him speaking in the lashing thunder and in the still small voice of the soft winds, which Jesus compared to the way of the Holy Spirit in the secret of man's heart.

The great reformers who brought the Gospel back to men used nature. Said Calvin: "For to everyone who approaches the heavenly building with a pure mind, the effect cannot be other than that he is plunged into amazing adoration at the sight of the wisdom, the goodness and the power of God." And Jesus said: "For if God so clothe the grass of the field which today is and tomorrow is cast into the oven, how much more will He clothe you, oh ye, of little faith."

The historic Church has over the centuries placed in this season of the completion of the harvest a day of thanksgiving, with offerings of the fruits of the earth, in Harvest Home: the visible and material evidence of gratitude to God the Giver of All. Thus the believer has shared of his receiving with others, less fortunate, the blessings derived from God's gift of nature:

Nature never did betray the heart that loved her; 'tis her privilege,
Through all the years of this our life, to lead
From joy to joy; for She can so inform
The mind that is within us, so impress
With quietness and beauty and so feed

With lofty thoughts, that neither evil tongues,
Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,
Nor greetings where no kindness is, nor all
The dreary intercourse of daily life
Shall e'er prevail against us, nor disturb
Our cheerful faith that all which we behold
Is full of blessings.

SERMONIC IMPRESSIONS.

the remedy of the present situation and left many people disappointed.

Many churches are practically empty and vast numbers of people rarely ever go to church. There are churches here and there which seem to have retained their vigor and their leadership. Unfortunately in most places, the churches have not regained their pre-war strength, which was badly undermined by the dislocations of war. There are, on the other hand, a number of things which I believe will help Britain win once more. First of all, one can't live in their land and break bread with them in their homes, and worship in their churches, without realizing that they are a truly great people, and that they have within them real and noble spiritual principles. In the midst of the trouble, they are so patient that it almost shames you to be impatient and yet under it all one senses a conviction and a character which cannot fail in the long run. Furthermore, they still believe in themselves and in their possibilities, when many countries in Europe have ceased to do so. At heart they are a free people, and even some of the experiments which seem dubious to an outsider are entertained only, because they want all people to have the minimum services for a decent living. They still believe in the long and great view of life. I wish you could see the plans—which now must be indefinitely postponed, for new and finer cities, and for the re-settlement of populations of their ghastly slums—and the new hospitalization plans which will make it possible for every human being to have the necessary medical care. Spiritually, they are at heart Christians, and the churches are beginning to turn the corner in a new and daring ministry of service and Christian leadership. In a word, let no one tell the British are doomed. If they are, then all free men are, and all men of character. I don't believe that and you don't either. God is not mocked, nor is His influence ceased. Let us rather say, England is in for a long and hard road.

England will win through—let us do our part to hasten that glad day.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

More good things come to the children here. After lunch was served the last day of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, the good ladies who had prepared the lunch had quite a lot of good ham, chicken, pies, and cakes left over. They conceived the idea that the children at the Christian Orphanage would enjoy it. They asked the writer if he would accept it if they would put it in boxes. Of course, we did. Who could refuse such a splendid contribution? We brought it home in the car and divided it among the three dining rooms, and the children enjoyed the good things for dinner that night.

Then Monday night, November 17, was Ladies Night at the Burlington Rotary Club. On Ladies Night they always serve a beautiful banquet dinner. The tables were decorated with fruits of different kinds and looked beautiful. After the meeting adjourned the committee in charge decided to send the fruit to the children in the Christian Orphanage, which they proceeded to do. Apples, oranges, grapefruit, bananas, pears, and large bunches of lucious grapes all mixed together, with cocoanuts thrown in, was a sight to look at—three big boxes full. Now you can imagine the surprised look on the children's faces when they first looked at it, and oh! how they enjoyed eating it. This, too, was a fine treat for them, and one which they enjoyed very much, indeed.

The Rotary Club has been very kind to the Christian Orphanage this year and has done much for us through the year. They have not finished yet. A committee from the Rotary Club visited the Orphanage some weeks ago and instructed the writer to repaint and redecorate the library room and put in fluorescent lights, which will give the children better and softer lights by which to read.

Thanksgiving Offerings.—The little children are here. They have to be fed, clothed, and cared for. All these things cost a lot of money at the present prices. We are solely dependent upon you to supply our need. Dr. George W. Muller, who was the superintendent of an orphanage in Bristol, England, which cared for more than a thousand children, said he gave his children all the food he had for supper. He then went to his room and prayed. He told the Lord he had given the children all the food he had for supper, and he would look to Him to supply breakfast. During the night while Dr. Muller was asleep some kind hand piled the front porch full of food. The children had breakfast. The Lord touched some heart to supply this food.

I am a firm believer in prayer. I believe if we will go to the Lord in earnest prayer and make our wants known to Him, He will supply our needs through you as instruments in His hand. My prayer is that at this Thanksgiving season when the offering is taken in your Church, that you will open your heart and make an offering as the Lord has prospered you.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

A VISIT TO THE CHURCHES.
culosis and malarial). As he was a poor farmer, Ed gave him the medicine and we went on into town. The farmer was beside himself with joy. After bathing our feet and applying a little more adhesive, we were taken to see the church. It had formerly been an attractive building but the Communist armies in the early 1930's had burned part of it and gradually it had depreciated. Mr. Chiu, our guide, was responsible for the church and has held services somewhat irregularly. There are few Christians left of what had once been a thriving Christian community. A meeting was called that night and we were introduced to the small band of loyal Christians. After we had sung several hymns and spoken a few words of greeting, Ed examined some more sick people. Then, in spite of our boards beds, we were really able to sleep.

The next morning early we were off again on our longest journey yet (26 miles). It was a sight all along the way to see the harvesting of rice going on as it had been for centuries. The grain is cut by hand and beaten against the sides of a large bin. The grain heads fall off and the straw is discarded. Later they are dried in the sun, often in the middle of the road. Everything is done by hand quite in contrast to our American combines and power machinery. Most of the fields are small, often on hill-sides, and very irregular in shape. In a few places we saw Kaoling, soy beans and vegetables chiefly turnips growing, but the vast majority was planted in rice.

Eating in the inns as we went along helped us to understand and appreciate the Chinese diet. The average meal consists of from three to five bowls of rice for each person with a dish or two of vegetables in the center of the table from which each one eats sparingly from time to time using his chop sticks. The purpose of the vegetables is to flavor the rice and make it more palatable. The common vegetables now are red pepper (which we couldn't eat at all), a kind of swiss chard, taro and turnips. The average Chinese can afford to eat meat very seldom, and the inns never serve it at all. Dr. Ed got along much better eating Chinese food than I did as he eats it regularly at the hospital. He can put away three or four bowls of rice, but two was about my limit at one time. Fortunately for us, when we visited the pastors, they knew our peculiar Western ways and gave us chicken, pork, beef and an abundance of vegetables to go with our rice. We also were invited to several feasts where we really were filled to overflowing. Chinese feast food (which has a slight similarity to the food bought in Chinese restaurants in America, and which can only be eaten on rare occasions by the wealthy Chinese) is really delicious, declared by some to be the world's best, but the ordinary food eaten from day to day is not only sadly lacking in nutrition, but is very difficult for foreigners to eat.

We arrived in the town of Taining about noon. Here was a story similar to Chuko. What formerly had been a thriving church with many members was now reduced to nothing. There had been no minister since the Red Army came in 1933. The Christians who were left got together every Sunday for a little service, but they were just a few older people now and quite discouraged. We found Mr. and Mrs. Lee living in the church and caring for it. They had moved there when their home had been destroyed by fire several years before. "It must have been God's plan to have our house burn down," said Mr. Lee, "so we could watch the church." Mr. Lee, who has not been in good health for years, seemed to be well acquainted with the Scriptures and an ardent advocate of Christianity. He is a bit discouraged about the church in Taining, but hopes that the church will be revived. "You must come back in the spring and spend two weeks with us," he said.

After a good lunch with the Lees and after resting our feet a bit, we started out for Kienning, 30 miles away. We knew we couldn't make it that day, so we planned to stay in an inn at the little town of Meikou about half way between. Pastor Liao, of Kienning, with his saddle pony, met us in the middle of the afternoon. That night, in Meikou, was one I shall never forget. We were given a room which would have made a bed in the Bowery look like a Paradise. The small unlighted room, without windows or fresh air, had two beds (consisting of boards on top of two saw horses). They were almost long enough for us. The interior was dirty and full of cobwebs. Before they let us in the room, the floor was taken up and a chicken which had died some time before, was taken out. After a careful spraying of DDT, we stretched our sleeping bags out on the boards and had a good night's sleep.

The next morning we were off again at sunrise to cover the 15 miles to Kienning. We came shortly to a high mountain which we climbed by means of stone steps. The trip over the mountain was made before breakfast (about 5 miles). We were very much slowed down by the horse which Pastor Liao literally pulled up one side of the mountain and down the other. He didn't like steps. We were glad to have the horse, though, as all our baggage was put on his back.

When we arrived at the top of the mountain, we found a temple attended by a Buddhist monk. He offered us tea (from unwashed cups, of course) and asked Dr. Ed to look at his eyes. They hurt considerably and he could hardly see. Ed immediately recognized trachoma, the dreaded infectious eye disease so common in the Orient and incurable in its last stages. On the way back over the mountain several days later, he was still there and brought us a basin of water with a much used towel to wash our faces. As politely as we could, we refused, as it would be almost certain trachoma for all of us, too. We wondered how many other travelers had availed themselves of his hospitality.

The Kienning people had been expecting us and were all ready to give us a warm welcome. The following letter was brought to us written in English:

Dear Mr. Jackson and Dr. Riggs:

We are so glad to know that you have come to Kienning. We are so cordially to ask you to take supper with us at 7:30 P. M. We are also asking you to join in our welcome meeting after the supper, and hoping you would give us a good speech.

We are

Sincerely yours,

C. S. Lia,

Liao H,

John C. Teng,

Representatives of Church members at Kienning.

The plans for the supper were well made in advance and it was a joyous occasion. Previously Dr. and Mrs. Shepherd and the McClures had lived at Kienning. The work had kept going well under the able leadership of Pastor Liao. The next day was the Sabbath and we had the privilege of worshipping in the church. It was almost filled, one side being occupied by the students of Hua Mei, a primary school under the supervision of the church and staffed with a Christian principal and Christian teachers. That afternoon a special program was planned by the students to welcome us. Ed was kept busy between times going out to visit the sick. I preached the sermon in the morning service in Chinese with the aid of a manuscript in Romanized writing.

The Kienning Church has never completely recovered either from the Communist invasion of the early 30's but we were well impressed with the Christians there and especially with the number of young adults in the church. The school is having a most difficult time financially. They have been on the point of closing many times, but always thus far, they have managed to keep going.

While in Kienning, I met a most attractive young man, Liao Tau Chung, who is planning to go to seminary next year to study for the ministry. He is in his early 20's and has a wife and two children. I certainly admire any young person who has the courage these days wish to prepare himself for leadership in this often discouraging work which has slipped back so far in the past fifteen years.

(To be concluded next week.)

AND NO DRINKING DAYS.

Have you noticed what the dear brewers have done? Responding to heavy pressure from Charles Luckman, chairman of the Citizens' Food Committee, they have agreed—agreed, mind you, as though they were bargaining on equal terms—to use less corn in their industry, saving 650,000 bushels a month. But they assure us—the interested parties—that there will be little decrease in the quantity of their product, and no reduction in quality (they are to use more potatoes, which cost us three to six cents a pound, and which the starving people of Europe might eat if we do not need them).

Also, under duress and with bitter complaining, the distillers have agreed to some curtailment in the manufacture of whisky and kindred drinks (they have only enough whisky on hand to last eight years!)

These ghouls are not first of all Americans, or Republicans, or Democrats, or New Dealers, or Communists. They care nothing about party or nation or humanity. They stand for their own sordid profits at any cost.—The Free Methodist.

THANKSGIVING TO CHRISTMAS 1947

How to Find Help From Bible Reading

- 1—Read quietly and slowly. "Not snap shots but time exposures" should be the rule.
- 2—Read alertly and thoughtfully. Imagine the scenes.
- 3—Search for the personal message each day's passage has for YOU.
- 4—Your inner response to God's message is vital. When He condemns, bow penitently; when He offers help, place your hope on that assurance; when He commands, obey.
- 5—Underline passages which strike fire. Copy them and repeat them aloud.
- 6—Memorize one key verse daily.
- 7—Set aside and keep a definite daily time for reading.
- 8—Make it a habit; enter the New Year as a daily reader of the Bible.

The 1947 Advent Message

By OSCAR E. MAURER

Chairman and Editor of Daily Devotions

Elon College Library 3X

It has been a hobby of mine to study the sermon themes announced by the Pastors of non-liturgical churches in America, and I wonder whether we have not, somehow, missed the point of Advent. The season is, of course, a time of preparation for the great central fact of Christmas—the Incarnation. The Eternal Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth. But, so commonly, this stupendous event is regarded as only an occasion for joy—a joy which easily resolves itself into the commercialized merriment which characterizes Christmas. Joy there is, to be sure, but we must not forget that the coming of Incarnate Truth also means Judgment. “Who can abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner’s fire and like fuller’s soap.”—(Malachi 3:2.) Is the Church, is Society, in a condition to receive him with joy? That is a rhetorical question. We know that they are not ready. There must be Penitence before we shall be able to stand before him. People, and we Pastors among them, must be led to see their sins in the light of God’s countenance and to purge themselves, sweep clean the disordered chambers of their hearts full of selfishness, pride, self-indulgence and prejudice. If the Incarnation is fact instead of fancy, how can we receive the Christmas Child with joy unless we have experienced a spiritual purification?

Stanley High, in his recent, widely quoted address at Northfield, argued that the church has failed him by encouraging him to believe that he is a fine fellow, full of wonderful possibilities which he could bring to fulfillment if he made up his mind to do so, instead of showing him that he is a sinner and leading him to repent of his sins. Stanley High is sometimes right. I am of the opinion that in this case he is. In the Gospels, the preparation for Christ’s coming was made by John the Baptist: “Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand.” Have we the courage to sound this note in Advent, 1947, when Society is still borne down with sins which caused the war and which the war has not changed? Getting men and women to see themselves as God sees them—getting them to feel their utter need for Christ—showing them how to find him—that is Evangelism, that is the Advent message and task!

THE PARADOXES OF CHRIST.

He was the Light, yet he hung in darkness on the cross.

He was the Rock of Ages, yet his "feet sang into deep waters."

He was the Son of God, yet he died a felon's death.

He was the holy, undefiled, separate from sinners, and knew no sin, yet he was "made sin" when he took the guilty culprit's place and suffered in his stead.

He was the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, yet he was led as a lamb to the slaughter.

He was the Ancient of Days, yet he was "cut off in the midst" of his days.

He was the Father of Eternity, yet he became a man, and "was crucified through weakness."

He was the Image of the Invisible God, yet his visage was "marred more than any man."

He was the Desire of All Nations, yet he was despised and rejected of men.

He bade the weary to come to him for rest, yet not on earth could he find rest until he said, "It is finished," and gave up his life to God.

He was the Fountain of Life, yet upon the cross he cried, "I thirst."

Can you understand these mysteries? These are things that angels desire to look into. The heaven of heavens cannot contain him, yet he died for us.—Faithful Words.

A LETTER TO TIME.

Editor of Time Magazine
9 Rockefeller Plaza
New York 20, New York

Dear Sir:

In TIME for November 10, page 76, you quote from a report of the Committee on Evangelism of the Chicago Congregational Association in which they claim that a questionnaire circulated among fifty Congregational ministers in Chicago reveals such divergent opinions on certain doctrinal subjects as to cause "theological confusion" and thus handicap evangelism. It raises the question: what are preaching missions to preach and in what faith are young people to be confirmed?

I have not yet been able to obtain a copy of this report or the questionnaire on which it was based. But your article at once raises two questions in my mind: 1. Why are only 50 replies reported on? There are over seventy-five churches in the Chicago Association. 2. Why were these questions so obviously "slanted" along lines of theological controversy?

In defense of the spirit of doctrinal tolerance which this report seems to criticize, may I, as Moderator, suggest that it is precisely this freedom of religious thought in which we rejoice.

Our denomination has never been held together by creedal tests or theological verbalisms, but by a common devotion to the spirit of Christ. We are more concerned about the application of Jesus' teachings to modern life than about doctrinal uniformity. We are a free people who believe in the right of our ministers to interpret religion and the Bible in the light of unfettered modern scholarship. We seek God's revelation in all of life. This does not mean "theological confusion." It is a challenge, rather, to creative thinking. It means freedom to grow. We think this is a better faith in which to "confirm" young people today than any rigid dogmatism would be.

Sincerely yours,
Albert W. Palmer,
Moderator.

Thoughtful people cannot escape feeling that they were created for an everlasting purpose. They have wants and needs this present world cannot satisfy. They are familiar with thirsts for the unseen, infinite, and eternal. They know aspirations, ambitions, and dreams that can never be realized in this mundane sphere. Time is too short for the accomplishments of the soul.—W. H. Rogers.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Mission Work in Angola, Africa

By REV. CARL R. DILLE.

Back in the sixteenth century there was a great African king named Ngola who ruled a territory north of the Quanga River. His people were called, in the native language, A-Ngola, which means "those of Ngola." The ruling tribe, greater than the people of Ngola, was however, the Ndongo tribe. Ngola and his people, in a native war, broke the power of Ndongo people. Up until that time the Portuguese explorers of that part of Africa had called the territory "the kingdom of the Ndongo." Now, with Ngola's victory, it became known as the "kingdom of the Ndongo and those of Ngola" (Reino do Ndongo—A-Ngola). Today that land is called simply Angola and is the great Portuguese colony on the west coast of Africa. It is the colony in which is located our West Central Africa Mission of our Congregational Christian Churches.

At the time David Livingstone reached Luanda, the capitol of Angola, on his historic journey, there was no Christian work being carried on in the colony. A decade after the Roman Catholic Church began work, roughly in a north and south line. Shortly thereafter, Protestant work was started, following a more east-west line through the colony. The second Protestant group to begin work in Angola was our own American Board.

John O. Means, an officer of an American naval vessel which was trying to combat slave trading along the African coast, became interested in some of the natives from Angola that he met and on one of his trips to America urged the American Board to begin work among them. The Board heard him with interest and concern, and the result was that in November of 1880 the first missionaries of the Board to Angola reached the field. They were Mr. Bagster, Mr. Sanders, and Mr. Miller. The latter had been born in slavery. So it is notable that from its beginning, with Mr. Miller as one of the original missionaries, until today, with the great work of the Galangue Mission Station being carried on by such outstanding Negro missionaries as the McDowells, the McMillans, and the Coles, the work of our American Board in Angola has been closely connected to our Negro churches in America. Today the Board looks to the Negro Congregational Christian Churches for the support of the work of Galangue.

Those early missionaries traveled two hundred odd miles from the coast to Bailundo, the country of King Ekuikui, on foot. There they began their work. Today one can travel by air lines from this country to within fifty miles of Bailundo.

Difficulty and hardship was the lot of those courageous early missionaries, and a great loss was suffered in the early death of Mr. Bagster. A rum trader, who realized that his trade would be affected if the missionaries were successful, by telling falsehoods to King Ekuikui about the missionaries, succeeded in turning that powerful king against them for a time, so that they were driven from the area, only to be invited back a little later.

The work was slow but those early missionaries, both men and women, for the wives joined their husbands in the work, were no timid, easily discouraged souls. There was a great demand for Angolan rubber at the time, and the African people were so busy making money by gathering rubber while the price was high that they had little or no time for religion. In that they were closely akin to many people in so-called Christian America. However, little by little, progress was made. The Africans have a proverb which says, "Iso esumba, okula onoi," "the eye is a coward, the leg a hero." In other words, as one looks at all that needs to be done the eye is a coward and tells us it can't be done, but the leg is a hero; step by step he goes ahead, and gradually the work is accomplished.

So it has been in Angola. From that beginning sixty-seven years ago the African church in the American Board stations, now five in number, namely Bailundo, Chilleso, Elende, Lobsto and Galangue, has grown from none to approximately 50,000 who have made a Christian decision and are living in the Christian villages connected with those stations.

In addition to the five stations named above there is the Union work at Dondi, carried on with the United Church of Canada Mission. There is located Means School for Girls and Currie Institute for Boys, our highest training schools; the Bates Press for printing some much-needed Christian literature, and the Sara Hurd Scott Memorial Hospital, where sick are treated and where African young men and women are trained to become nurses.

The present work in Angola is divided, roughly, into three groups—medical, educational, evangelistic. Those in medical work and educational work are also evangelists, and the evangelists are educators, so that no hard and fast lines can be drawn between the groups.

In our American Board Stations there is now only one doctor. That means that there are some 100,000 people living in the Christian villages of our missions for whom there is no doctor. The greater part of the work is done by trained Africans. They not only heal the sick, teach hygiene and personal cleanliness, they also lead worship services, so that those who come to them may receive not only healing for their bodies but also for their souls. These Christian medical workers are the ones leading the fight against the evils of witchcraft.

The African has a great hunger for education. Thousands of African boys and girls are in our mission schools, where Bible study is a part of every curriculum. In spite of the low economic standard of the people—in 1946 a day laborer was receiving about six cents per day—these African people are bearing most of the expense of the mission schools. However, they cannot afford to build and equip our higher training schools. Nor can the Mission Board, as yet, provide the buildings and equipment needed. So advanced education on even a junior high school level is available to only a very few, and is denied to the larger part of those thousands of African children in our schools. And the African child in Angola can look only to mission schools for an education.

Recently the African has been asking for vocational training, in order to lift his own economic level, but again lack of funds and teachers and building and equipment limit greatly the work that can be done.

Adult education is another great field that is barely being touched—women's schools, schools for lay leaders, family life camps and conferences all demand missionary time and mission funds that are already overworked in trying to meet other needs.

Taking the continent as a whole, there are more communicant Christians per thousand of total population in Africa than in other mission area of the world, with the exception of the sparsely settled Pacific Islands.

It was recently reported that between 1926 and 1941-42, the combined rate of growth for the forty-three largest Protestant denominations was 24 per cent, and 22.3 per cent.

DR. JUDD COMES TO TOWN

"There is absolutely no sense in pouring 20 billion dollars into Europe, and not giving a dime to keep China, our own ally, free," contended Dr. Walter H. Judd in an address before the Woman's Club of Richmond.

Dr. Judd characterized the United States' behavior to China as a paradox of history. He explained that China is the balance of power, that if we do not help China, Russia will have Asia firmly behind her with gigantic resources and manpower and will have satellites on the Asiatic front so that she can assert her aggressiveness in Europe. All of our efforts in Japan, Korea and Manchuria are useless, he insisted, if we forget China who stands "plain betrayed." He reiterated: "The blind spot which the United States has toward China is completely non-understandable."

Dr. Judd is conversant with Europe as well as Asia. He thinks that Europe will survive if it is willing to make the collective effort necessary to get back on a sound economic level. England was one country about which Dr. Judd had serious misgivings, based on a recent tour of Europe. The basis of the economic trouble in England, in his estimation, was their failure to mechanize coal production, the very heart of their industrial life. In comparison he praised the Dutch and the Belgians for their vigor to do something, not just sit and endure. Tradition was described as a handicap to France, England and Italy, who were once great; while Holland and Belgium received favorable mention because they had no illusions of greatness and no temptation to stand on tradition. Dr. Judd favors the Marshall plan, provided Europe will move in the direction of greater economic collaboration of unity.

What about Russia? Congressman Judd does not minimize the Russian menace. He warned against the Henry Wallace practice of projecting our own altruistic feelings, which the Russian leaders have never professed, into the Communist problem. Our weapons are our military strength, economic, diplomatic and ideological forces. Results will be determined by the skill and attractiveness with which we present them. Hope was seen if we can hold communism where it is and spread the area of free nations.

Finally, this missionary statesman believes the United Nations must get in a position to handle this type of problem. It is his conviction that we can't get along with Russia until she realizes that we can get along without her. World federation must be built on mutual benefits.

THE DILLES RETURN

A jeep station wagon named "Penny" and some harrows, are the rather unusual items in the equipment of Carl R. and Lois L. Dille, who, with their two children, Nancy, thirteen, and Thomas, eleven, were expected to sail back to their Ovimbundu friends in West Central Africa, Monday, December 1, leaving New York on the "Talisman."

The jeep station wagon is called "Penny" because it is the gift of over 50 Christian churches which make up the Pennsylvania Congregational Christian Conference. The Dilles represent them in Africa in a section larger than the combined area of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. With the car came a fourteen-yard scroll with the signatures of the individual donors.

The Dilles, who went to Africa in 1938 under the American Board, have just finished their first furlough in seven and one-half years. They work among a kindly people who often "sleep with hunger" because they lack even elementary knowledge of scientific farming. To them, agricultural missionaries like Carl Dille literally mean life.

"The most valuable, efficient and permanent method of fighting hunger is through helping people feed themselves," says Mr. Dille. "It is a satisfying experience to give food to a hungry person, but it is vastly more satisfying to teach that hungry person how to cultivate his field so that he may permanently and adequately feed himself and his family. There is an almost unlimited field for the trained agriculturalist in mission lands."

That is why Carl Dille is taking harrows to Africa and why he hoped to carry some small hand mills for grinding corn. These will be sent to him later. Corn meal, he explains, is the staple diet of the Ovimbundu. It takes an Umbundu woman a whole day to pound the corn by hand. With the small hand mills she could do a day's work in an hour and conserve many of the vitamins that now fly off with the chaff.

Carl Dille is an ordained minister and his work in Africa includes both pastoral and school work, but he majors in agriculture. He got his training at Ohio State University College of Agriculture (BS 1928) and during this furlough he studied further in agriculture at Pennsylvania State College of Agriculture; Cornell University School of Agriculture and at the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The Dilles, for Mrs. Dille works close by her husband's side, employ the "seeing is believing" method. They plant demonstration plots, give special exhibits, distribute improved seed and encourage farmers to experiment on their own. They travel many miles annually on foot, by native hammock, by bicycle and by auto. Often they are in lion and leopard country and Mr. Dille has been called on to shoot trapped leopards which have been attacking village livestock, and even people.

Because Mr. Dille's mother, Mrs. W. L. Dille, lives in West Liberty, Ohio, and Mrs. Dille's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Edward L. Lawson, reside at Carpenter Farms, Muncie, Indiana, the young Dilles look on these two towns as their American homes. Before going to Africa they served for seven years in (Please turn to page 14.)

"Sermonic Impressions of European Crisis"

Extracts from a Series of Sermons Delivered by REV. HAROLD G. JONES, D. D., Pastor of Central Church, Worcester, Massachusetts

II. WHAT WORD FROM SCOTLAND?

I have always wanted to go to Scotland. Previously it had not been possible, and I was greatly pleased to know that I was assigned to preach in Dundee. Unfortunately, I had to travel north from London on the Friday morning of the Bank Holiday week-end when it seemed as if everyone else in Britain had the same idea. This, combined with the government action in taking off many of the trains to conserve coal, made for about the snuggest traveling I have ever experienced, with people filling the seats, passage ways, and when we stopped at York, even standing between the seats. The next day was spent in Edinburgh, the spiritual and cultural and political center of Scotland. It is without doubt, one of the most beautiful cities in the world. Princess Street lives up to its famous reputation, with its stores on one side, and its gardens on the other, while high above in the distance, can be seen the Rock and the Castle.

On Sunday, I preached at Ward Chapel in Dundee. Dundee is one of the great industrial and educational centers of Scotland and Ward Chapel is a Congregational church known far and wide as a preaching station. It has a very high pulpit, placing the minister practically on the level with the galleries, and the minister is escorted into the pulpit by the church officer who then shuts the gate behind him. At the close of the service, the minister goes to his room, where those who wish to talk with him, have to first pass the scrutiny of the church officer. It is obvious that one does not call under such circumstances just to discuss the weather. After a week-end in Dundee, with a visit to scenes associated with James Barrie's novels, I went on to Perth, to Dundee Cathedral, on the banks of the River Tay, and then through the steep glens and locks of the Highland country, with their rich purple heather, to Oban, from which I took the steamer out to the Island of Iona. Few places in our world are as filled with sacred memories as is this spot, where Celtic Christianity began in Scotland. Sailing from Ireland in the long, long ago—before Roman Obedience had been enacted from the Celtic Church, the Warrior Monk, St. Columba, landed on this island and began his great ministry to the people of Scotland. The island is about three miles long and like all the Hebrides, made of the most primitive rock in the world. Nothing remains of St. Columba's original primitive buildings, but down through the centuries, his successors built a Cathedral, and monastic buildings, and in the graveyard near at hand, rest the remains of Scottish and Norwegian kings. At the time of the Reformation, the buildings were allowed to decay and it wasn't until the early part of this century, that the Church of Scotland, receiving the Abbey and grounds from the owner, the Duke of Argyll; restored the church. Today it stands, simple as compared with the great cathedrals of France and England, but for real spiritual meaning, hardly surpassed by any other building of Christendom. The Altar—a Communion table—is made of green marble which the island possesses and back of it shines a silver Celtic cross of surpassing beauty. But the story of Iona is also the story of the Iona Community. During the first world War a young Scotchman served in the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders as a captain and was decorated for bravery. His name was George MacLeod. He was the grandson of the famous Norman MacLeod, Queen Victoria's favorite Scottish preacher and he was by rights a Baronet, although he never uses the title of "Sir." He decided to enter the ministry and after studying in England, Scotland and America, served as a Chaplain of the lumberjacks in Canada and preacher at the famous preachment center, St. Cuthberts in Edinburgh. Later he became pastor of Govan Parish in Glasgow, with its enormous industrial population and a few years before this war, he conceived of the idea of founding the Iona Community, a group of ministers and laymen who would accept high and spiritual discipline for themselves, and who would seek to rebuild the great religious traditions and spirit of Scotland. At the heart of Scotland's problem in the vast areas of Glasgow, a Youth Trust has been established where the young people of the churches are trained to be better Christians and citizens. For three months each summer, the Community people gather at Iona and there with work and prayer and study, intermingled, carry on the spiritual life. Gradually the ancient walls of the Abbey are rebuilt and the monastic buildings restored and modernized. Already the library has been rebuilt and the refectory is on the way. The whole story sounds almost like a miracle. The present owner of the island did not approve of the idea and refused to let them have either a place to sink a well, or to quarry for stone. Fortunately, however, they found an old well within the Abbey grounds and the stone fences were actually the old Abbey stones. When they needed a roof for the library, timber floated in from an American ship which had gone ashore without the loss of life, and just now they have enough timber for a roof of the refectory, the gift of five Norwegian lumbermen who remember how Iona was once in the Diocese of Trondheim. Everyone at the Community, where I lived for several days, works, and my job was peeling potatoes, but the conversation during the peeling was well worth the effort. Each morning and evening the Community and other people on the island, gather for worship. Hymn sings are held at noon to train the people in the singing of the hymns, and the whole experience is one of deep sincerity and great feeling. Iona, "sacred isle of Scotland, will long remain in my memory, and the words of St. Columba, uttered before his death seem prophetic:

In Iona of my heart, Iona of my love, Instead of monks voices shall be lowing of cattle,
But 'ere the world comes to an end,
Iona shall be as it was.

After Iona, I journeyed to Glasgow, and there stayed at the Youth Trust in the very heart of the city and this brought to a close a visit to Scotland.

"What Word Then From Scotland?" To be sure, at a first glance, Scottish problems are those of Britain and the British Isles generally, and to a degree of Europe and even of our own country ultimately. Yet as one visits in Scotland he becomes aware that there are certain distinct impressions one gets of this land—impressions which seem to specialize in bold contrast of light and dark, of bad news and good.

Take the economic situation. The Scottish people are ingenious, and in great areas like Glasgow, they have shown their skill and their ability. On the Queen Elizabeth for example, a man was walking the deck and in a kilt. Another American said to me, "I thought he was queer until I learned that he had been the chief designer of the engines of this great vessel." On both the Queens the sign stands out "John Brown and Company. the Clyde." Yes, in engines, (Continued on page 13.)

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"They saw the child and kneeled down and worshipped him." That was long ago. And they were wise men. They had been looking for someone to bring answer to the deepest hopes and dreams of their day. By their calculations he had been born. They followed their compass of faith, and checked with each other the inner readings of their souls. At last they stood before a new born babe. When they saw the child they kneeled and worshipped him.

They expected to find him, for they had prepared gifts for a king, which they would give unto him. Accordingly they unwrapped their gifts and laid them down in adoration and in worship—gold, frankincense, and myrrh. A quietness like the wide, still dawn came upon them as they tenderly placed their gifts before him. Awe and a strange peace must have come upon those who witnessed their adoration. Elsewhere their was marketing, the sound of tools, and perhaps ceremonies in holy places. Here was worship. A mother's hands held the tiny fingers of the eternal. And a carpenter's hands brought comfort and solace in the meager hostel.

It was ever so long ago. But the things that happened there were not to be marred by time, nor superceded by trinkets. From that day onward God would tabernacle with men. He would be their God, and they would be his people. Motherhood would take on a new glory, fatherhood a new meaning, and childhood a new hope and joy. For the one born there would teach a brotherhood calculated to make the sound of tools the song of world peace, the market place would widen until food would be found for all, and religious ceremonies would ripen into Christian brotherhood.

Shall we not have that in mind as we approach the Christmas season? May we not kneel again before the Holy Child? Let not all our thinking be of a selfish, noisy, secular kind, but rather let us look within our best selves and see there the heart-hunger for God. Let us remember that the Christ Child may be somewhere hungry, or cold, or lonely, or sick at Christmastime, and search for ways of ministering unto him. How much he has done for the world! And how much he has done for us! Let us truly kneel before him, and worship him. How he needs people—saints—who like Paul are able to say: "I fill up on my part that which is lacking in the suffering of Christ." When Jesus was born the heavens were brightened, and the angels sang. There was great joy. It was, however, a worshiping-God joy. Let us keep our joy on such a level as to be sacred. The world will be much bettered now if a Christian America would celebrate a Christian Christmas!

WINSTON-SALEM CHURCH AT WORK.

We are still busy in Winston-Salem and the Church seems to be moving forward. This fall we have been busy trying to secure enough funds to buy an electric organ, Minshall-Esty, and this was installed in the church November 24th. This will aid our worship services and should inspire us at each service. By the cooperation of all of the members and friends this organ was bought, though not entirely paid for at the present.

This past year we averaged 43 at the morning church service, while the year before we averaged 35 present. Our Sunday school under the leadership of W. L. Padgett is gradually increasing in attendance and interest. A Teachers and Officers meeting is held frequently and plans are made for the improvement of the work during the next quarter. Mr. Padgett has a list of all of the birthdays and he never overlooks any person—they generally give a penny for each year of their age to the Birthday Fund, which is used for some good purpose in the Church.

Recently the Church voted to send The Christian Sun for a year to any new member (the family) if the family is not receiving The Sun. To date 7 new subscriptions have been sent. This will help publicize and explain the work of the Church to the new members.

Our young people are busy each Sunday evening—each Sunday morning in their Sunday School classes—with handwork, understanding and learning something about: our Negro Churches, our Evangelical and Reformed young people and the young people of the Friends Church. Good programs are rendered each week.

We now have a paid choir director and good work is being done here.

The Choir has about outgrown the choir loft and arrangements are under way to increase the space or organize another choir. Mrs. Coy Nelson, one of our new church members, has been of inestimable help in the music of the Church. To her should go much credit for the installation of the organ.

If you know of Congregational Christian people living in Winston-Salem, why not mail us their names and addresses? Be sure and give their addresses for this is a large city and people aren't easily found—unless they have a police record.

Plans for a Christmas season of inspiration are under way. Our greetings to our friends in our Church throughout the world.

CHURCH GROUP PICNIC SUPPER.

The three churches of Rev. S. E. Madren's group, Mt. Olivet R., Mt. Olivet G., and Bethel met at their parsonage in Elkton some time ago for a picnic supper which was served on tables out on the beautiful lawn. Each church brought a picnic lunch with the pastor's wife serving the drinks. After the delicious lunch some of the young people of the group played games on the lawn, while the older people looked over the parsonage. The parsonage was admired by the members, especially the work that our pastor has done to help beautify the interior of the building. The evening was enjoyed by everyone, enjoyed so much that the group has decided to make this an annual affair. We believe that the fellowship of a church is important to any group and its pastor, so we're looking forward to getting together again. We are very proud of our parsonage, and we are indeed grateful to our pastor for his untiring work on the building. We are happy to say that our work is progressing under the leadership of Mr. Madren. His splendid sermons are being enjoyed by all, and we hope that good seed will be sown from them. The revivals in the different churches have been held, the one at Bethel closing with fourteen or more joining by transferral of letter and conversion.

We are thankful to have as our leader and pastor a man with such a character and personality as Mr. Madren possesses, and we hope that God's divine guidance will be with him and his family, as he continues to lead this group of churches in their work.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

ELON'S ENROLLMENT.

The first quarter of the college year 1947-48 closed Wednesday, November 26. This period of work has been quite satisfactory. We have enrolled during the quarter 774, the largest enrollment in the history of the College. There are forty-two members of the faculty which means that on an average there are less than nineteen students for every faculty member. The requirement is one instructor for every twenty students. During these days when colleges are so crowded, we are permitted to enroll as high as twenty-five students for every instructor. At Elon College we have been very careful to see that our enrollment does not exceed standard requirements. This has meant that we have turned away a large number of students which is to be sorely regretted.

The work done is of a very high order. Of course all of our students are not A students. Some few have failed completely and will be required to drop out for one quarter at least. This was expected. We are now in the midst of registration for the winter quarter. We have many more applicants than we can possibly admit. This situation will probably be repeated at the beginning of the spring quarter, and it certainly will be the case next September. There will be a higher percentage of upper-classmen remaining in the school than usual. Applications of new students exceed those of previous years. With our present facilities we shall be able to accommodate only a part of those applying for entrance in September. At Elon College we are anxious to have all of our church young people who want to come to our college to come but if we are to be able to enroll you, you must apply soon. Rooms are being reserved rapidly. Please, prospective students of our own church, do not wait until all rooms are reserved and then write in and say, "I want to come to Elon College. I have always wanted to come. Now do you tell me that I can't?" That is exactly what we have been compelled to say in more instances than one. We shall have to say it again, but we hope it will not be to you.

A good way to avoid such an embarrassing situation is to write in now, today, not tomorrow, for instructions and application blank. Fill out the blank and return it as early as possible that your room may be reserved for you. Then you will be assured of entrance.

It would be a good thing if the pastors of our churches would counsel with their young people who are seniors in high school and guide them in their selection of a college. They may be of great assistance in helping them make a decision and in selecting the right school.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

The writer spent last weekend in the Valley Conference in the interest of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education in Elon College. He spoke at Timber Ridge on Sunday morning, at Winchester that night and at Bethel Church Tuesday evening. The weather was unfavorable for making a canvass in the mountains. It will be necessary to make a return trip to Timber Ridge. The campaign was successful in Winchester Church. A total of $572 has been raised and sent in on this church's quota, leaving a balance of $198. Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor, and officials of the church assured the writer that this balance would be sent in in a short while. Bethel Church, Rev. S. E. Madren, pastor, voted to assume the voluntary quota as a definite obligation and pledged itself to raise the full amount. Two contributions of $5 each were received. The canvass will be delayed due to the fact that a campaign is on at present to raise funds for the new carpet. This congregation has recently installed beautiful oak pews, a new carpet, and new pulpit furniture has been ordered. A visit was made to the Mayland Church community and contributions were received on Mayland's quota.

The work on the power house is progressing reasonably well; perhaps more satisfactorily than are funds being received for the payment of the same. Our churches have an opportunity to render the College a most helpful service by raising their voluntary quotas and forwarding the same at once.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is difficult to tell when the conference year for the College ends. Our present plan means that each conference has a different year. When the conference year closes, the churches of that conference consider that all subsequent offerings for the College are counted on the new year. This means that we have five different college years so far as apportionments are concerned. Requests will be made at the approaching session of our Convention to designate the calendar year as the college year; that is, all money received for the College from January to January to be counted on that year. This would give an opportunity for our churches that are interested to see that the entire apportionment for the College is raised.

Dr. W. T. Scott, superintendent, wrote a very fine statement regarding the support of the College as published in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN. He issued a strong appeal to all churches that have not paid their apportionments in full to the College to do so immediately. If these churches would make an effort, there would be no doubt but that the College would raise its full quota for the conference year recently closed. Our last report to THE CHRISTIAN SUN showed a total of $11,215.45 received. The last report from the Convention office was for $943.72, making a total of $12,159.17 for the year, leaving a balance due of $340.83. It certainly would be encouraging if this balance could be paid so that for one time the College would receive its entire apportionment.

We are getting started on the new conference year. We have already reported $75 from our Windsor, Va. Church and we have two new contributions this week.

The World for Christ

FIRST VISIT TO THE CHURCHES.

By RICHARD L. JACKSON.

We had hoped to go down the river from Kienning and Taining by small rice boat, but as the water was low, none of them were going that week. Thus we started out Monday morning, accompanied by Pastor Liao, on our way to Tsianglo, 70 miles away. We made 30 miles the first day, back to Tsaining. There Pastor Liao developed a serious cold, so that he was unable to go on further with us. Because we didn't know the way, and because occasionally bandits were along the road, our Chinese friends did not want us to go by ourselves, so Mr. Lee of the Taining Church started out with us. We were only supposed to go 60 li (20 miles) that day, but it was the longest 60 li we had ever seen. "How long is a li?" we asked. "Well," we were told, "it's different in different places—sometimes it's short, sometimes it's long, depending on the difficulty of travel."

At one place the road divided. Mr. Lee said, "Now if you go along the road to the right, you are certain to meet bandits, if you take the left road you will also meet bandits; however, if we take the center road, we are unlikely to meet any." So we took the center road and his prediction was right.

As we were going along far out into the country, a farmer in the midst of harvesting, called to us. "Do you have any malaria medicine?" Ed had brought along a newly invented medicine which is a sure cure as well as a preventive for malaria. After giving the farmer some, Ed asked Mr. Lee how the farmer knew he had malaria medicine. "Probably another traveller coming along the road this morning told him. News travels fast that way. Besides, all foreigners are expected to carry medicine. Such is the reputation built up by former missionaries," replied Mr. Lee.

We arrived at nightfall in the small village of Wanan. The head of the Wanan police, Mr. Chen, was a Christian. The church is now used as police headquarters since there is no minister and only a few Christians left. The next day Mr. Chen dispatched two policeman to go with us to Tsianglo so Mr. Lee could return to Taining. That day's journey was only 60 li, but as we had been on the road for two days previously, it was one of the hardest. My feet, instead of getting better, grew steadily worse. Ed caught a cold which took his wind especially when we came to hills and mountains. That evening, tired and hungry, we arrived at Tsianglo to be welcomed by one of our finest pastors, Joshua Fan. A warm welcome, a bath and a good supper were awaiting us.

Throughout the entire trip I never ceased to marvel that, no matter how tired and exhausted we were at night before going to bed, even sometimes to the point of doubting if we could go on the next day; when the next morning dawned, we found that our strength and spirits had been restored as we slept. At Tsianglo the next day, after a feast at the home of Mr. Yu at which time we met the local magistrate and some of the prominent citizens of the community, we made a short tour of the town. We discovered it to be about the size of our former parish, Waverly, Virginia. That evening, some of the church officers met in Pastor Fan's home when we discussed church affairs. The big problem before the church was that the Yankou Church had invited Pastor Fan to come to be their pastor, and the Tsianglo people did not want him to leave. Pastor Fan had evidently done excellent work there as pastor and was greatly esteemed by all. The church was attractive and looked care for. The Christians we met, it was evident, were interested in their church. I spoke to them of the many churches which had failed and indicated that in my opinion, only indigenous self-supporting churches hold any hope for the future. They agreed and said if Pastor Fan would not leave them, they would be completely self-supporting in two or three years.

The next day Pastor Fan took us outside of town about three miles to see a cave which reminded me very much of the Luray Caverns we visited in the Valley of Virginia just two years ago in the same month. Our way was lighted by lightwood pine torches and the interior was black with smoke; but we enjoyed the trip and were quite amused at the names given particular formations. As we came out of the cave, there was a great chamber one end of which was a place of worship. At the center was an idol which served to remind us of the instinctive religious feeling of the Chinese, even though so often misdirected.

On Saturday, Pastor Fan accompanied us by rice boat to Yankou, a thriving business community on the Min River. We found the church there torn by inward strife and division. The old pastor has been accused of appropriating church property for his own use and the members want Pastor Fan to take over the leadership of the church. Dr. Yu, who entertained us, has been at work establishing a small hospital with CNRRA supplies and wished to have Dr. Ed help him. We conducted a service of worship the next morning and visited many of the church members. It seems to me that if the right minister is found, there is great hope for the church as the members we met are some of the leading citizens of the community. Many however, seem to be more interested in business than in the church as indicated by the fact that Sunday was market day as well as the Sabbath and the shopkeepers remained in their shops to do business rather than come to church.

While in Yankou, Dr. Yu, who is himself a great tiger hunter, told us a story which I shall pass on to you. A short distance from the city of Yankou, a female tiger which had eaten over 100 people in 8 months, had just been killed. Ordinarily tigers don't molest people, but once they acquire the taste for human blood, there is

SPIRITUAL ADVENTURE

A Sermon

By REV. WILLIAM ROBERT CATTON,
Decatur, Illinois.

Religion brings us the rich spiritual heritage of the past; it summons us to face the tasks of the present; and it gives us faith and daring to go forth into the future with courage and joy and hope.

We who have grown up in Christian tradition have a splendid spiritual inheritance; resources that we can use. A man is truly a rich man if he knows his Bible. A man does not stand alone if he is in the noble company of the prophets, the saints and the martyrs. He has a host at his back, and can face up to life in his own time without dismay because he has castly more than his own tiny wisdom and his own strength at his command.

Are you confronted with some searching moral crisis? Is it hard to see where your duty lies? Or, seeing it, is it even harder to muster courage enough to do your duty when you know it? You do not have to face it all alone. The God of your fathers will sustain you. The God of Moses' ten commandments, the God of Christ's sermon on the mount, the God of the prophets and the apostles, the Christian God and Father of us all, will abundantly grant you wisdom and strength.

Are you haunted with that heavy sense of loneliness that comes to all of us sometimes, even when we have a host of friends and neighbors? In your loneliness you have a right to remember the Eternal God is still your refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms. The God of the twenty-third Psalm can be your God. The God to whom Christ prayed can be your God. The promise can apply to you that did to the apostles, "Lo I will be with you, even unto the end of the world."

People are troubled these days with disillusionment, and a heavy sense of discouragement. Even in the midst of our unprecedented material prosperity we are fearful for the future, for the hazards of our personal fortunes. And even though we now, are in the midst of plenty we cannot easily forget that many of our brethren in other parts of the world are in dire want, and face their troubled future with little faith or hope. But take courage from the past. Take courage from what you know of God's dealings with His people in other dark and troubled times. "I will not leave thee, neither forsake thee". "Our help cometh from the Lord, who made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: He that keepeth thee will not slumber." There have been dark days before: there will be many times again. The sins and follies of weak and sometimes wicked men can sometimes make a shambles of God's fair and lovely world and almost wreck His purpose of love: almost but never quite. God has brought His people through before: His arm is not yet shortened that He cannot save. A great multitude of men and women, devoted to the Lord and dedicated to the doing of His will, in all ages, and in every land, and under doubts and dangers and against oppression and hardship fully equal to anything we face today, have won through to peace and joy: have worked out their salvation, God working in them, both to will and to do His good pleasure. We have this cloud of witnesses. Therefore let us run with patience the race that is set before us. We can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth us.

We have, indeed, a rich and splendid spiritual heritage. In the strength and with the power of this tradition we can be undaunted. But, religion is not only an inheritance from the mighty past. It is a courage and discipline with which to face the present. We read the Bible not just because it is the Bible, and not alone because it is beautiful and noble. We read it to equip ourselves with wisdom and courage to face our challenging tasks today. We pray to God not only because our forebearers taught us to pray. We support our churches and go on Sunday morning to the public worship of the congregation in the House of God not only because this is an ancient tradition and a personal habit. We do these things because they are pertinent to the present. The things of religion are vastly more than beautiful and time-honored customs, like wearing an academic gown at a college commencement, or setting up a Christmas tree at Christmas because we have always done so since our childhood. Present day living, overcoming sin and evil, conquering injustice and oppression, these are the things of religion as well as the singing of ancient hymns and the making of long prayers. "The spirit of the Lord is upon me," said Jesus, "Because he hath annointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, the recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised." No one has ever valued his spiritual inheritance more than Jesus did. He knew and loved the scriptures of his people. He was one with Moses and Elijah. He went "as his custom was" to the synagogue. His religion did, indeed, gather up all that was splendid and beautiful in the glorious past of the race and present it, a rich and glorious heritage, to his answering spirit.

But religion, for Jesus, also drove him out into the needy world, to face the present, and its task and dangers. Religion is not only a refuge, it is a resource: a resource for life. And religion is a challenge, a summons to high endeavor and noble living, a call to face up to life's duties and life's opportunities. When Jesus gathered twelve devoted men about him it was not to organize a monastery. It was not even to establish an academy, wherein they might study the venerable religious lore of the ancient sages. The Scribes and Pharisees were doing that already. Jesus was not just another scribe. Jesus was a prophet. Jesus was an evangelist. Jesus was the Son of God, come to set up a Kingdom of God, against whatever might oppose that Kingdom, and at whatever cost that Kingdom might require. The church established in the name of Christ must revere his name, but also follow his example. We pray not only, as he taught us, that God's name be hallowed, but that God's will be done. God's will be done, on earth, here and now. "Like a mighty army, moves the church of God," or it is no church, and has but very little of the religion of Jesus, it's Master and Lord.

Take courage and wisdom from the long tradition that has come down to us, and with this wisdom and this courage face up to the task and duties of the present day.

Face the present day, and face the future. And to be adequate to our life today and in the days ahead we may need more than the wisdom of the past and the courage, even of our heroic forebears.

Religion is most of all a spiritual adventure. In Christ's name we fare forth. Like the great apostle, forget-

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Sigrid was very happy. Today was the time for the Advent candles to go on the mantel.

"Mother, mother, tell me about the candles." "Just a little later dear, and I will," said Sigrid's mother. "O, but mother, please." Shaking her head and smiling, she answered, "Not now, later."

All day she was excited and wished mother would tell her, but even then the day passed quickly for it was Sunday. After Sunday School Sigrid went with mother and father to church and then home for dinner. After dinner there was her nap and finally it was dark enough to put up the candles and light the first one.

Father took a big box from the attic and carried it to mother. Mother carefully unwrapped a white figure. It was a porcelain Maddona. She put it in the middle of the mantel. Then on either side she put two candles.

Carefully mother lighted the first one and then taking Sigrid on her lap and sitting by father on the sofa she began to tell about the Advent candles.

"Long ago in Europe the custom began: one candle for each Sunday before Christmas. These Sundays are called 'Advent' and so the name, 'Advent candles.' One is lighted each Sunday until finally all four are burning. In some countries a tiny wreath is placed on the candles that have already been lighted. Sigrid would you like to make some wreaths for ours this year?"

"I would, will you help me?" "Yes," she was told, "we will make them." "Now," said mother, "your father will say a prayer."

Father prayed: "Thank you our Father for candles that remind us of the birthday of the baby Jesus who blessed our world. May we learn to be like him. Amen." . . . Do some of you have the Advent candles in your home? It would be nice to have them. They do look lovely, shining one by one and then all together reminding us that Christmas is only a few days away.

Here is a letter from a little girl in Hampton. Her mother and I went to Sunday School together at the Newport News Church where Betty and her brother go now. I am so glad to have this letter. Thank you, Betty! Dear Mrs. Editor.

My grandmother Jarrett reads the children's page to me. I like it. I like the story about little Timmy. This morning after Sunday school I asked my grandmother to let me see the bell ring, and she took me up in the balcony and we watched Mr. Duling pull the rope but I like to stand outside so I can see the bell go.

I want to tell you about our Hal-lowe'en party my class had. We had a good time. Dickey Apperson was a clown and had a long nose and even scared our teachers. Kathleen Powell was an elephant with long ears and a trunk. I was a drum majorette. You said you had a Dicky and a Kathleen in your Sunday School class.

I took a box of clothes to Sunday School to help pack a big box for boys and girls overseas. I hope they get them for Christmas and keep warm.

I have a brother Tommy.

THE LAZY SISTER.

By IRMA DOVEY

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"You are the 'lazy sister,' you know, Elma."

The third-grade children were getting ready for a school program and were preparing the dramatization of a story from their readers. Elma did not think she liked being the "lazy sister," but she adored Miss Heaton, her teacher, so she had accepted the part; she did not, however, enter into the spirit of it.

"Like this, Elma." Miss Heaton took the broom and brushed imaginary dirt into a pile. She swept it together swiftly, as if in a bustle of sudden effort.

Then Elma took the broom and tried again. She swept slowly, clumsily.

"What's the matter, Elma?" Miss Heaton asked.

"I think—well—I don't like this part much."

"But it's a good part for you, Elma. You can memorize so rapidly, and the 'lazy sister' has so much to say in the play."

Elma smiled uncertainly. Miss Heaton's words helped her to feel a better. She knew that she could learn the long part easily. Perhaps she could even learn it in one day. Once more she made feeble motions with the broom.

"The untidy 'lazy sister' is in a hurry, Elma! It's a burst of speed you must have her show. She wants to look as if she had been working hard, now that there is someone watching. Come on, do it like the girl in the story would."

Still Elma hesitated.

"You can do it," Miss Heaton went on. "We want you to be the 'lazy sister' because we are sure you can take the part so well. It doesn't mean that you really are lazy and untidy, of course."

There! Elma's heart lightened. Those were magic words, for they lifted the cloud of gloom she had been under all the week. Now she understood that to be given this part did not mean Miss Heaton and the class thought she really was lazy and untidy. She would do her best. She would not want to have Mother see the play and not be proud of her. In this changed attitude of mind, Elma played the scene just as the story told it. Then rehearsal was over, and she ran happily out to play.

How can we avoid such misunderstandings in school and at home? There are three cautions that may help.

This teacher of mine—for I was that Elma in the incident and can recall my hurt pride only too well—was a good observer. She noticed little signs that helped her to know what was going on in a girl's mind. If she had been thinking only of other things, she would have missed the symptoms. We must try to be alert and observant.

Then, by always endeavoring to put ourselves in another's place, we may avoid needless heartbreak for many a child, and, too, solve half the problems of our adult relationships.

The third caution might be the encouragement of frankness. Even the modern school idea of having children think aloud in arithmetic may help them to a better control of emotions. For, the oral study usually brings constantly changing emotions—often fear of failure changes to resentment at being thwarted by the problem, but it culminates in the exhilaration of joy as incorrect reasoning is made clear. The child who is accustomed to telling his thoughts may lay the way open to the observance and correction of errors in social relationships as naturally as in arithmetic.

However, before trying to teach others, we who are adults need to learn first to talk things out among

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR PREVENTION OF WAR.

A national working conference on "How to Turn the Tide Towards Peace" was recently called to meet in Washington December 12-13-14 under the sponsorship of the National Council for Prevention of War, with leading members of farm, school, church and labor organizations co-operating.

Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, chancellor of the University of Chicago, will be the principal speaker. Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council, issued the call.

"Unless we do something to check the flood of artificially stimulated hysteria," declared Mr. Libby, "we may find ourselves drifting into another tragic war. The task of this conference will be to assay the true situation and determine a program for turning the tide toward peace."

Besides Dr. Hutchins, the three-day conference schedule lists talks by Kermit Eby, educational secretary of the CIO; Ernest C. Ropes, former Director, Russian section of the U. S. Department of Commerce; Congressman George H. Bender, Ohio; Rev. Wilfrid Parsons, S. J., former editor of America as well as a speaker on the Catholic Hour; Dean William Nelson of Howard University; and E. Raymond Wilson executive secretary of the Friends Committee on National Legislation. Also Elizabeth Smart of the WCTU; Annalee Stewart, national president, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; Dr. Richard B. Kenan, National Education Association, and others.

Talks will be followed by discussion periods after which conferees will be asked to adopt definite plans of action for their home districts. "It is hoped through the reaction in the home districts," Mr. Libby explained, "to develop an enlightened and articulate public interest which will be reflected in Congress, and help guide the course of American statesmanship."

The Friday and Saturday conferences will be held at the Friends Meeting House, 2111 Florida Ave., N. W. The Sunday evening meeting, when Dr. Hutchins will share the platform with Dean Nelson and Father Parsons, will be a public rally in the National Press Club auditorium.

Saturday morning, the second day of the conference, will be given over to personal calls by the conferees on their legislators on Capitol Hill.

GOD, OUR PARTNER.

This is the message both of Thanksgiving and the Advent season. God is a living presence in the life of His world. Thanksgiving reveals His partnership with man in the physical universe, in the world of growing things. The Psalmist boldly declares that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof. It is God and not man who has ordained light. It is He who has given power to the sun to stir life in the buried seed. It is God who made the furrows soft with showers, and the miracle of abundant harvest lies in His gracious plan for life.

God is Creator and Partner. Man must cooperate, to be sure. He may guide and combine and change the factors of life, but life belongs to God. For the most part, the great reverent people have been those who have lived close to the soil for they have learned their dependence upon God.

But it might be said . . . and men have already said it . . . that God is a far-off God. It is true that His wisdom and will are manifest in Nature, but all this universe of things He set in motion at the birth of Time, and He has now withdrawn from His world and is not concerned with the outcome of human life.

Here it is that Advent takes up the moving story of how God has come into the very life of man and has manifest Himself. This is the heart of the Christmas Message. Immanuel! God is with us! The loney and confused heart of man cries out with joy, "Good Cheer, All's Well! God is with us!"

God could not be counted out of the life of His children. He never had been absent, though men only dimly sensed His presence. God so loved the world that He found a way into life through the life of Jesus. God found hands . . . strong hands, loving hands . . . that would do His bidding. He found eyes, clear eyes, that would reflect His truth. He found a voice that would speak His good news and a heart that would beat with His love and would break with His pain for the suffering and sin of the world. The Word, says John's Gospel, became flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory!

Every Advent season invites us to lay hold afresh of this great central truth of Christianity. Like simple and unlettered peasants we repeat the phrases without meaning; we try to store them in our hearts. Perhaps we feel the thrill for one brief moment and then we turn again to our muddling and loneliness. We need to hear the news again and again until it kindles in our souls a glowing life. We need not stand bewildered in the night. We need not feel like men in an open boat without chart and compass. God is our Partner in life and He has a plan for each one of us.—Pilgrim Church Messenger, Cleveland, Ohio.

NOTE ON LORD'S ACRE PLAN.

One of our rural pastors tells, in the following words, how he discovered the Lord's Acre Plan:

"The church was behind with our salary. I asked one of the trustees if they could raise some money for me, as my family was almost destitute and the groceryman wished to know why I had not paid my bill which was long past due. The trustee said that he paid his bills and he did not see why others could not do the same. He turned around and walked away.

"The hurt was pretty deep. Then, something new dawned upon me. There was a way out, the Lord's Acre Plan. I drove out to see one of the other trustees. I told him the story and said if every man would sign up with the Lord's Acre Plan it would bring sufficient funds to take care of our financial problems. He said it sounded good and offered a challenge. If I could get thirty-five signers, he would give the best calf in his pasture.

"I started on the job the next morning. How, I didn't go to the members of the church first, as some might think. I canvassed the unchurched. By the next evening I had thirty-five signers. I drove out to this trustee's place, showed him the list and watched him read the names off.

"He would say, 'My God! here is old Sam Jones.' And so on, all the way down the page. His eyes were as big as two fried eggs. I had the pleasure of selecting the best calf in the pasture, and he had some good ones. Then, we began the canvass of the church members."

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

LOYALTY UNDER PERSECUTION.

LESSON XI—DECEMBER 14, 194.

MEMORY SELECTION: Be thou faithful unto death and I will give to thee the crown of life.—Revelation 2:10.

LESSON: Revelation 1-7; Acts 16:16-40; I Peter 4:12-19; 5:6, 7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Revelation 3:7; 13.

A Neglected Book.

The average church member does not read Revelation. And one suspects that the average minister does not read it much more. To be sure there are crack-pot folks who set much store by it, and some preachers who preach only from it and the apocalyptic books of the Old Testament. But by and large, the average church member does not do much reading in Revelation. "There's a reason"—it is for the most part a very difficult book. It is written in cryptic and apocalyptic language, and purposely so. Much of its meaning was deliberately hidden from the outsider. For it was written to and for Christians who were undergoing persecution, and it was necessary to hide the truths from those in authority who were trying to root them out and to destroy them. There are many interesting and edifying passages in the book, and we ought to be more familiar with it, preacher and people. But frankly, it does not yield the largest fruitage of knowledge or inspiration of the New Testament writings.

A Steadying Book.

As has been said, the book was written to those who were undergoing persecution and great tribulation. It frankly acknowledges that all the powers of hell are let loose on the earth. It shows demonic power on the prowl, and apparently truth and morality on the scaffold, while evil seems to be on the throne. But that is not the final word. At the end righteousness triumphs, good prevails, Christ reigns, God triumphs. It was the kind of book to put heart into people who were having a hard time.

Christ the Central Figure.

The vision of the living Christ, once dead, now alive and alive forevermore, dominates the book from beginning to end. This vision of Christ overwhelmed John. He writes in breathless awe of the splendor and power of the living Lord. The Crucified ones goes forth conquering and to conquer. He shall not fail nor be discouraged. The future belongs to Him. He is vindicated as King of kings and Lord of lords. He is the hope and the help of His people. When faith grows dim and fear makes one faint-hearted, one ought to read Revelation in order to catch something of the glory of God in Jesus Christ the Risen. Here is the fulfillment of the statement that in all things Christ has the preeminence.

Poor But Rich.

"I know thy tribulation, and thy poverty (but thou art rich) . . ." Poor, but rich. We often think about how much rich people have done for the world. And one would be an ingrate indeed who did not recognize the incalculable contributions which rich men have made by the wise use of their wealth. But we often overlook the even greater contributions which poor folks have made. It is an intriguing thing to think upon—the folks who are poor and yet who are rich, and the folks who are rich and yet poor. Think of what folks without money are doing for humanity and the Kingdom of God. Teachers and preachers to mention only two professional groups. The disciples were poor men in this world's goods. And He who had not even where to lay His head, who became poor that we might become rich—He is the supreme example of this statement. Use what you have and you can enrich the world. Even though poor you may make others rich.

The Reward of Faithfulness.

"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee the crown of life." Here as elsewhere Christ emphasizes faithfulness. It is not whether men are brilliant or rich or busy or famous that counts, but whether they are faithful. And the reward of faithfulness is life. Be faithful and I will give thee the crown of life.

A Great Multitude . . . Diverse But One.

No race or religion has a monopoly on heaven. In John's inspired vision he saw "a great multitude which no man can number out of every nation and of all tribes and peoples and tongues, standing before the throne and before the Lamb." There they were without any distinction.

There will be no segregation in heaven, and one dares to think and to hope that ultimately there will be none on earth. And you may be sure that there were no denominational divisions in that great multitude either. They all cried with one great voice, praising God and ascribing unto Him their salvation. Then we shall see more clearly that there is only one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, and that by one Spirit have we all been baptized into one body.

Out of Great Tribulation . . . Living Under Pressure.

When the elder saw in inspired vision a host of people arrayed in white robes he wanted to know who they were, and how they got that way. "These are they that came out of great tribulation, and they washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" was the reply. We think of the tragedy of trials and tribulations, and do not see the triumphs of these things. Great character is usually born out of trouble and suffering. Even the Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. The words literally mean "living under pressure."

The Delights of Heaven.

John did the best he could. How can one describe the indescribable! Heaven is beyond description. Even as we must walk here by faith, we must be content to believe that the Father's house of many mansions will be, and will contain all that which will satisfy our souls, released from the tyranny of the body. And best of all God will be there and Christ will be there and loved ones and friends who died in Christ will be there.

If you load responsibility on a man unworthy of it he will always betray himself.—August Heckscher.

VISIT TO THE CHURCHES.

no stopping them. This particular tiger was very clever. She never attacked people from the front or side at which time they might cry out or raise a disturbance. Instead, this tigress would always approach from the rear and fasten her teeth in the victims neck. As he fell, his mouth would be thrust into the dirt and there would be no cry.

One day, just shortly before we arrived, a farmer, who also hunted tigers, saw some torn clothes and fresh blood on the path. He ran to his house for a gun and followed the trail. In a thicket back from the road, he found the tiger and the half eaten body of her victim. When the tiger heard the farmer approach, she ran off a little way. This farmer, unlike most Chinese farmers, was able to climb trees, so up a tree he went. After a short time, the tiger came back only to be shot through the heart by the farmer who was an excellent shot. The next day the mate and grown cub of the dead tigress came out to look for her. When they came to the spot where she had been killed, they smelled the blood and the male tiger rose on his hind legs, pawed the air, roaring loudly. They both turned back into the woods again and have not been heard of since. The dead tiger was sold for a very high price. Its skin was sold for fur; its meat was sold to eat; and the bones were powdered up and sold as medicine as many Chinese believe it is the best medicine available for all kinds of illness. Later we passed very near the spot where the tiger was killed and we were more than glad she was no longer on the loose.

The following Monday we made a visit to Naping by boat. Naping is a Methodist mission where we have made several very good friends. Ed had not visited there before and he was anxious to see Dr. Downey's hospital. My, it was good to get some good American food again. In our two days there, we about ate them out of house and home. The first morning we had waffles and I'm afraid the cook thought we were never going to stop eating.

The next day we went to a small village with Mrs. Dennis (a nurse) and a Chinese doctor. There plans are under way to open a health clinic once a week. When we arrived, the people told us that it was too bad we weren't here five days ago. A woman had died in childbirth and they had no doctor. Mrs. Dennis said the woman's life might have been saved if a doctor had been there. The baby girl, was a problem to all. She was five days old and had not tasted milk or water in that time.

They had given her a little cake. The father was talking about throwing her in the river since she was a girl. He was poor and there was no mother to take care of her, he told us. We went immediately to see the baby. She was a healthy child in spite of her early treatment and she was crying lustily. Mrs. Dennis offered to take the baby to the hospital and feed it cow's milk. This delighted the father immensely and he promised to give $50,000 per month ($1.00 U. S.) to help take care of the child. The people were very amused to see the child given a bath by the nurses. Small babies are never bathed there. She was wrapped up in our sweaters and taken back to the hospital—a life saved.

In Nanping we met Mr. and Mrs. Chandler, who were on their way up to Shaowu by rice boat to spend a month with us. We travelled with them the first two days to Yankou, but then we struck out on foot as we could make the remaining 75 miles on foot in three days while it would take five by boat. On the way we stopped to worship on Sunday with the Christians at Shuikoutsai. Here is another church without a pastor, Pastor Chang having died several years ago. His loyal widow carries on, conducting services every Sunday and keeping the flock together. After two more days of travel, we were glad beyond words to arrive home after having gone over 200 miles and being away almost three weeks.

In summary, what can we say as a result of our survey trip. First; how much we admire the small groups of Christians and the loyal pastors who have carried on in the face of every discouragement since the Communists wreaked so much damage in the 30s; secondly, we know that we have only begun to see the tremendous need for Christ, for healing, for teaching in the hundreds of villages in north Fukien; thirdly, we have been struck with the necessity of establishing at the earliest date self-sustaining, self-supporting churches which will be able to stand by themselves in times of emergency and will not collapse when foreign aid is withdrawn. Finally, we are convinced that if the thousands of people about us are to be brought to Christ, if they are to be healed and taught health habits and sanitation, we shall need wisdom and strength beyond our own for the task is too great for us alone.

We are thankful that we are not alone and that He who called us is ever with us to guide and inspire. Even though there are and will be temporary setbacks, we believe that nothing can thwart His will that these, His people, be brought to know, love and serve Him.

SERMONIC IMPRESSIONS.

in shops, in a vast number of things, the Scots excell—and yet some of the worst poverty and terrible conditions in Britain are in Scotland. Think of the coal mining areas or of the housing situation. In Glasgow, sixty percent of the families live in two rooms or less. Or of the very banks of the Clyde where the Queen Mary partly constructed, was lying untouched for a long time, while the workers were close to starvation in the thirties. These industrial sores in the very heart of Scotland, present problems.

There are, as I have pointed out, a goodly number of Roman Catholics around the industrial centers or in the highland areas where certain groups did not become Protestant at the Reformation. There are also Congregationalists, Baptists, Episcopalians, and other Protestant groups. The Annual General Assembly in Edinburgh each year is still the great event of the year. The Moderator of the Church of Scotland is number one man after the Royal Family and the Chancellor. Yet seventy-five percent of Scotland never go to church. Clearly then, if Scotland is to prosper and lead in the days to come as she has in the past, there must be an adjustment of her economic troubles, the building of new housing areas, the stabilizing of her industry, the modernizing of her mines, and above all, the renaissance of her historic reformed church in all its vigor and meaning.

Long ago, when Glasgow decided on its motto, it chose the words "Let Glasgow Flourish by the Preaching of the Word." In recent years under a secular emphasis, the motto has been shortened to "Let Glasgow Flourish." But she hasn't and Scotland hasn't flourished and no nation flourishes except by the proclamation, "Let Glasgow Flourish by the Preaching of the Word."

It is in the Word of God, it is in the Gospel of Christ that we flourish. No other foundation can any man lay but that which is Jesus Christ. All of us, therefore, who love Scotland and rejoice in her historic ministry to men will pray that soon—she will be able to say once more, "Glasgow (and Scotland) Flourishes by the Word."

(To be continued next week.)

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The children still get surprises. On Sunday, November 23rd, the Hopedale Church and Sunday School visited the Christian Orphanage in a body. They were divided into three groups, and each group conducted a song and prayer service in each of the three buildings. All three groups carried out their part of the program in a fine way. They each brought a nice present for each child in all the buildings. The singing was splendid and rendered in a fine way, and we all enjoyed the service they put on very much. They did not only bring a present for the children, but gave each each matron a nice present. The writer attended all three services, and each group presented him with a nice present. It really made the matrons and Superintendent happy to be remembered. Our Hopedale Church is a working little Church and are very much interested in the Christian Orphanage. They show their interest by the splendid offerings they send us from month to month. We enjoyed having them come and hope they will come again.

The children put on a program of songs and recitations for the Burlington Rotary Club on Monday night, November 24th. The members of the club seemed to enjoy the program very much, and as they passed out the door they dropped more than $400 in the hat. The Rotary Club is composed of a group of fine business men, who are very much interested in the Christian Orphanage this year.

Our Thanksgiving offerings are beginning to come in. We do hope our people will take into consideration two things when they take the offering in their respective Churches. First, the Orphanage farm suffered greatly from the extreme drought this year, which lasted from April until September 24th, with the exception of one light season. Our crops were almost a failure. We have to buy lots of stuff we usually make on the farm. Second, please remember all the things the farmers have to sell are bringing very high prices. All we have to buy is costing us a very high price, too. Sugar is the only thing I know of that has remained in reason. It costs the Orphanage much more to run now than it did a few years ago. We have to pay the high prices, too. Please remember this when you take your offering at this Thanksgiving season. Remember these little children are wards of the Church. They are looking to you for food, clothes, and training. I know you will not forsake them.

MISSION WORK IN ANGOLA.

cent for the Roman Catholic Church for the same period. In Chilesso, one of our Angola stations, the rate of growth between 1934 and 1946 was 25 per cent. If I had the figures for our other stations I am certain they would be comparable. Our Angola Protestants gained more in three years than the forty-three major Protestant denominations in this country gained in sixteen years. The African is hungering for the gospel of Jesus Christ. The field is white unto the harvest. Workers are needed to train African leaders, to visit villages and supervise Sunday School and church programs and work, to preach, to provide Christian literature. There are still great unreached areas where the gospel of Jesus Christ is not preached.

Today in Angola there is a crying need for doctors and nurses, for ministers and religious educators, for teachers, both academic and vocational. The American Board has money available to send a number of these needed workers—but no one to send. The African Christians are reaching out hands of need across the sea. Who in our churches will hear the call to service and say, "Here am I, send me." Reverend Loy Long, Candidate Secretary at 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., is anxious to get in touch with trained young people who are willing to answer the call.

Not all of us, however, can go to the foreign field, where the need is so great. But all of us can give our prayers and our gifts of money to the work. In our prayers and our gifts every Christian can go, in part, to the foreign field. An African proverb says that if your friend builds a fire on a mountain and you light a fire in a hut the smoke of the two get together. The Africans in Angola are lighting Christian fires in that far off land of darkness, will you join with them in lighting fires of faith and love and sacrificial service in this land? If you do, the results of the two will be joined together before God in a mighty work.

St. Therese said, "Christ has no body now on earth but yours, no hands but yours, no feet but yours. Yours are the eyes through which is to look our Christ's compassion to the world, yours are the feet with which He is to go about doing good, and yours are the hands with which He is to bless us now."—The Pilgrim Fellowship.

In Memoriam

SIMPSON.

1868 - 1947.

Henry C. Simpson was elected a member of the Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage in 1912. He served faithfully until his death in 1947. During his years of service he was faithful to attend the meetings of the Board, and freely gave his time and means to help the Orphanage in its ministry to the needs of the children in its care.

"Service above self" was his motto in church as well as in the Orphanage work. He was always cooperative in its undertakings and rejoiced in its accomplishments. He lived to see the Orphanage grow from one building for children to three buildings.

His wise counsel and mature judgment as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage will be greatly missed by the Board.

We, the members of the Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, North Carolina, wish to express our humble gratitude for the life, labors, and influence of Henry C. Simpson, and to the members of his family loving sympathy. May God's richest blessings rest upon them.

It is resolved that a copy of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun.

MACON.

In loving memory of Mr. George Wilson Macon, whom God in His wise providence called to be with Him on August 4, 1947, we, the members of the Liberty Congregational Christian Church, do grieve at his passing, and desire to express our devotion to his memory as a faithful and loyal member of the Board of Trustees of the church.

To those of us who contacted Mr. Macon in a personal way, loving memories will ever remain. Truly, "Death loves a shining mark." The influence of his smile, his ever ready word of cheer, his thoughtful solicitude of others, his loving companionship in his home, his generous contribution to church and missions, and the love which dwelt in his heart, and expressed itself in numberless acts of kindness have left an indelible imprint upon the memory of those who knew him.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of God, knowing that it was His divine will that he was taken from us.

2. That we extend anew our sympathy to those near and dear to him.

3. That we hold in remembrance his great love for his family, church, and community.

LONG.

Mrs. Fanny T. Long, daughter of the late Solomon and Betty Nelson Tuck, was born November 13, 1889, and died October 7, 1947. On November 7, 1918, she married the late Sidney Allen Long.

Sister Long joined Union Christian Church when young and was devoted to the church.

She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Garnett Long Clack and one grandson, Allen Taylor Clack. There are the following sisters: Miss Nora Tuck of South Boston, Va.; Mrs. Pollard Wilkins, Nathalie, Va.; Mrs. Belle T. Murray, Virgilina, Va.; Mrs. Grace T. Atkins, Leaksville, N. C.; Mrs. Carrie T. Whitt, Oxford, N. C.

The funeral was at her church by the pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes, assisted by the writer and burial was in the town cemetery. She left to loved ones and friends this testimony, "I am ready to go."

TAYLOR

Mrs. Mollie McDowell Taylor was born July 3, 1861, at Cascade, Va., and departed this life October 10, 1947.

On February 3, 1874, she married the late Mr. George Taylor of Caswell County, N. C. She leaves the following children: Sutherland Taylor of Reidsville, N. C.; Ross Taylor, Miss Rennie Taylor and Mrs. Raymond Brandon of Milton, N. C. Also two grandchildren, William Taylor and Barnita Brandon.

Sister Taylor was a faithful member of Lebanon Church for more than fifty years. She was faithful in all of life's duties, and leaves to sorrowing loved ones the assurance that she is at rest.

Funeral and burial were at her church by M. W. Andes and C. E. Newman. The attendance and floral tributes evidenced the esteem in which she was held.

SPIRITUAL ADVENTURE.

ting those things which are behind, and reaching forth to those things that are before, we press on, toward the mark. "Forgetting those things which are behind"—Not forgetting the glories of our spiritual inheritance, of course. But rising above what we have already done, refusing to rest content on the achievements of our fathers, knowing full well that this is a new day, and we have work to do in this new day, we "reach forth to the things that are before," and press on.

Something more, something better is always possible for us in the future. A more splendid personal development awaits you. One can achieve a finer personal integrity, can grow into a more loving and generous man or woman, can serve the church, the community, the world, even, with greater zeal and effectiveness today and tomorrow than has ever been true before. We must press on into this better living.

We can know God better, today and tomorrow, than we did yesterday. We know God better now than Moses did, for one thing. Not, perhaps, more intimately. We may not be as directly aware of God, as sure of his power, as zealous to do his will, as Moses was. But we could be. For we understand God better. We know more about his creation and how it works, and more about the purposes of God, and how He works than anyone could know in those heroic but primitive days of Genesis and Exodus. Bring to your own religious quest something like the zeal, and honesty, and humility and earnestness of the Patriarchs, and you will, in your day, know God better than did Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. And, what is more, you may know God better yourself tomorrow than you have known him hitherto.

We must know more about right and wrong today and tomorrow than we have known before. God's will may not greatly alter, but the world in which God's will has to be done has changed, and the doing of God's will is a different, and I think, a more difficult matter than it used to be. Jesus found these things changing in his day, and did not hesitate to change himself to meet them. You remember how he used to say, "You have heard of old time, but I say unto you." He felt that what was "good enough," apparently, in the old days, was not good enough now. Earnest and thoughtful Christian people feel that way today. What may have been our sufficient Christian duty in former days may not be sufficient now. Religion summons us to the great spiritual adventure, if we are not afraid, and if we are in earnest: the adventure of knowing God better, of knowing more truly what he wants his people now to do, and of pressing on into this new world that lies before us, this new world so full of danger and yet so full of promise, pressing on, and doing God's will with greater earnestness, greater devotion, and with greater wisdom and understanding, until his will is done on earth even as it is in heaven and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign forever and ever.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

ourselves. We must face this fact, also, that complete candor on the part of others—either children or adults—may show the need for revision of our own actions. A complete about-face may be required of us.

Let us, each one, try to observe closely, to put oneself in the child's place when he seems hurt or bewildered, and encourage him to talk out freely about his fears and misunderstandings. If we can do this, difficult though it may seem, it will often replace a seemingly balky, unreasonable attitude on the part of a child with a spirit of friendly cooperation.

Contributions of Christian Education Vital to China

During the past century the Christian Colleges in China have taken an increasingly important place in that country's educational system. They have met a real need in the life of the people while China was transforming itself into a modern nation, and today they are an organic part of the life and spirit of the new China.

Throughout the years the Colleges have been pioneers, boldly opening to the eager youth of the land many new fields of learning. These institutions must survive so that they can continue to give students the character and training they need to rebuild their country and make it a stable and peaceful member of the world family of nations. The fact that a large proportion of the present leaders of China are Christians is ample evidence of the vital role Christian higher education has played in the life of the nation. Its contributions are legion.

It changed the fundamental conception of education, so that it is no longer regarded as something only for the elite, but as the rightful heritage of everybody, including women.

It overcame the superstitions surrounding and inhibiting the study of natural phenomena, and popularized the study of the natural and physical sciences, applying them with especial effect in medicine.

It pioneered in applying scientific knowledge to China's agriculture, by teaching better methods of cultivation, fertilization, and harvesting; modernizing farm implements; introducing the development, multiplication, and distribution of improved seed; and teaching farmers how to fight insects and pests.

It showed the relevance and indispensability of religion, and introduced Christianity to the educated people of China, and welcomed them to its membership.

It helped abolish the old fashioned governmental examinations based on the study of the Chinese classics, and encouraged the substitution of a more practical standard of selecting trained personnel for government service.

It pioneered not only in introducing modern learning to China, but by translating textbooks did a great deal in building up scientific terminology.

It introduced Chinese students in fairly large numbers to Western languages, especially English, thereby opening to them the vast accumulations of knowledge available in Western books.

It laid the foundation for the literary revolution of 1917 in insisting on the use of the living language in writing and speaking, as well as in public worship and the study of the Bible.

It introduced Western music to China and has not only nurtured an appreciation of it, but has developed many skilled artists.

It pioneered in conducting experiments in visual education and in applying it to the field of teaching.

It built up an international fellowship in education and a traffic in knowledge.

The Bible

By HENRY VAN DYKE

Born in the East and clothed in Oriental form and imagery, the Bible walks the ways of the world with familiar feet and enters land after land to find its own everywhere. It has learned to speak in hundreds of languages to the heart of man. It comes into the palace to tell the monarch that he is a servant of the Most High, and into the cottage to assure the peasant that he is a son of God.

Children listen to its stories with wonder and delight, and wise men ponder them as parables of life. It has a word for the time of peril, a word of light for the hour of darkness. Its oracles are repeated in the assembly of the people, and its counsels whispered in the ear of the lonely. The wicked and the proud tremble at its warnings, but to the wounded and penitent it has a mother's voice. The wilderness and the solitary place have been made glad by it, and the fire on the hearth has lit the reading of its well-worn page.

It has woven itself into our dearest dreams, so that love, friendship, sympathy and devotion, memory and hope, put on the beautiful garments of its treasured speech, breathing of frankincense and myrrh. No man is poor or desolate who has this treasure for his own. When the landscape darkens and the trembling pilgrim comes to the valley named of the shadow, he is not afraid to enter; he takes the rod and staff of Scripture in his hand, he says to his friend and comrade: "Goodbye, we shall meet again," and comforted by that support, he goes toward the lonely pass as one who walks through darkness into light.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Revs. Will B. O'Neill and H. E. Crutchfield were visitors at the office of publication this week.

Next week's CHRISTIAN SUN will be the last issue of the year. As is customary, there will be no paper the last week.

The Eastern Virginia Ministerial Association will meet in Suffolk on next Monday morning, December 15, at 10 o'clock.

A "GET TOGETHER AT LONG'S CHAPEL.

On Saturday night, November 22, about forty members and friends of Long's Chapel met at the "hut" for a get-acquainted meeting which all seemed to enjoy, in spite of bad weather that kept a great many away. After a happy social hour, refreshments were served and the minister was presented with an old-time pounding together with cash gifts which was a complete surprise. We shall strive to be worthy of such kindness. We are very happy to be among the fine people of this community.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

This to express my appreciation to Bro. C. W. Louderback for his article in The Sun with reference to the name "Christian." I want him to know that I and many others are with him 100%. When the matter was discussed at our last state conference, I ventured a question about the proposed name. The only explanation I got was that it was thoroughly discussed and the name "United Church of Christ" was decided on. No reason was given as to why this name was recommended above that of "The United Christian Church." I am fearful that the

Our Principles.

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Bible in Teaching

By ERNEST TRICE THOMPSON

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia

I. LACK OF BIBLICAL KNOWLEDGE.

"There may be, and there are, divergencies of opinion as to the present value of the Christian tradition," says James Bisset Pratt, "but there will hardly be much disagreement among observers of the times on the proposition that it is not being handed on the present generation of young people in the strength or the detail with which our older ones received it from our predecessors. Nearly every older person who has close acquaintance with college students, no matter how he may admire and love them, is repeatedly impressed with their ignorance of things Christian, their lack of a knowledge which was taken for granted of everyone brought up in a cultured or Christian home forty years ago. The Bible is rapidly going the way of Cicero and Virgil. The inspired passages of the prophets, the supreme religious poetry of the Psalms, the Sermon on the Mount, the great chapters of First Corinthians, the unique sayings of the Fourth Gospel—refer to these, quote these in a company of college juniors and seniors, and note the look of polite surprise and blank non-comprehension on the faces of a considerable number of your listeners. There are still many who know what you are referring to when you speak of Bible passages and Christian creeds; there are some who are well trained in them and love them; but the number is decreasing."

There are many reasons why this is so.

1. For one thing historical and critical study of the Bible has shaken men's belief in its inerrant inspiration. Now a great many ministers have taught, and there are some who still do teach, that inspiration means inerrancy, that if there is a single error in this Bible, it cannot be the Word of God. Since the traditional view of Biblical inerrancy has been so generally abandoned, many feel that the Bible is a book like other books. It can longer be accepted as the word of God.

2. A second explanation of the growing neglect of the Bible is found in the long and disastrous conflict between science and religion. When Copernicus set forth his revolutionary theory that the earth revolved around the sun, rather than vice versa, the Reformation struggle was at its fiercest, yet Protestants vied with Roman Catholics in denouncing a theory which they felt to be subversive to the true faith. Luther referred to Copernicus as "an upstart astrologer, who strove to show that the Earth revolves, not the heavens or the firmament, the Sun and the Moon." "This book, he went on, "wishes to reverse the entire science of astronomy, but Sacred Scripture tells us that Joshua commanded the sun to stand still and not the Earth." In his Elements of Physics, Melancthon said: "The eyes are witnesses that the heavens revolve in the space of twenty-four hours. But certain men either from the love of novelty or to make a display of ingenuity, have concluded that the Earth moves; and they maintain that neither the eight sphere nor the sun revolves. Now, it is a want of honesty and decency to assert such notions publicly, and the example is pernicious. It is a part of good mind to accept the truth as revealed by God and to acquiesce in it." That was the beginning of the conflict between science and religion which has continued to our time. As we look back it seems that almost every great scientific advance has been opposed by some of the leaders of the church. In most every case religious leaders have in the end abolished their opposition and accepted theories which at one time they claimed would destroy religion. This opposition to science in the name of the Bible, this continued retreat on the part of religious leaders has gone a long way to destroy the prestige of the Bible and teachers on which their opposition has been based.

At the present time the conflict has largely ceased, because of a changed attitude on the part of both religious leaders and scientists. But this new situation is not generally known. Because the Bible seems to be incompatible with modern Science it has lost its hold on many people in our day.

3. A third explanation of the widespread neglect of the Bible is the moral difficulty of some of its teachings—the fact which we must recognize that many of the standards of the Old Testament are below the ethical standards of our own day. We read in the Old Testament how God commanded the Israelites to exterminate the Canaanites, somewhat as Hitler sought to exterminate the Jews, how Elisha cursed the children who mocked him because of his bald head, and how bears came from the woods and devoured them, how the Psalmist prayed that God would dash the children of his enemies against the stones.

4. A fourth explanation of the Bible's neglect is found in the seeming irrelevance of much of its teaching to the concrete realities of our modern world. Much of the Old Testament deals with primitive civilization which is very different from ours. Many of the concepts of God which prevailed among the Israelites seem to be the concepts that belong to an earlier stage of civilization and to be outgrown in modern times. Even in the New Testament people feel that conditions in Palestine were so different that they have no meaning for the present day. They do not find the answer here to the problems that we face in the economic realm, political realm, international or even the personal realm.

5. A fifth explanation is found in the difficulty many people find in understanding the Bible.

A few years ago Prof. Lankard wrote a valuable book entitled "The Bible Speaks to our Generation." In this book he is forced to acknowledge, as all of us do, that "the Bible is not an easy book to read. Its binding, black for the most part, is not inviting. It is an oriental book written in languages other than our own, and it is filled with names and places which are strange and unfamiliar. It was written long ago and to many people it seems remote. It contains strange and peculiar commands or laws concerning eating and foods. It contains visions and oracles that are as black as night to most of us." There are parts of the Bible which anyone can understand. There are other parts which are difficult or impossible for anyone to understand without help—help which is available for the reader or teacher if he knows where to obtain it.

6. A sixth explanation is found in the unintelligent use of the Bible made by many pious folk an unintelligent use which serves to discredit it in the eyes of the more thoughtful and to make it more of a puzzle to the ordinary man. Some regard it as an amulet or fetish—soldiers in the World War for example who carried a pocket testament in their breast pocket thinking it would serve as a charm to ward off danger. Some otherwise intelligent men believe that they can secure divine guidance for their individual lives by offering a prayer and then opening the Bible at random, taking

WHO ARE THE BLIND?

Two men walked out on the stage of the vast auditorium. One was blind. The other could see. The two approached the piano. Pity the poor blind man. He was helpless and had to be led around. What would happen if he were suddenly deserted? But the blind man sat down at the piano and the man with sight walked away. Was it a mistake? Lacking sight, how could he see to play? Surely the man with sight would return in a minute and entertain the audience! No?

Now listen, the blind man is playing! He is playing the music of a deaf composer. Blindness a handicap? Absurd! This man has attained (with what price?) freedom. The keyboard becomes a garden through which he wanders and plucks exquisite flowers at will. The other man, poor fellow, is handicapped by sight and his talent has been neglected. As one listens to Alec Templeton play Beethoven, he realizes anew that "the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are unseen are eternal."

A NAME, ALAS!

Our correspondent from Georgia voices a sentiment which will strike a responsive chord among many of our people. While the Christian Church never reached the masses of people, it attracted numbers of people who were genuinely and passionately devoted to its ideals. Their devotion was akin to that of the Psalmist who cried, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth."

Two facts should be kept in mind in a discussion of the name Christian and the proposed merger. First, we have already lost it in the sense of a distinctive name. The majority of the churches of the Disciples of Christ go by the name Christian. Therefore, the name "United Christian Church" would be misleading—unless the Disciples united with us! Second, the name need not be lost in localities where it is distinctive. Enigma Christian Church, as a local church, may continue to be Enigma Christian Church. This publication, sixteen years after one merger, remains The Christian Sun.

A name is important, but it is not the most important thing in the world. "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life!"

EXTRA BUDGETARY ITEMS.

One minister has this significant statement in his annual report to the Church. "During the year I have spent the sum of $889.99, or 21 per cent of my salary, for the direct benefit of the Church, for such needed activities and promotional matters not provided for in other ways. This does not include personal contributions to institutions of the church or community."

This minister does not give an itemized list of his expenditures. Nor is that necessary. It would vary from year to year. The point is, there are so many items, essential items, which are not included in the stereotyped church budget. Budgets are usually formulated on the basis of what was done last year, rather than on what should be done next year. With few exceptions, they lack imagination, vision, elasticity. One's ministry must be constrictive rather than constructive.

No minister should be forced by circumstances to give 21 per cent of his salary for extra-budgetary items. Obviously, it would be easier for the entire membership to share in their proportionate part, rather than allow the minister to shoulder the entire responsibility for such items.

The majority of ministers have to face the problem of unbudgeted items. The average layman does not realize that such a problem exists, that his minister finds it necessary to make such a lavish sacrifice. Some ministers must labor under the perennial handicap of having a minimum budget unsubscribed. It is therefore not surprising that they become resigned to mediocrity. Every church should make a conscientious effort to underwrite the vision and practical judgment of the one whom they have called to be their leader.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS.

Is it too late to suggest that Christmas cards should have a Christian motif? From the pictures on the majority of cards, the mythical visitor from Mars might believe we were celebrating the birthday of Scottie dogs, covered bridges, poinsettia plants or even of the American flag. Such cards might just as well be circulated by Mohammedans or Communists—they carry no message of the birth of Jesus Christ. Are we Christians or are we pagans? If the former, why cooperate in any blemishing of our most beautiful and sacred holy day?

—Howard Stone Anderson.

SO RIGHT.

"Juvenile delinquency," says J. Edgar Hoover, "roots in the quack theories of pseudo psychologists who have preached that discipline and control were bad for children." Not long since I read a paragraph from a teacher in which the same sentiment was expressed. Children, left uninhibited, to work out their own life patterns and establish their own discipline, will have every reason to go wrong, for the "carnal mind is . . . not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." We are now reaping the results of the teaching in our schools.—Southern Baptist Home Missions.

When men speak ill of thee, live so as nobody may believe them.—Plato.

"Sermonic Impressions of European Crisis"

Extracts from a Series of Sermons Delivered by REV. HAROLD G. JONES, D. D., Pastor of Central Church, Worcester, Massachusetts

III. HOW MUCH VITAL CHRISTIANITY IS THERE IN EUROPE?

A person cannot go to Europe and especially preach in the churches of Britain and France, without coming face to face with the basic question: "How Much Vital Christianity Is There In Europe?"

The first conclusion one is apt to make about this is rather depressing. Nowhere does one find the church filled. Church attendance you hear on every side, has fallen off. Among the French people, only fifteen to twenty per cent have even a nominal religious interest. In Scotland, long known to Protestants as one of the great church-going races, seventy-five per cent of the population has no formal relation to the church. Even more serious is the secular view, so common in Europe and in many instances the violently anti-Christian view.

Yet, looking more deeply, the picture seems at least slightly better than the outward facts would indicate. There is for example in every land, a good deal of Christian motivation, outside the church and frequently almost unconscious of the fact that it stems from the church. This is especially true in the British Isles where many of the political and social leaders have basically a Christian outlook, the result of the faith of their fathers, and the general spiritual climate of the nation. I would like to tell you of a few groups which I came to see in action this summer and which expressed a vital Christian faith indeed which I believe can still win Western Europe and the world to Christ, if their numbers and influence are properly multiplied. For a week this summer, I met with some forty people representing the Congregational churches of the world at the Wentworth School in beautiful Bournemouth. It was a truly great group of people and a very heartening experience. One afternoon we journeyed through glorious English countryside to the old meeting house at Horningsham. This simple country church with its thatched roof, its quiet sanctuary looking out on a little lane—its high pulpit and its primitive organ, is the oldest free church in all England, was built by Scottish masons working on a mansion nearby and desiring to have a service, not unlike the one they were familiar with in Scotland. Ever since, simple farming people have gathered there for worship and fellowship, and on the late afternoon after a bountiful tea we gathered there with them for worship. As we sang the familiar hymns, shared in prayers and listened to the Holy Scripture, we knew that we were in the presence of God—and a part of a great world-wide fellowship of those who love the Christian way.

Or again, on the first Sunday in Britain I preached at the church at Ealing Green. This in the past has been one of our finest London Congregational churches. For many years it gave wise and thoughtful leadership. But, as in many London areas, it was badly run down by war conditions. The building was not bombed but was shaken down by nearby explosions. The congregation almost completely scattered to new locations. So at the close of the war, only a small company was left. They managed to redecorate the church, so that it looked fresh and appealing once more, and called a minister, fresh from his duties as an air force padre. Railton Bax is completely fearless, joyously radiant and never lacking in imagination. I had a delightful time staying with him and his family in the Manse—with its lovely garden. Here again, the worship was inspiring, led by Mr. Bax and entered into by a splendid group of people. In the afternoon, a group of leaders gathered for tea and chat, and then after the evening service, another group attended canteen and purchased tea cakes and on every hand, heard of the increased attendance and interest since Mr. Bax came.

Can one doubt but that here also I sensed a deep spirit of faith, a daring witness, a resting on the promise of God.

The third group I want to tell you about is one I met in Paris. Back in the middle of the last century, an English Congregational minister by the name of McCall, visited Paris on vacation and was overwhelmed by the spectacle of vast numbers of people in industrial areas who had no religious faith. He began the work of the McCall Mission, supported by generous contributors in England, America and on the Continent—deliberately seeking to win these people to the Christian faith. Today in France some seventy-five thousand people are influenced by the work of McCall, which maintains simple, rather unchurchly buildings, and equipment for clubs and fellowship groups in the worst areas of Paris and other continental cities. Here are vast numbers of people to whom Lenin is God and Stalin, his prophet. People who are baptized into the faith with red wine poured over their heads, and who in many instances, hate the Christian faith. Here also are conditions which are anything but ideal. Life is hard, wages are low, food is dear, living conditions are frightfully primitive and crowded, places where youth can gather for recreation and instruction few and far between. One morning I visited five of these McCall Missions, met the pastors and some other leaders, saw this vital outthrust of our Christian faith at work. Here was a broad, and modern Christian ministry, a majoring on youth, an attempt to interpret the Gospel, an encouragement to real and meaningful fellowship, a sense of definite Christian consecration. I wish time would permit my telling you of the pastors, who bear great burdens cheerfully, and of the people who have come up out of the utterly negative and materialistic point of view, into the consciousness that they are sons and daughters of the Living God, their Father. Who can doubt that here Vital Christianity is proclaimed and even more important—lived.

When my plans were made, they included preaching two Sundays in the American Church in Paris, and so in the next to the last week in August, after preaching four Sundays in English and Scottish churches. I made my way across the English Channel and then on to Paris. Our American Church, located on the banks of the Seine, is a truly great institution in which we all ought to take pride. This oldest American institution on foreign soil, dates back informally to the early part of the last century and in 1857 was formally organized under the leadership of Dr. Edward Kirk, minister of the Mount Vernon Congregational Church in Boston, who was released from his parish for some six months to do this important piece of work. In this interdenominational enterprise, men like Lorado Taft and Samuel F. B. Morse have taught in the Church School, and American Ambassadors and ministers shared in responsibilities. In the late twenties, funds were raised for a new church and church house and today on the Quai D'Orsay, there rises a magnificent fifteenth century Gothic church, designed by Cram with windows by Connick and Reynolds and Burnham of Boston. The parish house is five stories high and includes social rooms, assembly halls, a bowling alley and a

The Sunday School of our church added a number of new books to its library today. I have had the joy of unpacking them. There is something entrancing about books; and new books about God, and the ways of righteousness, are especially entrancing. Well, as I look this collection over I must say it is quite a collection. Let me name some of them for you: Worship Services for Youth, Bays; Junior Worship Materials, Burgess; Worship Services and Programs for Beginners, Breck; Worship Programs and Stories, Bays; The Society Kit, Programs and Topics for Young People, Miller; Prayers for All Occasions, Oglesby; One Hundred Stories for Boys, Archer Wallace; Worship Programs for Intermediates, Bays; Teaching Worship for Juniors, Ann Morgan; Three Hundred Five-Minute Sermons for Children, Hallock; Tell Me About the Bible, Mary Alice Jones; Tell Me About Jesus, Jones; Jesus and His Friends, Jones; New Testament Stories, Lillie A. Farris; The Little's Angel, Charles Tazewell; and The Illustrated Bible Story Book, Seymour Loveland. Such are the worship materials and stories.

Then there are: The Prophets, Chanter; Bringing Up Ourselves, Hogue; One God, the Ways We Worship Him, Fitch; The Acts and Apocalyptic Literature, Blair; The Fourth Gospel and the Later Epistles, Knox; Christian Doctrine for Sunday School Teachers, Miller; The Books of History, Hicks; The Letters of Paul Barnett; The Books of the Law, Williams; Understanding Ourselves, Shacter; Parents Can Be People, Baruch; The Opening Door, A Manual for Parents, Sweet; Abundant Living, Stanley Jones; The Way, Stanley Jones; Cyclopedia of Bible Illustrations, Holdercraft; The Fun Encyclopedia, Harbin; The Story of the Bible, Bowie; Christmas Tales for Reading Aloud, compiled by Lohan; Dramatized Stories of Hymns and Hymn Writers, Emurian; Poetry and Wisdom, Leslie; Bible Boys and Girls, Phillips; Old Testament Stories, Farris; and When Children Ask, Bro.

These thirty-nine books, all with bright new jackets, and many of them beautifully illustrated, are a lovely sight to see. How many happy and helpful half-hours they will furnish teachers and pupils, and perhaps half-hours will lengthen into hours. Let any Sunday School teacher take a few minutes daily in preparation for her sacred task and both she and her pupils will be happy. What finer encouragement can be given than good, up-to-date books sending us back with a fresh enthusiasm to the Bible with its wealth of teaching material? Books about our class of boys, or girls, will sharpen our own knowledge of them, and give point and power to our own experiences with them, until we become richer, nobler teachers. When I read the thoughts of others it not only gives me some knowledge of their experience and ideas, but it helps to broaden, and fashion my own. As one old salt says: "It starts the cogs in my own mind to turning." If you are a preacher or teacher do not be afraid of books.

merger will fail to pass, or if it does, serious dissention and dissatisfaction will prevail unless something is done quickly about the proposed name. I know some say that there is nothing to a name, but that will not stand the test of even common sense. If that were true, we might as well call God the devil. I know we are accused of appropriating for ourselves the family name that rightly belongs to all the followers of Christ. The fact is that we neither appropriated it nor chose it. It is a God-given, Heaven-born name coming in answer to prophecy which says "They shall be called by a new name." I grant that the names used by our sister churches are good, but they are not sufficient—any of them—to even indicate a "United Christian Church." This is just what we are. Why do some want to call us something else? No other name will suffice. Insofar as including all Christians in our fellowship, our principles are as broad as The Kingdom of God. In excluding all sinners, we are as narrow as the Gates of Heaven.

Our late Dr. Knighton Bloom expressed to me many times his hope that eventually the merged church would adopt the name "The United Christian Church." As you know, he came from the Congregational side of our merger. He went to Heaven a few years ago, but if he were living to-day, there would be no doubt as to where he would stand on this important question of name.

No we did not appropriate the name "Christian," but thank God, we were the first to refuse to be called by any other name. Now shall we be the first to discard this Heavenly, Holy, and beautiful name? Not me. Now the suggested name, "The United Church of Christ" is misleading. There is a denomination already that wears the name "The Church of Christ." "They are the old line Gambolites as most of us know them and they would be as "Hard shells." It is a regrettable and painful fact that any other name was even considered for a single moment. I have no hesitancy in saying that if our leaders had not made this blunder—it is a serious mistake—there would have been very little argument and practically no opposition to the merger. I for one will vote for the merger only if the name "United Christian Church" is accepted, and will urge every one else to do so. I am for Christian Union with all my heart, but not at the sacrifice of principles. The principle of a Christian name is dear to my heart and I shall, fight for it just as long as I live.

This may seem to be a small matter to some, but I fear the consequences of treating so important a matter so lightly. By what process of reasoning did those who drew up the plan of union arrive at that name? Neither one of the four uniting bodies have ever used the name, "Church of Christ." We have no more connection with the Church of Christ than we do the Baptist, Methodist, or Presbyterians. The Church of Christ surely has the right to protest the use of their name by us or anybody else with whom they are not affiliated and—if I know anything about them—they surely will protest, and by all means should. Why should we want to "mussel in" on another's name when one of our own members of the united body has long since been recognized by our government as the legally constituted "Christian Church"? No one can dispute the fact that we were the first to refuse to be called by any other name. There is absolutely no excuse and nothing to justify the use of any other name.

Yours for the name of "The United Christian Church." There is no other name given under Heaven broad enough for all Christian people. It indicates everything a Christian wants to be or should be,

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE SOUTHERN ASSOCIATION MEETS.

The Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the accrediting agency for secondary and higher education in the South and Southeast met in its fifty-second annual session in Louisville, Kentucky, December 1-3. All sessions were held in the Brown Hotel of that city. There were between 700 and 800 delegates in attendance. Practically every member college and high school in the Association were represented by either the president, superintendent, or member of the staff. It was a magnificent company of educators and administrators.

Aside from the usual business of the Association there were a number of very helpful reports and inspiring addresses. The Association's attention was called to the tragic plight of Europe and other war-torn countries, the terrible suffering on the part of the people of these lands, and the tremendous task that awaits the rest of the world. Not only had many of their schools, colleges and churches been destroyed but their homes and places of business as well. It was emphasized that if they were to approach a half-way normal program, help would have to come from outside. If help was not received, a more chaotic condition and greater suffering would certainly befall those unfortunate peoples. Our people are expected to give assistance. These facts were presented dramatically by Dr. J. W. Taylor, president of the University of Louisville, who had spent much time in Europe during and since the war.

Dr. Ralph McDonald, a one-time North Carolina citizen who twice entered the Democratic primary of the state as a candidate for governor, and a strong contender he was, addressed the Association on the appalling shortage of teachers in the public schools and colleges of the country. He advocated increased appropriation for schools and colleges, and higher salaries for teachers in both of them. He favored federal support for secondary and higher education but only for state, or tax-supported, schools and colleges. In the course of his address he took occasion to say that there are too many colleges in North Carolina. Just what he meant by this remark no one seemed to know, but certainly it was not meant to be of encouragement to the private or church-related colleges in the state.

The Association was also addressed by Dr. Charles E. McAllister, dean of the Episcopal Church in Seattle, Washington and president of the Association of Governing Boards of State Universities and Allied Institutions. The dean is an attractive and convincing speaker. His address was inspiring and challenging. He made a plea for greatly improved conditions in our schools and colleges. He emphasized the necessity strongly favored generous federal support for the cause of higher education throughout the nation but was emphatic that such support should go only to state, or tax-supported, schools.

These views are brought to our attention that the ones of us who believe in the Church and the church college as a means of maintaining freedom in education, which is the foundation and main-spring of democracy, and who believe that the church college is fitted to teach religion and give guidance so much needed today, may know something of the imensity of the task that awaits us if we are to keep alive our church colleges and keep them going on a credible scale. So far as financial support is concerned, "the cards are certainly stacked against us." I am not speaking against state schools or federal support, but I am speaking for our church schools, and a more adequate support on the part of the Church and the friends of Christian higher education.

Perhaps the most telling address that I was privileged to hear was delivered by Dr. Dwain Orton, Director of Education, International Business Machine Corporation, to the academic deans of the southern states. Dr. Orton is not a minister of the gospel but has been a professor in college, dean and president of a college. In addition to the many fine things he would have included in the education of today for tomorrow, he stressed the paramount importance of moral and religious instruction for our present day college youth. "Not only should religion be taught in the Department of Religion of a college curriculum," he contended, "but every course offered: mathematies, history, English, science, and so forth, should be shot through with religion of the most vital and sincere type." He held this up as the only hope of our country and of the world.

This was the first meeting of the Association, since 1930 at least, that the representatives of Elon College could sit through the sessions with a sense of ease and satisfaction. Elon College was admitted to full membership in December 1946.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FOUNDATION.

This is not a very good time of the year, it seems, for churches to raise money over and above their apportionments, but the needs of the College seem to know no difference in the seasons of the year. The demands of funds for the completion of the heating plant at College are more acute than ever. These demands could easily be relieved by the churches of the Convention if they would put forth a real effort to raise the voluntary quotas for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation. The Foundation has already been set up with funds lent from undesignated funds. It now becomes the churches responsibility to repay these loans. A small percentage of our churches have raised their voluntary quotas. It is unfortunate for the College at least that others have not heeded the Convention's direction and appeal.

Won't you please give your people a chance? They are interested in the College and will come to its assistance if they are informed and given an opportunity. The College is depending on the churches of the Convention for this support. We are grateful for those churches that have and are cooperating.

A LETTER FROM FRANCES WHITAKER.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
October 17, 1947.

Dear Friends:

The rain is pattering outside my window and Dick and Dorothy Jackson have just finished checking the upstairs ceiling for leaks. That's the routine procedure here in Fukien. Some plaster usually falls with every rain but it's quickly mended. The semi-tropics has its faults but these rains are also responsible for the gorgeous wealth of green on the hills, the bamboo trees, and the bright birds and insects, so we love it just the same.

Most of you know that I planned to leave North China this summer and really get started in mission work by fall. September 11, the pilot from Foochow guided our ship to Fagoda Anchorage, some two hours' trip up the Min River from the ocean. On all sides were the high green mountains of Fukien. We arrived about 9:00 A. M., but it was nearly noon when the ship's agent steamed up in his tug bringing with him Walter Smith, Mr. Wei (from Shaowu), and Richard Jackson. The last time I had seen the Jacksons was in New Haven. It was thrilling to see a familiar face. Foochow was another two hours up the Min River by this small tug. About two-thirds of the way there a sudden rain storm came up. Our launch lost its course and ran into a mud bank. The Chinese boatmen grabbed large bamboo poles, while others jumped into the water. They poled and pushed us out of the mud and back in the mainstream. The tide was going out so they had to work fast.

We reached the American Board Mission in time for prayer meeting. It was truly a warm welcome I received from the folks in Foochow. Between invitations to meals trips to see the different mission projects and getting ready for the trip up river, my ten days in Foochow were kept busy.

The evening of September 20, we were ready with our load of small things to start up river. There was a new moon and the narrow Foochow streets were full of people and rickshaws. We passed over the ancient stone bridge and up the south side of the river to a launch. Our things were barely aboard before we "putted off" upstream in the pale moonlight. Dick Jackson had come down the river to help me with my things and was making the trip back to Shaowu with me.

I didn't sleep much that night because of the shaking and noise of the launch motor. The next day we passed a hundred or more rafts of timber coming down stream. The current was strong and we zig-zagged back and forth, fighting our way up stream. Boat after boat was being tugged by teams of men up the rapids. They pull from the shore, chanting as they work.

That evening we had made our way to the two pagodas that mark Nan Ping. The Methodist missionaries were down to meet us. We followed our load carriers up the cobble stone path to the Methodist ambulance. About half way up the hill the car stopped because of dirt in the gas, so we walked the rest of the way up the slope.

September 22 the alarm awakened me at 5:00 A. M., sharp. Our next launch was jammed with people and the Chinese captain gave us his room in back of the pilot house. This day the rapids were so swift that even with our motors we had to be pulled by a team of men. The sweating and straining of these human bodies plus the power of the propellers drove us up over the water. Sometimes the rocks were so close they scraped the bottom of our boat. In the evening we disembarked at Yang K'ou and stayed in the home of a Chinese doctor, Dr. Yu. He is just starting a new hospital and very proudly showed us his building and future plans. He also is running an electric plant for the village. The following morning, Dr. Yu hired a sampan for us in which we took the last lap of our journey.

We expected to start right away but we only went a short distance and tied up next to some other sampans. Since the sampan folk only spoke a little Mandarin, we couldn't understand why they stopped. Later the owner of our boat turned up with an additional sampan, brand new. It was hot waiting so we were really glad when our two sampans started on the six-day journey to Shaowu. I enjoyed every minute of it. It was like going on a camping trip. The boat folks gave us rice three times a day and we had cans of beef, corn, peas, etc., to dress it up. I had some powdered coffee which tasted mighty good at breakfast.

One night we were tied up next to some other sampans near the bank when a young boy came and told us his father was sick. We were foreigners and he was sure we knew all about Western medicine. We found an old man who evidently had had a stroke, sitting on the bottom of a sampan. I urged them to return to Nan Ping to see a foreign doctor. There was a huge hot boil on the back of his neck and he looked emaciated and miserable. His young son had rings under his eyes and there seemed to be real devotion and concern. They offered me money for my services poor as they were. It reaches down to your very soul.

That same evening we wandered into a village for some noodles and the city gates were locked behind us. We finally found the night watchman after some frantic moments and he led us back to our sampan after opening the huge gate. It was dark and the sampan had moved farther up stream. Another evening we stopped at Ta Kan, a small village where Mr. Kellogg built a church. The church looks quite nice from the

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

MRS. WORRELL SPEAKS IN WINSTON-SALEM.

Addressing the Winston-Salem Council of Church Women here recently, Mrs. Ruth Worrell, executive secretary of the United Council of Church Women, brought tears to the eyes of her listeners as she described with strong feeling the life of the European families, pitiful beyond the imagination of an American who has not seen them living without the barest essentials. With Mrs. Harper Sibley, president of the United Council, she saw all countries in Europe earlier this year and talked with their people.

Her ability to cut through Washington's red tape to get behind the closed doors of Germany and her ability to analyze swiftly the chaos of Europe are belied by her grandmotherly appearance, white hair in a neat bun, plump figure and a smiling face that would appear more at ease in telling bedtime tales to children than taking in the tragedy of Europe.

"She told of a woman in Warsaw who walked the streets for a day searching for the American women who had given her emaciated son a candy bar—his first taste of candy and the only food he had had all day. Everywhere in Europe, she said, women pressed around her telling her to thank the American people for the diapers for their babies, shoes for their children, food for their tables.

Everything that is sent to Europe through Church World Service, the central agency for American church contributions, gets to the people, Mrs. Worrell stated. "Not one thing is lost—I saw that for myself."

It took some time, she said, for her to realize that when a possession is lost in Europe, there is no chance for replacement. Mending is a difficult task, for needles, thread, pins, all these insignificant articles taken for granted here, are not to be had.

Throughout Europe food has become almost the only thought. "Bread became to me a symbol for all food. I could not eat a mouthful of bread at a European table without knowing that I had taken it from their mouths." In Germany, some of the loaves of bread were filled, literally, with sawdust.

"The only way to rebuild a world is through Christian principles," she said. "The church must rise above barriers of race and creed, to ungird our democracy with those principles. And the church women must act to see that America support the United Nations, that our country can learn to live in the same world with Russia, that financial aid will continue to go to help the countries of Europe."

So often, she said, the American will charge that "they aren't trying to help themselves over there." Denying this accusation, Mrs. Worrell said that everywhere the European woman turns she finds a blind alley.

"When I saw the fine crops of cherries and pears, I exclaimed delightedly that the women would be able to can for the coming winter. Then my European friends pointed out sadly that there is no canning where the housewife is unable to buy or borrow cans, jars, sealing wax, nothing."

Not only is there nothing to buy, in many places, there is nothing for a large part of the people to do. Crowded everywhere, there is not enough work to keep the homeless women busy.

"I shall always remember Munich, not for its beautiful churches, but for the hopeless women staring through glassless windows."

She begged Winston-Salem's people to give everything they could to the clothes collections now being sponsored by the churches. Those clothes against "selfish democracies."

Mrs. Worrell told the group in Greensboro and the group in Winston-Salem that women can do a great deal to prevent another war, and that we simply must not have another war. We must find some other way to settle our differences because war is not the answer. She stated that if we are in New York and would like to attend sessions of the United Nations, we should come to the office of the United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue.

If we could make the World Day of Prayer as effective and as widespread as it would be if every man, woman and child in every town or community observed it in some way, that in itself could prevent war. How much easier that is than having war. Let us begin now to plan for the World Day of Prayer and try to make it a day that will mean much to many people. In January, let us help all we can with the clothing drive, and in February, let us welcome the opportunity to help with the Friendship Train.—Twin City Sentinel.

NEWS BITS.

It is interesting to know that a church in Albany, New York, has been reading the Woman's Page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and has used our Thank Offering Service. The following is a letter which I received recently:

"Dear Mrs. Andes:

Of course you won't have the faintest idea as to who I am but I thought you might be interested to know that a church away up here in the north had patterned its Thankoffering Worship Service after the one which appeared on your page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of October 30.

"We had a 'Family Supper' at 6:30, then the worship service, then some movies of India and of one of our own Summer Conferences.

"Haven't heard yet the amount of the offering, but since it has gone over the hundred mark for the last three years we hope that it did not fall below this time.

"Trusting that the services throughout the Southern Convention were successful and thanking you for the program, I beg to remain

Cordially yours,

Belle F. Robinson."

The North Carolina Council of Church Women was organized on December 1, at the First Presbyterian Church in Greensboro. A Constitution was adopted and new officers elected. Mrs. C. C. Todd of Rocky Mount, was elected President, and Miss Susie Allen, of Raleigh, Treasurer. Guest speaker for the occasion was Mrs. Ruth Mougey Worrell, Executive Secretary for the United Council of Church Women. Five Congregational Christian women were present: Mrs. O. H. Paris, Mrs. F. C. Lester, Mrs. W. E. Wiseman, Miss Susie Allen, Mrs. W. J. Andes.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Is Christmas in your bones? I am thinking of the many boys and girls that I know in the Convention and hoping they are anticipating a lovely Christmas-tide. Last week I received a page from a school newspaper written by Roy Van Brinkley who lives near Suffolk and who goes to school and Sunday School at Cypress Chapel. I imagine his newspaper gets more exciting as December 25 approaches. Holiday greetings to Roy Van and his two older sisters, Phyllis and Nancy!

Christmas is doubly exciting at our house these days because one of the smaller members of the family has a birthday on the 13th. Think of being born in the same month as the Baby Jesus whose birthday is our reason for having a Christmas celebration! Often times people shake their heads and say, "Poor you, a birthday in December?" They think about presents, but that is really not the important thing about Christmas, is it? The 13th of December happens to be a great feast day in the Scandanavian countries, especially Sweden. It is Saint Lucia Day called Luciadagen. It is the day when they begin their holiday festivities and by that time all the house should have been swept, scrubbed and sparkling. The gifts are supposed to be wrapped and the goodies made. Then the family is free to enjoy the days before the Birthday of our Lord. Saint Lucia was born centuries ago in Sicily. She lived a good life and was put to death by a Roman emperor.

In Sweden, the oldest girl in the family takes the part of Lucia. She wears a flowing white robe and a garland of leaves on her head, decorated with nine tiny white candles. She wears a red belt and red shoes. She goes about the house early in the morning awakening the family and giving them goodies baked for the day and singing them songs. With her, go the other boys and girls of the family. The girls wear white and carry candles. The boys are known as Star Boys, dressed in white, they wear coronets adorned with stars on their heads. Sometimes they visit friends and relatives in their neighborhood, singing like our carolers and saying verses as they exchange food.

Some of you might like to make cookies to give your mother, teacher, or Sunday School teacher. Here is a recipe that isn't too hard. Maybe your Sunday School class could meet in someone's kitchen and make cookies to give an older person that you know. Anyway I hope you have fun mixing, rolling and baking them:

2 cups of flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
pinch of salt
6 tablespoonfuls of shortening
1 cup white sugar
¼ cup brown sugar (don't forget to pack it)
1 egg, beaten
1 tablespoonful milk
1 teaspoonful of vanilla

Sift the flour, baking powder and salt. Cream shortening and add the sugars. Add ½ cups chopped nuts if you like, add the milk, and then the flour. Chill in the refrigerator a little while and then roll it out and cut in wonderful shapes: trees, stars, Santas, wreaths. Decorate with pieces of nuts. Bake in a moderate oven for about 10 minutes.

GRANNY'S TWIN.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

There was somewhat of a commotion that morning in the little white house on the edge of town. Twin girls had been born in the night. Young Henry Watson, the father, worked in the cooperative creamery. There was not much spare money, even for one baby.

"What shall we do?" said his wife's mother, as she lighted the fire under the coffee pot. "I can't look after Stella and two babies, and do all the other work besides."

"I could take one of the twins home with me," suggested Henry's mother. She lived in a neighboring town.

"I would be lonesome with only one baby," objected Stella, rather lamely. After the grandmothers had left the room, she inquired anxiously, "Isn't there some other way, Henry?"

"I'm afraid not. Hiring help is out of the question, and Mother has to go home. Dad isn't well, you know."

So they decided to send one of the twins with Grandma Watson.

"Mary and Martha are as alike as two peas," said Stella, smoothing their hair that evening when they were beside her. "I could never tell which I liked better. Anyway, I think the decision should be left to chance. Henry, toss up a coin to see which we'll send."

He did this.

"Oh!" exclaimed Stella, "Martha's Granny's twin!"

A month later, Grandma Watson brought Martha back to stay.

"Oh, my! what an old-fashioned looking baby," thought Stella. "She doesn't look much like my Mary!"

The mother had compared her babies to the disadvantage of Martha. This was the beginning. At every turn, thereafter, she spoke in a derogatory manner of Granny's twin. She resented her mother-in-law's having had the baby in her home, and, because it would be unwise to show this, she unconsciously relieved her irritation by disparaging Martha. "Which twin is the better looking, Granny's or mine?" she would inquire jokingly of visitors.

By the time the twins were running about, Stella's constant partiality for her sister had made Martha unhappy and rebellious. The resulting nervous tension interfered with the child's digestion, and soon her spindly legs and apologetic attitude made Martha no match for the well-nourished Mary, serenely content in the security of her mother's favor.

Although identical twins, the children were decidedly different when they started to school. Martha, well trained in taking a secondary place at home, had no background of self-reliance; neither was she able to gain it at school, until in the fourth grade, the new teacher, quick to understand the difficulty, gave her a prominent part in a play.

Stella told the teacher that Mary would learn the part, too, because Martha at the last minute might be too bashful to speak.

"It's not Mary's piece; it's mine!" Martha burst out.

"Yes, it's yours," agreed the teacher emphatically.

That night, after they had gone to bed, Martha pinched Mary, who shrieked for her mother.

"Oh, you have such a dreadful disposition! Why can't you be more like Mary?" said Stella, and she punished Martha.

The auditorium was filled for the school play. Martha was a little frightened. Mary pushed her way

AN APPROACH TO THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS—Ernest Cadman Colwell.
The Macmillan Company.

AN INTRODUCTION TO JESUS FOR THE TWENTIETH CENTURY—R. W.
Stewart. The Macmillan Company. New York. $1.75.

The fact that one publisher has issued at least three books about Jesus in one year is significant. We now have in published form the Shaffer Lectures given at the Yale Divinity School in April, 1946, by Dr. Cadbury, Hollis Professor of Divinity at Harvard. Pursuing the theme indicated in the title of his book, Dr. Cadbury says: "It may seem irreverent to apply to Jesus the tests that you would use of a candidate for counselor at a boys camp or of an applicant for a research fellowship in chemistry, and yet in all our thinking of Jesus we are prone to use modern tests of excellence of character. Behind this lies the assumption that he was a success, that he was highly appreciated by some persons, and that he exercised influence, and that such a record in the First Century as in the Twentieth involves many of the qualities which rank well by modern judgments."

He continues: "An honest effort to discover in the gospel records any trait for trend of character, even on the level of the simplest human classification, is the beginning if not the end of wisdom and ought not to be too lightly set aside. . . . We know that an artist who would paint a portrait of Jesus has no authentic data to draw on. The gospels give no hint of his stature, or his complexion, the color of his hair, or of his eyes. Surely more important for us to obtain would be a profile of his mind, an insight into his approach to problems, into his habits of thought, his methods of argument, the color of his moods. Even those writers who today accept uncritically the whole contents of our four gospels appear more anxious to vindicate for him certain forms of omniscience or of messianic self-consciousness than to begin with the simpler task of seeking any characteristics of mind that the records themselves disclose."

Following the Biblical cue of asking practical questions about Jesus, Dr. Cadbury analyzes the mental processes of Jesus. Arguments by analogy, by simple considerations of equivalence, by quantitative mentality and proportionate duty are cited. Furthermore, he says: "The sources of Jesus' insight are, some of them, fairly obvious. He knew the Old Testament, but he knew it selectively—as all men know their Bibles. . . . But he also knew post-canonical Judaism from the inside. . . . Perhaps we have some hint or confirmation as to the basis of Jesus' own knowledge if we inquire how he expected his bearers to know. The secret of any knowledge he had was his disciplined soul, and he expected no more of others than he expected of himself. Leaving technical jargon aside, the layman will understand if I have suggested that for Jesus the cognitive process was largely recognition. There is a fine respect for the pupil's freedom, a fine confidence in his capacities to know the highest when he sees it."

The author concludes with these observations: "How then did Jesus arrive at his moral judgment? If they were not derived from a feeling about their effects were they obtained from reason or logic? As I have indicated before there is a certain element of deduction in the sayings of Jesus, a kind of mathematical logic; though not of the abstruse kind which that term signifies in modern philosophical circles. . . . To his sensitive moral perception that which was good had an axiomatic, independent and self-authenticating appeal. He appraised neither good nor evil so much by reference to practical results or to a kind of foresight of the day of judgment as by a more immediate verdict. The inference he made was that since such deeds and character were good or bad, any recompense expressing the divine verdict would correspond."

It may be objected that this method of study is inadequate since it moves on the level of humanism and leaves revelation out of account. But studied in the light of its avowed purpose, the book offers valuable insight. The author's discussion of the parables is particularly illuminating.

Ernest Cadman Colwell, president of the University of Chicago, writes concerning the radical nature, the originality and humility in Jesus' teaching. The last three chapters are devoted to Jesus's concept of the Kingdom.

Dr. Colwell begins with and elaborates this thesis: "The teaching of Jesus, extravagant in language, is extravagant in deed." Jesus is original, according to the author in the sense "not that he creates raw material, but that he uses it to build a new structure." The author reminds his readers that the Golden Rule is quoted by Jesus from the religious lore of his people, and "is no more distinctively his than the prudential saying that one should count the cost before undertaking any large enterprise." He contends that "In its meaning the Golden Rule is not only not original with Jesus; it is not even congenial to the characteristic teaching of Jesus," which "proclaims in extreme and radical form the nature of God and God's will for men. This will of God requires love for enemies—even for personal enemies—prayers for oppressors, and unasked service to the exploiter. . . . This is not measure-for-measure morality, and in contrast to its quality the so-called Golden Rule is leaden indeed."

Concerning the Coming Kingdom, President Colwell emphasized: "The man from Nazareth had something more than doom to pronounce." Again, "The Apocalypse of John is not the teaching of Jesus." In his effort to dissipate the current apocalyptic emphasis, the author gives this forceful conclusion. "The Kingdom has a single tense today, and that is Now! No Kingdom is coming in power from the clouds. The end-of-the-world hope is a vain hope. Yet why should we fear to discard it? We have access not only to the power that was in Jesus but to the power on which he relied—the power that supported his work. If we had a faith in God similar to his, if we knew a God of grace and power, we could plant a mustard seed; we could help a desolate world to find the narrow gate that leads to its salvation."

Dr. Stewart is Minister of Killermont Parish Church, Glasgow and is a member of the Church of Scotland. It is his conviction that "the defect of much dogmatic theology is not that it is false, but that it is fossilized." The book is written on the premise: "The picture and estimate of Jesus as he really was in Palestine must come by a study of his function in the movement of his time. The portrayal of the actual life of Jesus must be undertaken today in the light of modern philosophical categories, and in particular the relation of Reality to Truth and Change and Chance must be kept in view."

The following paragraph gives the author's setting for his study of the

THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

LESSON XII—DECEMBER 21, 1947.

MEMORY SELECTION: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace among men in whom he is well pleased.—Luke 2:14.

LESSON: Revelation 8-15; Isaiah 9: 2-7; Luke 2:1-20.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 2:8-20.

The Man who Listened to the Centuries Instead of the Hours.

The world is too much with us. The daily papers give a dismal and distorted and discouraging impression. If as Will Rogers used to say: "All I know is what I read in the papers," that is all that there is to know, we are in the status quo which the old Negro preacher said "was the mess that we are in." People today need to listen to the centuries instead of to the hours. It is all right to read the newspapers, but one ought to read something besides the newspapers, or he will get the wrong view of things. One needs to take the long look. One needs to see things in their eternal prospective. One needs to see things through the eyes of the prophets.

Isaiah was a man who took the long look. He lived in troublous and troublesome times. During his lifetime the nation which he loved passed through at least four crises. And later it lost its existence as a nation. But although Isaiah saw all this clearly, he also saw something else—he saw the Lord high and lifted up and seated upon the throne. And this vision gave him confidence and courage concerning the future. That future belonged to God and to righteousness and to the things of peace. That is the essence of the prophecy which forms a part of today's lesson.

It is couched in beautiful and pictorial language. It cannot be taken literally in every detail. But it makes hearts brave again and arms are strong as one reads it and especially when one knows the turmoil and the uncertainty and the insecurity out of which the words were written.

A Child Is Born.

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." Every new-born babe is a ground of hope for the future. And when God instituted his new order he sent his Son into the world as a babe, whose birthday anniversary we will soon celebrate. It is open to question whether Isaiah knew the literal fulfilment of his prophecy. But there is no doubt but that his prophecy did find, and is finding, fulfilment in Christ.

His Name Shall Be.

"And his name shall be called Wonderful Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace." Some years ago I heard a distinguished speaker preach on these words at Massanetta Bible Conference, and to this day I remember his general outline and emphasis. He based his remarks on the four names suggested by Isaiah and their significance, then and now. Wonderful Counsellor—God knows; Mighty God—God can; Everlasting Father—God cares; Prince of Peace—God will. And as one thinks of these words, he becomes convinced that it was not mere juggling of words, or homiletic gymnastics—it is all embedded or embodied in the words of Isaiah. Here are the characteristics of God as revealed in Jesus Christ our Lord.

Of the Increase of His Government and of Peace.

"Of the increase of his government, and of peace there shall be no end." There it is in black and white. The man was an indisciplined optimist. And he was not a starry-eyed dreamer or sentimental idealist. He was a realist. He saw things as they were. But he also saw things as they were to become. His faith was rooted in the character and power of God. To be sure the mills of the gods grind slowly, but with the poet of a later date, Isaiah saw that far off divine event toward which the whole creation moved. Jesus Christ is increasingly taking the moral government upon his shoulders, and increasingly peace is coming. The alarmists and the war-mongers are not saying that. And on the surface of things it does not look as if anybody can truthfully say that. The only one who can say it is one whose eyes are fixed on God and whose faith is fixed on God. The zeal of Jehovah of hosts will perform this.

The Prophet and the Apocalypse Agree.

The writer thinks that he will never hear anything more sublime here on earth than the Halleluiah Chorus from the Messiah. But John gives us a preview of some of the grand things we will hear in the new Jerusalem. There will be some fine singers in the heavenly choir. And there will be a grand theme to be sung: "Great and marvelous are thy works, O Lord God, the Almighty, righteous and true are thy ways thou King of the ages. Who shall not fear, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For thou only art holy; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy righteous acts have been made manifest."

Therefore Be of Good Courage.

This is the message of prophet and apocalypticist. We are on the winning side.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

to the front, ready to speak, but holding her back, the teacher said, "No, Martha gives this best," and she sent Martha up with a smile of encouragement. Reassured, the child spoke in a clear voice with confidence.

After this, the teacher kept the shy, unhappy Martha in an atmosphere that gradually developed her self-confidence. She gave her the center of the stage as much as possible—called on her to recite frequently, and praised her whenever the least opportunity occurred. The teacher was also careful not to antagonize Mary, who was soon proud of Martha's popularity.

Stella's friends began to congratulate her on Martha's success at school. Stella was gratified. During the next school program she sat beaming with pride—both girls were smiling and confident.

"The twins look exactly alike now," she told Henry that night.

gym. During the war days, French Protestant pastors conducted services there each Sunday so that it was never closed. Here American young people and adults can find services and activities and a spiritual home of great value. I had two very happy Sundays there conducting the worship, preaching, and greeting so many people from all over our land.

The days in Paris and in France went very rapidly as you can well imagine. There was so much to see, so many people to talk with, so many impressions to be obtained. Paris itself is just as beautiful as ever. Its vast gardens, its great boulevards, its magnificent buildings and statuary and its River Seine flowing through its very heart, speak eloquently to you. To be sure, the war and the occupation have left their marks. In Paris, I had a chance to meet many leaders and to visit the University City where dormitory buildings for students from many lands are built and where our own American building was made possible through the leadership and generosity of Dr. and Mrs. Homer Gage. A trip to Gaillon and a visit to a Chateau owned by the Student Christian Movement and being restored by a group of American and Canadian college students after war destruction, were among the highlights as was a visit to a number of the McCall Mission stations in the very heart of Paris. What then, is the condition of France today? Outwardly as I observed Paris and France they seemed to be the same except for the bombed out areas. But when we examine things more closely, we realize how different it is from the France of other and happier days. The French people are tired and discouraged and very apt to look at the dark side of things. It is not hard to understand. Housing is expensive and hard to get, and food is soaring in its prices, so that the average family spends eighty per cent of its income on food. The French in the past were famous for their bread, but the corn bread today is without exception, the worst bread I have ever eaten and is scarce and on ration. Bread riots are continually threatened by the people. The nation is bound into the rest of Europe which means that it is in economic difficulties and to make matters worse, during the war years, was systematically pillaged so that the resources which remain are very inadequate.

Morally there has been a grave descent from pre-war standards as there has been all over Europe. Every nation which had to go through the process of teaching that it is patriotic to steal to lie, to murder during occupation days, is finding it hard to persuade people now that you don't do those things. In Italy, in Greece, in Germany, in Poland, yes, even in more orderly countries like France, this moral disintegration is going on, and is a source of great worry to all who desire goodness as the basis of society.

What of the soul of France? There are, of course, her ancient churches and Cathedral and her magnificent Christian traditions. But what of her living religion? Traditionally, of course, France is Roman Catholic, and in the small villages and among a considerable number of the middle and upper classes, still is. Between the first and second World Wars, there was an excellent spiritual renaissance in the French Catholic churches. Many of the young leaders showed a magnificent awareness of spiritual problems and intellectuals like Maritan contributed greatly to the appeal of the church. During the war, the picture was a mixed one. Some Ecclesiastics felt that the Vichy regime promised a chance for the Catholic Church to become much more important in the life of the state, and therefore, sought to capitalize on it. Others, the great mass of the priests, remained vigorously French and patriotic. Today the Catholic Church suffers from the impression left by the first group, but is manifesting some fresh and vigorous life. Actually, however, only from five to eight million people are Catholic in the population of 40,000,000.

The Protestant faith suffered from the death of many of its promising leaders during the first World War and years in between the two wars were disappointing, although their world-wide mission cause gave to mankind such men as Albert Schweitzer in Africa and the mission work in Madagascar—with its million and a half Protestant Christians. When the war came, Pastor Boergner, the head of the church, had to flee Paris for Vichy because he had been so vigorous against the Nazis. There he again and again visited Petain and protested against the treatment of the Jews and other hateful decrees, and is reputed to have had a restraining influence in many cases. Protestant churchmen threw themselves into the work of the underground and the protection of the Jews and as a result, came out of the war with an enhanced reputation. Pastor Wesphal, Vice-President of the church, who received me in his home, said that the opportunity was very great. As yet, however, Protestantism which is largely middle class, and fairly well to do—has not risen to it. Clearly if France is to be won to a spiritual basis of life, there is plenty of room for all the churches. The Catholic Church has its own distinctive mission but so has the Huguenot Church, and the McCall Missions. Christians must fight against materialism, against Communism, against dark despair and not fight each other. By and large, I am glad to say that is exactly what they are doing.

Protestant and Catholic alike try to keep the moral tone high—but their task is almost beyond all human strength and only a divine strength can give any assurance. Men and women and boys and girls whether personally responsible for the war or not, pay the price of belonging to a deeply defeated and completely frustrated nation. In a word, Europe is sick, economically, socially and politically and spiritually.

But I came back to America feeling that we have a grave responsibility. God has put us in the world in on us to do our full part.

I believe He expects us to help these fellow Christians and fellow heritors of great Christian civilization not to lose faith. They are in peril of it today, and they need to be told clearly, concisely, and vigorously, that we believe in them and in their future. We need to say it to the British, to the French, to the Italians, to the Poles, to the Greeks and yes, we need to say it to the Germans also. But above all we need to say it to our French and British friends who have shared so many of our dreams and hopes and aspirations, and common faith. And we need to see to it that everything possible and intelligent is done in these immediate days to relieve their necessities and to help them back on the road to economic recovery. This means for our government and people to see that enough clothing gets to those who need it so desperately. It means that the Marshall Plan or some other plan must be worked out so that nations can get on their feet, not by pouring money in foolishly, but by wise expenditures and good machinery and excellent seed, and all the rest. If we dare let Europe down, however great the risks, we will never cease to regret it, and Western civilization will be plunged into a new dark age, worse than the first one.

But I believe also that we must as Christians do something personally, (Continued on page 15.)

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The children had another thrill on Sunday, November 30. The Men's Neese's Baracca Class of our Reidsville Church visited the Orphanage and brought the children a real treat in apples oranges, and a lot of candy and chewing gum.

We were happy to show them over the buildings, barn, hog house, and everything. In going over the buildings several of them remarked as to the cleanliness of the buildings. I told them the larger girls took a great deal of pride in keeping them clean and presentable all the time. But it takes a lot of work. We hope our friends from our Reidsville Church will visit us more often.

Our Thanksgiving offerings are coming in very nicely. The churches we have heard from have done well in their offerings. We have also received several substantial offerings we were not expecting, but we were very happy to receive them. In making your Thanksgiving offering, remember, "ye who have freely received, freely give." Remember the little children in the Christian Orphanage have no one to look to but you for a home, food, clothes, and a chance in life.

If a little child should come to your door shivering, cold, and hungry and ask for food, I know you would invite it in and give it food. If it should ask for a coat to keep its little body warm, you would search every wardrobe in your house, if necessary, to find a garment to give it. Then we suspect you would fill its pockets full of something to eat so it would not get hungry. Then don't you think you would have a little different feeling in your heart that you had not had before? If you send a check to help these little folks here, I feel that you will have a more satisfied feeling in your heart than ever before.

Give and it shall be given back to you. It may not be in money, but it may be in the beautiful life lived by a little child reared in this Institution. Quite a number of our children have sent in Thanksgiving offerings to show their appreciation for the home the Orphanage gave them when they had no other. They are fine boys and girls; we feel proud of them. Many of the girls are nursing the sick back to health again. Many of them are private secretaries in big corporations. Boys who have gone out are big contractors, engineers on the railroad, civil engineers, members of business concerns—all of them had a home here in their young and tender years. Can you make a better investment than in a little child?

A LETTER FROM FRANCES WHITAKER.

outside but most of the glass is gone. The inside is quite barren except for a few benches. The grass has grown wild and it has a poor unkept look. There is still a small group attending services.

One day we stopped at Na Kou and visited Mr. Chang from Shaowu who is trying to revive the Christian work there. He led us through a tumble-down building, a court of living quarters and into a shell of a building that used to be a church. He had found a few tattered benches and an altar. This place had recently been occupied by wounded soldiers. It is so hard under such circumstances.

So we poled and rowed up the rapids, the boat folk stopping occasionally to hunt for snails for the evening meal. Time sort of lost all meaning.

The last few miles of rapids were exciting. Two hills, one with a pagoda, guard the entrance to the valley. Slowly the outlines of Shaowu took form, with high mountains blue in the background. As we came close, we spotted Dr. Riggs standing on the shore. He took the news of our arrival back to the hospital. Most of the staff came down to meet us. Dorothy Jackson was at church but arrived home soon happy and excited. So it was that I spent my first night in the big house buried among the trees called home.

I haven't been here long but I am slowly getting acquainted with the hospital and clinic. They have given me a place in the clinic helping out in Obstetrics. It is amazing to see what these Chinese doctors and nurses can do with no running water, little equipment and medicine; but there is a lot yet that can be done. My next letter will be devoted to the hospital, the six student nurses, and the seven very much over-worked nurses. Can you imagine working seven to seven day after day? One of the things that impressed me most was the natural way in which the girls accept Christianity. It's the first hospital that I've ever worked in where most of the doctors and nurses bow their heads in a few moments of silent thankfulness. Their spirit on the floors and in clinic is one of service to that great Something higher than ourselves.

Sincerely,
FRANCES L. WHITAKER.

THE BIBLE IN TEACHING.

the passage upon which their eye rests as offering the solution for their problem. It reminds me of the experience of Campbell Morgan. He tried this method once, and the Bible opened to the story of Balaam and his ass. Morgan never tried this particular method again.

A great many people have felt and many do feel that this book offers us a chart for the future, that it foretold the invention of the automobile, the rise and fall of Adolf Hitler, the power of Stalin, the menace of Russia. They are especially interested in the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and think the Bible foretells the exact time which always happens to be in the immediate future. This is one thing incidentally which Jesus said that he Himself did not know, the one thing which he said that we could never know. In the first chapter of Acts we read that they asked him, "Lord, doest thou at this time restore the Kingdom to Israel?" Jesus replied, "It is not for you to know times or seasons which the Father hath set within his own authority. In the Greek this expression means that you cannot know the exact time or even the general season. It has always been difficult for me to understand how the one thing that Jesus said he himself did not know, the one thing that he told us we could never know, is a thing which so many pious Bible students feel they do know.

Other Bible students proceed on the theory that all parts of the Bible have equal value. Even John Calvin, the master exegete of the Reformation period, fell into this error. When the Duchess of Ferrara remarked in a letter that David's example in hating his enemies was not applicable to us, Calvin sternly and curtly declared that such a gloss would upset all Scripture, and that "even in his hatred David is an example and a type of Christ," and then asked, "Should we presume to set up ourselves as superior to Christ in sweetness and light?" This approach to the Bible has led men to live by the ethics of the Old Testament rather than by those of the New, and has served to bring not only the Bible but also religion itself into contempt.

Another mistaken method of Bible interpretation and of Bible teaching is the proof text method, in which one supports one's position by verses taken from the Scripture, often completely away from the context. Learned theologians, even fall into this error. They use those texts which fit their system, ignore or discard others. This erroneous approach to the Bible helps to explain our denominational differences. Most denominations justify their particular tenets from Scripture. But too often they select the texts that bear out their interpretations and overlook others or twist their meaning to suit their purpose. This common use of proof texts to bolster up one's position has led many people to believe you can prove anything from the Bible, and therefore has tended to destroy its authority.

Another danger which all of us face is the danger of making belief in the Bible or belief in the Lord whom it proclaims a substitute for a life lived in accordance to its principles. That was the error which Jesus detected in the religious leadership for his own time. It is the danger which he warned us against when he said, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord shall enter into the Kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my father who is in heaven." Perhaps this is the most important reason why men turn away from the Bible. Men would forget other difficulties if they saw that the Bible created or produced a superior quality of life in its professed teachers. If the Bible is to be gotten into modern life, it must be gotten first of all in our own lives.

through the agencies of our church and through the personal ministrations to other local churches and groups in England and on the continent. Our attics can yield clothes—our larder food for these human beings, our brethren in Christ, those of whom Christ spoke when He said "If you do it not unto the least of these my brethren, ye do it not unto me." And above all, we need to hold them in our affection, our concern and prayers.

character and ministry of Jesus. "It is often overlooked by Christian writers that the full recognition of the serious intention, the reality and purpose of Jesus' early preaching forces a decisive rejection of the idea that from the beginning he conceived himself to be the Messiah whose vocation was to be a martyr. One filled with a consciousness that doom was his destiny could not have thrown himself with this hopefulness into the work of a religious revival the success of which would change every condition of the time. Nor does the timeless element in his rich ethical teaching, and the way he not only preached but taught and laid down the rule of life in form adapted for remembrance and for study, leave room for the idea that his dominating thought was that he would presently appear from heaven in glory and power to make an end of the present age."

This introduction to Jesus, regardless of a particular century, is a realistic approach to the place of Jesus in his own and in every age.

given the opportunity to make regular contributions through the year for the support of the College. Weekly or monthly contributions are of great assistance to the College. Its obligations are constant and continuous. Receipts make it possible to meet these obligations. The churches that are faithful in their support are beginning early and, as usual, will meet their apportionments and some of them will exceed these minimum requirements. There are some forty churches in our Convention that made no contribution to the College last year. This is to be regretted. It is hoped that these churches may have a change their attitude during this year and give their whole-hearted support to their institution. We are grateful for any favorable consideration or assistance and express our gratitude for the contributions that have been received this year.

How to Read the Gospels

For ten consecutive years, Dr. Francis Stifler has been broadcasting on one subject—the Bible. He has treated it from many angles; but the perennial question he meets is, "Where shall I start reading the Bible?" In this article Dr. Stifler tells you.

People often speak to me about the difficulty they have in reading the Bible. Sometimes they are frank enough to say that they just can't find it interesting. I do not wonder at that for most of us have never been taught how to read the Bible. Since the most important part of the Bible is the New Testament and the most important books in it are the four Gospels, let us start our Bible reading with the lives of Jesus. How shall one read the Gospels?

Where shall we begin? Not with Matthew which comes first, but with Mark, and not because Mark is the shortest Gospel and the oldest, but rather, because it is the basis of Matthew and Luke, and is more full of action, and simpler, and more straightforward than the others.

How much shall we read at the first sitting? Our Bible reading consists too often of a chapter, or a few verses, which may be useful on occasion, but the way to really know Jesus Christ is to read the Gospels each at a sitting. It takes about one hour and a quarter to read the Gospel of Mark out loud—considerably less when read to oneself.

When you read Mark thoughtfully through at one sitting you will get a conception of Jesus you never got before. Never again will you doubt that He was wholly human and wholly and uniquely divine. You catch the spirit of a humble conscientious writer determined to preserve the testimony of eyewitnesses to a great miracle, a great tragedy, a great new beginning of something that can never stop—a light shining in darkness.

If you read Mark through at one sitting, you will want to read more about Jesus. You have three more records. I suggest you read Matthew next, but read it at one sitting. Matthew repeats practically every line of Mark but adds much of what Jesus said in his sermons to the people. The greatest sermon ever preached is found in Matthew 5, 6 and 7, and another in Chapter 10 and there are at least four others. Sit down some evening and read the whole of the book of Matthew. It will take you possibly an hour and a half. Its teachings have been gradually remaking the world. Your very experience in the reading of the book cannot help but transform your spirit.

If you read Mark and Matthew as I have suggested, you will be profoundly grateful that there is another sketch of Jesus' life for you to read. Luke, also based on Mark, has been called the most beautiful book ever written. Because Luke wrote for Gentiles rather than for Jews, you will feel you are getting a little closer to Jesus than even Matthew led you. Furthermore Luke's practical humanitarianism will appeal to you. Luke is the American's Gospel. Read Luke through at one sitting. It is almost exactly the same length as Matthew.

You have one crowning experience awaiting you. John's Gospel was written much later than the others. All over the Roman world people persecuted for their faith had found Christ as Saviour, and John reads these experiences back into his story of Jesus' life. If you have read the three Gospels, as I suggest, John will become almost a personal experience as you read it. Jesus will be to you the Bread of Life and The Light of the World. He will be the Way, the Truth and the Life. You will be born again.

I beg of you take four evenings and in the manner I have suggested, read the Gospels.

Keeping Christmas

By HENRY VAN DYKE

There is a better thing than the observance of Christmas Day, and that is, keeping Christmas.

Are you willing to forget what you have done for other people, and to remember what other people have done for you?

To ignore what the world owes you, and to think what you owe the world?

To own that the only good reason for your existence is not what you are going to get out of life, but what you are going to give to life?

Are you willing to stoop down and consider the needs and the desires of little children? to remember the weaknesses and loneliness of people who are growing old?

Are you ready to stop asking how much your friends love you, and ask yourself whether you love them enough?

To try to understand what those who live in the same house with you really want, without waiting for them to tell you?

To trim your lamp so it will give more light and less smoke, and to carry it in front so that your shadow will fall behind you?

To make a grave for your ugly thoughts and a garden for your kindly feelings, with the gate open?

Are you willing to do these things even for a day?

Then you can keep Christmas.

Are you willing to believe that love is the strongest thing in the world—stronger than hate, stronger than evil, stronger than death—and that the blessed Life which began in Bethlehem nineteen hundred years ago is the image and brightness of Eternal Love?

Then you can keep Christmas.

And if you can keep it for a day, why not always?

But you can never keep it alone.

NEWS AND VIEWS

THE CHRISTIAN SUN's office of publication wishes for each of its readers a very Happy Christmas and a New Year filled with joy.

Dr. L. E. Smith spoke last Sunday at the morning service at Union Church, Virgilina, Va.

Mrs. J. T. Kernodle, wife of the managing editor is in the Medical College of Virginia hospital.

All churches are urged to take the Christmas Offering for superannuated ministers and their widows.

Members of the senior class of the Portlock High School presented a Christmas pageant in the Rosemont Church last Sunday evening.

The booklets, The Lord's Prayer and The Song of Our Syrian Guest, which are reviewed in this issue, may be secured from The Pilgrim Press. The Special De Luxe Edition boxed in a decorated slip case, is $1.75 for the set.

In search of a Christmas story, we sent our Washington correspondent to interview Senator Ebenezer Scrooge, III, who represents the State of Despair in the United States Congress. Mr. Scrooge, whose resemblance to certain men now living is more than coincidental, is a lineal descendent of the famous fictional character of Charles Dickens' story. The interview will be found on page 3.

CHRIST REIGNS NOW.

The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ. Revelation 11:15. Read vs. 15-18.

Note that the text says "are become," not "will become." This is not a pious hope. It is a fact. The ultimate authority right now is God's — and Christ's, who stands for him.

This means that for all our acts which are contrary to God's will, there will be punishment. Our little meannesses, eventually will bring on their own unhappy consequences. Our big meannesses, too — our racial intolerance, our national selfishness — must inevitably result in calamity.

Another meaning, however, is that God's grace is available today. In his kingdom you are not outlawed even by the wrongs you may do. Punishment there will be, but by the mystery of his forgiving love he does not separate himself from us. He waits — he is waiting now — to help all those who repent of little sins and mighty world-destroying sins, to lead a more Christlike life.

LET US PRAY: Almighty God, who art the sole ruler of the universe, impart to us thy power, we pray, that we may live nobly and not meanly; and accept our gratitude that even when selfishness has overtaken us and we have sinned in thy sight, thou dost not cast us off, but of thy grace dost give us strength, if we be truly contrite, for a new beginning. Amen.

Our Principles.

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

A Modern Christmas Carol

By GLENN D. EVERETT.

"Merry Christmas, Mr. Serooge," I said, as I entered the senator's office.

"Bah! Humbug!" said the senator, who rarely grants interviews to the press, whom he regards as an unmitigated nuisance.

"Christmas a humbug? Surely, you can't mean that, senator," I rejoined, in surprise.

"I certainly do mean it!" he roared. "What's Christmas but a season for all the international do-gooders to prate about 'peace on earth; good will among men.' 'Humbug' I say to it."

"Well, that is the general idea of Christmas, after all," I replied. "It is the one season of the year when men can dedicate themselves by practical deeds to the ideals which Christmas represents."

"Ideals!" snorted the senator, growing red in the face. "That's the trouble with us now. We've got too earth; good will among men." Humbug little on practical affairs."

"Well, maybe we can at least put emphasis on world peace at this time of the year," I suggested. "Goodness knows, it's something that can use a little emphasis now and then."

"Peace?" asked the senator. "Where's there any peace, I'd like to know. There isn't any in Palestine; there isn't any in Indonesia; there isn't any in China; and there isn't any in Europe the way those Reds are running around. We aren't going to have any peace until we put colonial races back in their place and get rid of these Jews and Communists and their fellow-travelers."

"Then you think that by liquidating certain undesirable groups of people, we can attain peace?" I queried. "Didn't you say that about the Nazis and Japanese during the late war?"

"You'll never get rid of war, my boy, haven't you learned that yet?" said Mr. Serooge, rising from his desk. "War's natural to human beings. They'll never live without it."

"But in the Atomic Age, isn't it likely to prove fatal?" I asked.

"If we listen to the internationalists and their silly talk about a super-government like the United Nations, yes," he expostulated, and then shaking his finger, he said, "listen, you're from a church paper, aren't you? Well, I'll give you something that you can take back to them. Now listen, we've got the atomic bomb in this country. We've got a lot of able young men and a big industrial capacity. We keep the bomb's secret and make a big stockpile of them. We give our young men the military training they need, and keep our industry in sound condition, and then we'll be ready for them when they come."

"When who come?" I asked icily.

"Those Reds over in Europe, the Yellow Hordes of the East, the Black Devils from Africa!" he snapped back. "They're all a sneaking, scheming crowd that are just waiting for a chance to jump us."

"Now, wait a minute," I interrupted. "A couple of years back, you were saying that we should liquidate the German and Japanese nations to teach them a lesson so that no one would ever attack us again. Now the other day you made a speech urging that we call off the war crime trials of the industrialists who made the war. Where's your consistency?"

"See here," said Serooge, "those German and Japanese industrialists are not a bad lot. They form a bulwark for us in the coming struggle with the Reds. They've learned their lesson for awhile about jumping us. We can use them now. We're going to need them."

"You see," he continued, "that's the way it is. Your folks in churches don't understand that. They want to believe what's in the Bible. But war's natural to men. They had it even in Biblical times. We're the haves now, and they are the have-nots. The have-nots are always going to fight the haves, so we've got to be ready for them, ready to fight to protect our standards, our way of life, our democratic freedom. We have to be strong and to pick up friends for our side wherever we can get them. That's what I'm telling you. That's the way it's always been and that's the way it always will. So 'humbug' to this Christmas preaching. It may make us feel better but it's going to make us a lot weaker in the end."

"Then you think it weakens us to hope for the erection of a Christian peace in the world?" I queried.

"Hmph!" snorted Senator Serooge. "Christian! Listen, Christianity has been around for 2,000 years and you haven't seen it work yet, have you?"

"I haven't seen it tried," I retorted.

"And you never will," said

Serooge. "Men are too practical to rely on wishful idealism. As for world suicide, forget it. We may lose a lot of people, of course, if we're not prepared for an atomic Pearl Harbor, but those that live will carry on. The last ones standing win the war, and if you tell those people in the churches to advocate preparedness instead of all this 'do-good' nonsense, we'll be the last ones up and then we might have a chance for some peace for a few years. That's the way you have to get it. War's a natural law. Wars are the natural way to reduce the surplus population."

"Wars and famine," I agreed. "A lot of people, you know, are still dying from this last war."

"Yes, and don't think those starving beggars don't envy us of our full breadbasket over here!" he responded. "The greedy devils."

"I assume that you voted for the emergency relief appropriation," I said.

"I did not!" thundered Serooge. "If they want to eat, let them go to work and raise the stuff. I'm not in favor of this country putting the world on the dole, or of giving a single penny to any foreigner for any reason."

"Our churches are not waiting for government relief action," I said. "They are doing what they can to ease hunger and suffering by collecting food at Christmas time for the less fortunate of Europe and Asia. We hope to show them that peace is possible through world brotherhood. We want to share our abundance with those who suffer."

"Idealistic fools!" snorted the senator.

"I thought maybe you would be willing to endorse this campaign," I continued. "It would really impress people, coming from you."

"I will do nothing of the sort," said Serooge. "Good afternoon, sir!"

The interview was over. I stepped out into the twilight. In my mind's eye I could see the atomic rockets raising red plumes over the Capitol. I could see men fighting to the last in the ruins that were left, fighting and hating without reason and without hope.

Then I thought of the world of peace and good will that Jesus has envisioned. I thought of all the Serooges leading the world, guided by their practical principles, and of all the impractical folk guided by Jesus' principles. I shuddered. Then I hurried over to the grocery to buy some canned goods to take out to church—just in case Jesus was right.

ANOTHER CHRISTMAS.

As we approach the Christmas festival we should gear ourselves to truly enter its spirit. It should be more than a celebration of giving and receiving from one another. In the Christmas Calendar it is a time of special thanksgiving to God for his unspeakable gift in the coming of Jesus Christ to bless our world. It is remarkable that so large a portion of humanity still pauses to celebrate the birth of that child, and endeavors to manifest his spirit in living.

Next to the Bible, the hymns and prayers of the church give the best expression of the Christmas message. William Angus Knight has given us this noble expression: "O Almighty God, who by the birth of thy holy child Jesus hast given us a great light to dawn upon our darkness, grant, we pray thee, that in his light we may see the light to the end of our days; and bestow upon us, we beseech thee, that most excellent Christmas gift of charity to all men, that so, the likeness of thy Son may be formed in us, and that we may have the ever-brightening hope of everlasting life; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The logical and inevitable expression of Christmas is found in the missionary program of the church. A colporteur told the Christmas story to the people of a village in North India, then read it from the Scripture. "How long ago was this great day when God's Son was born?" one asked. About 2,000 years the colporteur told them. "Then why has the news been so long in reaching us?" the villager asked in surprise. "Who has been hiding the Book all this time?"

THE ATOM AND I

"The Atom and I" (with apologies to the Egg) have a rendezvous this December, the anniversary of atomic energy. The atom and I have not known each other very well. In fact, we are barely acquainted. That is to say, I have no first hand knowledge of the atom. But it is high time we should be acquainted. We are neighbors, close neighbors. And, moreover, we are kin, for our lineage reaches back to a common Creator and Father. Therefore, by every canon of courtesy, Cousin Atom and I should be the best of friends. Day by day I am learning more about this amazing Atom.

Atom's fifth anniversary was observed formally at the University of Chicago, where the first self-sustaining atom chain reaction—described by Chancellor Robert M. Hutchins as "the most significant event in modern times"—occurred on December 2, 1942. Dr. Hutchins told an anniversary luncheon, according to the press reports, that "we cannot have war and civilization, too," and declared that "our own salvation lies in establishment of international morality, a mutual acceptance of the futility of further warfare and a mutual avowal to keep the peace."

If it be true, as Dr. Hutchins claims, that "Atomic energy makes all our conceptions of daily living obsolete, eradicates virtually all our limitations, cures all our maladies, and opens the door to a new way of life," then it follows that Cousin Atom enjoys an importance out of all proportion to his size. If it be true that "the mystery of cancer growth will be understood within seven years and that most human ailments will be cured as rapidly as they are diagnosed," then it follows that activating Atom should not be treated with indifference nor suspicion, but should be welcomed into our homes, hospitals and industries. If it be true that this young, versatile upstart can help us overcome the giant ills of life, emancipate us from our erstwhile prison of suffering and usher us into a modern utopia—then, by all means, let us be "Up and Atom!"

THE CHURCH YEAR AND THE LITURGICAL COLORS.

The Christian Year is as old as the resurrection of our Lord and is new as the last church which adopts it. With the resurrection, the disciples of Jesus began a weekly celebration of the event on the First Day of the week. These disciples, like their Lord, had all their lives observed the Jewish Ritual Year. But eventually they substituted Sunday, the First Day of the week for Saturday, the Seventh Day, and Easter for the Passover, and the Baptism of the Holy Spirit, for the giving of the Law from Sinai. Together with this they naturally began to observe the Nativity of the Lord. Adding certain preparatory and penitential seasons, they had by the sixth century, developed a Christian Year for the order of worship, substantially as we have it today.

As God has flooded earth and sky with color, so the church has sensed the symbolic use of color in its worship. As dominating colors in nature change with the seasons of the fourfold year, so there is a color sequence in the Church year. The liturgical colors, White, Violet, Red, Green and Black, teach the Gospel through the eye.

We are now in the season of Advent. The symbolism of the Violet parament is that Violet has always been used by the Church as an emblem of penitence, watching and fasting. Advent is a season of penitence for the birth of our Lord.

The speciously clever people who have been running things and us, calling themselves benefactors, bidding all men admire their sagacity, telling the church to rise up and bless them, appear more and more in their true light, as poor ignorant souls who in a strange madness for power and money have overlooked the beauty and the worth of God's great common people.

The Bible in Teaching

By ERNEST TRICE THOMPSON

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia

II. THE REMEDY.

1. A revival of Bible teaching.

First, there must be a revival of Bible teaching in the home; fathers and mothers who will seek to transmit the faith to their sons and to their daughters; more families, with appropriate changes to suit our modern times, like that described by Robert Burns in "The Cotter's Saturday Night," where the Bible is read, and prayers are offered in the intimacy of the family circle.

There must also be a revival of Bible teaching in the church—that means more Biblical instruction, more Biblical exposition from the pulpit; and it means more adequate Bible teaching in the Church school. The Roman Catholic Church puts its reliance in parochial schools. It has more than two million pupils gathered in some 7,000 institutions. These parochial schools are being supplemented now by a system of high schools. Twenty years ago there were practically no Roman Catholic High Schools; now there are more than 1,500 high schools with half a million pupils. In addition there are 769 Catholic colleges and universities. In all these institutions religion is taught day after day and week after week. Protestantism as a whole has rejected the parochial school system and for the training of its children and youth is depending upon Sunday schools—twenty or thirty minutes of instruction each Sunday morning, imparted by volunteer teachers to students who are exceedingly irregular in their attendance. There are a host of devoted men and women giving their time to the Sunday schools and without their aid our whole educational program would collapse; yet we are bound to recognize that many of these teachers are inadequately prepared, many methods are antiquated. A careful study of the educational program of my own church (Presbyterian) indicates that many schools are conducted today just as they were 25 years ago. Sunday School officers have either held office so long they have stagnated on the job or they are so new they are not acquainted with the program of religious education. Two thirds of the teachers have never had a course in leadership training. The brief period allotted to instruction, the irregular attendance, the small proportion of children enrolled in the Sunday School, must be supplemented by Bible teaching in the public schools, and it is encouraging to note this movement is spreading today in almost every state of the Union. Two million boys and girls are now receiving week day education in more than 2,000 communities. My own state has a well church-ed population, a settled population and yet I note that 48 per cent of the children reached by week day religious education in the public school have no contact with the Church School.

If the Bible, and that means Protestantism is to recover its place in the nation's life there must be a revival of Bible teaching in the home, in the church, and in the school, but a revival of Bible teaching is not enough, there must be intelligent presentation as well.

2. A more intelligent presentation of the Bible.

(1) The first of these is the Human Element.

When I was a boy I had a very curious notion about the Bible. It seemed to me that the men and women whom I read about in its pages, and about whom I heard in Sunday School, were a different kind of men and women from those whom I saw about me in real life. It seemed to be they breathed a different atmosphere, that they lived in a different world altogether; that somehow God was near to them in a way which he is not near to any of us in the present time.

There are some people who never outgrow this childish notion of the Bible. As matter of fact the Bible is a very human book, and it is very true to human experience. The men and women who live in its pages are exactly the same kind of people we meet today. The Bible is a human book, written by real men, about real men. When I discovered that I had begun to discover the Bible. It became for the first time a living book, no longer a meaningless record of what had taken place hundred even thousands of years before a collection of proof texts to bolster up doctrines unrelated to life but a record of vitalizing religious experiences. The discovery I made and one which I am sure you have made is one which we need to help others to make.

The fact that there is a human element in the Bible means that we must consider.

(2) The Literary Element.

If the Bible was written by men, they had to use the language that men of their own day could understand, thought forms that were available to them, literary forms that were common among their contemporaries.

Take for example the stories in the early chapters of Genesis—the stories that tell how women was made out of man's ribs, how a serpent spoke to the women in the garden, how Adam and Eve ate of the forbidden fruit and were driven from the Garden of Life. This doctrine was not in the form of abstract discourse, but in a mode appealing directly to the imagination.

We recall that Jesus, the master teacher, presented some of his profoundest thoughts about man's relation to God and his fellowman in the form of parables—the parable of the Prodigal son, for example, and the parable of the Good Samaritan. So mothers today teach vital truths to their children by means of stories. It may be that the writers of the Bible follow the same method as they convey to us the important truths of man's early history. These early stories in Genesis are parables, or stories which enshrine truth which could be conveyed in no other way. If we are to understand the Bible we must recognize that it contains both poetry and prose and that each has its use. I tried to illustrate this to a class one day by calling attention to a passage in the Psalms which says that God will make the mountains to skip like lambs. No one, I suggested would attempt to interpret this statement literally. But one member of the class bridled at the statement. If the Bible says the mountains will skip like lambs, he said, I believe they will skip like lambs. We do occasionally meet minds like that, but most of us recognize that English is interpreted by different canons from prose: and the same is true of Hebrew poetry. It makes a difference whether Job is history or a drama, whether the Old Testament prophecies are interpreted literally or symbolically.

To understand the Bible for ourselves, to teach it effectively to others, we must take into account the literary form: we must also consider the immediate context and the general setting of the passage under consideration. I know this seems like a very commonplace remark, and yet is a principle which is frequently overlooked, and sometimes with very unfortunate results.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Christian Missionary Association held a good session this week in the Suffolk Christian Church, with more churches represented than usual and over $200.00 more receipts than last year. More than $2,600.00 in dues were collected. For two years the Association has been experimenting with the afternoon and evening sessions, rather than the morning and afternoon sessions as hitherto. The results have not been decisive, but it has shown that a much larger ratio of laymen attend the afternoon (4:30) and the supper meeting at 6:30 than formerly. As president of the organization I suggested the change in time with the thought of rallying a much larger attendance of laymen.

There is much real joy expressed in this annual meeting. It seems that every session has some outstanding feature that makes it a delight. This time Dr. I. W. Johnson broke all recent records with memberships from his field running up to $700.00. Liberty Spring reached the high record of $455.00, and that church and pastor were very happy in their contributions and made everyone else happy with them. My face was red because I had said last fall at Newport News that I hoped to see Suffolk go beyond Newport News in gifts, and what do you think? They came over here with a grand total of $540.00. That was too much for me, and did they enjoy it!

There were many other churches that did splendid work for the Christian Missionary Association, and there were several "new" churches added to the membership roll. May I claim a little credit for some of these new contributions for I did work at it with that in mind. It was a delight to see Bay View represented with their pastor, the Rev. J. Everett Neese, and his entire board of deacons, and one young woman—secretary of the church. Mr. Ernest L. Rawles has graciously served as treasurer, and was re-elected for another year. The new president is the Rev. Robert M. Kimball, pastor of the Franklin Church, and I bid for him the enthusiastic support of all of us.

The Committee on Plans allotted $300.00 to Bay View on pastor's salary; $700 to Little Creek on pastor's salary; $800.00 to the Sunbury pastorate on pastor's salary; and $800.00 to Union (Southampton) on pastor's salary. Reports made from these growing churches in strategic places were good. There were speeches, too. The presiding officer had his say in the afternoon session, and Dr. Johnson made an excellent resume of the work of the Association. At the supper session, Superintendent Scott challenged us with his message on the worth of our work; Rev. M. E. Taylor, pastor of Little Creek, talked concerning his church; Rev. O. D. Poythress presented the merits of our venture in making Union a full-time work; Mr. Joe Byrum, of Sunbury, expressed appreciation for the help given Sunbury; and the final address was made by Hon. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., delegate to the State legislature on "The Layman and His Church." Next session will be held with the First Congregational Christian Church, Portsmouth, Rev. W. Stanley Carne, pastor, on Tuesday after the first Sunday in December.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

BAY VIEW.

Mrs. Neese and I were delightfully surprised a few Tuesday nights ago when a group of the church members and friends of the church surprised us with a generous supply of provisions for our pantry shelves. The foodstuffs ranged from canned fish to live chickens, from canned vegetables and fruits to milk and sugar, and from potatoes (Irish and sweet) to home-baked cake.

The occasion provided fun and fellowship for all and was "topped off" with cookies of "cokes" provided by those who came. A few days later—Wednesday before Thanksgiving—one family brought over a dressed Thanksgiving turkey.

In addition to all this, several members and friends of the church presented the minister with a purse of money so that his automobile could receive some necessary repairs.

It is with a humble heart that I have served such a fine fellowship for six and one-half years. And during that time, the occasions have been many when I was grateful for being the minister of such a cooperative and self-sacrificing congregation.

The membership is still working and praying that God, in His wise providence, and they in cooperation with Him, may yet realize their dream and need of more adequate church facilities. Will you not join with us in the prayer and hope that this will soon come to pass. As the minister of this congregation I can truthfully say that they really merit adequate facilities for their fine church programs.

J. EVERETTE NEESE.

FIRST, HIGH POINT.

The "parson" who writes these lines has now been on the field with the High-Point Church one month. It has been so interesting. This church has not been used to a resident minister. For years their pastor has been coming, preaching, and returning to his home many miles away. This church is blessed (?) with a burden of debt on both church and parsonage. They are struggling to pay their minister for full-time service. For the small number who are actually active, they have a testing task that is a real challenge to their faith and finance. Twelve fine youngsters of the fourth, fifth and sixth grades are taking course "We Believe" in a Pastor's Class. Five adult members have been received during the month. This point is strategic and may need mission aid until its debts are lifted. We are doing our best with encouraging results.

BELEW CREEK.

A revival meeting began at Belew Creek Sunday morning, November 23, and closed Friday night following. We did not have large crowds but great interest was manifested on the part of the young people, four of whom joined the church at the closing service.

The young people are preparing a pageant to be given just before Christmas which will be very interesting, I am sure. They are also in the midst of a campaign to raise money for a new piano and have about half of it in hand now.

There was a special meeting held December 14, to elect and ordain three deacons.

CONCORD CHURCH NEWS.

The Missionary Society used for its public program the Thank Offering Program. It was very inspirational and enjoyed by all.

The group of churches, Bethel, Mt. Zion and Concord, held a yearly fifth Sunday service at Concord in November.

"Intention Cards" are being used as a means to raise money for the building fund for a new church.

The Junior Young People are going to sponsor the Christmas Program.

THE CHURCH'S BUSINESS.

Christ came not to be administered unto but to minister and gave His life a ransom for many. He came to seek and to save the lost. These facts are written boldly across the face of the gospel. They are understandable by all. They are so plain that no one need be mistaken.

We are His servants. We are to carry out His mission and commission. But how? That is the question of every sincere Christian and certainly it is the business of the Church to do its ministry well and to carry out His mission to the best of its ability. This the Church has been endeavoring to do since the beginning of the gospel. The Church's chances for success lie in two fields: education and evangelism. Which should come first no one has been able to determine. But for the sake of a beginning let us take a look at evangelism first. Evangelism is a very definite form of education. When we go to evangelize, we go to instruct in the gospel. Preaching is teaching. We bear witness to the truth as it is in Christ. People are moved by the winsomeness of the gospel. They are regenerated by the power of the Spirit. They become acquainted with God and learn of His ways. Judging from the reports made at the annual sessions of our conferences, it would seem that we, as a Church, have not been very zealous in the field of evangelism. Reports bear out the fact that for the past several years we have not been evangelizing very successfully. In fact many of our churches and our Convention as a whole have been losing in numbers; losing not only in numbers but in churches as well. We close more "old" churches than we open new ones. The world is ready for the evangelistic gospel. There is scarcely a community in which there could not be planted a new church. Population in the eastern and the southeastern parts of our country has greatly increased. The opportunities for the Church have increased accordingly. The Church should arouse its evangelical zeal and enter into its opportunities for the increasing of its membership and the multiplying of its congregations. The responsibility is upon us. We cannot evade it. We cannot afford to neglect it.

Could it be said that the Church has been lacking in its education and has thereby become impotent in its evangelistic efforts? "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." It is necessary not simply to hear the truth, but to know it, to understand it, and to realize its transforming force in your own life. It is the purpose of Christian Education to instruct in the affairs of the Church and the whole field of religion. Elon College was built at considerable cost and sacrifice. It is being supported and maintained by the same means; all for the purpose of offering opportunities for our young people in the field of Christian higher education. It is to place content in the curriculum and religion in the entire program of education, not simply in the Department of Religion but in the departments of English, science, history, education and mathematics well.

The two forces needed in the Church's program in this post-war period are evangelism and education. By these forces the Church shall be able to enter into the fields that are white unto the harvest. If there ever were a time when the laborers were few, that time is now. Many, many of our churches are without pastors. There are many communities waiting for someone to come. There are no ministers to go. We need to pray the Lord of the harvest that He may call our sons and daughters to be evangelists, to be His ministers, and His instructors to a misguided and neglected people.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

Slow but sure progress is being made in the erection of our new power plant. To date the old plant is still operating, and the students and faculty are quite comfortable. Fortunately for us we have had very little cold weather. We are so anxious to get this equipment at the earliest possible date. We have been able to pay bills so far but we will be out of funds by the first of the year unless our churches and our friends make a real effort to secure payments on the voluntary apportionments and individual pledges made. Of course, many of our churches have not accepted this responsibility. We trust that they may. Many of our friends have not given individual assistance. We pray that they will and soon.

It is most encouraging, however, to have some of our churches complete their payments on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund and others to send contributions. Two of our very good churches have recently completed payments on their quotas. Our church at Winchester, Virginia, sent a check which pays its apportionment in full, and our church at Ingram, Virginia, sent a check completing its quota. We are certainly grateful for every dollar contributed.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Having passed the close of the conference year for our several conferences we are now nearing the close of the calendar year which reminds us that we are still a few hundred dollars short of last year's apportionments for the College. It would seem that since the Church has gone far beyond its apportionments for most of the other causes on its calendar, it would at least determine to meet its apportionment for the College which is merely a minimum amount in comparison with what other denominations do for their colleges and what we do for other causes. It occurs to the writer that the better plan for the support of the College would be to adopt the calendar year in which to receive offerings from the churches for its support than the conference year.

We are grateful, however, for the fine start that we have made on the new year. Churches that are always faithful in their support are responding promptly and generously.

A MESSAGE FROM FOOCHOW.

Draw near, my friends, and let your thoughts be high;

Great hearts are glad when it is time to give.

Life is no life to him that dares not die.
And death to him who dares to live.

Christmas greetings this year are none the less heartfelt and personal because we are seeking "to beat the high cost of postage" by asking each of you to send on this letter to someone else. May your holiday season be filled with the sense of God's great gift to us, and growing desire to share it with all the needy world.

Fourteen months back in our station have given us a fairly wide perspective on the situation, both local and national, and we could wish in most ways that it were a more cheering prospect. However, you can get enough of the dark side of the picture from General Wedemyer's report and the international reaction to it; and we do find quite a few bright spots that need to be emphasized in these days of UNO difficulties and world-wide need.

War, inflation, and the high cost of commodities continue to impoverish this already over-burdened land, and there are hardly any colors dark enough to portray this aspect of present-day China, and yet we find it true, as Emerson put it, "that in the mud and scum of things, there's something always, always, sings."

Yet, despite the almost impossible economic conditions there is a decided improvement in the morale of our Christian group. As they draw away from the memory of their war losses and confusions, they are beginning to see their way into programs of church and community service. Last month, at the first Union Prayer Meeting for all Christian workers of our three missions, more than one hundred leaders were present, almost as large a group as used to gather before the war. Prayer groups have also been organized in a number of our churches to pray for the unreached neighbors. A lawyer has been holding a weekly prayermeeting in his home for more than three years, never missing in heat or storm, with an attendance of from twenty to forty.

The coming of three new missionary families during the year for Foochow Mission, and of one family plus a nurse and a doctor for Shaowu Mission has been another factor in the new spirit of encouragement that is abroad—not to mention the return of half dozen old-timers. The manifold meetings of welcome in schools and churches are a good indication of how grateful we are to the home churches for sending out these enthusiastic young people, who in the years just ahead will be giving a good account of their stewardship.

School enrollments continue to soar. Foochow College has the largest student body in the history of the school, notwithstanding school fees of more than a million dollars per term; and other schools in our own and sister missions report like conditions. Hospitals full to overflowing might sometimes be construed as indicating an epidemic, and while it is true that war's aftermath leaves us with more than the usual amount of illness, yet the hospital enrollment at present seems to show an increasing confidence in western medicine, and a willingness to pay for hospitalization at increasingly high rates, for thus far the hospital income is fairly close to keeping up with current expenses. Waiting lists for private rooms, and for vacant beds in the wards, and over two hundred treatments per day in the O.P.D.—so runs the daily report; and the fact that private rooms run over a million per month does not keep patients away. Patients without funds are admitted free after due investigation by the social service worker. Inflation has naturally run the hospital expenses into astronomical figures, and were it not for the generous help given by CNRRA and International Red Cross it would be impossible to employ the large staff that so efficiently care for the sick. An X-ray unit, operating tables, beds, blankets, sheets, along with tons of medicines, gauze and bandages have been added by the various organizations.

The latest outside assignment was four days in Diong-loh at the first District Meeting held there since the war. Len was happily surprised in the fine spirit shown among the twenty-odd workers who gathered for study and inspiration. This portion of our vineyard was hardest hit by the Japanese invasion, and general lawlessness, especially along the sea-coast. Our church members here have also been upset by workers of small independent groups or sects who wriggle into our churches and cause dissension and division. It was encouraging to hear from the young preachers who have been carrying on in these lonely places; they all had messages to share out of their years of experience in living among our less privileged believers. In my Bible message to these delegates I spoke on Paul's experiences in hard places opposed and persecuted wherever he went—and how he was able to say, "I was disobedient to the heavenly vision."

It is just possible that we shall be seeing Agnes' sister, Louise Meebold, either here or in Hong Kong the latter part of November, though schedules are still quite uncertain. She will be on her way to North China, and hopes to be in her station at Fenchow by Christmas time, even though it is beyond the war-front. How we need to pray for peace on earth, and good will to men!

Yours for Christ and His Kingdom,
LEONARD & AGNES CHRISTIAN.

GREETINGS FROM JAPAN.

Kobe College,
Nishinomiya, Japan,
Christmas Season, 1947.

Dear Friends—so generous and patient,
Once again I wish to greet you
As the Christmas time approaches
To remind me of my homeland
And my friends in that dear country.
How I'd love to see and tell you
All the things that have been happening

In this land and in this college!
If, thus far, you've had no letter
From this old procrastinator,
Please forgive, and let me tell you Reasons why I cannot always Write you each, as I might wish to,
Personal messages and greetings.

Coming back to Kobe College
I have found so many changes:
Classes have grown large and larger,
Standards—necessarily lower;
Textbooks have "degenerated;"
Equipment, too, worn-out or vanished,

So the job of English teaching
Takes a lot more time and effort.
In our home, to, work has trebled:
Planning meals and training helpers,

Finding food (and fuel to cook it!)
Is at times a serious matter.
As for fuel to heat our houses
So we'll not become icicles,
Is a question yet unanswered—
Shall we buy from the black market
Or shiver in these polar quarters?
If, in the bleak cold days of winter
Letters from me cease entirely,
It's because my benumbed fingers
Fail to do what my mind bids them!
Then, lighting up these dark cold houses

Is another wearing problem—
From the time that darkness deepens
At intervals of thirty minutes
We "enjoy" electric lighting;
But those other half-hour periods
Are chill and cold and filled with darkness,
Unless we use our precious candles
To dispel the shades of darkness.

But now, for fear you'll think I'm grumbling,
Let me sing of brighter subjects.
Before the god of war descended.
On this lovely land of Nippon
In the days that were more favored
In the city we call Ko-be
Was a small church called Koo-mo-chee.

There I taught a class in Bible
For both men and women students.
Happy times we all enjoyed
In that pretty church in Ko-be.
But the war brought on disaster—
The little church was all destroyed
By the bombs that fell on Ko-be.
Through the war years, all undaunted,
The pastor kept his group together.
Every Sunday in the parsonage
(A tiny dwelling house in Ko-be)
A small band of faithful Christians
Gathered in the upper chamber
Of the pastor's humble dwelling.
The pastor, and his wife and children,

Somehow managed to keep living
On a very meager salary
(Scarce enough to keep one person!)
Once again, I'm teaching Bible
To about a dozen students,
Sitting there on the ta-ta-mi
(A floor of straw with a straw matting)
Teaching eager, bright-eyed students
Makes me glad that I've been privileged

To return again to this land,
To help build upon these ruins
A new country which, God willing!
Shall be built on firm foundations!

Before I close this rambling letter
I want to say how very grateful
We are for the many parcels
Containing food and also clothing
Which have been sent by so many

Of my friends back in the homeland.
You cannot know what help and comfort
Have been given by these parcels
To many here who were discouraged,
Often weak, and undernourished.
I wish I might have time to tell you
Of the gratitude of people
Who received when they were needy
From these unknown friends but lately
Considered foes by all these people!
May God bless each generous giver!
May you hear our Saviour saying,
"Well done, good and faithful servant!"

Now, farewell! and may your Christmas
Be a joyful one and merry!
And may the coming New Year bring you
Peace and love and God's full blessing!
As ever, your friend,

ANGIE CREW.

THE BIBLE IN TEACHING.

3. The Historical Element.

The First principles of Biblical interpretation is what we call the grammatico-historical principle of interpretation. Put in simplest terms this means that the Bible means not everything that its words can be forced to mean, not what we would like for it to mean, nor what is morally and spiritually edifying, but what the writer meant to say in his own day; in other words that we are to interpret the Bible by ordinary rules of grammar, taking into account the historical situation.

First—To the author.

If the writers of the Bible were unconscious instruments in the hand of God, mere automatons, of course, this would not matter. But if God does not override human personality, and we believe that He does not, then the more we understand about the author, the times in which he lived, the experiences which he himself enjoyed, the purpose he had in mind when he wrote, his own peculiarities of style and thought, the more we can understand his message.

The three synoptic gospels tell the same story but they tell it from a slightly different point of view. We appreciate each of the gospels more, and we understand them better, when we grasp their distinctive point of view.

The readiness of Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, of Jephthah to immolate his beloved daughter, have to be studied against the ideas of the time. The history of Israel takes on new meaning when we consider the religion and the culture of the Canaanites, and recognize that in the Old Testament we have a conflict of religions and cultures. The prophets are the richest books in the Old Testament, and yet they are the hardest to understand, because their message is concerned with the economic and social and political background which the average reader does not understand. The message of Amos and Hosea stirs us to the depths when we consider them in their social context, and when we recall the extremes of riches and poverty, ritualistic and formal religiousness that passed for religion in that day and time. It is hopeless to try to understand II Isaiah or Ezekiel apart from the exile; or Daniel apart from the Syrian tyrant Antiochus Epiphanes.

4. The Divine Element.

There are some who think the Bible is merely a human book containing the story of man's search after God and his mistaken guesses as well as his true conclusions. Even if this were so, its value would still be beyond estimate. The Bible has influenced our civilization more deeply than any other book; it reflects human hopes, aspiration and temptations; it comforts, guides, inspires as no other book in all the world. But this view has never been satisfactory to the church, and I presume that it is not satisfactory to us.

We believe that there is a God who has spoken to man through the

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Last month we talked about the first Thanksgiving in the New World which was in New England, in that part that became Massachusetts. I want us to think about the first English Christmas in the New World which was in Virginia. This story was told to me by Bessie Barclay who used to teach art in Newport News and who had drawn a great picture of the scene.

The settlers with Capt. John Smith came to Jamestown in the spring of 1607, the men having set sail five days before Christmas in 1606. By the following December the more than 100 men had become a handful of 40. They had not been very successful with their planting and they were really hungry. John Smith had become their leader and he decided to try and persuade the Indians to help feed them. He thought that if his men could have a happy Christmas they could look forward to the spring and have new hope.

He knew better than to seek help from Powhatan who was a most unfriendly Indian chieftain, but he thought he had better chances with his brother, Kecoughtan. With a party of several men they sailed down the James River, up the Indian River and to the lodge of the young and strong brave, Kecoughtan. His lodge was between the Indian River and Old Point Comfort. It was long, about thirty or forty feet and eight or nine feet wide. Skins covered the bent poles that supported the sides and roof. The roof was covered with leaves and boughs. There was no chimney or opening to permit the smoke to leave, only the opening flap in the front of the lodge.

When first the English men went, the smoke caused their eyes to smart and made their throats tickle, but soon they could see the young Indian king and his men about him. A few women were cooking at the far end of the lodge and their children played on the dirt floor around them. After exchanging greetings and giving gifts of cloth, flint and paper, the braves agreed to their coming and to share their feasting.

Thus it was that the men of Jamestown made their way to the lodge of Kecoughtan to celebrate the birth of the Baby Jesus. They ate many strange things those days—roasted oysters that had come from the waters of the Chesapeake, raw clams from the beach, roasted maize or corn, the jerked deer venison, great quantities yams and turkey. And when the celebration was over, they took provisions back to Jamestown with them and were saved for another spring and planting time. Both the first Thanksgiving and first Christmas were shared by the red and the white man.

Miss Barclay thought that this story was true, but no one really knows. Anyway, today, Kecoughtan is a place between Indian River Creek and Hampton and so it could have easily been true. I hope it was!

A merry Christmas to you and happiness in your giving!

WHILE THE WORLD HUNGERS.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"This has been a happy day, Doris! I'm sure it's been the nicest Christmas I've had since you and I were children."

It was evening, and we were sitting in front of the fireplace in my sister's basement playroom, where her own and some of the neighbor's children were popping corn and filling a big pan with the fluffy white kernels.

My sister's eyes lighted with pleasure. "I'm glad to hear you say that, Lucia," she replied. "It proves something I've been wondering about. Didn't you notice that our dinner was rather meager—that we didn't have as much to eat as usual?"

"No, I didn't," I answered. "I'm sure everyone was most generously served."

"Generously, but not lavishly," Doris continued musingly, "and yet everybody was content. We shall have no lavish dinners here, even at Christmas time, while the world hungers, Lucia. Of course, I want my children to store up as pleasant memories of Christmas as you and I did in our old home, but I do not want any of us to be selfish—certainly not on Christmas Day.

"I was being very selfish this year," Doris went on, "until a chance conversation I overheard at the bus station a couple of weeks ago brought me to my senses. Two women were sitting beside me, waiting for the Ivy-wild bus. One of them carried a bulging shopping bag, and the other had her arms full of bundles.

"Have you stocked your larder for Christmas yet?" the first woman asked her friend. 'I began weeks ago to gather up all the scarce articles I could find, so that my children would not have to go without anything in this year of food shortages.'

"The other woman winked across the mound of bundles she carried. 'Oh, yes,' she answered, 'I, too, am seeing that my children shall have plenty of everything this year. They have had to do without things long enough!'

"Do without things!' I almost gasped. Didn't those two well-fed mothers know the reason for our food shortage? Didn't they know we've been sending food across the sea to keep other mothers' children from starving? How would they feel if their children were big-eyed little skeletons?

"I was about to make some indignant protest to those complacent creatures, when I looked down at the bundles I myself was carrying and realized that I wasn't doing much better than they. True, we had voluntarily limited our use of foods that could easily be shipped and, of course, we had given money for famine relief, but here I was preparing the most elaborate Christmas celebration my family had ever had.

"All at once I resolved not to encourage my children to overeat just because it was our season of rejoicing. Queer how we rejoice, isn't it! And what a dreadful way to do it when in many parts of the world children and grown men and women have barely enough food to sustain life!

"Simplifying my holiday menus, yet nevertheless providing appetizing and adequate meals with little individual surprises, did not prove too hard to do. It did take a bit of figuring to let Freda and Joan each carry out her wish to cook something special for Aunt Lucia and still keep within the simple plans I had laid out," Doris concluded, "but we seem to have managed to do it to everyone's satisfaction."

"Indeed you have," I heartily agreed, "and you've given your children the best gift of all—a sense of the real meaning of Christmas. It was the One whose Birthday we celebrate who taught us long ago that it is more blessed to give than to receive, and His lessons are never fully understood until they are practiced."

Honor is like the eye, which cannot suffer the least injury without damage; it is a precious stone, the price of which is lessened by the least flaw.—Bossuet.

THE LORD'S PRAYER. Ralph W. Sockman. The Pilgrim Press. $1.00.

Forthright, definite, deeply inspirational in treatment, this devotional study of the Lord's Prayer reflects fresh and different facets of meaning for these times. Phrase by phrase—chapter by chapter—the treatment develops. Its pace opens up new avenues of thought and appreciations. To read it is a worship experience that outreaches the soul to the vicissitudes of life itself. The cumulative effect of its message is devoutly stirring and satisfying.

Presented first over the air, Dr. Sockman's treatment of the world's greatest prayer aroused phenomenal interest, as evidenced by a deluge of correspondence and requests for copies. In recognition of its particular genius and permanent worth in the field of inspirational literature, The Pilgrim Press has now made it available in this attractive booklet.

Book and jacket designed by Charles Capon, nationally famous typographer and designer.

THE SONG OF OUR SYRIAN GUEST. WILLIAM ALLEN KNIGHT. Pilgrim Press. $1.00.

One of the ten best sellers for the last fifty years, this famous, inspiring interpretation of the Twenty-Third Psalm has been published in many different editions and languages. It has literally reached millions of readers—in America, Great Britain, Europe, Asia and Africa.

The continuing success of The Song of Our Syrian Guest lies in the way the author has given this ancient story new meaning for these times. To take the beloved psalm—as he did—and hold it up in new light, and let the reader discover unsuspected glory and tenderness in it, was possible only through the work of the true mystic and poet.

Through the years The Song of Our Syrian Guest has appeared in many different forms and styles, some illustrated, some in decorative bindings, some in compact size for gift purposes. During the war there was a miniature edition for the man in the service. Its comforting message is also available to the blind in Braille. In this new special de luxe edition everything points to unbroken continuity and literally wider reading of the book.

HOW CAN YOU FIND HAPPINESS. Samuel M. Shoemaker. E. P. Dutton and Co., Inc. New York. 1947. 160 pp. $2.00.

This might be denominated as psychiatry with religious orientation. Basically, the quest for happiness, that chief end and occupation of man, is set forth in the thesis of the Master that to find life it must be lost in super-egoistic investment. The author is modern in his cognizance of the realities of the present world where morals have gone out of the window in the substitution of license for ethicism. And he holds the compass before the ailing world, as it points to peace as the fruit of righteousness, before Him in whose will is our peace. The book is well done.

JOHN F. C. GREEN.

LETTER TO CORINTH. John Schmidt. The Muhlenberg Press. Philadelphia. 1947. 146 pp. $1.50.

The author is pastor of the First Lutheran Church, Toledo, Ohio. He rightly explains St. Paul's letter to the Corinthians as pastoral advice and counsel, in the light of their own customs, virtues and vices, pointing them ever toward the Christ and His way.

The church school teacher, the lay-preacher, the interested layman would do well to have this little book—it clarifies the great Pauline letter to the modern reader. So, the items relating to woman keeping silent in the churches and the covering of their heads. In the former, accustomed to the Jewish relegation of the women to the balcony of the church, distributing talk of visitation would disrupt the worship of the men in the nave; in the latter case, uncovering was, in Corinth, the mark of the immoral woman.

Here the good Pastor speaks to his people of the good Pastor St. Paul. It is effective preaching, out of the experience of the people, directing them to the Christ.

LYMAN PIERSON POWELL, PATHFINDER IN EDUCATION AND RELIGION. Charles S. MacFarland. Philosophical Library, N. Y., 1947.

He says that this is "the story of a man of broad, friendly vision, who looked beyond rigid, accepted opinions and recognized the truth and good struggling for expression in new forms and new-old hopes."

Dr. MacFarland begins with that objectivity and penetration familiar to the author's readers, and fascinates to the end.

Lyman Powell came of a pious family, along with distinguished brothers, and his college and graduate years at Johns Hopkins gave him intimate contact with notable men, "John Finley and his brother Robert, Newton D. Baker, the Willoughby brothers, Edward A. Ross, David Kinley, Frederick C. Howe," as grouped by Albert Shaw in his ample introduction, and to these are to be added older men such as Richard T. Ely and Woodrow Wilson, a constellation fitted to spur a man not only to his best but give him access to many more such. When he became absorbed in University Extension, which took him as a graduate student to the Universities of Wisconsin and Pennsylvania, his contacts widened till his historical pilgrimage of persons from all parts of the country to "the places made famous by George Washington" brought to its celebration a galaxy of famous Bostonians.

Powell however did not continue in this line—indeed one of his marked qualities was that he did not continue in any line, but brought accomplishment to many. He suddenly went to the Philadelphia Divinity School and was ordained in the Episcopal Church, filling three notable pastorates. He brought breadth of fellowship in a denominational relation, so that reading of these years and his pastoral and ministerial contacts later, one would not know except by an occasional label that this man was not a Congregationalist or a Presbyterian or what have you. He spliced in with these as one of them. Sentiment rather than theory led him in his passion for "doing good to people," being as Shaw says, "never a delver in archives, or a specialist in any precise field of economic or historical scholarship."

However, he was made professor of business ethics at New York University, and the next year president of Hobart College, which again the first world war interrupted, and after a further lecturing period he took the pastorate of a mission church in New York. In all these periods numerous books appeared from his pen, and many notable articles in magazines. He was continually stirring up new ways of doing things. He had been, at the Hopkins, an assistant to Osler in a literary way, and had picked up the idea of the mind's influence over the body which he later developed into prayer for the sick, with cases of healing. This integrated him with

The Vision.

John saw a vision, a vision of a new heaven and a new earth. He also saw the new Jerusalem, coming down from heaven from God, and made ready as a bride adorned for her husband. The new order is to come down from heaven, it is not to spring up from earth. It is to come not by mechanics but by dynamics. Things are to be made new. And if anybody wants to know what that means, it might help to say that when the atomic bomb fell on Hiroshima, in a sense it made a new world. Political economy, military science, theories about national sovereignty and a host of other things had to be overhauled in order to fit in with the new scheme of things. There is to be a new order, says John. To be sure he has to say it in language that has limitations. He uses figures of speech somewhat strange to us. But he is saying that beyond the mess and the muck, the injustices, the miseries, the wrongs, the seeming defeats and failures of these times, God is patiently working out his purposes, and he will not fail or be discouraged until he sees the travail of his soul and is satisfied.

"And the sea is no more." The Jews were not seafaring men. The water held for them terror and dread. The sea imposed serious limitations upon them and served as a great barrier to them. In the new order there would be no barriers or divisions. The dread of things unknown would be removed.

The Voice.

John also heard a voice, indeed he heard a voice many times in his experience in the Spirit. The voice declared that the tabernacle of God was with me, that the presence of God was among the people. Indeed, in another section of today's lesson he says that there will be no temple in the new order. Strange words indeed, so it seems. But the temple is simply a symbol of God's presence, and God's presence would be so real in the new order that there will be no need for an outward symbol.

Nor will there be any tears or mourning or pain. And death will no more have dominion over the people—"death shall be no more." Things are to become new. It is a word that can be trusted—"these words are faithful and true, and 'they come to pass.'" One must listen to the eternal against the temporal.

The Victory.

"He that overcometh shall inherit these things." The strife may be long, the fight fierce, the odds against us heavy. But he that endureth to the end shall be saved and he shall be victor. That is the word of the inspired seer, as he saw things to come. It is to be a glorious victory. The glory of God and of the Lamb will give light—there will be no need of sun or moon. The beauty of Christ will be the lamp thereof. Nations shall walk in the light and kings shall bring tribute to the King of Kings and Lord of Lords. There will be no barriers to the righteous—the gates will be open at all times—there will be no night there. But there will be nothing unclean, and no abomination or untruth there. Only those whose names are written in the "Lamb's book of life" will be there. The Lamb's book of life—that is the place to have one's name written. There is something better than to be on the social register. And those who commit themselves to Christ and through faith accept him, have their names written in this Book of Life. They find abundant life here and eternal life hereafter.

THE BIBLE IN TEACHING.

life and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and through His words and deeds.

Why do people continue to come to church and Sunday School week after week, year in and year out in spite of all the attractions of our modern age, in spite of the feeble messages that they hear so often from the pulpit, in spite of the weak and inadequate presentation of the Sunday School lessons? It is because consciously or unconsciously they wish to find God, to be lifted up for a moment at least out of themselves into that spiritual realm which enchants us with its beauty and sustains us with its power, to hear some authentic word of God that will speak to the real needs of their souls.

Why do men continue to read this book, written thousands of years ago, in spite of all the modern literature which floods from our presses, and the messages which fill the air? Many reasons might be given, but in the last analysis it is because the God who created the heavens and the earth and the sea, the God who thundered at Sinai, who inspired the prophets and who sent His son, the God in whom we live and move and have our being still speaks through its pages to those, but to those only who are willing to harken to His voice.

And that is why we teach the Bible. Not merely that men may appreciate its literature, or understand its history, or even that they may know its doctrines, but that they may learn to know Him whom to know aright is life eternal; that each man may hear for himself the voice of the living God that calls us in ideals, warns us in sermons, who comforts us with His pardon who sustains us with His power, a God who has spoken His final message to men in the life and death and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

If I wanted to become a tramp, I would seek information and advice from the most successful tramp I could find. If I wanted to become a failure I would seek advice from men who have never succeeded. If I wanted to succeed in all things, I would look around me for those who are succeeding, and do as they have done.—Joseph Marshall Wade.

WE DO NOT WALK ALONE.

A Christmas Sermon

By REV. A. W. NEWELL, Pastor,
St. John's Evangelical and Reformed Church,
Richmond, Va.

Probably the most tragic fact of life today is that men are lonely! Whatever the cause for it may be, the fruit of it is manifest in the unrest and in the mad pursuit of activity to be with people so that we cannot be alone. The sense of being alone in a great world of impersonal forces that bear down upon us is a terrifying thing, and that is the picture that portrays so much of humanity today.

The reason a song rises to popularity is because it strikes a responsive chord in the hearts of people. "Bonga, bonga, bonga, I don't want to leave the jungle" is a biting satire on the so-called progress in our modern civilization. It says what we so often think and therefore it becomes popular. Think then for a moment how many of the modern ballads that rise to popularity have the plaintive note of loneliness in them. You can think of many. One of them that rose to popularity a year or more ago and is still sung today was, "I Walk Alone, for to Tell You the Truth I Am Lonely." It rose to popularity because it expressed so much of what humanity has been feeling.

Therefore, now is the time when a note of Christian conviction must be made upon the world by those who call themselves followers of the Christ. We do not walk alone. We have the Christ as our ever present companion along every road that we travel.

The Christmas message should always emphasize His presence with us. Matthew in the 23rd verse of his first chapter quotes from the prophet Isaiah when he says: "Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and his name shall be called Emmanuel, which means, God with us." When we speak of the incarnation we merely emphasize our conviction that God was in Christ and in the world.

But not only is it a fact that he once was in the world, but he still is with us. For at the end of his life he said: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the ends of the earth." May we then in our lives demonstrate our faith in the Christmas message by revealing a consciousness of the fact that we do not walk and work with Christ each day.

Sometimes we are unaware of His presence and think we are walking alone. In times of great happiness how easy it is to forget our companion of the way, how easy when everything is going splendidly, how easy when our spirits are high it is to forget the fact that He has guided us and walked with us along every pathway. Indeed in times of personal success how easy it is to feel that we have walked and worked alone, and somehow the measure of our success is due to our ability and due to the fact that we have given of ourselves not taking into account the fact that God has been with us guiding and blessing us at every step of the road.

In times of distress it is just as easy to feel that we walk alone. It is easy to feel depressed and feel that everyone has deserted us and we somehow echo the words of the opening verses of the Twenty-second Psalm: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" but fail to finish the reading and catch the note of faith that God never does forsake those who walk with Him. How easy it is to feel that we bear life's burden alone, that no one has to face the kind of crises we have to face, to feel that somehow our burden is greater than others. With eyes to see all about us we do not see the hand of God in all that occurs. It's so easy to feel lonely when we fail to look out and see God's help, God's hand in the affairs of men.

The self-made man would like to feel that he alone has accomplished his success but there is a different spirit in the self-made man when suddenly disaster seems to stare him in the face. He isn't willing always to take the credit for the disaster that comes and fails to understand that in the processes of life God has had a great hand in his success, and perhaps the very best that he has not recognized God's nearness and God's share in his success accounts for the disaster that may be appearing around the corner. But he will say, "I've never seen God, it has always been my work. I've never been conscious of Him walking along life's way." It is true there are many that never seem to see God or feel His presence near them.

We may say that God may be found in Church, through the service, in the singing of hymns, in the praying of prayers, in the reading of Scripture, in the preaching of the Word we might hear the voice of God speaking to us. And yet there are millions of people who have never seen through the Church but there are millions who have. Two men can go into the temple to pray—one can feel God's presence and hear his voice within his heart, the other can simply go to Church. There are many people who walk out into the beauties of nature and never see the hand of God there, and yet there are those who throughout the centuries have been able to see the footprint of God impressed upon everything, and see the loveliness that portrays the loving spirit of a Heavenly Father; see the orderliness of nature portraying the dependability of this Heavenly Father of ours. There are those who can worship in nature and there find the nearness of God that they crave so much.

In sorrow or in suffering there are many who have found that He was an ever present help in time of trouble, while others have found disaster through suffering—have felt deserted, alone and neglected. Yet some souls have grown great through the testing times of suffering. In times of temptation there are those who feel they are left to themselves without any help but there are those who have found that God is ever standing, waiting, hoping that the door might be opened to Him; that He might enter and add His abundant strength to their resistance. The hymn writer put it, "What but Thy help can stay the tempter's power," and many have found God's presence in these great testing times of life.

And certainly in times of fear when we dread so much in life, when fear paralyzes and makes us useless in facing life triumphantly, it is God's presence that encourages and gives us victory over the forces of evil. It is He that urges us on to do the thing that needs to be done. For courage is not the absence of fear, courage is the conquest of it; and once we learn to conquer our fears we learn to do it through a trust in God.

If we do not feel God's presence along every pathway of life it is because we have eyes that do not see and ears that do not hear. We haven't learned to tune our souls close to Him for God walks along every pathway of our life. God is near to those even who go against His will. The psalmist put it this way: "If I say surely the darkness shall hide me" but he

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Thanksgiving offerings are coming in real well. If they continue to come in as well for the next three weeks, we will reach and pass our goal. After we set a goal, it does make us feel good to be able to reach it. It is always heart-breaking to fail. In fact, we have been setting goals from year to year for thirty-one years and we have never failed to reach a goal that we really set. We like to have something to work to. It has not always been an easy job to reach a set goal. It takes a lot of planning, thinking, and working to put it across. We hope this year will be no exception to any other year.

Christmas presents are beginning to come in. Several days ago we received four boxes of Christmas presents, that included one for each child, from one of our churches in Pawtucket, Rhode Island. The presents were nicely wrapped and packed, and the children will be delighted to get them. They are assured of one present, at least.

Our good friends have been very good to us through the years at the Christmas season, and they have seen to it that the little children here will be well taken care of with plenty of fruits, nuts, and candy—when candy could be bought.

All of our Orphanage group are invited to the College auditorium on December 17, when the student body will play Santa Claus to them. They are looking forward to this treat with delight.

Friends of the children have been more interested in the children here this year than ever before. We are happy that they are. It makes children want to do their best when they know somebody cares.

Our children are doing well in school. We offer a prize of 50c to each child that gets on the honor roll. Last month thirteen made the honor roll. Quite a number made A's from top to bottom on their report card.

The children fare pretty well now. We have killed sixteen hogs, and they have good old sausage, spare ribs, and backbones to eat.

Please don't forget the Thank Offering in your church, if you have not already taken it. Make it liberal. Give as the Lord has prospered you.

Superintendent.

WE DO NOT WALK ALONE.

found, as he later says: "That the darkness hideth not from thee but the night shineth as the day, the darkness and the light are both alike to thee."

Yes, there are many who have found that they cannot flee from the presence of God; that they are not alone, cannot be alone with guilty consciousness, but that the all seeing eye of God will hunt them out unto the corners of the earth, hoping that somehow he might reclaim them for his own. We do not walk along any pathway in life alone.

God is near to the lonely, sorrowful, desperate lives although they may not realize it at times. God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble; therefore, will we not fear. We need to impress that upon ourselves and upon the lives of others round about us, a confident trust that God does not desert us in moments when life seems to be tumbling in upon us. God is near to fearful, anxious people. He is near to those whose anxieties are beginning to overwhelm them. Yes, indeed, God is even near to the indifferent, hoping that somehow the opportunity might present itself when he may be invited in to have a share in rebuilding a life.

Emmanuel means God is with us. What a wonderful Christmas message for the world today. To impress it not alone upon the countries across the seas where suffering and distress are almost beyond human endurance, but for our own country as well; for those self-sufficient people, for those who have strayed far from what God intended them to be.

What a changed life ours will be when we live each moment in the consciousness of His presence. How different will our Christmas celebration be. How much more care will we exercise in our choice of words, in our behavior, in our attitudes toward others. What a new joyous spirit will come into our life in its darker moments and what an humble spirit will come into us in those moments when success and happiness are ours. In a like manner what a changed world will come into being when men and nations are conscious of God's presence, and when this conviction becomes a reality in the dealings of men with men and nations with each other.

The good news of the Christmas Season is the message of God's love for mankind and His nearness to us. If we have felt alone, forsaken or self sufficient may we join the host of the faithful that stream across the ages who learned that they need not fear for He is with them even unto the end of the world.

He climbs highest who helps another up.—George Matthew Adams.

period of years. The 20th Norfolk citizen to be honored, Smith was named for his continuous "unselfish and unremuniated" activities on behalf of the Norfolk United Fund, and its predecessor organization—the Norfolk United War Fund—which, under his leadership, raised more than $2,000,000 in an unprecedented series of campaigns during 1945 to obtain operating and capital expense funds for its affiliated charitable and welfare agencies.

Smith will receive the award at the club's annual dinner late in January. The medal will be conferred upon him along with a certificate setting forth his community accomplishments.

W. C. Whitehead, chairman of the club's civic affairs committee, made the announcement after being informed by Barron F. Black that the special awards committee, of which he is chairman, was unanimous in its designation of Smith.

Smith, in addition to his participation in the administration of the succession of United Funds and the several campaigns conducted since 1943, was recognized for his organizational efforts which culminated in the enrollment of top business men as active workers and supporters of the annual appeals. It was said that this contribution will long be reflected in a more unified backing by influential citizens for the annual drives than has ever been attained before.

Although Smith is a native of Bath, N. C., he has resided in Norfolk 45 years. It was here that he launched (in 1920) a modest fertilizer manufacturing business which, through a succession of reorganizations, has expanded until it is today the largest in the country and has gained for him national recognition in the industry.

It was in 1927 that he joined with R. B. Douglass, former vice president of the Eastern Cotton Oil Company, in forming the Smith-Douglas Company, Inc., coincident with the erection of the original plant on the Southern Branch of the Elizabeth River, which today is the largest mixed fertilizer operation in the world.

A member of the Rosemont Christian Church for 45 years, and a prominent lay leader in its affairs for most of that period, Smith is a former teacher of its Sunday school, having handled classes both for boys and girls.

He is a member of the board of trustees of Elon College from which he received an honorary Doctor of Business Science Degree two years ago. He is also a member of the Virginia Club, the Princess Anne Club, and the Norfolk Yacht and Country Club.

Smith was married in 1910 to the former Ruth McCloud, of Norfolk County. There is one daughter, Mrs. Roy R. Charles, of Norfolk.

MORAVIANS ELECT NEW BISHOP.

The Moravian Church in America, Southern Province, in the triennial synod held at Home Moravian Church, Winston-Salem, N. C., November 18-20, 1947, elected Dr. Howard Rondthaler, president of Salem College, a Bishop of the Church. Bishop Rondthaler will share honors and duties with Bishop J. Kenneth Pfohl who was elected some years ago to succeed Dr. Rondthaler's late father. This is the first time this Southern Province has had two Bishops at the same time.

The office of Bishop itself carries on church administrative duties. It is the highest spiritual title which a Moravian may attain, the others being deacon and presbyter. Administrative duties are handled by the Provincial Elders Conference, also elected at this synod.

The Moravians in this synodical meeting blasted the sale of whiskey and the attendance upon commercialized Sunday entertainment, and commended the Police Chief of Winston-Salem for his efforts to break up liquor sales here. Also they went on record as urging the sponsoring by the United States of fundamental amendments to the United Nations Charter to make it capable of enacting world law to prevent war and to enforce these laws on individuals.

Steps were taken to strengthen the work of the one Negro Moravian Church in Winston-Salem, to organize new Negro Churches and also to recommend qualified Negro brethren for ordination into the Moravian ministry to shepherd these organizations.

Reports were heard from various boards and institutions and greetings were brought from the Moravian brethren in Europe and other parts of the world. Greetings were extended from the Congregational Christian Churches by the writer.

Steps were taken to organize a Moravian Foreign Mission Board to take over the duties of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, a small group of people located in the Northern Province without permanent jurisdiction over the work of foreign missions.

The Moravians faced their responsibilities and are making plans that should strengthen their Church. It was a pleasure to be in their midst at the synod and it is a joy to be working with them in their churches.

DR. MACKAY HEADS INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

Dr. John A. Mackey, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, and former Presbyterian missionary in Peru, and professor of philosophy at the National University of Peru, has been elected chairman of the International Missionary Council, the highest-ranking Protestant missionary body in the world. He will assume this post on January 1, 1948, succeeding Bishop James C. Baker, of the San Francisco Area of The Methodist Church. Bishop Baker has been council chairman since 1938 when he succeeded the first chairman, Dr. John R. Mott.

the Emmanuel Movement, and later brought him about from previous aversion to a belief in the work of Mrs. Eddy and to writing her life, a volume which, says Dr. Macfarland, "is persuasive, even when not convincing." Impressed by the "widespread advance" of the movement, "He believes that he sees it in all its wholeness and thus is perhaps too little concerned with its human limitations and contradictions."

Such was the man whose passing in 1946 his eightieth year left a vacuum in more fields of high endeavor that tempt the interest of most intensely earnest men.

WISE MEN OR SANTA CLAUS?

By REV. C. SHANNON MORGAN

As we read anew the poetic birth stories of Jesus in Matthew and Luke at this Christmas-tide, we are thrilled afresh by their simplicity and straightforwardness—Jesus' birth in Bethlehem in a stable, or cave, because there was no room in the inn; his being wrapped in swaddling clothes and placed in a manger; the angelic chorus singing, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men"; and the visit of the Judean shepherds; King Herod's intention to kill Jesus; the visit of the Wise Men from the East, guided by a star; and the offering of their gifts. Whatever else the stories may imply, an event had happened in history uniting heaven and earth: the angels of heaven had sung in chorus, the wise men of earth had brought their gifts.

Those stories are simple and sometimes almost naive, but they hold a message for us that is realistic and pertinent. Jesus was born in Bethlehem—"the House of Bread." Now consider a moment the increased eating being done by the average American family in comparison to what they ate before the war! Then listen while our American women argue the merits of the "new look" in clothes, and the rest of the world wonders whether it can make its scanty store of food and garments last through the winter! Listen, we are the Bethlehem—"the House of Bread"—of the world of today. But how can Jesus be born in us while the rest of the world languishes?

Jesus was born in a stable, or cave that was used as a cattle stall, "because there was no room for them in the inn." We say, had we been living then, we would have opened our home to the Christ-Child. O. Walter Wagner, who visited Europe this past summer, said, "I saw them living in the bombed-out fortifications of the Maginot line; I saw them living in holes in the ground, with pieces of tin their only covering; I saw them in rubble rooms all over Europe. . . . On a bitterly cold night I saw four children huddled together in a box in a corner, nearly naked, trying to keep warm from the heat of their bodies."

What an opportunity we have today. Jesus said, "Whosoever shall receive one of such little children in my name, receiveth me." (Mk. 9:37.)

He was "wrapped . . . in swaddling clothes." Away from home in a stable, Mary, when her Baby Jesus was born, must have looked at him with anxious, tearful eyes; because whatever the "swaddling clothes"—the long, narrow strip of cloth for binding—were, they were scanty and inadequate. A mother's heart goes out to Mary; nevertheless, a half-million Finns were made homeless in six hours' time; four hundred and eighty thousand people in Finland suffered from bombardment. One out of seven of Finland's population is homeless. Born in Finland last year were 93,862 babies. Ninety per cent of these were wrapped in paper clothing—84,000 babies in Finland alone—wrapped in paper clothing!

Then there is the story of the Wise Men who followed a star, who brought their gifts, revered Christ, and listened to Herod's feigned intention to come and worship Jesus; but they surmised that he intended to kill Jesus, and they sidetracked him so that he did not kill the baby.

Would you be a Wise Man this Christmas? Then follow the Star. Do you think the Star was meant just for the Wise Men, just for that one night alone? Ah, no! God hung it there against the ages; it is for all of us. Its radiance enfolds us all, knowing no bound of creed, color or servitude. It guides the aged home; it is reflected in the eyes of babes, generation after generation, and in the eyes of mothers seeking in their babes the countenance of Christ. All of us are come once more under the spell of the Star, come to take new hope in peace and the Prince of Peace!

Would you be a Wise Man? Then bring your gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh to Jesus. After serving five years as a Missionary in Korea, a young lady joined her well-to-do American family at the Christmas dinner table. While her younger brother and sister were presenting their expensive gifts to their father and mother this missionary girl was moved to tears. She said, "I have insisted on living on my meagre income and have no money to buy expensive gifts for my parents; but I have a gift for you." And with those words, she brought from under the table a little flat package in which was a red flannel heart tied with a yellow ribbon. Attached to the ribbon was a card which read, "To mother and dad I give all I have—my heart." Jesus does not want you to be just a Santa Claus bringing him gifts, but he asks for the real gift—Y-O-U.

Would you be a Wise Man? Then pay homage to Christ and sidetrack the Herods of famine, plague, war and death!

If this Christmas is to be real, not just a transient fabrication, the Eternal Emmanuel—God-With-Us—must be born perennially in us. After Christmas, and before the New Year, the Christmas feeling must not be over for another year. The wreaths must not be taken down; the holly must not be burned; Santa Claus must not go back to the North Pole, nor the Wise Men to the East. Man must not forget his brotherliness, for now, more than ever, the Christmas angels are singing, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, goodwill toward men."
